Then was Thomas Brook called for, againſt whom it was objected by ſome of the Councels Letters of Calice, that he was a Seditious Fellow. Among theſe accuſers beſides the reſt was one Richard Long, another Francis Haſtings, men of Arms, who charged the forenamed Thoms Brook, and one Geffery Loveday Eſquire, for ſtaying and maintaining the foreſaid Adam Damlip at Calice, as who had promiſed unto him a ſtipend to preach ſuch Hereſies and pernicious Opinions as afterward he taught there: and that theſe two daily gathered many ſeveral ſums of mony for the entertainment of the ſaid Adam. Howbeit the foreſaid Haſtings failed in the proof thereof. For Loveday proved that he was eight days before Damlips coming to Calice, and during fourteen days continually after he began to preach, abiding at Paris, there occupied about neceſſarie affairs of Chales Duke of Suffolk. And Brook during the ſaid time was at London, daily attendant in the Parliament Houſe, whereof he had enow to bear witneſs, againſt that untrue ſurmiſe.

The Examination and trouble of Tho. Brook. Accuſers of Tho. Brook. Falſe accuſation.

After that, came three at once againſt the ſaid Brook, well armed as they thought, who had not only conſulted together before of the matter, and put it in writing at Calice, beſide their conference and talk by the way keeping Company from thence hither, but alſo had obtained from the Lord Deputy, and others of the Councel, ſpecial Letters as is aforeſaid, and among other, one Letter unto the Biſhop of Chicheſter, for the earneſt and ſpeedy furtherance of the advancement of their accuſations againſt Brook.

Three other accuſers againſt Tho. Brook, and G. Loveday.

The firſt of theſe three was a young Gentleman lately brought up under the ſaid Brook in the office of Cuſtome, whoſe name was Edmund Payton. The other was one Robert Poole,, a man (as it was commonly reported) both baſe born, and alſo ſuch a one, as in his youth for murdering a man with a Club, in Bow-Lane in London, was fain by obtaining the Kings pardon to ſave his neck.

Payton the firſt accuſer.

R. Pool, the ſecond accuſer.

The third was one Thomas Boyſe, who, ſhewing more honeſty than the reſt, affirmed not that he himſelf heard the ſaid Brook ſpeak any thing of that which was objected againſt him, but juſtified that each of the other two had ſtedfaſtly affirmed to him, that Brook had ſpoken unto them thoſe things here under objected againſt him.

Tho. Boyſe the third Accuſer.

The firſt young man objected againſt the ſaid Brook, that he ſhould ſay that the thing which the Prieſt uſeth to hold up over his head at Maſs, is not the natural Body of Jeſus Chriſt: for if that were ſo, who ſo would might have their belly full of Gods, their Guts full of Gods, and he that had lately received the Sacrament before he went to the Sea, might happily vomit God up again on Shipboard.

The Depoſition of the firſt witneſs againſt Tho. Brook.

And thus much he brought over in writing with him from Calice, aad added thereto, as it ſhould ſeem, to exaſperate the Commiſſioners and the reſt of the Clergy againſt him, certain other hainous words ſpoken againſt Biſhops and Prieſts. Which words the ſaid Brook there denied, confeſſing nevertheleſs that certain private Talk he had with him touching the Sacrament, wherein he ſhewed to the young man the right uſe of the ſame: concluding, that albeit with our mouths we received very material Bread and Wine, yet by Faith all Chriſtian men do receive, eat and drink, to their great comfort and benifit, the natural Body and Blood of Chriſt, which was both born of the Virgin Mary, and ſuffered death on the Croſs for the remiſſion of their ſins: which moſt holy Sacrament who ſo cometh unworthily unto, the ſame was ſo far from eating of Chriſts Body and Blood, that all ſuch, without hearty repentance, do eat their own damnation: And to conclude with him, in that private talk he told him, that if the groſs and unlearned errour of Tranſubſtantiation were indeed matter of Truth and ſincere Doctrine, then not only this ſhould follow of it, that every man who would might have everlaſting life (for they might when they would receive the outward Sacrament, ſeen with our eyes, which the Prieſts call Chriſts natural Body, and whoſo eateth Chriſts natural Body hath everlaſting life, ſaith Chriſt) but alſo there ſhould great abſurdities follow thereby, as when a man hapneth to go to Sea, having lately received the Sacrament, he ſhould put it over-board, or to do it on the Hatches, and therefore exhorted the ſaid Paiton to leave that groſs errour.

The private talk of Tho. Brook and Paiton touching the Sacrament.

The ſecond Accuſer was Pool, who objected againſt him, that about two years paſt, he himſelf dining with the ſaid Brook, with fifteen or ſixteen other honeſt men heard him ſay thus at the Table, that the thing which the Prieſts, uſe to hold up over their heads, was not the very Body and Blood of Chriſt, but a Sacrament to put us in remembrance thereof. Unto whoſe objections the ſaid Brook anſwered, That a man in mirth might well enough in Charity beſhrew ſuch a gueſt, as when he had dined with a man could ſo long after remember to ſay him ſuch a grace: and required of Pool, of whence the reſt of the gueſts were. He anſwered, they were were of the Town all. Then inferred he, that he was ſure Pool could as well remember ſome of their names which then were preſent, as freſhly to keep in mind (for ſo by Oath upon a Book he had affirmed) every word of the whole matter which he objected; but that the matter was utterly untrue. Whereupon the ſaid Brook deſired their Honours to conſider the ſlenderneſs of his Tale.

To be ſhort, he with the reſt of his fellows, to wit, Ralf Hare, Coppen, and James the Barber, were for that time diſmiſſed.

The trouble and examination of Sir William Smith and John Butler Commiſſary. The accuſers of John Butler.

During the time while theſe four were thus in examination at London, the other two, to wit, Sir William Smith preacher, and John Butler, by commandment were apprehended in Calice, and bound by Surety not to paſs the Gates of the Town of Calice. In the which Town, the ſaid John Butler Commiſſary was accuſed by Richard Thorpe and John Ford Souldiers of Calice, ſaying, That he ſhould ſay, that if the Sacrament of the Altar be Fleſh, Blood, and Bone, then there is good Aqua-vitæ at John Spiſers. Upon which accuſation the ſaid Thorpe and Ford brought for records before the Counſel of Calice, Marraunt, Haynes, John Luckes, Henry Huſſon and Henry Troſt, all of the Pariſh of Oye beſide Calice. Whereupon ſhortly after, the ſaid John Butler and Sir William Smith were ſent for, and by one Swallow a Purſevant, which fetcht up the other aforeſaid, brought into England, unto the Houſe of the ſaid Swallow dwelling by St. James, where the Kings Majeſty lay at that time; and the next day being Thurſday after dinner, Butler, and Smith were brought to the Star Chamber before the Privy Councel, where both Sedition and Hereſie was objected againſt them. And after much talk it was ſaid unto them by the Lord Cromwel, that they ſhould make their Purgation by the Law: and from thence by the foreſaid Swallow they were ſent to the Fleet.

Aquavitæ, to digeſt the Blood and Bones of the Sacrament.

The next day being Friday after dinner, Butler and Smith were ſent for to come to Bathe place, where they were brought into the Chappel, there ſitting Doctor Clarke, Biſhop of Bathe, Doctor Sampſon, then Biſhop of Chicheſter, Doctor Repſey, the Biſhop of Norwich, who was a Monk, being faſt aſleep. Then was objected unto Butler with great reverence the opprobrious words ſpoken again the bleſſed Sacrament (rehearſing as is aforeſaid) the Articles. Butler required to have them in writing, and ſo he would make anſwer in writing. The which they would not grant him; and upon that anſwer he ſtood. Then choler gathered in the Biſhop of Chicheſter. The ſtory were too long to write, yet part ye ſhall underſtand.

The examination of John Butler.

Chicheſter found great fault that Butler made not low curteſie, being ſtubborn and arrogant, as he ſaid, and in fine, found fault with his ſhirt. Then turning him about he called to his Brother Baneſter being preſent (that time dwelling in Paternoſter-Row) to make anſwer for the ſhirt. Hee ſaid, I can make anſwer for the ſhirt. No good anſwer, ſaid Chicheſter. Forſooth, ſaid he, the ſhirt is mine, I lent it him, becauſe he brought none with him, for he was not permitted to have any Servant. A good anſwer, ſaid the Biſhop of Bathe. Then Butler made low curteſie, and ſaid, The ſhirt is anſwered. Then Chicheſter ſaid, Thou mockeſt us. But he ſaid no. And thus much concerning that time.

The Story of William Smith.

The trouble and examination of Sir Will. Smith Curate.

THen after Butler was Sir William Smith, Curate of our Lady Pariſh in Calice, called before them, and charged in a manner with the ſame hainous errors and pernicious opinions that were objected againſt the ſaid Ralf Hare; and thereto was added, that he had ſpoken and preached againſt our bleſſed Lady, againſt praying to Saints, againſt doing of good works, and many other ſuch like things: and therewithal one Richard Long, a Man at Arms at Calice, proved againſt the ſaid Sir Smith, and the foreſaid Brooke, by an Oath taken upon a Book, that the ſaid Smith and Brooke did eat Fleſh together in Lent in the ſaid Brookes Houſe. For a Millers Boy, ſaid he, came into Brookes Kitchen, and ſaw halfe a Lamb lie roſting at the fire. Whereas the truth is, that the ſaid Sir William Smith, during all the Lent, came never once within the ſaid Brook.s Houſe. And it is as true alſo, that the ſaid Richard Long, upon a diſpleaſure taken with his Wife, went ſhortly after out of his own Houſe, to the Jutty end of the Haven at Calice, where diſperately he drowned himſelf, not one Boy, but many Men, Women, Girls and Boys ſeeing him miſerably taken up again ſtark dead; all which lamented his pitiful ruine. A terible example unto all ſuch as are ready to forſwear themſelves on a Book upon malice, or whatſoever other cauſe it be, a thing in theſe days over rife every where, and almoſt no where regarded as it ought to be.

False accuſation and periury puniſhed of God.

The Trouble of John Butler.

The trouble of John Butler Commiſſary.

THere was alſo called before them Sir John Butler, then Commiſſary at Calice, whom they would have burdened with the maintenance or (at the leaſt wiſe) ſufferance of the foreſaid Adam Damlip, which preached ſo long time there, and was not by him puniſhed. Who for his defence anſwered, that the Lord Deputy and the whole Councel there ſo highly entertained, and ſo friendly uſed the ſaid Damlip, and with their own preſence and high commendations outwardly ſo allowed and commended his Doctrine, that it lay not in him to do otherwiſe than he did; and therfore humbly beſought their Lordſhips and other the Commiſſioners to be good unto him. At whoſe Hands, after long attendance given, he was diſcharged, and ſo returned home again, being alſo diſmiſſed of his Commiſſariſhip.

The Recantation of certain Calice Men.

The recantation and penance of Sir William Smith, Ralfe Hare, James Cocke, and James Barber of Calice.

NOw to declare what order was taken with theſe foreſaid Calice Men, it was appointed that Sir William Smith, Ralfe Hare, James Cocke, and James Barber, ſhould be ſent to Calice, there to abjure and to do Penance. Where Sir William Smith was injoyned to make the Sermon, Ralfe Hare, James Cocke, and James Barber ſtanding with Fagots upon their Shoulders. The Sermon was made in the Market of Calice. Which being done, they went with their Fagots about the market place, the Drum and Fife going before them, and then returning to the Commiſſioners with the Teſtimonial of the ſame, they departed. Albeit in this Recantation, the ſaid William Smith Curate of our Ladies Church handled his Sermon after that ſort, as in effect he denied nothing at all that he had before preached or taught, yet it ſatisfied ſomewhat his Adverſaries malicious Hearts, in that it bare the name of a Recantation, according to the Commiſſioners order, appointing him thus openly to preach, and ſo to depart the Town and Marches.

James Barber.

As touching James Barber aforeſaid, forſomuch as his dwelling was not at Calice, but four miles off from the Town, it was therefore enjoyned him to bear his Fagot, not at Calice, but on the Saturday next following to ſtand in the Market there, where he dwelled, with his Fagot upon his Shoulder, and the ſaid Sir William Smith likewiſe there preached as before.

And thus much concerning the firſt Commiſſion ſent over to Calice to enquire upon the Hereticks there.

Another Commiſſion ſent over to Calice.

A new Commiſſion ſent down to Calice.

False accuſation againſt the Town of Calice.

AFter all theſe things done and paſt, the grudging minds of the Adverſaries yet were not ſatiſfied, but ſtill ſuggeſted new complaints to the Kings eares againſt the Town of Calice, making the King believe, that through new opinions the Town was ſo divided, that it was in great danger of the Adverſary to be overcom.

The Commiſſioners appointed.

Whereupon ſhortly after, the week before Eaſter next following, other new Commiſſioners were ſent over by the King to Calice, to wit, the Earle of Suſſex Lord great Chamberlain, the Lord Saint John, Sir John Gage Knight, John Baker Knight, Maſter Layton Clerk of the Cloſet, and Doctor Curain, with ſpecial inſtructions beſides ſigned by the Kings Majeſtys own Hand: for his highneſs had been incenſed once again from the Counſel of Calice, that the Town was in peril through diſſenſion and diverſity of opinions. Upon their arrival, Maſter Doctor Curain preached a notable Sermon, exhorting all men to charity, having nothing in his mouth but charity, charity. But as it ſeemed afterward, ſuch a burning charity was in him and the reſt of the Commiſſioners, that had not God pitied the innocency of mens cauſes, there had an hundred been burnt or hanged ſhortly after.

But it hapned far otherwiſe, for of the number of thoſe Accuſers, four were by thoſe Commiſſioners ſent over into England, to wit, Clement Philpot, Servant to the Lord Liſle, Sir Edmund Curate of our Ladies Church, W. Houchet a Poſt-maſter, Peter Bequet. Of the which four, Houchet and Bequet were ſent to their places again; the other two were drawn, hanged and quartered at London.

Example of Gods puniſhment upon falſe Accuſers.

But contrary, of all them that were accuſed, there was not one that loſt one hair of his head.

After the Sermon was done, on the Morrow, to wit, on Shere-Thurſday, all the Commiſſioners ſolemnly received the Sacrament: and at Afternoon the Council were with the Commiſſioners; and after their conſultation, Tipped-Staves warned above the number of fourſcore, ſo perverſe Perſons, as the like was not in the Town or Marches, to appear on the Morrow at eight of the Clock before the Council at the Staple-Inne: who at their appearance were commanded upon their Allegiance to preſent all ſuch Hereticks, Schiſmaticks, and Seditious Perſons, as they did know, and in no wiſe to doubt or dread ſo to do, for they ſhould have great advantage thereby, yea, they ſhould either have their livings or their goods; and beſides that, they ſhould have great thanks at the Kings Majeſties hand, and his honourable Council, and what friendſhip they of the Kings Council there could ſhew them. All that Good-Friday, even till ten of the Clock at Night, thoſe wicked and malicious perſons occupied their time in anſwering to ſundry and divers queſtions.

Great perturbation at Calice.

Theſe things were not ſo ſecretly done, but they were bewrayed and came to honeſt mens knowledge. Whereupon ſuch fear and diſtruſt aſſaulted all men, that Neighbour diſtruſted Neighbour, the Maſter the Servant, the Servant the Maſter, the Husband the Wife, the Wife the Husband, and almoſt every one the other, that lamentable it was to ſee how mourningly Men and Women went in the Streets, hanging down their heads, ſhewing evident tokens of the anguiſh of their hearts.

The ſecond Trouble of Thomas Brook.

UPon Eaſter Monday, one Hugh Councell an honeſt man, Servant to the ſaid Brook, was convented before them, and by the ſpace of fourteen days not ſuffered to return to his Maſters Houſe, but kept in cuſtody, and many times examined upon Articles and Interrogatories, in hope to have found worthy matter, either of Hereſie or Treaſon againſt the ſaid Brook, and the ſame day that Brook was committed to Ward, the ſaid Hugh Councell was diſcharged.

The Wedneſday in the Eaſter Week, ſundry Queſts were charged by their Oaths to make Inquiſition for all manner of Hereſies, erroneous Opinions and Seditions: as a Queſt of Aldermen, another of Men at Arms, and another of Conſtables and Vintners, another of common Souldiers, and another of Commoners.

13 Calice Men impriſoned for their Faith.

And ſhortly after their Preſentments, on Good-Friday there were convented before the Commiſſioners, and ſtraight were ſent to cloſe Priſon, Anthony Pickering Gentleman, Henry Turner Gentleman, Sir George Darby Prieſt, John Shepheard, William Pellam, William Keverdale, Jo. Whitwood, Jo. Boote, Robert Clodder, Coppen de Hane, and Matthew de Hound. Upon whom ran ſundry bruits: ſome ſaid they ſhould be hanged, ſome ſaid burnt, ſome ſaid hanged, drawn and quartered, ſome ſaid nailed to the Pillory: ſo that pitiful it was to ſee the lamentation that their Wives, their Children, Servants and Friends made ſecretly where they durſt, for that they found every where words of diſcomfort, and no where of comfort, but ſtill Inquiſition was made.

The ſecond Trouble of William Stevens.

False Crimes forged againſt W. Stevens.

THe foreſaid William Stevens, after his return from London above-mentioned, beſides many other Articles laid to him for Religion to the number of forty or well-nigh, was by the Lord Deputy charged that he had ſtaid the foreſaid Adam Damlip, hired him to preach, and gave him meat, drink and lodging, coming from the arrant Traitor Cardinal Pool, and ſuborned by him, and that he had received mony of him, to the intent he ſhould preach in Calice falſe and erroneous Doctrine, whereby the Town being divided and at contention within it ſelf might eaſily be overcome and won by the Frenchmen. Whereunto the ſaid Stevens anſwered, that whatſoever he had done unto the ſaid Adam Damlip, he had done it at the earneſt requeſt and commandment of the ſaid Lord Deputy. Whereupon, if it had been Treaſon indeed, he muſt have been more faulty.

W. Stevens committed to the Tower.

Then the ſaid William Stevens was again the ſecond time by the ſaid Commiſſioners ſent over into England, and clapt in the Tower, and afterward, to wit, immediately after the ſaid Commiſſioners repair unto the Kings Highneſs, the ſaid L. Deputy was ſent for over, and likewiſe put into the Tower, where he continued a long time. And when the Kings Majeſty minded to have been gracious unto him, and to have let him come forth, God took him out of this World, whoſe Body reſteth in the Tower, and his Soul with God, I truſt, in Heaven, for he died very repentant. But the wicked Lady his Wife, immediately upon his apprehenſion, fell diſtracted of mind, and ſo continued many years after. God for his mercy, if ſhe yet live, give her his Grace to repent.

L. Liſle Deputy of Calice committed to the Tower.

Example of Gods puniſhment upon his Perſecutors.

The ſecond Monday after Eaſter, the foreſaid Brook was convented before the Commiſſioners, and committed to cloſe Priſon in the Mayors Gaol. Then the Council of Calice, doubting leſt there ſhould not be any Sedition or Hereſie proved againſt him, did call one George Bradway before them, who occupied the Controllers Office in the Cuſtom-Houſe. This man was kept in cloſe Priſon, ſo as neither his Wife, then great with Child, nor any other his Friends might repair unto him. Where, after that he had oftentimes been born in hand, that there were divers concealments come to light that were made by Brook in the Office of Cuſtom, and that the ſaid Bradway ſhould be grievouſly puniſhed if he would acknowledge none of them, nor burden the ſaid Brook with ſome kind of concealment: the poor ſimple man, hoping thereby to get releaſe of his impriſonment, accuſed the ſaid Brook, that he had for a long time concealed four Groats every day for his Clerks wages, and to that Accuſation they cauſed the ſimple man to ſet his own hand before witneſſes.

False Accuſation puniſhed by Gods hand.

Whereupon, after a day or two, the ſaid Bradway, grieved in his Conſcience for the ſame his moſt untrue Accuſation, did with a Knife enterprize to cut his own throat: but God of his mercy ſo directed his wicked purpoſe, that the back of his Knife was towards his Weſand. Whereby though the wound were broad, yet he eſcaped with life. And as he gave a groan with the ſudden pain that he felt, the Gaoler came up and bereft him of the Knife. But through the guiltineſs of the falſe Accuſation, and ſhame of the World, the man loſt his wits, who then ſtaring and diſmayed was diſmiſſed out of Priſon, and a long time after went in pitious caſe ſo diſmayed about the Street, to the great impoveriſhing of him, his poor Wife and Family.

Gods mercy in puniſhing

This kind of handling of the ſaid Brook made all his Friends, but eſpecially his Wife, to be greatly afraid of the malice of his Enemies: the rather alſo, for that all his Goods and Lands were ſeized, and his Wife thruſt into the meaneſt place of all his houſe, with her Children and Family, the Keys of all the Doors and Cheſts alſo taken from her. Who for that ſhe was rigorouſly intreated at Sir Edw. Kingley's hand, Controller of the Town (an Office of no ſmall charge, though he knew not a B. from a Battle-dore, nor ever a letter of the Book) ſaying unto her, that if ſhe liked not the Room, he would thruſt her quite out of the doors: Well Sir, ſaid ſhe, well, the Kings Slaughter-houſe had wrong when you were made a Gentleman; and with all ſpeed ſhe wrought a Letter to the Lord Cromwel, therein diſcourſing how hardly and ſore thoſe poor men were handled, that were committed to Ward and cloſe Priſon, and that all men feared (what through the malice of the Papiſtical Enemies, and the great rigor and ignorant zeal of thoſe that were in Authority) they ſhould ſhortly for their Faith and Conſciences, being true men, and ſuch as reverently feared God, be put to death, but chiefly her Husband who was yet more extreamly handled then any other: So that unleſs his Honour vouchſafed to be a means to the Kings Majeſty, that they with their Cauſes might be ſent over into England, they were but dead men.

Letters ſent to the Lord Cromwel from Calice.

Where-

The Lord Cromwels Letter to the Commiſſioners at Calice.

Whereupon the ſaid Lord Cromwel wrote ſpeedily his Letters unto the Commiſſioners, declaring, that the Kings Majeſties pleaſure and commandment was, that the errant Traitor and Heretick Brooke, with a dozen or twenty Complices, ſhould with their Accuſers be immediately ſent over, that here in England they might receive their judgment, and there at Calice, to the great terrour of like offenders hereafter, ſuffer according to their demerits.

Now by the time that the ſaid Commiſſioners had received theſe Letters, they had made out precepts for eight or nine ſcore honeſt men more to be caſt in Priſon. But theſe Letters ſo appalled them, that they ſtayed, and afterward ſent no more to ward. But making then as diligent Inquiſition as was poſſible, to have found ſome worthy matter againſt thoſe before named, whereby there might have been ſome colour both of the Counſels grievous complaints, and of the Commiſſioners rigorous dealling; when no ſuch thing could fall out, becauſe they would be aſſured that they ſhould not go unpuniſhed, they firſt baniſhed them the Town and Marches of Calice with a Trumpet blown, under pain of death, for an hundred years and a day (if that one day had been left out, all had been marred) and then ſent them back to Priſon, ſtaying them there upon hope that the L. Cromwel ſhould come into Captivity ſooner than he did. But at laſt, to wit on May day, they ſent the thirteen Priſoners through the Market, the ſaid Brook going before with Irons on his Leggs, as the chief Captain, the reſt following him two and two without Irons, unto ſhipboard, and then were they all coupled in Irons, two and two together. Where becauſe they were loath to go under the Hatches, Sir John Gage with a Staff ſmote ſome of them cruelly. Whereupon Anth. Pickering ſaid unto him, Sir, I beſeech you yet be as good to us as ye would be to your Horſes or Dogs, let us have a little air that we be not ſmothered. Yet that requeſt could not be obtained, but the Hatches were put down cloſe, and they guarded and kept with a great Company of men; and ſo ſailing forward, by Gods merciful providence, were within four and twenty hours at Anchor before the Tower of London.

The 13 Priſoners of Calice ſent to London.

The cruelty of a Popiſh Perſecutor.

And when the Lord Cromwel underſtood they were come, he commanded their Irons to be ſmit off at the Tower-Wharf, and the Priſoners to be brought unto him.

When he ſaw them, he ſmiled upon them, ſtedfaſtly beholding each of them, and then ſaid, Sirs, you muſt take pains for a time, and go your way to the Fleet, and ſubmit your ſelves Priſoners there, and ſhortly you ſhall know more. So indeed they did; and that evening he ſent them word they ſhould be of good chear, for if God ſent him life, they ſhould ſhortly go home with as much honeſty as they came with ſhame.

The 13. Priſoners put in the Fleet.

Whilſt theſe thirteen perſecuted men lay in the Fleet, and William Stevens in the Tower, to wit, the nineteenth day of July, Anno 1541. the fore-ſaid Lord Cromwel, for Treaſon laid againſt him, was at Tower-Hill beheaded, as is before ſpecified in his Story, who made there a very Chriſtian end. Then had the poor Calice men great cauſe to fear, if they had not altogether depended on the merciful providence of their heavenly Father, whoſe bleſſed will they knew directed all things. But he in the midſt of their deep troubles and miſeries ſo comforted them, that even as their dangers and troubles increaſed, ſo likewiſe did their conſolation and joy in him; ſo far forth as Matthew de Hound, one of theſe thirteen, who was in trouble only for that he heard Copen de Hall read a Chapter of the New Teſtament, and was as deep in puniſhment, and in baniſhment from his Wife, Children, and Country, as the reſt, got in ſhort time ſuch inſtruction, that having therewith a Soul and Conſcience fraughted full of godly Zeal unto Gods glory, and the true Doctrine of Chriſt, within a few months after his deliverance out of the Fleet, for inveying conſtantly againſt the wicked honouring of Images, and praying to Saints departed, he was cruelly, in a moſt conſtant Faith and Patience, burned in Flanders.

Matthew de Hound a bleſſed Martyr of God burnend in Flanders.

The Lord Audley good to the perſecuted members of Chriſt.

Now therefore when all hope in man was paſt, the right honourable Lord Audley, Lord Chancellor of England, without further examination, diſcharged firſt the ſaid thirteen that were in the Fleet, and at length, two years after, he delivered William Stevens alſo by the Kings own motion, out of the Tower, ſaying at the diſcharging of thoſe thirteen; Sirs, pray for the Kings Majeſty, his pleaſure is that you ſhall all be preſently diſcharged. And though your Livings be taken from you, yet diſpair not, God will not ſee you lack. But for Gods ſake, Sirs, beware how you deal with Popiſh Prieſts; for, ſo God ſave my Soul, ſome of them be Knaves all. Sirs, ſaid he, I am commanded by the Councel to tell you, that you are diſcharged by vertue of the Kings general Pardon, but that Pardon excepteth and forbiddeth all Sacramentaries, and the moſt part, or all of you are called Sacramentaries: therefore I cannot ſee how that Pardon doth you any pleaſure. But pray for the Kings Highneſs, for his Graces pleaſure is that I ſhould diſmiſs you, and ſo I do, and pity you all. Farewel Sirs.

The common ſaying of the Lord Audley concerning Popiſh Prieſts.

Calice men diſmiſſed.

So giving God moſt hearty thanks for his mighty and merciful delivering of them, they departed diſmiſſed as you have heard, being indeed in very poor eſtate; but not in ſo miſerable eſtate as all thoſe eight Counſellors of Calice were within one year and a half after. For whereas the other three Counſellors which ſeemed more favourable unto them (to wit, the Lord Gray, Sir George Carew, and Sir Richard Greenfield) which purged the Town of thoſe ſlanders that untruly were raiſed upon it, were therefore for a time in their Princes high diſpleaſure; within that year they were all three in greater favour with his Majeſty than ever they were before, and that not without the reward of twenty pounds by year to him and to his heirs, who had leaſt. The other eight Counſellors, unjuſtly charging them and the Town of Sedition and Hereſie, (that is to ſay, the Lord Liſle, the Lord Sands, Sir John Wallop, Sir Edward Kinſlee, Robert Fowler Eſquire, Vice-Treaſurer, Sir Thomas Palmer Knight, called long Palmer, William Simpſon, Eſquire, Under-marſhal, and John Rockwood) were either greatly out of their Princes favour, and in the Tower, or elſe were Priſoners, or elſe by very deſperate deaths, in outward appearance, taken out of this world. For tediouſneſs I will rehearſe but only the horrible end of the ſaid Rockwood, the chief ſtirrer up of all the afflictions afore ſpoken of: who even to his laſt breath, ſtaring and raging, cried, he was utterly damned. And being willed to ask God mercy, who was ready to forgive all that asked mercy of him, he brayed and cried out, All too late, for I have ſought malicioufly the deaths of a number of the honeſt men in the Town; and though I ſo thought them in my heart, yet I did that lay in me to bring them to an evil death: all too late therefore, all too late. Which ſame words he anſwered to one, that at the depature of the thirteen in Irons towards England, ſaid; Sir, I never ſaw men of ſuch honeſty ſo ſharply corrected, and taking it ſo patiently and joyfully. Rockwood then fetching a friſk or two, ſcoffingly anſwered, All too late. The Under-Marſhal ſuddenly fell down in the Councel Chamber, and never ſpake word after, nor ſhewed any token of repentance. The Plagues of the other alſo, as I am credibly informed, were little better.

Example how God proſpereth the favourers and Friends to his Goſpel.

Example how God turneth the malice of their Enemies upon their own head.

The Example of Gods judgment upon a cruel Perſecutor.

The ſecond Apprehenſion and Martyrdom of Adam Damlip.

CConcerning Adam Damlip, otherwiſe called George Bucker, ye heard before declared, how he being convented before the Biſhops at Lambeth, and afterward ſecretly admoniſhed, and having mony given him by his Friends to avoid, and not to appear again before the Biſhops; after he had ſent his Allegations in writing unto them, departed into the Weſt-Countrey and there continued teaching a School a certain ſpace, about a year or two. After that, the good man was again apprehended by the miſerable inquiſition of the ſix Articles, and brought up to London, where he was by Steven Gardiner commanded into the Marſhalſey, and there lay the ſpace of other two years or thereabout.

Adam Damlip again apprehended.

During the impriſonment of this George in the Marſhalſey, John Marbeck (as partly ye heard before) alſo was committed unto the ſame Priſon, which was the morrow after Palm-Sunday. The manner of that time ſo required, that at Eaſter every Perſon muſt needs come to confeſſion. Whereupon Marbeck, with the reſt of the the Priſoners there, was enforced to come upon Eaſter-day to Sir George aforeſaid, to be confeſſed, who was then Confeſſor to the whole Houſe. By this occaſion John Marbeck, which had never ſeen him before, entring into conference with him, perceived what he was, what he had been, what troubles he ſuſtained, how long he had lain there in Priſon, by whom and wherefore, who declared moreover his mind to Marbeck, to the effect as followeth: And now becauſe, ſaid he, I think they have forgotten me, I am fully minded to make my humble ſuit to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, in an Epiſtle, declaring therein mine obedience, humble ſubmiſſion, and earneſt deſire to come to Examination. I know the worſt: I can but loſe my life preſent, which I had rather do, than here to remain, and not to be ſuffered to uſe my Talent to Gods glory. Wherefore (God willing) I will ſurely put it in proof.

Geo. Bucker Confeſſor to the Priſoners iu the Marſhalſey.

Acquaintance between John Marbeck and Geo. Bucker, otherwiſe called Adam Damlip.

Adam Damlip well beloved among the Priſoners, ſpecially of the Keeper. Maſſy Keeper of the Marſhalſey.

This Damlip for honeſt and godly behaviour was beloved of all the whole Houſe, but eſpecially of the Keeper himſelf, whoſe Name was Maſſy, whom he always called Maſter, and being ſuffered to go at liberty within the Houſe whither he would, he did much good among the common and raſcal ſort of Priſoners, in rebuking Vice and Sin, and kept them in ſuch good order and aw, that the Keeper thought himſelf to have a great Treaſure of him. And no leſs alſo Marbeck himſelf confeſſeth, to have found great comfort by him. For notwithſtanding the ſtraight Precept given by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, that no man ſhould come to him, nor he to ſpeak with any man; yet the ſaid Adam many times would find the means to come and comfort him.

Ad. Damlip writeth to the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

Now when he had made and drawn out his Epiſtle, he delivered the ſame to his Maſter the Keeper, upon Saturday in the Morning, which was about the ſecond Week before Whitſunday following, deſiring him to deliver it at the Court to the Biſhop of Wincheſter. The Keeper ſaid, he would, and ſo did. The Biſhop, what quick ſpeed he made for his diſpatch I know not, but thus it fell out as ye ſhall hear.

Sir. Gardiner ſendeth out a Precept for the Execution of Ad. Damlip.

The Keeper came home at night very late, and when the Priſoners (which had tarried Supper for his coming) ſaw him ſo ſad and heavy, they deemed ſomething to be amiſs. At laſt the Keeper caſting up his eyes upon Sir George, ſaid, O George, I can tell thee tidings. What is that Maſter, quoth he? Upon Monday next thou and I muſt go to Calice. To Calice Maſter? What to do? I know not, quoth the Keeper, and pulled out of his Purſe a piece of Wax with a little label of Parchment hanging out thereat, which ſeemed to be a Precept. And when Sir George ſaw it, he ſaid, Well, well, Maſter, now I know what the matter is. What, quoth the Keeper? truly Maſter I ſhall die in Calice. Nay, quoth the Keeper, I truſt it to be not ſo. Yes yes, Maſter, it is moſt true, and I praiſe God for his goodneſs therein. And ſo the Keeper and they went together to Supper, with heavy chear for Sir George, as they there called him. Who notwithſtanding was merry himſelf, and did eat his Meat as well as ever he did in all his life: inſomuch that ſome of the Board ſaid unto him, that they marvelled how he could eat his Meat ſo well, knowing he was ſo near his death. Ah Maſters, quoth he, do you think that I have been Gods Priſoner ſo long in the Marſhalſey, and have not yet learned to die? Yes, yes, and I doubt not but God will ſtrengthen me therein. Ex Literis Johan. Marbecki.

The chearful conſtancy of Ad. Damlip.

And ſo upon Monday early in the Morning before day, the Keeper with three other of the Knight Marſhals Servants, ſetting out of London, conveyed the ſaid Adam Damlip to Calice upon the Aſcenſion Even, and there committed him to the Mayors Priſon. Upon which day John Butler the Commiſſary aforeſaid, and Sir Daniel his Curate of St. Peters were alſo committed to the ſame Priſon, and commandment given no man to ſpeak with Butler.

Ad. Damlip brought to Calice to ſuffer.

Upon Saturday next was the day of Execution for Damlip. The cauſe which firſt they laid to his charge, was for Hereſie. But becauſe by an Act of Parliament all ſuch offences, done before a certain day, were pardoned (through which Act he could not be burdened with any thing that he had preached or taught before) yet for the receiving of the foreſaid French Crown of Cardinal Pool (as you heard before) he was condemned of Treaſon, and in Calice cruelly put to death, being drawn, hanged and quartered.

The day before his Execution came unto him one Mr. Mote, then Parſon of our Lady Church in Calice, ſaying, Your four Quarters ſhall be hanged at four parts of the Town. And where ſhall my Head be, ſaid Damlip? Upon the Lantern-Gate, ſaid Mote. Then Damlip anſwered, Then ſhall I not need to provide for my burial. At his death, Sir R. Ellerker Knight, then Knight Marſhal there, would not ſuffer the innocent and godly man to declare either his Faith, or the Cauſe he died for, but ſaid to the Executioner, Diſpatch the Knave, have done. For Sir W. Mote, appointed there to preach declared declared to the People, how he had been a ſower of ſeditious Doctrine; and albeit he was for that pardoned by the General Pardon, yet he was condemned for being a Traitor againſt the King. To the which when Adam Damlip would have replied and purged himſelf, the foreſaid Sir R. Ellerker would not ſuffer him to ſpeak a word, but commanded him to be had away: And ſo moſt meekly, patiently, and joyfully, the bleſſed and innocent Martyr took his death, Sir R. Ellerker ſaying, that he would not away before he ſaw the Traitors heart out. But ſhortly after, the ſaid Sir Ralph Ellerker, in a skirmiſh or road between the French men and us at Bulleine, was among other ſlain. Whoſe only death ſufficed not his Enemies, but after they had ſtripped him ſtark naked, they cut off his Privy Members, and cut the heart out of his Body, and ſo left him a terrible example to all bloody and mercileſs men For no cauſe was known why they ſhewed ſuch indignation againſt the ſaid Sir Ralph Ellerker, more than againſt the reſt, but that it is written, Faciens Juſtitias Dominus & judicia omnibus injuria preſſis.

Damlip falſly accuſed of Treaſon, and innocently put to death.

An example of Gods juſt revengement.

As touching John Butler and Sir Daniel his Curate; impriſoned (as ye heard) the ſame day with Damlip, upon Sunday next following they were committed to John Maſſy aforeſaid, Keeper of the Marſhalſey, and his Company, and brought to the Marſhalſey, where he and his Curate continued nine months and more. At laſt, being ſore layed unto by Sir George Gage, Sir John Baker, and Sir Thomas Arundel Knights, but eſpecially by Stephen Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, for the retaining of Adam Damlip, yet by Friends ſoliciting the Kings Highneſs for him (namely Sir Leonard Muſgrave, and his Brother Baunſter, who were bound for his appearance in a thouſand pounds,) he at length by great labour and long time was diſcharged, and at laſt by licence permitted to return to Calice again: Ex ſcripto teſtimonio Caletienſium.

Another trouble of J. Butler, and Sir Daniel his Curate.

Furthermore, as touching William Stevens above-mentioned, who remained all this while Priſoner in the Tower, the ſame was alſo condemned with Adam Damlip of Treaſon, which was for Note and Crime of Popery, in lodging Adam Damlip, which came from Cardinal Pool the Traitor, in his Houſe, at the Lord Deputies commandment. Notwithſtanding the King afterward underſtanding more of the ſaid William Stevens, how innocent he was from that Crime, being known to all men to be an earneſt and zealous Proteſtant, gave him his Pardon, and ſent him home again to Calice, and ſo likewiſe all the other thirteen above mentioned.

Ex ſcripto teſtimonio Caletienſium.

W. Stevens an earneſt Proteſtant is fly condemned for Papery.

W. Stevens with the reſt pardoned by the King.

The Story of a poor Labouring-man in Calice.

BY the credible information and writing of the ſaid Calice men, which were then in trouble, it is reported of a certain poor labouring man of Calice, that after the preaching of Adam Damlip, being in a certain Company, he ſaid that he would never believe that a Prieſt could make the Lords Body at his pleaſure. Whereupon he was then accuſed, and alſo condemned by one Harvy Commiſſary there. Which Harvy in time of his Judgment inveying againſt him with opprobrious words, ſaid that he was an Heretick, and ſhould die a vile death. The poor man (whoſe name yet I have not certainly learned) anſwering for himſelf again, ſaid that he was no Heretick, but was in the Faith of Chriſt. And whereas thou ſaieſt (ſaid he) that I ſhall die a vile death, thou thy ſelf ſhalt die a viler death, and that ſhortly; and ſo it came to paſs, for within half a year after, the ſaid Harvey was hanged, drawn, and quartered for Treaſon in the ſaid Town of Calice.

A poor man burned at Calice for the right Faith of the Sacrament.

A notable example of Gods judgment upon a bloody Perſecutor.

Another Hiſtory of one Dod a Scotiſh-man, burned in Calice.

AFter the burning of this poor man, there was alſo another certain Scholar, counted to be a Scotiſh-man, named Dod, who coming out of Germany, was there taken with certain German Books about him, and being examined thereupon, and ſtanding conſtantly to the Truth that he had learned, was therefore condemned to death, and there burned in the ſaid Town of Calice, within the ſpace of a year or thereabout after the other godly Martyr above mentioned.

One Dod burned in Calice.

And forſomuch as I am preſently it hand with matters of Calice, I cannot paſs from thence without the memory of another certain honeſt man of the ſame Townſhip, named Button, alias Crosbowmaker, although the time of this Story is a little more ancient in years; which Story is this.

The ſtory of W. Crosbow-maker bearing a Billet in Calice.

William Crosbowmaker, a Souldier of Calice, and the Kings Servant, being a man (as ſome natures be) ſomewhat pleaſantly diſpoſed, uſed when he met with Prieſts, to demand of them certain merry queſtions of paſtime; as theſe: Whether if a man were ſuddenly taken, and wanted another thing, he might not without offence occupy one of the Popes Pardons in ſtead of a broken Paper.

W. Crosbowmakers queſtion.

Another Queſtion was, Whether in the world might better be wanting, Dogs or Prieſts. And if it were anſwered that Dogs might rather be ſpared; to that he would reply again and infer, that if there were no Dogs we could make no more, but if there lacked ignorant Prieſts, we might ſoon and too ſoon make too many of them.

It happened in the time of Doctor Darly, Parſon of our Ladies Church in Calice, being Commiſſary there for Archbiſhop Warham, there came a black Frier to Calice with the Popes pardons, who for four pence would deliver a Soul out of Purgatory. The Frier was full of Romiſh vertues, for what mony came for pardons by day, he bought no Land with it at night. This foreſaid William Button Alias Crosbow-maker, coming to the pardoner, and pretending that he would deliver his Father and Friends Souls, asked if the holy Father the Pope could deliver Souls out of Purgatory? The Frier ſaid, there is no doubt of that. Why then, quoth Button, doth not he of Charity deliver all the Souls thereout? Of which words he was accuſed to the Commiſſary: who at his appearing before the ſaid Commiſſary, confeſſed to have asked ſuch queſtions. The Commiſſary being angry thereat, ſaid, Doubteſt thou thereof thou Heretick? There was ſtanding by a Black Frier named Capel, an Engliſh man, who ſaid to the Commiſſary, There be ten thouſand of theſe Hereticks between Graveling and Trere. Button anſwered, Maſter Frier, of all men you may keep ſilence: for your Coat hath been twice cut off from the Faith; the firſt time your Order was enjoyned to have your black Coat ſhorter than your white, and for the ſecond time your Order muſt go to the furtheſt part of their Church, and there ſing an Anthem of our Lady. The Commiſſary chafed at theſe words, calling Button Heretick, with many other opprobrious words. Then ſaid Button to the Commiſſary; If your Holy Father the Pope may deliver Souls out of Purgatory, and will not of Charity deliver them, then I would to God the King would make me Pope, and I would ſurely deliver all out without mony. At theſe words the Commiſſary raged, and reviled Button exceedingly cauſing him to bear a Billet, and procured his wages (which was ſix pence a day) to be taken from him. Then went Button to the Kings Majeſty, declaring all the whole matter to his Grace: Who ſent him to Calice again, and gave him after that eight pence a day.

He ſets to doubt of the Popes Chaſtity.

This Anthem the black Friers were injoyned to ſing every night to our Lady in praiſe of her conception.

W. Crosbow-maker pardoned of the King.

A notable example wherein may appear as well the deſpight of Doctor London and other Papiſts againſt the Goſpellers, as alſo the Fidelity of a Matron towards her Husband.

FOrſomuch as mention was made a little before of Doctor London, we will ſomewhat more add of him, becauſe the matter ſeemeth neither impertinent nor unfruitful, to the intent it may more evidently appear, what Truth and truſt is to be looked for of this cruel kind of Papiſts. This Doctor London was Warden of the New Colledg in Oxford, where it happened that certain Plate was ſtolen, and conveyed and brought up to London, and ſold to a Gold-Smith named William Callaway. This Callaway was a man of good and honeſt name and reputation among his Neighbours, but eſpecially earneſt and zealous towards the Goſpel, and a great maintainer thereof. He had oftentimes before bought much Plate of the ſame man without any peril or danger, wherefore he doubted the leſs of his Fidelity.

The cruel malice of Dr London againſt the Goſpel.

Ex Ed Halle. W. Callaway Gold-ſmith of London.

At

This Principal was a Chaplain of the ſaid Colledge.

At the laſt the principal of the Theft being taken, and the Goldſmith alſo that was the Buyer being known; Dr. London, when he underſtood him to be a favourer of the Goſpel (whereof he was an extream Adverſary) began ſtraightways to be in a rage, and to ſwear great and deep Oaths, that he would ſpare neither labour nor coſt, but would bring the Goldſmith to the Gallows, although it ſhould coſt him five hundred pounds. To be ſhort, this good Goldſmith was arraigned as Acceſſary, and an Action of Felony brought againſt him. He contrariwiſe alleadged, That they ought not to proceed againſt him, the Principal being alive. Dr. London on the contrary part affirmed that the Principal was hanged; which was moſt falſe, for he was one of the ſame Colledge, and was alive, and but lately ſet at liberty. To be brief, he being found guilty, the Judge asked him what he could alleadge why he ſhould not die? He required to have the priviledge of his Book, according to the ancient cuſtom and manner. But here it was objected againſt him that he was Bigamus, and therefore he might not have his Book by the Law; notwithſtanding that he never had two Wives, but becauſe his Wife had two Huſbands, it was imputed to him for Bigamia.

Callaway claimeth the priviledge of his Book.

Bigamus, that is, a man that hath had two Wives.

Thus this good Goldſmith being ſecluded from all hope of life, by the crafty ſpight of his malignant Adverſaries; his Wife, being a Woman of proved honeſty and good fame, came in before the Judges, and perceiving her former Marriage to be hurtful unto her Huſband, to ſave her Husbands life, ſhe took an Oath before the Judges that ſhe was not Bigama, and that ſhe was never married to more men than to the ſaid Goldſmith; and although ſhe had Children by her other Husband, and continued divers years with him, yet ſhe ſware that ſhe was never married unto him. Thus this Woman by defaming of her ſelf, to her great praiſe and ſingular example of love, delivered her innocent Husband; thinking it better for her to live with ignominy and reproach, than for her Husband to die, leſs eſteeming the loſs of her good name, than of his life. Ex Ed. Hallo.

True love between Man and Wife.

As touching the quality of this Fact or Perjury, I intermeddle not here to diſcuſs, but leave it at large to the judgment of Lawyers to define upon. Truth it is, that Perjury neither in man nor woman is to be commended, neither ought it to be defended. But yet the true heart and faithful love between this Man and his Wife, counterpoiſing again as much or more on the other ſide, the more rare and ſtrange I ſee it in many Couples now adays, the more I think it worthy, not only to be praiſed, but alſo for Examples ſake to be notified. But in the mean time, what ſhall we ſay to theſe Prieſts and Adverſaries, who in ſuch ſort violently do preſs, and force the poor Sheep of Chriſt with peril of their Conſcience unto ſuch Perjury, and that in ſuch caſes, where no ſuch truth is ſought, but innocency oppreſſed, true Religion perſecuted, and only their ſpight and wrath againſt Gods Word wreaked.

During the time of theſe ſix Articles aforeſaid, which brought many good men unto death; yet ſo it hapned by another contrary Act ſet forth before for the Kings Supremacy (as ye have heard) that the contrary Sect alſo of the Papiſts was not all in quiet. For beſides the death of More, and the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and the other Charter-Houſe Monks, Friers and Prieſts above ſpecified, about this year alſo was condemned and executed by the ſame Law two other, of whom one was a Prieſt of Chelſey, named Lark, which was put to death at London for defending the Biſhop of Romes Supremacy, above the Kings Authority: The other was Germaine Gardiner (near Kinſman to Steven Gardiner, and yet more near to his ſecret counſel, as it is ſuppoſed) who likewiſe in practiſing for the Pope againſt the Kings Juriſdiction, was taken with the manner, and ſo brought unto the Gibbet.

Lark Prieſt of Chelſey. Germaine Gardiner Traytors againſt the Kings Supremacy.

Upon the detection of that Germaine Gardiner, being Secretary to Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter his Kinſman, it ſeemed to ſome, and ſo was alſo inſinuated unto the King not to be unlike; but that the ſaid Germaine neither would nor durſt ever attempt any ſuch matter of Popery, without ſome ſetting on, or conſent of the Biſhop, he being ſo near unto him, and to all ſecrets as he was. Whereby the King began ſomewhat more to ſmell and miſdoubt the doings of the Biſhop; but yet he ſo covertly and cleanly conveyed his matters, playing under the Board, after his wonted fetches, in ſuch ſort as (I cannot tell how) ſtill he kept in with the King, to the great inquietation of the publick State of the Realm, and eſpecially of Chriſts Church.

Suſpicion againſt Stephen Gardiner.

In declaring the dreadful Law before ſet forth of the ſix Articles, which was, An. 1540. ye heard what Penalty was appointed for the breach of the ſame, in like caſe as in Treaſon and Felony, ſo that no remedy of any Recantation would ſerve. This ſeverity was a little mitigated by another Parliament, holden afterward, An 1544. by the which Parliament it was decreed, that ſuch Offenders, which were convict in the ſaid Articles, for the firſt time ſhould be admitted to recant and renounce their Opinions. And if the party refuſed to recant in ſuch form as ſhould be laid unto him by his Ordinary, or after his Recantation if he eftſoons offended again, then for the ſecond time he ſhould be admitted to abjure and bear a Fagot. Which if he denied to do, or elſe being abjured if he the third time offended, then he to ſuſtain puniſhment according to the Law, &c. Although the ſtraightneſs and rigor of the former act was thus ſomewhat tempered, as ye ſee, and reformed by this preſent Parliament, yet notwithſtanding the venom and poiſon of the Errors and miſchief of thoſe Articles remained ſtill behind not removed, but rather confirmed by this Parliament aforeſaid. By the which Parliament moreover many things were provided for the advancement of Popery, under the colour of Religion; ſo that all manner of Books of the old and new Teſtament, bearing the name of William Tindal, or any other having Prologues, or containing any Matters, Annotations, Preambles, Words or Sentences contrary to the Six Articles, were debarred. In like manner all Songs, Plays and Interludes, with all other Books in Engliſh, containing matter of Religion, tending any way againſt the ſaid Articles were aboliſhed.

Stat. An 35. Reg. Hen. 8.

The rigour of the Six Articles a little aſſwaged.

In the which Parliament furthermore it was provided, that the Text of the New Teſtament or of the Bible, being prohibited to all Women, Artificers, Prentices, Journeymen, Servingmen, Yeomen, Husbandmen and Labourers; yet was permitted notwithſtanding to Noblemen, and Gentlemen and Gentlewomen to read and peruſe, to their edifying, ſo that they did it quietly without arguing, diſcuſſing or expounding upon the Scripture.

Over and beſides, whereas before the Offender or Defendant might not be ſuffered to bring in any Witneſſes to purge and try himſelf: In this Parliament it was permitted to the party detect, or complained on, to try his Cauſe by Witneſſes, as many, or more in number, as the other which depoſed againſt him, &c.

Other qualifications of the Act of the Six Articles.

After this Parliament moreover followed another Parliament the year following, Anno 1545. wherein other qualifications more ſpecial of the Six Articles were provided; that whereas before the cruel Statute of the Six Articles was ſo ſtraight, that if any of the Kings Subjects had been complained of by any manner of perſon, as wellbeing his Enemy as otherwiſe, he ſhould be indicted preſently upon the ſame, without any further examination or knowledge given to the party ſo accuſed, and ſo thereupon attached, committed, and in fine condemned; it was therefore by this Parliament provided, that all ſuch Preſentments and Indictments ſhould not be brought before the Commiſſioners, otherwiſe than by the Oaths of Twelve men or more, of honeſty and credit, without corruption or malice accordingly.

Item, That no ſuch Indictments or Preſentments ſhould be taken, but within one year after the offences committed, or elſe the ſaid Indictments to ſtand void in the Law.

Item, That no perſon accuſed upon any ſuch offence againſt the Six Articles, ſhould be attached, or committed to Ward before he were thereof indicted, unleſs by ſpecial warrant from the King.

Item, By the Authority of the ſaid Parliament it was conſidered and enacted, that if any Preacher or Reader, for any word ſpoken, ſuppoſed to be againſt the Six Articles, ſhould should be accused, not within the space of forty days of the said his reading or preaching, then the party accused to be acquitted.

Item, That the Justices or Inquirers of such presentments should have full power to alter and reform all pannels of Inquiry, returned before them, in like manner as the Justices of Peace may do in their Sessions upon any other Inquiries.

Item, That the party so accused or indicted, upon his trial, may have all manner of challenges (peremptory only excepted) as other persons arraigned for felony may have, by the Laws of this Realm.

Stat. An. 1545 K. Hen. 8.

By the qualifications and moderations of the six Articles it may appear that the King began somewhat to grow out of favour with Ste. Gardiner, and to descry his doings, whereby he was the more forward to incline somwhat in furthering the desolate cause of Religion, as may appear both by the premisses, and also by other provisions and determinations of the foresaid Parliament An. 1545. wherein it was decreed by Act of Parliament, that the King should have full Power and Authority to appoint two and thirty persons, to wit, sixteen of the Clergy, and sixteen of the Temporalty, to peruse, over-see, and examine the Canons, Constitutions and Ordinances of the Canon Law, as well Provincial as Synodal, and so, according to their discretions, to set and establish an order of the Eccleasiastical Laws, such as should be thought by the King and them convenient to be received and used within this Realm. Which Statute as it is most needful for the Goverment of the Church of England so would God it had been brought to perfection.

A Statute for examination of the Canon Law.

John Athee recanted.

Anno 1545.

In this year, touching matters of History, we read no great thing worthy of Memory, but onely of two Persons, John Athee, and John Heywood. Of which two, we find first John Athee to be indited by the Kings Writ for certain words against the Sacrament, which words in the Inditement are specified to be these; That he would not believe in the thing which the Knave Priest made, neither in that which Longs Wife selleth; but onely in God that is in Heaven. And when it was told him that God through his word could make it Flesh and Blood, he answered; so he might, if he would, turn it into a Chickins leg, meaning the Sacrament of the Altar.

The recantation of John Haywood

The same year also followed the Recantation of John Haywood; who although he was tached for Treason, for denying the Kings Supremacy, yet using the clemency of the King, upon his better reformation and amendment, made an open and Solemn Recantation in the face of all the people, abandoning and renouncing the Popes usurped supremacy, and confessing of the King to be chief supream Head and Governour of this Church of England, all forein Authority and Jurisdiction being excluded. The tenour and effect of whose Recantation here followeth.

I Am come hither at this time (good people) willing, and of mine own desirous sute, to shew, and declare unto you briefely; First of all the great and inestimable clemency and mercifulness of our most soveraign and redoubted Prince the Kings Majesty, the which his highness hath most graciously used towards me a wretch, most justly and worthily condemned to dye for my manifold and outragious offences, haynously and traiterously committed against his Majesty and his Laws. For whereas his Majesties Supremacy hath so often been opened unto me both by writing and speaking (if I had Grace, either to open mine eyes to see it, or mine ears to hear it) to be surely and certainly grounded, and established upon the very true Word of God: yet for lack of Grace I have most wilfully and obstinately suffered my self to fall to such blindness, that I have not onely thought that the Bishop of Rome hath been and ought to be taken the chief and Supreme Head of the Universal Church of Christ here in earth, but also, like no true Subject, concealed and favoured such as I have known or thought to be of that opinion. For the which most detestable Treasons and untruths, I here most humbly and with all my heart first of all ask of the Kings Majesty forgiveness, and secondarily of the world, beseeching all these that either now do, or hereafter shall hear of these my great transgressions, to take this mine example for an instruction for them to call for grace, that they thereby be staid from falling at any time into such miserable blindness and folly.

Moreover, here afore God and you (good Christian people) I do utterly and with all my heart recant and revoke all mine aforesaid erroneous and traiterous opinions. And (as my Conscience now doth force) I protest, that even with my heart I firmly think and undoubtedly believe, that the Bishop of Rome neither now hath, nor at any time hath had, or can have by any Law of God or Man, any more Authority, without the precinct of his own Countrey about him, than any other Bishop hath within his Dioceses. Whereby I assuredly take the abolishing of the pretensed and usurped Power or Authority of the Bishop of Rome out of this Realm, to be done justly and truely by the Law of God. And also I take our Soveraign Lord the Kings Highness to be Supreme Head, immediately next under Christ, of the Church of England and Ireland, and all other his Graces Dominions, both of the Spirituality and Temporalty. And I confess not only that his Majesty is so by the Law of God, but also his Progenitors, Kings of this Realm hath been, and his Highness Heirs and Successors Kings of this Realm shall so be.

Thus have I shewed you my mind as well as I can, but neither so well as I would, nor so fully as I should, namely concerning the multitude of mercy which my most gracious Prince hath shewed toward me, not onely for saving my Body after worthy condemnation to death, as is aforesaid, but also for saving my Soul from perishing, if my Body had perished before the receiving of such wholsom Counsel, as I had at his Highness most charitable assignment. And of this Confession declared unto you (I say as far forth as I can) I heartily pray you all to bear me record, and most entirely pray Almighty God for the long and most prosperous estate of our Soveraign Lord the Kings Majesty in all his affairs and proceedings.

By me John Haywood.

In this year of our Lord God 1545, as there was no other thing done in England worthy to be noted, so now the order of story here requireth by the course of years, next to infer the discourse of the troubles and persecutions which happened in Scotland, against Master George Wisehart and divers other good Men of the same Countrey, about the same year of our Lord, 1545. and somewhat before. But because now we are come to the latter end almost of King Henrys Reign, we will make an end (the Lord willing) with a few other English stories pertaining to that time; and that finished, we will set upon those matters of Scotland, joyning them all together. The tractation whereof thou shalt see (good Reader) in the latter end and closing up of this Kings Reign.

Kerby, and Roger Clarke of Suffolk, Martyrs.

Coming now to the year of our Lord 1546. first passing over the Priest, whose name was Saxy, which was hanged in the Porters Lodge of Steven Gardiner Bishop of Whinchester, and that, as it is supposed, not without the consent of the said Bishop and the secret conspiracy of that bloody generation; to pass over also one Henry with his Servant burned at Colchester; I will now proceed to the story of Kerby and Roger Clarke of Mendelsham, who were apprehended at Ipswich, An. 1546. the Saturday before Gang Monday, and brought before the Lord Wentworth with other Commissioners appointed there to sit upon their examinations, judgments, and causes. The night before they were arraigned, a Bill was set upon the Town House Door (by whom, it was unknown) and brought the next day unto the Lord

Saxy a Priest hanged in Ste. Gardiners Porters lodge.

A Bill brought to the Lord Wentworth, at the arraignment of Kerby & Roger.

Lord Wentworth; who anſwered, That it was good Counſel. Which Bill in the Latter end ſhall appear.

In the mean time Kerby and Rogers being in the Gaolers-Houſe, named John Bird, an honeſt and a good Man (who had checks divers times at the Barr, that he was more meet to be kept, than to be a Keeper) came in Maſter Robert Wingfield, Son and Heir of Humfrey Wingfield Knight: with Maſter Brueſs of Wenneham; who then having Conference with Kerby (being then in a ſeveral Chamber ſeparate from the other) Maſter Wingfield ſaid to Kerby, Remember the fire is hot, take heed of thine enterpriſe, that thou take no more upon thee than thou ſhalt be able to perform. The terrour is great, the pain will be extreme, and life is ſweet. Better it were betime to ſtick to mercy, while there is hope of life, than raſhly to begin, and then to ſhrink; with ſuch like words of perſwaſion. To whom he anſwered again, Ah, Maſter Wingfield, be at my burning and you ſhall ſay, there ſtandeth a Chriſtian Soldier in the fire: for I know that fire and water, ſword, and all other things are in the Hands of God, and he will ſuffer no more to be laid upon us than he will give ſtrength to bear. Ah Kerby, ſaid Maſter Wingfield, if thou be at that point, I will bid thee farewel; for I promiſe thee I am not ſo ſtrong that I am able to burn. And ſo both the Gentlemen ſaying that they would pray for them, ſhook Hands with them, and ſo departed.

The words of Mr. Wingfield to Kerby and Roger in Priſon.

The anſwer of Kerby to Mr. Wingfield.

Now firſt touching the behaviour of Kerby and Roger when they came to the Judgment-ſeat, the Lord Wentworth with all the reſt of the Juſtices there ready, the Commiſſary alſo, by vertue of the Statute ex Officio, ſitting next to the Lord Wentworth, but one between; Kerby and Roger lifted up their Eyes and Hands to Heaven with great devotion in all mens eies, making their prayers ſecretly to God for a ſpace of time, whileſt they might ſay the Lords payer five or ſix times.

The behaviour of Kerby and Roger when they were brought before the Judges.

That done, their Articles were declared unto them with all Circumſtances of the Law: and then it was demanded and required of them, Whether they believed, that after the words ſpoken by a Prieſt (as Chriſt ſpake them to his Apoſtles) there were not the very Body and Blood of Chriſt, Fleſh, Blood, and Bone, as he was born of the Virgin Mary, and no Bread after.

Queſtions propounded to Kerby and Roger.

Unto the which words they anſwered and ſaid, No, they did not ſo believe; but that they did believe the Sacrament which Chriſt Jeſus did inſtitute at his laſt Supper, on Maunday Thurſday at night to his Diſciples, was onely to put all Men in Remembrance of his Precious Death and Blood ſhedding for the Remiſſion of Sins, and that there was neither Fleſh nor Blood to be eaten with the teeth, but Bread and Wine, and yet more than Bread and Wine, for that it is Conſecrated to an Holy uſe. Then with much perſwaſions, both with fair means and threats beſide (if it would have ſerved) were theſe two poor men hardly layed to; but moſt at the Hands of Foſter an inferior Juſtice, not being learned in ſuch knowledge. But theſe two continued both faithful and conſtant, chuſing rather to die than to live, and ſo continued unto the end.

Their anſwer.

The Sacrament more then bare bread and wine.

Foſter a ſore Enemy to Gods people

Then Sentence was given upon them both, Kerby to be burned in the ſaid Town on the next Saturday, and Roger to be burned at Bury the Gang Monday after. Kerby, when his judgment was given by the Lord Wentworth, with moſt humble Reverence holding up his hands and bowing himſelf devoutly, ſaid, Praiſed be Almighty God, and ſo ſtood ſtill without any more words.

Sentence given againſt Kerby and Roger.

Then did the Lord Wentworth talke ſecretly, putting his hand behind another Juſtice that ſate between them. The ſaid Roger perceiving that, ſaid with a loud voice, ſpeak out my Lord, and if you have any thing contrary to your Conſcience, ask God mercy, and we for our parts do forgive you; and ſpeak not in ſecret, for ye ſhall come before a judge, and then make anſwer openly, even before him that ſhall judge all men; with other like words.

Roger's word o the Lord Wentworth.

The Lord Wentworth ſomewhat bluſhing, and changing his contenance, through remorſe as it was thought,) ſaid, I did ſpeak nothing of you, nor have I done any thing unto you, but as the Law is. Then was Kerby and Roger ſent forth; Kerby to Priſon there, and Roger to Saint Edmunds Bury. The one of the two burſting out with a loud voice (Roger it is ſuppoſed) thus ſpake with a vehemency, Fight, ſaid he, for your God, for he hath not long to continue.

Roger ſent to Bury to be burned.

A prophecy.

The next day, which was Saturday, about ten of the clock, Kerby was brought to the Market place, where a Stake was ready, Wood, Broom, and Straw, and did off his cloths unto his ſhirt, having a night cap upon his head, and ſo was faſtened to the Stake with Irons, there being in the Gallery the Lord Wentworth, with the moſt part of all the Juſtices of thoſe Quarters, where they might ſee his execution, how every thing ſhould be done, and alſo might hear what Kerby did ſay; and a great number of people, about two thouſand by eſtimation. There was alſo ſtanding in the Gallery by the Lord Wentworth, Doctor Rugham, which was before a Monk of Bury, and Sexton of the Houſe, having on a Surpleſs and a Stole about his neck. Then ſilence was proclaimed, and the Doctor began to diſable himſelf, as not meet to declare the Holy Scriptures being unprovided becauſe the time was ſo ſhort, but that he hoped in Gods Aſiſtance it ſhoud come well to paſs.

Kerby brought to the Stake at Ipſwich.

Dr. Rugham Monk of Bury, preached at the burning of Kerby.

All this while Kerby was trimming with Irons and Fagots, Broom, and Straw, as one that ſhould be married with new garments, nothing changing cheer nor countenance, but with a moſt meek Spirit glorified God; which was wonderful to behold. Then Mr. Doctor at laſt entered into the ſixt chapter of St. John. Who in handling that matter ſo oft as he alledged the Scriptures, and applied them rightly, Kerby told the people that he ſaid true, and bad the people believe him. But when he did otherwiſe, he told him again, You ſay not true, believe him not good people. Whereupon, as the voice of the people was, they judged Doctor Rugham a falſe Prophet. So when Mr. Doctor had ended his collation, he ſaid unto Kerby, Thou good Man, doſt not thou believe that the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar is the very Fleſh and Blood of Chriſt, and no Bread, even as he was born of the Virgin Mary; Kerby anſwering boldly, ſaid, I do not ſo believe. How doeſt thou believe? ſaid the Doctor. Kerby ſaid, I do believe that in the Sacrament that Jeſus Chriſt inſtituted at his laſt ſupper on Maunday Thurſday to his Diſciples (which ought of us likewiſe to be done) is his death and paſſion and his bloudſhedding for the Redemption of the world, to be remembred, and (as I ſaid before;) yet Bread, and more than Bread, for that it is conſecrated to a holy uſe. Then was Maſter Doctor in his dumps, and ſpake not one word more to Kerby after.

The cheareful contenance and courage of Kerby.

Kerby confeſſion of the Sacrament.

Then ſaid the underſherif to Kerby, haſt thou any thing more to ſay? Yea Sir, ſaid he, if you will give me leave. Say on, ſaid the Sherif.

Then Kerby, taking his night cap from his head, put it under his Arms as though it ſhould have done him ſervice again: but remembring himſelf, he caſt it from him, and lifting up his Hands, he ſaid the Hymn, Te Deum, and the belief, with other prayers in the Engliſh Tongue. The Lord Wentworth, whileſt Kerby was thus doing, did ſhroud himſelf behind one of the Poſts of the Gallery, and wept, and ſo did many other. Then ſaid Kerby, I have done: you may execute your office good Mr. Sherif. Then fire was ſet to the wood, and with a loud voyce he called unto God, knocking on his Breaſt, and holding up his Hands ſo long as his remembrance would ſerve, and ſo ended his life, the people giving ſhouts, and praiſing God with great admiration of his conſtancy, being ſo ſimple and unlettered.

The Lord Wentworth at Kerbys burning.

The conſtant death and Martyrdom of Kerby.

On the Gang Munday, An. 1546. about ten of the clock, Roger Clarke of Mendelſham was brought out of Priſon, and went on foot to the Gate, called Southgate, in Bury, and by the way the Proceſſion met with them, but he went on, and would not bow, cap, nor knee, but with moſt vehement words rebuked that Idolatry and Superſtition, the Officers being much offended. And without the Gate, where was the place of execution, the Stake being ready, and the wood lying by, he came and kneeled down, and ſaid Magnificat in the Engliſh Tongue, making as it were a Paraphraſe upon the ſame, wherein he declared how that the bleſſed Virgin Mary, who might as well rejoyce in pureneſs, as any other, yet humbled her ſelf to our Saviour. And what ſayeſt thou John Baptiſt, ſaid he, the greateſt of all Mens Children? Behold

Roger Clarke of Medelſham brought to the Stake at Bury. Roger Clarke giveth no reverence to the Proceſſion.

John 1.

Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the ſins of the World. And thus with a loud voice he cried unto the People, while he was in faſtening unto the Stake, and then the fire was ſet to him, where he ſuffered pains unmercifully; for the Wood was green, and would not burn, ſo that he was choaked with ſmoak: and moreover, being ſet in a Pitch-barrel, with ſome Pitch ſticking ſtill by the ſides, he was therewith ſore pained, till he had got his feet out of the Barrel. And at length one ſtanding by took a Faggot-ſtick, and ſtriking at the Ring of Iron about his neck, ſo paſhed him, and ſtrook him belike upon the Head, that he ſhrunk down on the one ſide into the fire, and ſo was diſſolved.

The painful Burning and Martyrdom of Roger Clarke of Mendleſham.

In the beginning of this ſtory of Kerby and Roger, mention was made of a certain Bill put upon the Townshouſe Door, and brought to the next day to the Lord Wentworth, the words of which Bill were theſe.

The Bill ſet upon the Town-houſe Door in Ipſwich.

The words of the Bill ſet upon the Town-houſe Door.

JUſtè judicate filii hominum; yet when ye ſhall judge, miniſter your Juſtice with Mercy.

A fearful thing it is to fall into the hands of the Living God: be ye learned therefore in true knowledge, ye that judge the Earth, leſt the Lord be angry with you.

The blood of the righteous ſhall be required at your hands. What though the vail hanged before Moſes face; yet at Chriſts death it fell down.

The Stones will ſpeak, if theſe ſhould hold their peace; therefors harden not your hearts againſt the Verity.

For fearfully ſhall the Lord appear in the day of Vengeance to the troubled in Conſcience. No excuſe ſhall there be of ignorance, but every Fat ſhall ſtand on his own bottom. Therefore have remorſe in your Conſcience; fear him that may kill both Body and Soul.

Beware of innocent Blood-ſhedding, take heed of Juſtice ignorantly miniſtred, work diſcreetly as the Scripture doth command: look to it, that you make not the Truth to be forſaken.

We beſeech God to ſave our King, King Henry the Eighth, that he be not led into Temptation. So be it.

This year alſo it was ordained and decreed, and ſolemnly given out in Proclamation by the Kings Name and Authority, and his Council, that the Engliſh Proceſſion ſhould be uſed throughout all England, according as it was ſet forth by his ſaid Council, and none other, to be uſed throughout the whole Realm.

The ſame ſubdued. Bullain won. A Parliament.

About the latter end of this year 1545. in the month of November, after that the King had ſubdued the Scots, and afterward, joyning together with the Emperour, had invaded France, and had got from them the Town of Bullain, he ſummoned his High Court of Parliament. In the which was granted unto him, beſides other Subſidies of Money, all Colledges, Chantries, free Chappels, Hoſpitals, Fraternities, Brotherhoods, Guilds and Perpetuities of ſtipendary Prieſts, to be diſpoſed at his will and pleaſure. Whereupon in the Month of December following, the King after his wonted manner, came into the Parliament-Houſe to give his Royal aſſent to ſuch Acts as were there paſſed: where after an eloquent Oration made to him by the Speaker, he anſwering again unto the ſame, not by the Lord Chancellor (as the manner was) but by himſelf, uttered this Oration word for word, as it is reported and left in ſtory.

Colledges and Chantries given to the King. Stat. Anno 37. Reg. H. 8.

In the Contents of which Oration, firſt eloquently and lovingly he declared his grateful heart to his loving Subjects for their Grants and Subventions, offered unto him. In the ſecond part, with no leſs vehemency he exhorteth them to concord, peace and unity. Whereunto if he had alſo joyned the third part, that is, as in words he exhorteth to unity, ſo he had begun indeed firſt himſelf to take away the occaſion of diviſion, diſobedience and diſturbance from his Subjects, that is, had removed the Stumbling-block of the Six Articles out of the Peoples way, which ſet Brother againſt Brother, Neighbour againſt Neighbour, the Superiour againſt the Subject, and the Wolves to devour the poor Flock of Chriſt: then he had not only ſpoken, but alſo done like a worthy Prince. But of this more ſhall be ſaid in the ſequel hereof, God willing.

The Kings Oration in the Parliament-Houſe.

The Kings Oration made in the Parliament Houſe.

ALthough my Chancellor for the time being hath before this time uſed very eloquently and ſubſtantially to make anſwer to ſuch Orations as have been ſet forth in this High Court of Parliament; yet is he not ſo able to open and ſet forth my mind and meaning, and the ſecrets of my heart, in ſo plain and ample manner, as I my ſelf am and can do. Wherefore I taking upon me to anſwer your eloquent Oration, Maſter Speaker, ſay,

That where you in the Name of our well-beloved Commons have both praised and extolled me for the notable qualities that you have conceived to be in me, I most heartily thank you all, that you put me in remembrance of my duty, which is, to endeavour my self to obtain and get such excellent qualities, and necessary vertues, as a Prince or Governour should or ought to have; of which gifts I recognize my self both bare and barren.

But for such small qualities as God hath endued me withal, I render to his goodness my most humble thanks, intending with all my wit and diligence to get and acquire to me such Notable vertues and Princely qualities, as you have alleadged to be incorporate in my person.

The Kings Thanks to his Commons.

These Thanks for your loving admonition and good counsel first remembred, I eftsoons thank you again, because that you considering our great charges (not for our pleasure but for your defence, not for our gain but to our great cost) which we have lately sustained, as well in defence against our and your Enemies, as for the conquest of that Fortress, which was to this Realm most displeasant and noysom, and shall be by Gods Grace hereafter to our Nation most profitable and pleasant, have freely of your own mind granted to us a certain Subsidy here in an Act specified, which verily we take in good part, regarding more your kindness than the profit thereof, as he that setteth more by your loving hearts, than by your substance. Besides this hearty kindness, I cannot a little rejoyce, when I consider the perfect trust and sure confidence which you have put in me, as men having undoubted hope, and unfeigned belief in my good doings and just proceedings, for that you, without my desire or request, have committed to mine order and disposition all Chantries, Colledges, Hospitals, and other places specified in a certain Act, firmly trusting that I will order them to the glory of God, and the profit of our Commonwealth. Surely if I, contrary to your expectation, should suffer the Ministers of the Church to decay; or Learning, which is so great a Jewel, to be minished; or poor and miserable People to be unrelieved; you might say that I, being put in so special a trust as I am in this case, were no trusty Friend to you, nor charitable Man to mine even Christian, neither a lover of the Publick wealth, nor yet one that feared God, to whom account must be rendred of all our doings. Doubt not I pray you but your expectation shall be served more godly and goodly than you will wish or desire, as hereafter you shall plainly perceive.

The Kings Promises for the well bestowing of Chantries and Colledges.

Now sithence I find such kindness on your part toward me, I cannot chuse but love and favour you, affirming that no Prince in the World more favoureth his Subjects than I do you, nor any Subjects or Commons more love and obey their Sovereign Lord, than I perceive you do me, for whose defence my Treasure shall not be hidden, nor if necessity require, shall my Person be unadventured. Yet although I with you, and you with me, be in this perfect love and concord, this friendly amity cannot continue, except you my Lords Temporal and you my Lords Spiritual, and you my loving Subjects, study and take pains to amend one thing, which is surely amiss and far out of order, to the which I most heartily require you; which is, that Charity and Concord is not among you, but Discord and Dissension beareth rule in every place. St. Paul saith to the Corinthians, in the 13th Chapter, Charity is gentle, Charity is not envious, Charity is not proud, and so forth in the said Chapter: Behold then what love and * charity is amongst you, when the one calleth the other Heretick, and Anabaptist; and he calleth him again Papist, Hypocrite, and Pharisee. Be these tokens of Charity amongst you? Are these the signs of Fraternal Love between you? No, no, I assure you that this lack of Charity amongst your selves will be the hindrance and asswaging of the fervent Love between us, as I said before, except this wound be salved and clearly made whole. I must needs judge the fault and occasion of this Discord to be partly by the negligence of you the Fathers and Preachers of the Spirituality. For if I know a man which liveth in Adultery, I must judge him a lecherous and carnal person. If I see a man boast and brag himself, I cannot but deem him a proud man. I see and hear daily, That you of the Clergy preach one against another, teach one contrary to another, inveigh one against another, without charity or discretion. Some be too stiff in their old Mumpsimus, other be too busie and curious in their new Sumpsimus.

* Charity and Concord in Commonwealths be things most necessary: but in matters of Religion, Charity and Concord is not enough, without verity and true worship of God. If true Religion had been maintained and Error reformed, these terms of variance had not need now to be reproved.

Thus all men almost be in variety and discord, and few or none do preach truly and sincerely the Word of God, according as they ought to do. Shall I now judge you charitable persons, doing this? No, no, I cannot so do. Alas, how can the poor Souls live in concord, when you Preachers sow amongst them, in your Sermons, debate and discord? Of you they look for light, and you bring them to darkness. Amend these Crimes, I exhort you, and set forth Gods † Word, both by true preaching and good example giving, or else I, whom God hath appointed his Vicar and high Minister here, will see these divisions extinct, and these Enormities corrected, according to my very duty, or else I am an unprofitable Servant, and an untrue Officer.

† And wherein else consisteth all this variance, but only because Gods Word hath not his free course, but they which set it forth are condemned and therefore burned?

Although (as I say) the Spiritual men be in some fault, that Charity is not kept amongst you, yet you of the Temporalty be not clean and unspotted of malice and envy; for you rail on Bishops, speak slanderously of Priests, and rebuke and taunt Preachers, both contrary to good order and Christian Fraternity. If you know surely that a Bishop or Preacher erreth, or teacheth perverse Doctrine, come and declare it to some of our Council, or to Us, to whom is committed by God, the Authority to reform and order such Causes and Behaviours, and * be not Judges your selves of your own phantastical Opinions, and vain Expositions, for in such high Causes ye may lightly err. And although you be permitted to read Holy Scripture, and to have the Word of God in your Mother Tongue, you must understand, that it is licensed you so to do, only to inform your own Conscience, and to instruct your Children and Family, and not to dispute and make Scripture a railing and a taunting Stock against Priests and Preachers, as many light Persons do. I am very sorry to know and hear how unreverently that most precious Jewel the Word of God is disputed, rimed, † sung, and jangled in every Ale-house and Tavern, contrary to the true meaning and Doctrine of the same. And yet I am even as much sorry that the Readers of the same follow it in doing so faintly and coldly. For of this I am sure, that Charity was never so faint amongst you, and vertuous and † godly Living was never less used, nor was God himself amongst Christians ever less reverenced, honoured, or served. Therefore (as I said before) be in charity one with another like Brother and Brother: Love, dread, and fear God (to the which I, as your supream Head and Sovereign Lord, exhort and require you:) and then I doubt not but that Love and League that I spake of in the beginning, shall never be dissolved nor broken between Us. And as touching the Laws which be now made and concluded, I exhort you the Makers to be as diligent in putting them in execution, as you were in making and furthering the same, or else your labour shall be in vain, and your Commonwealth nothing relieved.

* This can touch none but only the Papists, who will needs be both Accusers, and also Judges in their own Opinions and Causes. How are they permitted to hear Gods Word when none is permitted to read it under degree of a Gentleman?

† S. Hierome wisheth the Scriptures not only to be read of all men, but also to be sung of Women at their Rocks, of Plowmen at the Plow, of Weavers at their Loom, &c.

* Godly living, though it increase not with the Gospel so much as we wish, yet the defect thereof is not to be imputed to the Gospel: and if we well compare time with time, we shall find by viewing the Books of the old Warmot Quests of Whores and Bawds, and wicked Livers, ten presented to one now, besides Priests and the common Stews.

Notes upon the foresaid Exhortation.

The Kings Oration expended with Notes upon the same.

PRinces which exhort to Concord and Charity do well; but Princes which seek out the causes of discord, and reform the same, do much better. The Papist and Protestant, Heretick and Pharisee, the old Mumpsimus and the new Sumpsimus, be terms of variance and dissension, and be, I grant, Symptomata of a sore wound in the Commonwealth: but he that will amend this wound, must first begin to search out the causes, and to purge the occasion thereof; otherwise, to cure the Sore outwardly, which inwardly doth fester and rankle still, it is but vain.

The root and ground of all this grievance riseth here of the Prelates and Clergy of Rome, seeking as it seemeth altogether after riches, pomp and honour of this World; who (to maintain the same under pretence of Religion) do in very deed subvert Religion: under that title of the Church, they bring into the Church manifest Errors and Absurdities intolerable, who pretending to be Fathers of the Church, if they transgressed but in manners and lightness of Life, or negligence of Government, they might be born withal for Peace and Concords sake, and here modesty, civility, quietness, unity, and charity, Charity might have place amongſt modeſt natures. But now they obſcure the glory of the Son of God, which in no cauſe ought to be ſuffered; they extinguiſh the light and grace of the Goſpel; they clogg mens Conſciences; they ſet up Idolatry, and maintain Idols; they bring in falſe invocation, and reſtrain lawful Matrimony, whereby groweth filthy pollution, Adultery, and Whoredom in the Church unſpeakable; they corrupt the Sacraments; they wreſt the Scripture to worldly purpoſes; they kill and perſecute Gods People. Briefly, their Doctrine is damnable, their Laws be impious, their doings are deteſtable. And yet after all this, they crept craftily into the hearts of Princes, under the Title of the Church, and colour of concord; making Kings and Princes believe that all be Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, which will not be ſubject to their ordinary Power. Now Almighty God, who is a jealous God, and not ſuffering the glory of his Son to be defaced, nor his Truth to be trodden under foot, ſtirreth up again the hearts of his People to underſtand his Truth, and to defend his cauſe. Whereupon of thoſe two parts, as two mighty flints thus ſmiting together, cometh out the ſparkle of this diviſion, which by no wiſe can be quenched, but that one part muſt needs yield and give over. There is no neutrality nor mediation of peace, nor exhortation to agreement, that will ſerve between theſe two contrary Doctrines, but either the Popes errours muſt give place to Gods Word, or elſe the verity of God muſt give place unto them.

Wherefore as the good intent, and plauſible Oration of the King in this behalf, was not to be diſcommended in exhorting his Subjects to Charity, ſo had he much more deſerved commendation, if he had ſought the right way to work Charity, and to help innocency amongſt his Subjects, by taking away the Impious Law of the Six Articles, the Mother of all diviſion and manſlaughter. For what is this to the purpoſe, to exhort in words never ſo much to Charity, and indeed to give a Knife to the murtherers hand to run upon his naked Brother, which never in Conſcience can leave his cauſe, nor yet hath power to defend himſelf? as by experience here followeth to be ſeen, what Charity enſued after this exhortation of the King to Charity, by the racking and burning of good Anne Askew, with three other poor Subjects of the King, within half a year after; whereof ſhortly you ſhall hear more declared.

When theſe Chantries and Colledges thus by Act of Parliament were given into the Kings hands as is above remembred: which was about the month of December, Anno 1545. the next Lent following, Doctor Crome preaching in the Mercers Chappel, among other reaſons and perſwaſions to rouſe the People from the vain Opinion of Purgatory, inferred this, grounding upon the ſaid Act of Parliament: That if Trentals and Chauntry Maſſes could avail the Souls in Purgatory, then did the Parliament not well in giving away Monaſteries, Colledges, and Chaunteries, which ſerved principally to that purpoſe. But if the Parliament did well (as no man could deny) in diſſolving them, and beſtowing the ſame upon the King, then is it a plain caſe, that ſuch Chauntries and private Maſſes do nothing to confer and relieve them in Purgatory. This Dilemma of Dr. Crome, no doubt, was inſoluble. But notwithſtanding, the charitable Prelates, for all the Kings late exhortation unto Charity, were ſo charitable unto him, that on Eaſter next they brought him Coram Nobis, where they ſo handled him, that they made him to recant. And if he had not, they would have diſſolved him and his Argument in burning fire, ſo burning hot was their Charity, according as they burned Anne Askew and her fellows in the month of July the year following. Whoſe Tragical Story and cruel handling now conſequently, the Lord willing, you ſhall hear.

The firſt examination of Mrs. Anne Askew, before the Inquiſitors, Anno, 1545.

The firſt examination of Anne Askew.

TO ſatisfie your expectation, good People (ſaid ſhe) this was my firſt examination in the year of our Lord, 1545. and in the month of March.

First Chriſtopher Dare examined me at Sadlers-Hall, being one of the Queſt, and asked, If I did not believe that the Sacrament hanging over the Altar was the very Body of Chriſt really. Then I demanded this queſtion of him; Wherefore was Saint Stephen ſtoned to death? and he ſaid, He could not tell. Then I anſwered, That no more would I aſſoil his vain Queſtion.

Chriſtopher Dare Inquiſitor. The firſt Article againſt Anne Askew.

Secondly, he ſaid, that there was a Woman, which did teſtifie that I ſhould read, how God was not in Temples made with hands. Then I ſhewed him the ſeventh and ſeventeenth Chapters of the Acts of the Apoſtles, what Steven and Paul had ſaid therein. Whereupon he asked me how I took thoſe Sentences? I anſwered, I would not throw pearls amongſt Swine, for Acorns were good enough.

The ſecond Article.

Thirdly, he asked me, wherefore I ſaid, I had rather to read five lines in the Bible, than to hear five Maſſes in the Temple: I confeſſed that I ſaid no leſs: not for the diſpraiſe of either the Epiſtle or the Goſpel, but becauſe the one did greatly edifie me, and the other nothing at all. As Saint Paul doth witneſs in the 14. Chapter of his firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, whereas he ſaith, If the Trumpet giveth an uncertain ſound, who will prepare himſelf to the Battel?

Fourthly, he layed unto my charge, that I ſhould ſay, if an ill Prieſt miniſtred, it was the Devil and not God.

The fourth Article.

My anſwer was, that I never ſpake any ſuch thing. But this was my ſaying, That whoſoever he were that miniſtred unto me, his ill conditions could not hurt my Faith, but in Spirit I received nevertheleſs the Body and Blood of Chriſt.

Ill conditions of the Miniſters hurt not the Faith of the Receivers.

Fifthly, he asked me what I ſaid concerning Confeſſion? I anſwered him my meaning, which was as Saint James ſaith, that every man ought to knowledge his faults to other, and the one pray for the other.

The fifth Article.

Sixthly, he asked me what I ſaid to the Kings Book? And I anſwered him that I could ſay nothing to it, becauſe I never ſaw it.

The ſixth Article.

Seventhly, he asked me if I had the Spirit of God in me: I anſwered, I had not: I was but a Reprobate or caſt-away. Then he ſaid he had ſent for a Prieſt to examin me, which was here at hand.

The ſeventh Article.

The Prieſt asked me what I ſaid to the Sacrament of the Altar, and required much to know my meaning therein. But I deſired him again to hold me excuſed concerning that matter: none other anſwer would I make him, becauſe I perceived him to be a Papiſt.

A prieſt brought to examin Anne Askew.

Eighthly, he asked me, If I did not think, that private Maſſes did help the Souls departed; I ſaid, It was great Idolatry to believe more in them, than in the death which Chriſt died for us.

The eighth Article. Private Maſſes Idolatry.

Then they had me thence unto my Lord Mayor, and he examined me, as they had before, and I anſwered him directly in all things as I anſwered the Queſt before. Beſides this, my Lord Mayor laid one thing to my charge, which was never ſpoken of me, but of them; and that was, whether a mouſe eating the Hoſt, received God or no? This Queſtion did I never ask, but indeed they asked it of me, whereunto I made them no anſwer but ſmiled.

Anne Askew brought to the Lord Mayor.

Then the Biſhops Chancellor rebuked me, and ſaid that I was much to blame for uttering the Scriptures. For S. Paul he ſaid forbad Women to ſpeak or to talk of the Word of God. I anſwered him hat I knew Pauls meaning as well as he, which is in the 1 Corinth. 14. that a Woman ought not to ſpeak in the Congregation by the way of teaching: And then I asked him how many Women he had ſeen go into the Pulpit and preach? he ſaid he never ſaw any. Then I ſaid, he ought to find no fault in poor Women, except they had offended the Law.

Women forbidden to ſpeak in the Congregatioe, and how.

Then the Lord Mayor commanded me to ward, I asked him if Sureties would not ſerve me; and he made me ſhort anſwer; that he would take none. Then was I had to the Counter, and there remained eleven days, no Friend admitted to ſpeak with me. But in the mean time there was a Prieſt ſent unto me; which ſaid that he was commanded of the Biſhop to examin me, and to give me good counſel, which he did not. But firſt he asked me for what cauſe I was put in the Counter, and I told him I could could not tell. Then he ſaid, it was great pity that I ſhould be there without cauſe, and concluded that he was very ſorry for me.

Secondly he ſaid, it was told him that I ſhould deny the Sacrament of the Altar. And I anſwered again, That that I have ſaid I have ſaid.

Thirdly he asked me, If I were content to be ſhriven. I told him, ſo that I might have one of theſe three, that is to ſay, Dr. Crome, Sir Guillam, or Huntington, I was contented, becauſe I knew them to be men of wiſdom. As for you, or any other, I will not diſpraiſe, becauſe I know you not. Then ſaid he, I would not have you think but that I, or any other that ſhall be brought you, ſhall be as honeſt as they: for if we were not, you may be ſure the King would not ſuffer us to preach. Then I anſwered with the ſaying of Solomon, By communing with the wiſe I may learn wiſdom, but by talking with a fool I ſhall take ſcath, Prov. 1.

Prov. 1.

Whether a Mouſe may eat Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, or no.

Fourthly he asked, If the Hoſt ſhould fall, and a Beaſt did eat it, whether the Beaſt did receive God or no? I anſwered, Seeing that you have taken the pains to ask the queſtion, I deſire you alſo to aſſoil it your ſelf: for I will not do it, becauſe I perceive you come to tempt me. And he ſaid it was againſt the order of Schools, that he which asked the Queſtion ſhould anſwer it. I told him I was but a Woman, and knew not the courſe of Schools.

Fifthly he asked me, If I intended to receive the Sacrament at Eaſter, or no? I anſwered, that elſe I were no Chriſtian Woman; and thereat I did rejoyce that the time was ſo near at hand. And then he departed thence with many fair words.

The 23. day of March, my Couſin Britain, came into the Counter unto me, and asked me whether I might be put to Bail, or no? Then went he immediately unto my Lord Mayor, deſiring him to be ſo good unto me, that I might be bailed. My Lord anſwered him, and ſaid that he would be glad to do the beſt that in him lay. Howbeit he could not bail me, without the conſent of a Spiritual Officer; requiring him to go and ſpeak with the Chancellor of London. For he ſaid, like as he could not commit me to Priſon without the conſent of a Spiritual Officer, no more could he bail me without the conſent of the ſame.

M. Britain ſeeketh to bail Anne Askew his Couſin. Mr. Britain for the bailing of Anne Askew ſent from the Mayor to the Chancellor, from the Chancellor to the Biſhop.

So upon that he went to the Chancellor, requiring of him as he did before of my Lord Mayor. He anſwered him, that the matter was ſo hainous, that he durſt not of himſelf do it, without my Lord of London were made privy thereunto. But he ſaid he would ſpeak unto my Lord in it, and bade him repair unto him the next Morrow, and he ſhould well know my Lords pleaſure. And upon the Morrow after, he came thither, and ſpake both with the Chancellor and with the Biſhop of London. The Biſhop declared unto him that he was very well contented that I ſhould come forth to communication, and appointed me to appear before him the next day after, at three of the Clock at Afternoon. Moreover he ſaid unto him, that he would there ſhould be at the Examination ſuch Learned men, as I was affectioned to, that they might ſee, and alſo make report that I was handled with no rigor. He anſwered him, that he knew no man that I had more affection to, than to other. Then ſaid the Biſhop, Yes, as I underſtand, ſhe is affectioned to Dr. Crome, Sir Guillam Whitehead, and Huntington, that they might hear the matter, for ſhe did know them to be learned and of a godly Judgment. Alſo he required my Couſin Britain, that he ſhould earneſtly perſwade me to utter even the very bottom of my heart; and he ſware by his fidelity, that no man ſhould take any advantage of my words, neither yet would he lay ought to my charge for any thing that I ſhould there ſpeak; but if I ſaid any manner of thing amiſs, he with other more would be glad to reform me therein, with moſt godly counſel.

Boners Promiſe to Mr. Britain.

Anne Askew brought forth to communication before Boner.

On the Morrow after, the Biſhop of London ſent for me at one of the Clock, his hour being appointed at three; and as I came before him, he ſaid he was very ſorry for my trouble, and deſired to know my Opinions in ſuch matters as were laid againſt me. He required me alſo in any wiſe, boldly to utter the ſecrets of my heart, bidding me not to fear in any point, for whatſoever I did ſay in his Houſe, no man ſhould hurt me for it. I anſwered, forſomuch as your Lordſhip appointed three of the Clock, and my Friends will not come till that hour, I deſire you to pardon me of giving anſwer till they come. Then ſaid he, that he thought it meet to ſend for thoſe four men which were aforenamed and appointed. Then I deſired him not to put them to pain, for it ſhould not need, becauſe the two Gentlemen which were my Friends, were able enough to teſtifie what I ſhould ſay. Anon after he went into his Gallery with Mr. Spilman, and willed him in any wiſe that he ſhould exhort me to utter all that I thought. In the mean while he commanded his Archdeacon to commune with me, who ſaid unto me, Miſtreſs, wherefore are you accuſed and thus troubled here before the Biſhop? To whom I anſwered again and ſaid; Sir, ask, I pray you, my Accuſers, for I know not as yet. Then took he my Book out of my hand, and ſaid, Such Books as this have brought you to the trouble that you are in. Beware, ſaid he, beware, for he that made this Book, and was the Author thereof, was an Heretick I warrant you, and burned in Smithfiel. And then I asked him if he were certain and ſure that it was true that he had ſpoken. And he ſaid, he knew well the Book was of John Friths making. Then I asked him if he were not aſhamed to judge of the Book before he ſaw it within, or yet knew the truth thereof. I ſaid alſo, that ſuch unadviſed hatty judgment is a token apparent of a very ſlender wit. Then I opened the Book and ſhewed it him. He ſaid he thought it had been another, for he could find no fault therein. Then I deſired him no more to be ſo unadviſedly raſh and ſwift in Judgment, till he throughly know the truth, and ſo he departed from me. Immediately after came my Couſin Britain in, with divers others, as Mr. Hall of Grays-Inne, and ſuch other like. Then my Lord of London perſwaded my Couſin Britain, as he had done oft before, which was, That I ſhould utter the bottom of my heart in any wiſe. My Lord ſaid after that unto me, that he would I ſhould credit the counſel of ſuch as were my Friends and Well-willers in this behalf, which was, that I ſhould utter all things that burthened my Conſcience; for he enſured me, that I ſhould not need to ſtand in doubt to ſay any thing. For like as he promiſed them (he ſaid) he promiſed me, and would perform it; which was, that neither he, nor any man for him, ſhould take me at advantage of any word that I ſhould ſpeak, and therefore he bade me ſay my mind without fear. I anſwered him, that I had nought to ſay, for my Conſcience (I thanked God) was burdened with nothing.

Boners ſimilitude.

Then brought he forth this unſavoury ſimilitude; that if a man had a wound, no wiſe Chirurgeon would miniſter help unto it before he had ſeen it uncovered. In like caſe, ſaith he, can I give you no good counſel, unleſs I know wherewith your Conſcience is burthened. I anſwered, That my Conſcience was clear in all things, and to lay a Plaiſter unto the whole skin, it might appear much folly.

Boners firſt Objection againſt Anne Askew.

Then you drive me (ſaith he) to lay to your charge your own report, which is this; You did ſay, He that doth receive the Sacrament by the hands of an ill Prieſt, or a Sinner, receiveth the Devil, and not God. To that I anſwered, that I never ſpake ſuch words. But, as I ſaid before, both to the Queſt and to my Lord Mayor, ſo ſay I now again, that the wickedneſs of the Prieſt ſhould not hurt me, but in ſpirit and faith I received no leſs than the Body and Blood of Chriſt. Then ſaid the Biſhop unto me, what ſaying is this in Spirit? I will not take you at the advantage. Then I anſwered, My Lord, without faith and ſpirit, I cannot receive him worthily.

The 2. Article.

Then he ſaid unto me, that I ſhould ſay that the Sacrament remaining in the Pix, was but Bread. I anſwered, that I never ſaid ſo, but indeed the Queſt asked me ſuch a queſtion, whereunto I would not anſwer, I ſaid, till ſuch a time as they had aſſoiled me this queſtion of mine, Wherefore Stephen was ſtoned to death? They ſaid they knew not. Then ſaid I again, no more would I tell them what it was.

The 3. Article.

Then ſaid my Lord unto me, that I had alleadged a certain Text of the Scripture, a anſwered that I alledged none other but St. Pauls own ſaying to the Athenians, in the eighteenth Chapter of the Acts of the Apoſtles, That God dwelleth not in Temples made with hands.

Then

Then asked he me what my Faith and Belief was in that matter? I answered him, I believe as the Scripture doth teach me.

The 4. Article.

Then enquired he of me, what if the Scripture doth say, that it is the Body of Christ? I believe, said I, as the Scripture doth teach me. Then asked he again, what if the Scripture doth say that it is not the Body of Christ? My answer was still, I believe as the Scripture informeth me. And upon this Argument he tarried a great while, to have driven me to make him an answer to his mind. Howbeit, I would not, but concluded this with him, that I believe therein and in all other things, as Christ and his Apostles did leave them.

Anne Askew charged with few words.

Then he asked me why I had so few words? And I answered, God hath given me the gift of knowledge, but not of utterance: and Solomon saith, That a Woman of few words is the gift of God, Prov. 19.

The 5. Article.

Fifthly, my Lord laid unto my charge, that I should say that the Mass was superstitious, wicked, and no better than Idolatry. I answered him, no, I said not so. Howbeit I say the Quest did ask me whether private Mass did relieve Souls departed or no? Unto whom then I answered, O Lord, what Idolatry is this, that we should rather believe in private Masses than in the healthsom death of the dear Son of God? Then said my Lord again, what an answer is that? Though it be but mean, said I, yet is it good enough for the question.

Then I told my Lord, that there was a Priest which did hear what I said there before my Lord Mayor and them. With that the Chancellor answered, which was the same Priest? So she spake it in very deed, saith he, before my Lord Mayor and me.

Then were there certain Priests, as Dr. Standish and other, which tempted me much to know my mind. And I answered them always thus; that I said to my Lord of London, I have said. Then Dr. Standish desired my Lord to bid me say my mind concerning the same Text of St. Pauls learning, that I being a Woman should interpret the Scriptures, specially where so many wise learned men were.

Dr. Standish his demand.

Then my Lord of London said, he was informed that one should ask of me if I would receive the Sacrament at Easter, and I made a mock of it.

Anne Askew could not have her Accuser.

Then I desired that mine Accuser might come forth, which my Lord would not. But he said again unto me, I sent one to give you good counsel, and at the first word you called him Papist. That I denied not, for I perceived he was no less, yet made I him none answer unto it.

The Priests of Lincoln against Anne Askew.

Then he rebuked me, and said that I should report, that there were bent against me threescore Priests at Lincoln. Indeed, quoth I, I said so. For my Friends told me, if I did come to Lincoln, the Priests would assault me and put me to great trouble, as thereof they had made their boast; and when I heard it, I went thither indeed, not being afraid, because I knew my matter to be good. Moreover I remained there nine days, to see what would be said unto me. And as I was in the Minster reading upon the Bible, they resorted unto me by two and two, by five and by six, minding to have spoken unto me, yet went they their ways again without words speaking.

Then my Lord asked if there were not one that did speak unto me. I told him yes, that there was one of them at the last which did speak to me indeed. And my Lord then asked me what he said? And I told him his words were of small effect, so that I did not now remember them. Then said my Lord, there are many that read and know the Scripture, and yet follow it not, nor live thereafter: I said again, my Lord, I would wish that all men knew my conversation and living in all points; for I am sure my self this hour that there are none able to prove any dishonesty by me. If you know that any can do it, I pray you bring them forth. Then my Lord went away, and said he would entitle somewhat of my meaning, and so he wrote a great circumstance. But what it was, I have not in my memory: for he would not suffer me to have the Copy thereof. Only do I remember this small portion of it.

Anne Askew standeth upon her honesty.

Be it known, saith he, of all men, that I Anne Askew do confess this to be my Faith and Belief, notwithstanding many Reports made afore to the contrary. I believe that they which are housel'd at the hands of a Priest, whether his conversation be good or not, do receive the Body and Blood of Christ in substance really. Also I do believe, that after the Consecration, whether it be received or reserved, it is no less than the very Body and Blood of Christ in substance. Finally, I do believe in this and in all other Sacraments of holy Church in all points, according to the old Catholick Faith of the same. In witness whereof, I the said Anne have subscribed my Name.

Boners mis-report of Anne Askews Confession.

There was somewhat more in it, which because I had not the Copy, I cannot now remember. Then he read it to me, and asked me if I did agree to it. And I said again, I believe so much thereof, as the holy Scripture doth agree unto: wherefore I desire you, that you will add that thereunto. Then he answered, that I should not teach him what he should write. With that he went forth into his great Chamber and read the same Bill before the Audience, which inveigled and willed me to set to my hand, saying also, that I had favour shewed me. Then said the Bishop, I might thank other, and not my self for the favour that I found at his hand: for he considered, he said, that I had good Friends, and also that I came of a worshipful Stock.

The tenor of D. Boners Writing, whereunto Anne Askew subscribed.

Then answered one Christopher, a Servant unto Mr. Denny: Rather ought you, my Lord, to have done it in such case for God's sake than for mans. Then my Lord sate down, and took me the Writing to set thereto my hand, and I wrote after this manner: I Anne Askew do believe all manner of things contained in the Faith of the Catholick Church.

And forasmuch as mention here is made of the Writing of Boner, which this godly Woman said before she had not in memory, therefore I thought in this place to infer the same, both with the whole circumstance of Boner, and with the Title thereunto prefixed by the Register, and also with her own Subscription: to the intent the Reader seeing the same Subscription, neither to agree with the time of the Title above prefixed, nor with the Subscription after the Writing annexed, might the better understand thereby what credit is to be given hereafter to such Bishops, and to such Registers. The tenour of Boners Writing proceedeth thus.

The true Copy of the Confession and Belief of Anne Askew, otherwise called Anne Kyme, made before the Bishop of London the twentieth day of March, in the year of our Lord God, after the computation of the Church of England, 1545. and subscribed with her own hand in the presence of the said Bishop and other, whose Names hereafter are recited, set forth and published at this present, to the intent the World may see what credence is to be given unto the same Woman, who in so short a time hath so damnably altered and changed her Opinion and Belief, and therefore rightly in open Court arraigned and condemned. Ex Regist.

The words of the Registers.

Ex Regist.

BE it known to all faithful People, that as touching the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, I do firmly and undoubtedly believe, that after the words of Consecration be spoken by the Priest, according to the common usage of this Church of England, there is present really the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ, whether the Minister which doth consecrate be a good man or a bad man; and that also whensoever the said Sacrament is received, whether the Receiver be a good man or a bad man, he doth receive it really and corporally. And moreover, I do believe, that whether the said Sacrament be then received of the Minister, or else reserved to be put into the Pix, or to be brought to any person that is impotent or sick, yet there is the very Body and Blood of our said Saviour; so that whether the Minister or the Receiver be good or bad, yea, whether the Sacrament be received or reserved, always there is the blessed Body of Christ really.

The Copy of the Bishops report upon the Confession of Anne Askew, as it standeth in Registers.

And this thing, with all other things touching the Sacrament and other Sacraments of the Church, and all things else touching the Christian Belief, which are taught and declared in the Kings Majesties Book, lately set forth for the erudition of the Christian People, I Anne Askew, otherwise called A. Kyme, do truly and perfectly believe, and so here presently confess and acknowledge.

And here I do promiſe, that henceforth I ſhall never ſay nor do any thing againſt the premiſſes, or againſt any of them. In witneſs whereof, I the ſaid Anne have ſubſcribed my Name unto theſe preſents.

Boner and his Regiſter reproved with an untruth.

HEre maiſt thou note, gentle Reader, in this Confeſſion, both in the Biſhop and his Regiſter, a double ſleight of falſe conveyance. For although the Confeſſion purport the words of the Biſhops writing, whereunto ſhe did ſet her hand, yet by the title prefixed before, maiſt thou ſee that both ſhe was arraigned and condemned before this was Regiſtred, and alſo that ſhe is falſly reported to have put to her Hand, which indeed by this her own Book appeareth not ſo to be but after this manner and condition; I Anne Askew do believe all manner of things contained in the Faith of the Catholick Church, and not otherwiſe. It followeth more in the ſtory.

Boner Biſhop of London in a chaſe againſt Anne Askew.

Then becauſe I did add unto it the Catholick Church, he flang into his Chamber in a great fury. With that, my Couſin Britain followed, deſiring him for Gods ſake to be a good Lord unto me. He anſwered, that I was a Woman, and that he was nothing deceived in me. Then my Couſin Britain deſired him to take me as a Woman, and not to ſet my weak Womans wit to his Lordſhips great wiſdom.

Dr. Weſton.

Then went in unto him Dr. Weſton, and ſaid, That the cauſe why I did write there the Catholick Church, was, that I underſtood not the Church written afore. So with much ado they perſwaded my Lord to come out again, and to take my Name, with the Names of my Sureties, which were my Couſin Britain and Maſter Spilman of Grays-Inne.

This being done, we thought that I ſhould have been put to bail immediately, according to the order of the Law. Howbeit he would not ſuffer it, but committed me from thence to Priſon again until the next Morrow, and then he willed me to appear in the Guild-Hall, and ſo I did. Notwithſtanding they would not put me to bail there neither, but read the Biſhops Writing unto me, as before, and ſo commanded me again to Priſon. Then were my Sureties appointed to come before them on the next morrow in Pauls Church, *which did ſo indeed. Notwithſtanding, they would once again have broken off with them, becauſe they would not be bound alſo for another Woman at their pleaſure, whom they knew not, nor yet what matter was laid unto her charge. Anno 1546.

I Do perceive (dear Friend in the Lord) that thou art not yet perſwaded throughly in the Truth, concerning the Lords Supper, becauſe Chriſt ſaid unto his Apoſtles, Take, eat, this is my Body which is given for you.

In giving forth the Bread as an outward ſign or token to be received with the mouth, he minded them in perfect belief to receive that Body of his which ſhould die for the People, and to think the death thereof to be the only health and ſalvation of their Souls. The Bread and the Wine were left us for a Sacramental Communion, or a mutual participation of the ineſtimable benefits of his moſt precious death and bloodſhedding, and that we ſhould in the end thereof be thankful together for that moſt neceſſary grace of our Redemption. For in the cloſing up thereof he ſaid thus, This do ye in remembrance of me. Yea, ſo oft as ye ſhall eat it or drink it, Luke 11. and 1 Cor. 11. Elſe ſhould we have been forgetful of that we ought to have in daily remembrance, and alſo have been altogether unthankful for it; therefore it is meet that in our Prayers we call unto God to graft in our Foreheads the true meaning of the Holy Ghoſt concerning this Communion. For St. Paul ſaith, The Letter ſlayeth; the Spirit is it only that giveth life, 2 Cor. 3. Mark well the ſixth Chapter of John, where all is applied unto Faith: note alſo the fourth Chapter of St. Pauls ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians, and in the end thereof ye ſhall find, that the things which are ſeen are temporal, but they that are not ſeen are everlaſting. Yea, look in the third Chapter to the Hebrews, and ye ſhall find that Chriſt as a Son (and no Servant) ruleth over his Houſe, whoſe Houſe are we, and not the dead Temple, if we hold faſt the confidence and rejoycing of that hope to the end. Wherefore, as ſaid the Holy Ghoſt, To day if ye ſhall hear his voice harden not your hearts, &c. Pſal. 95.

The ſum of my Examination before the Kings Councel at Greenwich.

¶ Our Requeſt as concerning my Priſon-fellows I am not able to ſatisfie, becauſe I heard not their Examinations. But the effect of mine was this. I being before the Council, was asked of Mr. Kyme. I anſwered, that my Lord Chancellor knew already my mind in that matter. They with that anſwer were not contented, but ſaid it was the Kings pleaſure that I ſhould open the matter unto them. I anſwered them plainly, I would not ſo do; but if it were the Kings pleaſure to hear me, I would ſhew him the truth. Then they ſaid it was not meet to the King to be troubled with me. I anſwered, that Solomon was reckoned the wiſeſt King that ever lived, yet miſliked he not to hear two poor common Women, much more his Grace a ſimple Woman and his faithful Subject. So in concluſion, I made them none other anſwer in that matter. Then my Lord Chancellor asked of me my Opinion in the Sacrament. My Anſwer was this, I believe that ſo oft as I in a Chriſtian Congregation do receive the Bread in remembrance of Chriſts death, and with thankſgiving, according to his holy Inſtitution, I receive therewith the fruits alſo of his moſt glorious Paſſion. The Biſhop of Wincheſter bade me make a direct anſwer: I ſaid I would not ſing a new Song of the Lord in a ſtrange Land. Then the Biſhop ſaid I ſpake in Parables. I anſwered, it was beſt for him, for if I ſhew the open truth (quoth I) ye will not accept it. Then he ſaid I was a Parrot. I told him again, I was ready to ſuffer all things at his hands, not only his rebukes, but all that ſhould follow beſides, yea, and all that gladly.

Concerning that which they here demanded as touching Mr. Kyme, read in the centure of John Bale writing upon this place.

This Lord Chancellor was Wriſley.

Parables beſt for Wincheſters Winch. beginneth to ſcold.

Then had I divers rebukes of the Council, becauſe I would not expreſs my mind in all things as they would have me. But they were not in the mean time unanſwered for all that, which now to rehearſe were too much, for I was with them there about five hours. Then the Clerk of the Council conveyed me from thence to my Lady Garniſh.

The next day I was brought again before the Council. Then would they needs know of me what I ſaid to the Sacrament. I anſwered, That I already had ſaid what I could ſay. Then after divers words they bade me go by. Then came my Lord Liſle, my Lord of Eſſex, and the Biſhop of Wincheſter, requiring me earneſtly that I ſhould confeſs the Sacrament to be fleſh, blood, and bone. Then ſaid I to my Lord Parre and my Lord Liſle, that that it was a great ſhame for them to Counſel contrary to their knowledge. Whereunto in few words they did ſay, that they would gladly all things were well.

Winchester anſwered home.

Then the Biſhop ſaid he would ſpeak with me familiarly. I ſaid, So did Judas, when he unfriendly betrayed Chriſt. Then deſired the Biſhop to ſpeak with me alone. But that I refuſed. He asked me why; I ſaid, that in the mouth of two or three witneſſes every matter ſhould ſtand, after Chriſts and Pauls Doctrin. Matth. 18. 2 Cor. 13.

Matth. 18. 2 Cor. 13.

Then my Lord Chancellor began to examin me again of the Sacrament. Then I asked him how long he would halt on both ſides. Then would he needs know where I found that. I ſaid in the Scripture, 3. Reg. 18. Then he went his way. Then the Biſhop ſaid I ſhould be burnt. I anſwered, That I had ſearched all the Scriptures, yet could I never find that either Chriſt or his Apoſtles put any creature to death. Well, well ſaid I, God will laugh your threatnings to ſcorn, Pſal. 2. Then was I commanded to ſtand aſide. Then came to me Doctor Cox, and Dr. Robinſon. In concluſion, we could not agree.

3 Reg. 18. The Lord Chancellor mute.

Then they made me a Bill of the Sacrament, willing me to ſet my hand thereunto, but I would not. Then on the Sunday I was ſore ſick, thinking no leſs than to die. Therefore I deſired to ſpeak with Maſter Latimer, but it would not be. Then was I ſent to Newgate in my extremity of ſickneſs; for in all my life afore I was never in ſuch pain. Thus the Lord ſtrengthen us in the Truth. Pray, pray, pray.

The confeſſion of Anne Askew in Newgate.

I Find in the Scripture (ſaid ſhe) that Chriſt took the Bread and gave it to his Diſciples, ſaying, Take, eat, this is my Body which ſhall be broken for you, meaning in Subſtance, his own very Body, the Bread being thereof an only ſign or Sacrament. For after like manner of ſpeaking, he ſaid he would break down the Temple, and in three days build it up again, ſignifying his own Body by the Temple, as Saint John declareth it, John. 2. and not the ſtony Temple it ſelf. So that the Bread is but a remembrance of his death, or a Sacrament of thankſgiving for it, whereby we are knit unto him by a Communion of Chriſtian love, although there be many that cannot perceive the true meaning thereof, for the Veil that Moſes put over his face before the Children of Iſrael, that they ſhould not ſee the clearneſs thereof, Exod. 24. and 2 Corinth. 3. I perceive the ſame Veil remaineth to this day. But when God ſhall take it away, then ſhall theſe blind men ſee. For it is plainly expreſſed in the Hiſtory of Bell in the Bible, that God dwelleth in no thing material. O King (ſaith Daniel) be not deceived, for God will be in nothing that is made with hands of men, Dan. 14. Oh, what ſtiff-necked People are theſe, that will always reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt? But as their Fathers have done, ſo do they, becauſe they have ſtony hearts.

As Chriſts Body is called the Temple in the Scripture, ſo is the Bread called Chriſts Body.

The ſum of the Condemnation of me Anne Askew at the Guild-Hall

Another examination of Anne Askew at Guild-Hall.

THey ſaid to me there, That I was an Heretick, and condemned by the Law, if I would ſtand in mine Opinion. I anſwered, That I was no Heretick, neither yet deſerved I any death by the Law of God. But as concerning the Faith which I uttered and wrote to the Councel, I would not (I ſaid) deny it, becauſe I knew it true. Then would they needs know if I would deny the Sacrament to be Chriſts Body and Blood. I ſaid, yea. For the ſame Son of God that was born of the Virgin Mary is now glorious in Heaven, and will come again from thence at the latter day like as he went up. Acts 1. And as for that ye call your God, it is a piece of Bread. For a more proof thereof, mark it when you liſt, let it but lie in the Box three months, and it will be mouldy and ſo turn to nothing that is good. Whereupon I am perſwaded that it cannot be God.

The Subſtance of the Sacrament denied to be God.

After that, they willed me to have a Prieſt. And then I ſmiled. Then they asked me if it were not good; I ſaid, I would confeſs my faults unto God, for I was ſure that he would hear me with favour. And ſo we were condemned with a Queſt.

Anne Askew with her fellows condemned by a Queſt.

My beleif which I wrote to the Councel was this, That the Sacramental Bread was left us to be received with thankſgiving, in remembrance of Chriſts death, the only remedy of our Souls recovery; and that thereby we alſo receive the whole benefits and fruits of his moſt glorious Paſſion. Then would they needs know whether the Bread in the Box were God or no: I ſaid, God is a Spirit, and will be worſhipped in Spirit and Truth. John 4. Then they demanded, Will you plainly deny Chriſt to be in the Sacrament? I anſwered, that I believe faithfully the eternal Son of God not to dwell there; in witneſs whereof I recited again the Hiſtory of Bell, and the nineteenth Chapter of Daniel, the ſeventh and ſeventeenth of the Acts, and the four and twentieth of Matthew: concluding thus; I neither wiſh death, nor yet fear his might, God have the praiſe thereof with thanks.

My Letter ſent to the Lord Chancellor.

The Letter of Anne Askew to the L. Chancellor.

THe Lord God, by whom all creatures have their being, bleſs you with the light of his knowledge. Amen.

My duty to your Lordſhip remembred, &c. It might pleaſe you to accept this my bold ſute, as the ſute of one which upon due conſideration is moved to the ſame, and hopeth to obtain. My requeſt to your Lordſhip is only that it may pleaſe the ſame to be a mean for me to the Kings Majeſty, that his Grace may be certified of theſe few lines which I have written concerning my belief, which when it ſhall be truly conferred with the hard judgment given me for the ſame, I think his Grace ſhall well perceive me to be weighed in an uneven pair of Ballances. But I remit my matter and cauſe to Almighty God, which rightly judgeth all ſecrets. And thus I commend your Lordſhip to the governance of him, and fellowſhip of all Saints, Amen.

By your Handmaid, Ann Askew.

My

My Faith briefly written to the Kings Grace.

The belief of Anne Askew touching the Sacrament written to the King.

I Anne Askew, of good Memory, although God hath given me the Bread of Adverſity, and the Water of trouble, yet not ſo much as my Sins have deſerved, deſire this to be known unto your Grace, That foraſmuch a I am by the Law condemned for an evil Doer; here I take Heaven and Earth to Record, that I ſhall die in my Innocency. And according to that I have ſaid firſt, and will ſay laſt, I utterly abhor and deteſt all Hereſies. And as concerning the Supper of the Lord, I believe ſo much as Chriſt hath ſaid therein, which he confirmed with his moſt bleſſed Blood. I believe ſo much as he willed me to follow, and believe ſo much as the Catholick Church of him doth teach. For I will not forſake the Commandment of his Holy Lips. But look what God hath charged me with his Mouth, that have I ſhut up in my heart. And thus briefly I end for lack of learning.

Anne Askew.

The effect of my Examination and handling ſince my departure from Newgate.

The cruel handling and racking of Anne Askew after her condemnation.

ON Tueſday I was ſent from Newgate to the ſign of the Crown, where Maſter Rich, and the Biſhop of London, with all their power and flattering words went about to perſwade me from God; but I did not eſteem their glozing pretences.

Then came there to me Nicolas Shaxton, and Counſelled me to recant as he had done. I ſaid to him, That it had been good for him never to have been born; with many other like words.

Then Mr. Rich ſent me to the Tower, where I remained till three of clock.

This Counſellor was Sir John Baker.

Then came Rich and one of the Councel, charging me upon my Obedience to ſhew unto them if I knew any Man or Woman of my Sect. My anſwer was that I knew none. Then they asked me of my Lady of Suffolke, my Lady of Suſſex, my Lady of Hertford, my Lady Denny, and my Lady Fitzwilliams. To whom I anſwered, if I ſhould pronounce any thing againſt them, that I were not able to prove it. Then ſaid they unto me, That the King was informed that I could name, if I would, a great number of my Sect. I anſwered, That the King was as well deceived in that behalf, as he was diſſembled with by them in other matters.

Anne Askew urged to accuſe others

Then commanded they me to ſhew how I was maintained in the Counter, and who willed me to ſtick to my opinion. I ſaid that there was no creature that therein did ſtrengthen me. And as for the help that I had in the Counter, it was by the means of my maid. For as ſhe went abroad in the ſtreets, ſhe made moan to the Prentices, and they by her did ſend me money; but who they were I never knew.

Anne Askew refuſeth to accuſe any.

Then they ſaid that there were divers Gentlewomen that gave me money. I ſaid I knew not their names. Then they ſaid that there were divers Ladies that had ſent me mony. I anſwered, That there was a Man in a blew coat which delivered me ten ſhillings, and ſaid that my Lady of Hertford ſent it me; and another in a violet coat gave me eight ſhillings, and ſaid my Lady Denny ſent it me. Whether it were true or no I cannot tell. For I am not ſure who ſent it me, but as the maid did ſay. Then they ſaid there were of the Councel that did maintain me. And I ſaid, No.

Anne Askew put on the rack. Wriſley and Rich racking Anne Askew.

Then they did put me on the Rack, becauſe I confeſſed no Ladies or Gentlewomen to be of my opinion, and thereon they kept me a long time, and becauſe I lay ſtill and did not cry, my Lord Chanchellor and Maſter Rich took pains to Rack me with their own Hands till I was nigh dead.

Then the Lieutenant cauſed me to be looſed from the Rack. Incontinently I ſwouned, and then they recovered me again. After that I ſate two long hours reaſoning with my Lord Chancellor upon the bare floor. Where he with many flattering words perſwaded me to leave my opinion. But my Lord God, I thank his everlaſting goodneſs, gave me grace to perſevere, and will do, I hope, to the very end.

Anne Askew conſtant in her faith.

Then was I brought to an Houſe, and laid in a bed, with as weary and painful bones as ever had patient Job, I thank my Lord God therefore. Then my Lord Chancellor ſent me word, if I would leave my opinion, I ſhould want nothing; if I would not, I ſhould forthwith to Newgate, and ſo be burned. I ſent him again word, that I would rather dye than break my Faith.

Anne Askew threating to be burned.

Thus the Lord open the eyes of their blind hearts, that the truth may take place. Farewel dear Friend, and pray, pray, pray.

The order of the racking of Anne Askew.

Touching the order of her racking in the Tower thus it was; firſt ſhe was led down into a Dungeon, where Sir, Anth. Knevet the Lieutenant commanded his Gaoler to pinch her with the Rack. Which being don ſo much as he thought ſufficient, he went about to take her down, ſuppoſing that he had done enough. But Wriſley the Chancellor, not contented that ſhe was looſed ſo ſoon, confeſſing nothing, commanded the Lieutenant to ſtrain her one the Rack again. Which becauſe he denied to do, tendring the weakneſs of the Woman, he was threatned therefore grievouſly of the ſaid Wriſly, ſaying, That he would ſignifie his Diſobedience unto the King; and ſo conſequently upon the ſame, he and Maſter Rich throwing off their gowns, would needs play the Tormentors themſelves; firſt asking her if ſhe were with Child. To whom ſhe anſwering again, ſaid, Ye ſhall not need to ſpare for that, but do your wills upon me; and ſo quietly and patiently praying unto the Lord, ſhe abode their tyranny, till her bones and joynts were almoſt pluckt aſunder, in ſuch ſort as ſhe was carried away in a chair. When the racking was paſt, Wriſley and his Fellow took their horſe toward the Court.

The Lord Wriſley and Mr. Rich play the Tormentors.

Wriſley the Lord Chancellor prevented by the Lieutenant.

In the mean time, while they were making their way by land, the good Lieutenant eftſoons taking Boat ſped him to the Court in all haſte to ſpeak with the King before the other, and ſo did. Who there making his humble ſute to the King, deſired his pardon, and ſhewed him the whole matter as it ſtood, and of the racking of Miſtreſs Askew, and he was threatned by the Lord Chancellor, becauſe at his commandment, not knowing his highneſs pleaſure, he refuſed to rack her; which he for compaſſion could not find in his heart to do, and therefore humbly deſired his Highneſs Pardon. Which when the King had underſtood, he ſeemed not very well to like of their ſo extreme handling of the Woman, and alſo granted to the Lieutenant his Pardon, willing him to return and ſee to his charge.

The Lieutenant pardoned of the King.

Great expectation was in the mean ſeaſon among the Warders and Officers of the Tower, waiting for his retnrn. Whom when they ſaw come ſo cheerfully, declaring unto them how he had ſped with the King, they were not a little joyous, and gave thanks to God therefore.

Anne Askews anſwer unto John Lacels Letter.

The anſwer of Anne Askew to Mr. Lacels Letter

O Friend, moſt dearly beloved in God, I marvel not a little what ſhould move you to judge in me ſo ſlender a Faith as to fear death, which is the end of all miſerie. In the Lord I deſire you not to believe of me ſuch weakneſs. For I doubt it not, but God will perform his work in me, like as he hath begun. I underſtand the Councel is not a little diſpleaſed, that it ſhould be reported abroad that I was racked in the Tower. They ſay now, That what they did there was but to fear me; whereby I perceive they are aſhamed of their uncomely doings, and fear much leſt the Kings Majeſty ſhould have information thereof, wherefore they would no man to noiſe it. Well, their cruelty God forgive them.

Your heart in Chriſt Jeſus. Farewell and pray.

The purgation or anſwer of Anne Askew, againſt the falſe ſurmiſes of her Recantation.

Anne Askew anſwering to the falſe ſuſpition of her recanting.

I Have read the Proceſs which is reported of them that know not the truth, to be my Recantation. But, as the Lord liveth, I never meant thing leſs than to recant. Notwithſtanding this I confeſs, that in my firſt troubles I was examined of the Biſhop of London about the the Sacrament. Yet had they no grant of my Mouth but this, That I believed therein as the Word of God did bind me to believe. More had they never of me. Then he made a copy, which is now in print, and required me to ſet thereunto my Hand. But I refuſed it. Then my two Sureties did will me in no wiſe to ſtick thereat, for it was no great matters, they ſaid.

Anne Askew falſly ſuſpected to recant, and upon what occaſion.

Then with much ado, at the laſt I wrote thus; I Anne Askew do believe this, if Gods Word do agree to the ſame, and the true Catholick Church. Then the Biſhop being in great diſpleaſure with me, becauſe I made doubts in my writing, commanded me to Priſon, where I was a while, but afterwards by the means of Friends I came out again. Here is the truth of that matter. And as concerning the thing that ye covet moſt to know, reſort to the ſixth of John, and be ruled always thereby. Thus fare ye well.

Anne Askew.

The Confeſſion of the Faith which Anne Askew made in Newgate before ſhe ſuffered.

The confeſſion of Anne Askew going to her execution.

I Anne Askew of good Memory, although my merciful Father hath given me the Bread of Adverſity, and the Water of trouble, yet not ſo much as my Sins have deſerved, do confeſs my ſelf here a Sinner before the Throne of his Heavenly Majeſty, deſiring his forgiveneſs and mercy. And forſomuch as I am by the Law unrighteouſly condemned for an evil Doer concerning opinions, I take the ſame moſt merciful God of mine, which hath made both Heaven and Earth, to record, that I hold no opinions contrary to his moſt holy Word. And I truſt in my merciful Lord, which is the Giver of all Grace, that he will graciouſly aſſiſt me againſt all evil opinions which are contrary to his bleſſed Verity. For I take him to witneſs, that I have done, and will, unto my lives end, utterly abhor them to the uttermoſt of my Power.

The matter and cauſe why Anne Askew ſuffered death.

*But this is the Hereſie, which they report me to hold, that after the Prieſt hath ſpoken the Words of Conſecration, there remaineth Bread ſtill. They both ſay, and alſo teach it for a neceſſary Article of Faith, that after theſe words be once ſpoken, there remaineth no Bread, but even the ſelfſame Body that hung upon the Croſs on good-*Friday, both Fleſh, Blood, and Bone. To this belief of theirs ſay I nay. For then were our common Creed falſe, which ſaith, that he ſitteth on the right Hand of God the Father Almighty, and from thence ſhall come to Judge the Quick and the Dead. Lo, this is the Hereſie that I hold, and for it muſt ſuffer the Death. But as touching the Holy and bleſſed Supper of the Lord, I believe it to be a moſt neceſſary Remembrance of his glorious ſufferings and Death. Moreover I believe as much therein as my eternal and onely Redeemer Jeſus Chriſt would I ſhould believe.

Scripture ſufficient to our ſalvation

Finally, I believe all thoſe Scriptures to be true, which he hath confirmed with his moſt Precious Blood. Yea, and as Saint Paul ſaith, thoſe Scriptures are ſufficient for our learning and Salvation, that Chriſt hath left here with us; ſo that I believe, we need no unwritten verities to rule his Church with. Therefore look what he hath ſaid unto me with his own Mouth in his Holy Goſpel, that I have with Gods Grace cloſed up in my Heart, and my full truſt is (as David ſaith) that it ſhall be a Lantern to my Foot-ſteps, Pſalme 28.

Pſalm 28.

Anne Askew falſly reported to deny the holy Euchariſt.

There be ſome that do ſay I deny the Euchariſt or Sacrament of thankſgiving; but thoſe people do untruely report of me. For I both ſay and believe it, that if it were ordered like as Chriſt inſtituted it and left it, a moſt ſingular comfort it were unto us all. But as concerning your Maſs as it is now uſed in our days, I do ſay and believe it to be the moſt abominable Idol that is in the world. For my God will not be eaten with teeth, neither yet dieth he again. And upon theſe words that I have now ſpoken, will I ſuffer Death.

The Maſs an abominable Idol.

The prayer of Anne Askew.

O Lord I have more Enemies now, than there be hairs on my head: yet Lord, let them never overcome me with vain words, but fight thou Lord in my ſtead; for on thee caſt I my care. With all the ſpight they can imagine, they fall upon me which am thy poor creature. Yet, ſweet Lord, let me not ſet by them which are againſt me; for in thee is my whole delight. And, Lord, I heartily deſire of thee, that thou wilt of thy moſt merciful goodneſs forgive them that violence which they do and have done unto me. Open alſo thou their Blind hearts, that they may hereafter do that thing in thy ſight, which is only acceptable before thee, and to ſet forth thy verity aright, without all vain fantaſie of ſinful Men. So be it, O Lord, ſo be it.

By me Anne Askew.

HItherto we have intreated of this good Woman now it remaineth that we touch ſomewhat as concerning her end and Martyrdom. After that ſhe, being born of ſuch ſtock and kindred that ſhe might have lived in great wealth and proſperity, if ſhe would rather have followed the world than Chriſt, now had been ſo tormented, that ſhe could neither live long in ſo great diſtreſs, neither yet by her Adverſaries be ſuffered to die in ſecret; the day of her execution being appointed, ſhe was brought into Smithfield in a Chair, becauſe ſhe could not go on her Feet, by means of her great Torments. When ſhe was brought to the Stake, ſhe was tied by the middle with a chain that held up her Body. When all things were thus prepared to the fire, Doctor Shaxton, who was then appointed to preach, began his Sermon. Anne Askew hearing, and anſwering again unto him, where he ſaid well, confirmed the ſame; where he ſaid amiſs, there, ſaid ſhe, he miſſeth, and ſpeaketh without the Book.

Anne Askew brought unto the Stake.

Anne Askew lamed upon the rack.

Shaxton.

preached at Anne Askews burning.

The Sermon being finiſhed, the Martyrs, ſtanding there tyed at three ſeveral ſtakes ready to their Martyrdom, began their prayers. The multitude and concourſe of the People was exceeding, the place where they ſtood being railed about to keep out the preaſs. Upon the Bench under St. Bartholomews Church ſate Wriſley Chancellour of England, the old Duke of Norfolk, the old Earle of Bedford, the Lord Mayor, with divers other more. Before the fire ſhould be ſet unto them, one of the Bench hearing that they had Gunpowder about them, and being afraid leſt the Fagots by ſtrength of the Gunpowder would come flying about their Ears began to be afraid: but the Earl of Bedford declaring unto him how the Gunpowder was not layd under the Fagots, but onely about their Bodies to rid them out of their pain which having vent there was no danger to them of the Fagots, ſo diminiſhed that fear.

Then Wriſley Lord Chancellour ſent to Anne Askew Letters, offering to her the Kings Pardon if ſhe would recant. Who, refuſing once to look upon them, made this anſwer again, that ſhe came not thither to deny her Lord and Maſter. Then were the Letters likewiſe offered unto the other, who in like manner, following the conſtancy of the Woman, denied not onely to receive them, but alſo to look upon them. Whereupon the L. Mayor, commanding fire to be put to them, cryed with a loud voice, Fiat juſtitia.

Anne Askew refuſeth the Kings pardon.

Juſtitia Juſtitia.

And thus the good Anne Askew with theſe bleſſed Martyrs, being troubled ſo many manner of ways, and having paſſed through ſo many Torments, having now ended the long courſe of her Agonies, being compaſſed in with flames of fire, as a bleſſed Sacrifice unto God, ſhe ſlept in the Lord Anno. 1546. leaving behind her a ſingular example of Chriſtian conſtancy for all men to follow.

John Lacels, John Adams and Nicholas Belenian.

THere was at the ſame time alſo burnt together with her, one Nicholas Belenian Prieſt of Shropſhire, John Adams a Taylor, and John Lacels Gentleman, of the Court and houſhold of King Henry.

The Martyrdom of Anne Askew, John Lacels, John Adams, Nicholas Belenian.

It happened well for them, that they died together with Anne Askew. For albeit that of themſelves they were ſtrong and ſtout men, yet, through the example and exhortation of her, they being the more boldned received occaſion of greater comfort in that ſo painful and doleful kind of Death: who beholding her invincible conſtancy, and alſo ſtirred up through her perſwaſions, did ſet apart all kind of fear.

Thus

The manner of burning Anne Askew, Iohn Lacels, Iohn Adams, & Nicolas Belenian, with certane of y^e counsell sitting in Smithfield.

Thus they confirming one another with mutual exhortations tarried looking for the Tormentor and fire, which, at the laſt flaming round about them, conſumed their bleſſed Bodies in happy Martyrdom, in the year of our Salvation, 1546. about the Month of June.

There is alſo a certain Letter extant, which the ſaid John Lacels briefly wrote, being in Priſon, touching the Sacrament of Chriſts Body and Blood; wherein he doth both confute the errour of them, which being not contented with the ſpiritual receiving of the Sacrament, will leave no ſubſtance of Bread therein, and alſo confuteth the ſiniſter Interpretation of many thereupon. The tenor of which Letter is as hereunder followeth.

The Copie of the Letter of John Lacels written out of Priſon.

The Letter of Mr. John Lacels written out of Priſon.

SAint Paul becauſe of Sects and diſſenſion among the Corinthians, wrote the Epiſtle unto them; and in like caſe pertaining to my Conſcience, I do proteſt my whole Heart touching the bleſſed Supper of the Lord, wherein I truſt in God to bring nothing for me, but I ſhall be able with Gods Holy Word to declare and manifeſt the ſame.* And herein I take occaſion to recite the ſaying of Saint Paul in the ſaid Epiſtle the eleventh Chapter, That which I delivered unto you, I received of the Lord. For the Lord Jeſus, the ſame night in which he was betrayed, took Bread, gave thanks, and brake it, and ſaid, take ye, eat ye, this is my Body, which is broken for you.

* Cor. 11.

Here, me ſeemeth, Saint Paul durſt not take upon him his Lord and Maſters Authority. Wherefore, as at Gods Hand the breaking of the moſt innocent and immaculate Body and Blood of Chriſt is the quietneſs of all mens Conſciences, the onely remedy of our ſins, and redemption of mankind which is called in the Scripture the daily Offering: ſo the Maſs which is the Invention of Man (whoſe author is the Pope of Rome, as it doth appear in Polydore Virgil and many others) is the unquietneſs of all Chriſtendom, a Blaſphemy unto Chriſts Blood, and (as Daniel calleth it) the abominable deſolation, as the Scripture ſhall hereafter more manifeſt it. St. Paul was belike to learn of the Romans-Church, the manner of the Conſecration as they call it, with the breathing over the Hoſt, and other Ceremonies beſides, that he durſt not take upon him to ſay, Hoc eſt corpus meum. But this I will admit: it was the Lord Jeſus that made the Supper, which alſo did finiſh it, and made an end of the onely Act of our Salvation, not only here in this world, but with his Father in Heaven, as he declareth himſelf, that he will drink no more of this bitter Cup, till he drink it new in his Fathers Kingdom, where all bitterneſs ſhall be taken away.

The blaſphemy and wickedneſs of the Maſs.

Prophecie.

St. Paul did not take upon him in the perſon of Chriſt to ſay, Hoc eſt corpus meum, as our Prieſts do.

Now if any man be able to finiſh the Act of our Saviour, in breaking of his Body, and ſhedding of his Blood here, and alſo to finiſh it with the Father in Heaven, then let him ſay it. But I think that if men will look upon Saint Pauls Words well, they ſhall be forced to ſay, as St. Paul ſaith; the Lord Jeſus ſaid it, and once for all, which onely was the fulfiller of it. For theſe Words Hoc eſt corpus meum, were ſpoken of his natural preſence (which no man is able to deny) becauſe the Act was finiſhed on the Croſs, as the Story doth plainly manifeſt it to them that have eyes. Now this Bloody Sacrifice is made an end of, the Supper is finiſhed, forſomuch as, Chriſt hath once ſuffered for ſins, the juſt for the unjuſt, to bring us to God, and was killed as pertaining to the Fleſh, and hath entred in by his own Blood once for all, into the holy place, and found eternal redemption.

None but Chriſt can ſay, Hoc eſt corpus meum, and he ſaid it once for all.

Heb. 9.

Here now followeth the Adminiſtration of the Supper of the Lord, which I will take at Chriſts Hands after the reſurrection, although other men will not be aſhamed to bring the wicked Counſels of fooliſh inventions for them. And it came to paſs as Chriſt ſate at meat with them, he took Bread, bleſſed, and brake it, and gave it to them, and their eyes were opened, and knew him, and he vaniſhed out of their ſight. And the Apoſtles did know him in breaking of Bread.

Luke 24.

Here alſo it ſeemeth to me the Apoſtles to follow their Maſter Chriſt, and to take the right uſe of the Sacrament, and alſo to teach it to thoſe that were converted to Chriſt as mention is made in the Acts of the Apoſtles, where it is ſaid, They continued in the Apoſtles Doctrine and Fellowſhip, in breaking of Bread, and prayer, and they continued daily with one accord in the Temple, and brake Bread in every Houſe, and did eat there with gladneſs and ſingleneſs of heart, praiſing God, and had favour with all the people. And Saint Paul following the ſame Doctrin, doth plainly ſhew the duty of the Miniſter, and alſo of them that ſhall receive it; As oft as ye ſhall eat this Bread, and drink this Cup, ye ſhall ſhew the Lords Death untill he come. Here I do gather that the Miniſter hath no further Power and Authority than to preach and pronounce the Lords Death, or elſe to ſay the Lord Jeſus ſaid it, which did fulfil it on the Croſs.

The right uſe of the Lords Supper in the Apoſtles time.

1 Cor. 11.

How farr the power of the Miniſter extendeth in conſecrating the Supper.

Further-

How the Flesh of Christ is eaten in the Supper.

Furtheremore, I do ſtedfaſtly believe, that where the Bread is broken according to the Ordinance of Chriſt, the bleſſed and Immaculate Lamb is preſent to the eyes of our Faith, and ſo we eat his Fleſh, and drink his Blood, which is to dwell with God, and God with us. And in this we are ſure we dwell with God, in that he giveth us his Holy Spirit, even as the Forefathers, that were before Chriſts coming, did preſently ſee the Lords Death, and did eat his Body and drink his Blood.

Popiſh Prieſts take upon them to do more than ever Chriſt did.

In this I do differ from the Popes Church, that the Prieſts have Authority to make Chriſts natural preſence in the Bread, for ſo doth he more than our Lord and Saviour did; As the example is manifeſt in Judas, which at Chriſts Hands received the ſame Wine and Bread, as the other Apoſtles did. But the Pope and his adherents are even they whom Daniel ſpeaketh of, ſaying, He ſhall ſet men to unhallow the Sanctuary, and to put down the daily offering, and to ſet up the abominable deſolation. Yea, he (of Rome*) ſhall ſpeak marvellous things againſt the God of Heaven, and God of all Gods, wherein he ſhall proſper ſo long, till the wrath be fulfilled, for the concluſion is deviſed already. He ſhall not regard the God of Heaven, nor the God of his Fathers, yea in his place ſhall he worſhip the mighty Idol, and the God whom his Fathers knew not, which is the God of* Maozim.

Dan. 11. Maozim ſignifieth in Hebrew, as much as the God of divers Temples.

For lack of time I leave the Commemoration of the bleſſed Supper of the Lord, and the abbominable Idol the Maſs, which is it that Dainel meaneth by the God Maozim. Read the ſecond and laſt Chapters of Daniel, the ſecond to the Theſſalonians, the ſecond Epiſtle; where they recite the abomination of deſolation, which, Matthew ſaith, ſtandeth in the holy place, which is the Conſciences of Men. Mark ſaith, where it ought not to ſtand, which is a plain denial of all the Inventions of Men. Further Luke ſaith, the time is at hand. Paul ſaith, the myſtery of iniquity worketh already, yea, and ſhall continue until the appearance of Chriſt, which in my judgment is at hand.

The God Maozim in Daniel, alludeth much neer to Mazon, which ſignifieth Bread. Matth. 24. Marke. 13. Luke 21. 2 Theſſ. 2.

Now for the Supper of the Lord, I do proteſt to take it as reverently as Chriſt left it, and as his Apoſtles did uſe it, according to the Teſtimonies of the Prophets, the Apoſtles, and our bleſſed Saviour Chriſt, which accordingly Saint Paul to the Epheſians doth recite.

The faithful and reverend confeſſion of Lacels touching the Lords Supper.

Now with quietneſs I commit the whole world to their Paſtor and Heardman Jeſus Chriſt the onely Saviour and true Meſſias, and I commend my Soveraign Lord and Maſter, the Kings Majeſty, King Henry the eighth to God the Father, and to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; the Queeen and my Lord the Prince, with this whole Realm, ever to the innocent and immaculate Lamb, that his Blood may waſh and puriſie their Hearts and Souls from all iniquity and ſin, to Gods glory and to the Salvation of their Souls. I do proteſt, that the inward part of my Heart doth groan for this, and I doubt not but to enter into the holy Tabernacle which is above, yea, and there to be with God for ever. Farewel in Chriſts Jeſus.

Rogers, Martyr, burned in Smithfield.

One Rogers in Norfolke Martyr.

Like as Wincheſter and other Biſhops did ſet on King Henry againſt Anne Askew and her Fellow Martyrs, ſo Doctor Repſe, Biſhop of Norwich, did incite no leſs the old Duke of Norfolke againſt one Rogers in the Countrey of Norfolke; who much about the ſame year and time, was there condemned and ſuffered Martyrdom for the ſix Articles. After which time it was not long, but within an half year both the King himſelf and the Dukes Houſe decaied: albeit, the Dukes Houſe by Gods Grace recovered again afterward, and he himſelf converted to a more moderation in this kind of dealing.

The Story of Queen Katharine Parre, late Queen, and Wife to King Henry the eighth. Wherein appeareth in what danger ſhe was for the Goſpel, by the means of Steven Gardiner and other of his Conſpiracy; and how graciouſly ſhe was preſerved by her kind and loving Husband the King.

Anno 1546.

After theſe ſtormy ſtories above recited, the courſe and order as well of the time as the matter of the ſtory doth require now ſomewhat to intreat likewiſe touching the troubles and afflictions of the vertuous and excellent Lady Queen Katharine Parre, the laſt wife to King Henry: the ſtory whereof is this.

Q. Katherine Parre.

About the ſame time above noted, which was about the year after the King returned from Bullein, he was informed that Queen Katharin Parre, at that time his Wife, was very much given to the reading and ſtudying of the Holy Scriptures, and that ſhe for that purpoſe had retained divers well learned and godly Perſons to inſtruct her thorowly in the ſame; with whom as at all times convenient ſhe uſed to have private Conference touching ſpiritual matters; ſo alſo of ordinary, but eſpecially in Lent every day in the afternoon for the ſpace of an hour, one of her ſaid Chaplains in her privie Chamber made ſome Collation to her and to her Ladies and Gentlewomen of her Privie Chamber, or other that were diſpoſed to hear: In which Sermons they oft times touched ſuch abuſes as in the Church were then rife. Which things as they were not ſecretly done, ſo neither were their preachings unknown unto the King. Whereof at the firſt, and for a great time, he ſeemed very well to like. Which made her the more bold (being indeed become very zealous toward the Goſpel, and the Profeſſors thereof) frankly to debate with the King touching Religion, and therein flatly to diſcover her ſelf; oftentimes wiſhing, exhorting, and perſwading the King, that as he had, to the glory of God, and his eternal fame, begun a good and a godly work in baniſhing that monſtrous Idol of Rome, ſo he would throughly perfect and finiſh the ſame, cleanſing and purging his Church of England clean from the dregs thereof, wherein as yet remained great ſuperſtition.

The religious Zeal of Q. Katherine toward Gods Word.

The exhortation of Q. Katharine to the King.

And albeit the King grew towards his latter end very ſterne and opinionate, ſo that of few he could be content to be taught, but worſt of all to be contended withal by argument; notwithſtanding, toward her he refrained his accuſtomed manner (unto others in like caſe uſed) as appeared by great reſpects, either for the reverence of the cauſe, whereunto of himſelf he ſeemed well inclined, if ſome others could have ceaſed from ſeeking to pervert him, or elſe for the ſingular affection, which, until a very ſmall time before his death, he always bare unto her. For never handmaid ſought with more careful diligence to pleaſe her Miſtreſs, than ſhe did with all painful indeavour apply her ſelf by all vertuous means in all things to pleaſe his humour.

The King toward his latter end waxed more impatient.

Moreover beſides the vertues of the mind, ſhe was indued with very rare gifts of Nature, as ſingular beauty, favour, and comely perſonage, being things wherein the King was greatly delighted: and ſo enjoyed ſhe the Kings favor, to the great likelihood of the ſetting at large of the Goſpel within this Realm at that time; had not the malicious practiſe of certain profeſſed Enemies againſt the truth (which at that time alſo were very great) prevented the ſame, to the utter alienating of the Kings mind from Religion, and almoſt to the extreme ruin of the Queen and certain others with her, if God had not marvellouſly ſuccoured her in the diſtreſs. The Conſpirers and practiſers of her death were Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, Wriſley then Lord Chancellour, and others more both of the Kings Privy Chamber, and of his Privy Councel. Theſe ſeeking (for the furtherance of their ungodly purpoſe) to revive, ſtir up, and kindle evil and pernicious humours in their Prince and Soveraign Lord, to the intent to deprive her of this great favour which then ſhe ſtood in with the King (which they not a little feared would turn to the utter ruin of their Antichriſtian Sect, if it ſhould continue) and thereby to ſtop the paſſage of the Goſpel; and conſequently, having taken away her, who was the onely Partroneſs of the Profeſſors of the truth, openly without fear of check or controlment, with fire and ſword, after their accuſtomed manner, to invade the ſmall remainder, as they hoped, of that poor flock, made their wicked entry unto this their miſchievous enterpriſe, after this manner following.

The vertuous inclination of Q. Katharine toward the King.

Enemies & conſpirers againſt the Goſpel.

The

The Kings Majesty, as you have heard, misliked to be contended withal in any kind of argument. This humour of his, although the Queen would not Cross in smaller matters, yet in cases of Religion as occasion served, she would not stick in Reverent Terms and humble talk, entering with him into discourse, with sound reasons of Scripture now and then to contrary. The which the King was so well accustomed unto in those matters, that at her Hands he took all in good part, or at the least did never shew countenance of offence thereat: which did not a little appale her Adversaries to hear and see. During which time, perceiving her so throughly grounded in the Kings Favour, they durst not for their lives once open their Lips unto the King in any respect to touch her, either in her presence, or behind her back. And so long she continued this her accustomed usage, not onely of her hearing Private Sermons (as is said) but also of her free Conference with the King in matters of Religion, without all peril, until at the last by reason of his sore legg (the anguish whereof began more and more to increase) he waxed sickly, and there-withal froward, and difficult to be pleased.

The King sometime contrary to the Queen in argument.

The King waxeth sickly and difficult to please.

In the time of this his sickness he had left his accustomed manner of coming and visiting of the Queen: and therefore she, according as she understood him, by such assured intelligence as she had about him, to be disposed to have her company, sometimes being sent for, other sometimes of her self would come to visit him, either at after dinner or after Supper, as was most fit for her purpose. At which time she would not fail to use all occasions to move him, according to her manner, zealously to proceed in the Reformation of the Church. The sharpness of the disease had sharpened the Kings accustomed patience, so that he began to shew some tokens of misliking; and contrary unto his manner, upon a day breaking off that matter, he took occasion to enter into other talk, which somewhat amazed the Queen. To whom notwithstanding in her presence he gave neither evil word nor countenance, but knit up all Arguments with gentle words and loving countenance; and after other pleasant talk, she for that time took her leave of his Majesty. Who after his manner bidding her farewel sweet heart (for that was his usual Term to the Queen) licensed her to depart.

The King beginneth to mislike of the Queen.

The Bishop of Winchester taketh his occasion to work his mischief.

At this visitation chanced the Bishop of Winchester aforenamed to be present, as also at the Queens taking her leave (who very well had printed in his Memory the Kings sudden interrupting of the Queen in her tale, and falling into other matter) and thought that if the Iron were beaten whilst it was hot, and that the Kings humor were holpen, such misliking might follow towards the Queen, as might both overthrow her and all her endeavours; and he onely awaited some occasion to renew into the Kings memory the former misliked Argument. His expectation in that behalf did nothing fail him; for the King at that time shewed himself no less prompt and ready to receive any information, than the Bishop was maliciously bent to stirr up the Kings Indignation against her. The King, immediately upon her departure from him, used these or like words; A good hearing, quoth he, it is when Women become such Clerks, and a thing much to my comfort, to come in mine old days to he taught by my Wife,

The Bishop of Winchester's words to the King.

The Bishop hearing this, seemed to mislike that the Queen should so much forget her self, as to take upon her to stand in any Argument with his Majesty, whom he to his Face extold for his rare vertues, and specially for his learned Judgment in matters of Religion, above not onely Princes of that and other ages, but also above Doctors professed in Divinity, and said that it was an unseemly thing for any of his Majesties Subjects to reason and argue with him so malapertly, and grievous to him for his part, and other of his Majesties Counsellors and Servants, to hear the same; and that they all by proof knew his wisdom to be such, that it was not needful for any to put him in mind of any such matters; inferring moreover how dangerous and perillous a matter it is, and ever hath been for a Prince to suffer such insolent words at his Subjects Hands: who as they take boldness to contrary their Soveraign in words, so want they no will, but onely power and strength to overthrow them in deeds.

Besides this, that the Religion by the Queen so stiffly maintained did not onely disallow and dissolve the policy and politique Government of Princes, but also taught the people that all things ought to be in common; so that what colour soever they pretended, their opinions were indeed so odious, and for the Princes Estate so perillous, that (saving the reverence they bear unto her for his Majesties sake) they durst be bold to affirm that the greatest Subject in this Land, speaking those Words that she did speak, and defending likewise those Arguments that she did defend, had with indifferent justice by law deserved death.

Winchester's accusation against the Queen.

Hobeit for his part, he would not, nor durst not, without good Warrant from his Majesty, speak his knowledge in the Queens case, although very apparent reasons made for him, and such as his dutiful affection towards his Majesty, and the Zeal and preservation of his estate, would scarce give him leave to conceal, though the uttering thereof might through her, and her faction, be the utter destruction of him, and of such as indeed did chiefly tender the Princes safety, without his Majesty would take upon him to be their Protector, and as it were their Buckler. Which if he would do (as in respect of his own safety he ought not to refuse) he with others of his faithful Counsellors could within short time disclose such treason, cloaked with this cloak of Heresie, that his Majesty should easily perceive how perillous a matter it is to cherish a Serpent in his own Bosom: Howbeit he would not for his part willingly deal in the matter both for reverend respect aforesaid, and also for fear least the faction was grown already too great, there with the Princes safety to discover the same. And therewithal, with heavy countenance, and whispering together with them of that Sect there present, held his Peace.

Winchester abuseth the King with his flattering.

These and such other kinds of Winchesters flattering phrases marvellously whetted the King both to anger and displeasure toward the Queen, and also to be jealous and mistrustful of his own estate. For the assurance where-of Princes use not to be scrupulous to do any thing: Thus then Winchester with his flattering words, seeking to frame the Kings disposition after his own pleasure, so farr crept into the King at that time, and with doubtful fears he, with other his Fellowes, so filled the Kings mistrustful mind; that before they departed the place, the King (to see belike what they would do) had given commandment, with Warrant to certain of them made for that purpose, to consult together about the drawing of certain Articles against the Queen, wherein her life might be touched; which the King, by their perswasions pretended to be fully resolved not to spare, having any rigor or colour of law to countenance the matter. With this Commission they departed for that time from the King, resolved to put their pernicious practise to as mischievous an execution.

How Winchester and his fellowes devise against the gospellers.

During the time of Deliberation about this matter, they failed not to use all kind of policies, and mischievous practises, as well to suborn Accusers, as otherwise to betray her, in seeking to understand what Books by law forbidden she had in her Closet. And the better to bring their purpose to pass, because they would not upon the sudden but by means deal with her, they thought it best, at the first, to begin with some of those Ladies, whom they knew to be great with her, and of her Blood. The chiefest whereof, as most of estimation, and Privy to all her doings, where these; the Lady Herbert, afterward Countess of Pembrook, and Sister to the Queen, and chief of her Privy Chamber; the Lady Lane, being of her Privy Chamber, and also her Cousin germain; the Lady Tyrwit, of her Privy Chamber, and for her vertuous disposition in very great favour and credit with her.

Lady Herbert.

Lady [illegible].

Lady Tyrwit.

It was devised that these three above named should first of all have been accused and brought to answer unto the six Articles, and upon their Apprehension in the Court, their Closets and Coffers should have been searched, that somewhat might have him found whereby the Queen might be charged; which being found, the Q. her self presently should have been taken, and likewise by Barge carried by night unto the Tower. This platform thus devised, but yet in the end coming to no effect; the King by those aforesaid was forthwith made Privie unto the device by Winchester and Wrisley, and his consent thereunto demanded. Who (belike to prove the Bishops malice, how far it would preſume) like a wiſe politick Prince, was contented (diſſembling) to give his conſent, and to allow of every Circumſtance (knowing notwithſtanding in the end what he would do.) And thus the day, the time, and the place of theſe apprehenſions aforeſaid was appointed; which device yet after was changed.

Winchesters platform.

The King at that time lay at Whitehall, and uſed very ſeldom, being not well at eaſe, to ſtir out of his Chamber or privy Gallery; and few of his Councel, but by eſpecial commandment, reſorted unto him; theſe only except, who by reaſon of this practiſe uſed oftner than ordinary to repair unto him. This purpoſe ſo finely was handled, that it grew now within few days of the time appointed for the execution of the matter, and the poor Queen neither knew nor ſuſpected any thing at all, and therefore uſed after her accuſtomed manner, when ſhe came to viſit the King, ſtill to deal with him touching Religion, as before ſhe did.

The King all this while gave her leave to utter her mind at the full without contradiction; not upon any evil mind or miſliking (ye muſt conceive) to have her ſpeedy diſpatch, but rather cloſely diſſembling with them, to try out the uttermoſt of Wincheſters fetches. Thus after her accuſtomed Conference with the King, when ſhe had taken her leave of him (the time and day of Wincheſters final day approaching faſt upon) it chanced that the King of himſelf, upon a certain night after her being with him, and her leave taken of him, in miſlike of her Religion, brake the whole practiſe unto one of his Phyſicians, either Dr. Wendy, or elſe Owen, but rather Wendy, as is ſuppoſed: pretending unto him, as though he intended not any longer to be troubled with ſuch a Doctreſs as ſhe was; and alſo declaring what trouble was in working againſt her by certain of her Enemies, but yet charging him withal, upon peril of his life, not to utter it to any Creature living: and thereupon declared unto him the Parties above named, with all Circumſtances, and when and what the final reſolution of the matter ſhould be.

The Queen all this while, compaſſed about with Enemies and Perſecutors, perceived nothing of all this, nor what was working againſt her, and what Traps were layed for her by Wincheſter and his Fellows; ſo cloſely was the matter conveyed. But ſee what the Lord God (who from his eternal Throne of Wiſdom ſeeth and diſpatcheth all the inventions of Achitophel, and comprehendeth the wily beguily themſelves) did for his poor Handmaiden, in reſcuing her from the Pit of Ruin, whereinto ſhe was ready to fall unawares.

The wiles of this Achitophel, Wincheſter, diſpatched.

For as the Lord would, ſo came it to paſs, that the Bill of Articles drawn againſt the Queen, and ſubſcribed with the Kings own hand (although diſſemblingly you muſt underſtand) falling from the boſom of one of the foreſaid Counſellors, was found and taken up of ſome godly perſon, and brought immediately unto the Queen. Who reading there the Articles compriſed againſt her, and perceiving the Kings own hand unto the ſame, for the ſudden fear thereof fell incontinent into a great melancholy and agony, bewailing and taking on in ſuch ſort, as was lamentable to ſee, as certain of her Ladies and Gentlewomen being yet alive, which were then preſent about her, can teſtifie.

The Articles drawn againſt the Queen, how they came to her hands.

The Queen in an agony.

The King hearing what perplexity ſhe was in, almoſt to the peril and danger of her life, ſent his Phyſicians unto her. Who travelling about her, and ſeeing what extremity ſhe was in, did what they could for her recovery. Then Wendy, who knew the cauſe better than the other, and perceiving by her words what the matter was, according to that the King before had told him, for the comforting of her heavy mind, began to break with her in ſecret manner, touching the ſaid Articles deviſed againſt her, which he himſelf, he ſaid, knew right-well to be true: although he ſtood in danger of his life, if ever he were known to utter the ſame to any living Creature. Nevertheleſs, partly for the ſafety of her life, and partly for the diſcharge of his own Conſcience, having remorſe to conſent to the ſhedding of innocent blood, he could not but give her warning of that miſchief that hanged over her head, beſeeching her moſt inſtantly to uſe all ſecrecy in that behalf, and exhorted her ſomewhat to frame and conform her ſelf unto the Kings mind, ſaying; he did not doubt, but if ſhe would ſo do, and ſhew her humble Submiſſion unto him, ſhe ſhould find him gracious and favourable unto her.

Dr. Wendy the King's Phyſician ſent to the Queen.

The exhortation of Dr. Wendy to the Queen.

It was not long after this, but the King hearing of the dangerous ſtate wherein ſhe yet ſtill remained, came unto her himſelf. Unto whom, after that ſhe had uttered her grief, fearing leaſt his Majeſty, ſhe ſaid, had taken diſpleaſure with her, and had utterly forſaken her; he like a loving Husband, with ſweet and comfortable words, ſo refreſhed and appeaſed her careful mind, that ſhe upon the ſame began ſomewhat to recover; and ſo the King, after he had tarried there about the ſpace of an hour, departed.

The Kings coming to the Queen to comfort her.

After this the Queen, remembring with her ſelf the words that Mr. Wendy had ſaid unto her, deviſed how by ſome good opportunity ſhe might repair to the Kings preſence. And ſo firſt commanding her Ladies to convey away their Books which were againſt the Law, the next night following after Supper, ſhe (waited upon only by the Lady Harbert her Siſter, and the Lady Lane, who carried the Candle before her) went unto the Kings Bed-chamber, whom ſhe found ſitting and talking with certain Gentlemen of his Chamber. Whom when the King did behold, very courteouſly he welcomed her, and breaking off the talk, which before her coming he had with the Gentlemen aforeſaid, began of himſelf, contrary to his manner before accuſtomed, to enter into talk of Religion, ſeeming as it were deſirous to be reſolved by the Queen of certain Doubts which he propounded.

The Queen perceiving to what purpoſe this talk did tend, not being unprovided in what ſort to behave herſelf towards the King, with ſuch Anſwers reſolved his Queſtions as the time and opportunity preſent did require, mildly, and with reverent Countenance, anſwering again after this manner:

The Queens politick ſubmiſſion to the King.

Your Majeſty, quoth ſhe, doth right-well know, neither I my ſelf am ignorant, what great imperfection and weakneſs by our firſt Creation is allotted unto us women, to be ordained and appointed as inferiour and ſubject unto man as our Head, from which Head all our direction ought to proceed, and that as God made man to his own ſhape and likeneſs, whereby he, being indued with more ſpecial gifts of perfection, might rather be ſtirred to the contemplation of heavenly things, and to the earneſt endeavour to obey his Commandments, even ſo alſo made he woman of man, of whom and by whom ſhe is to be governed, commanded and directed. Whoſe womanly weakneſſes and natural imperfection ought to be tolerated, aided and borne withal, ſo that by his wiſdom ſuch things as be lacking in her ought to be ſupplied.

Sithence therefore that God hath appointed ſuch a natural difference between man and woman, and your Majeſty being ſo excellent in gifts and ornaments of wiſdom, and I a ſilly poor woman, ſo much inferiour in all reſpects of nature unto you, how then cometh it now to paſs that your Majeſty, in ſuch diffuſe Cauſes of Religion, will ſeem to require my judgment? Which when I have uttered and ſaid what I can, yet muſt I, and will I, refer my judgment in this, and in all other Caſes, to your Majeſties wiſdom, as my only Anchor, Supream Head and Governour here in Earth, next under God, to lean unto.

Not ſo by S. Mary, quoth the King, you are become a Doctor, Kate, to inſtruct us (as we take it) and not to be inſtructed or directed by us.

If your Majeſty take it ſo, quoth the Queen, then hath your Majeſty very much miſtaken, who have ever been of the opinion, to think it very unſeemly, and prepoſterous for the woman to take upon her the office of an Inſtructer or Teacher to her Lord and Husband, but rather to learn of her Husband, and to be taught by him. And where I have with your Majeſties leave, heretofore been bold to hold talk with your Majeſty, wherein ſometimes in Opinions there hath ſeemed ſome difference, I have not done it ſo much to maintain Opinion, as I did it rather to miniſter talk, not only to the end your Majeſty might with leſs grief paſs over this painful time of your infirmity, being intentive to our talk, and hoping that your Majeſty ſhould reap ſome eaſe thereby; but alſo, that I hearing your Majeſties learned Diſcourſe might receive to my ſelf ſome profit thereby. Wherein, I aſſure your Majeſty, I have not miſſed any part of my deſire in that behalf, always referring my ſelf in all ſuch matters unto your Majeſty, as by ordinance of nature it is convenient for me to do.

Perfect agreement between the King and the Queen.

And is it even ſo, ſweet heart, quoth the King? And tended your Arguments to no worſe end? Then perfect Friends we are now again, as ever at any time heretofore: and as he ſate in his Chair, embracing her in his arms, and kiſſing her, he added this, ſaying, That it did him more good at that time to hear thoſe words of her own mouth, than if he had heard preſent news of an hundred thouſand pounds in mony faln unto him. And with great ſigns and tokens of marvellous joy and liking, with promiſes and aſſurances never again in any ſort more to miſtake her, entring into other very pleaſant Diſcourſes with the Queen and the Lords, and Gentlemen ſtanding by, in the end (being very far in the night) he gave her leave to depart. Whom in her abſence to the ſtanders by, he gave as ſingular and as affectuous commendations, as before time to the Biſhop and the Chancellor (who then were neither of them preſent) he ſeemed to miſlike of her.

The King abhorred the malicious workings of the bloody Papiſts.

Now then, God be thanked, the Kings mind was clean altered, and he deteſted in his heart (as afterwards he plainly ſhewed) this Tragical practiſe of thoſe cruel Caiaphaſes; who nothing underſtanding of the Kings well reformed mind, and good diſpoſition toward the Queen, were buſily occupied about thinking and providing for their next days labour, which was the day determined to have carried the Queen to the Tower.

This purpoſe being altered that the Ladies ſhould be firſt taken, it was then appointed that they, with the Queen, ſhould altogether be apprehended in manner as is here declared.

The day, and almoſt the hour appointed being come, the King being diſpoſed in the Afternoon to take the air (waited upon with two Gentlemen only of his Bedchamber) went into the Garden) whither the Queen alſo came, being ſent for by the King himſelf, the three Ladies above named alone waiting upon her. With whom the King at that time diſpoſed himſelf to be as pleaſant as ever he was in all his life before: When ſuddenly in the midſt of their mirth, the hour determined being come, in cometh the Lord Chancellor into the Garden with forty of the Kings Guards at his heels, with purpoſe indeed to have taken the Queen, together with the three Ladies aforeſaid, whom they had before purpoſed to apprehend alone, even then unto the Tower. Whom then the King ſternly beholding, breaking off his mirth with the Queen, ſtepping a little aſide, called the Chancellour unto him. Who upon his knees ſpake certain words unto the King, but what they were (for that they were ſoftly ſpoken, and the King a good pretty diſtance from the Queen) it is not well known, but it is moſt certain that the Kings replying unto him, was Knave, for his anſwer; yea, arrant Knave, Beaſt, and Fool; and with that the King commanded him preſently to avant out of his preſence. Which words, although they were uttered ſomewhat low, yet were they ſo vehemently whiſpered out by the King, that the Queen did eaſily, with her Ladies aforeſaid, over-hear them: which had been not a little to her comfort, if ſhe had known at that time the whole cauſe of his coming, ſo perfectly as after ſhe knew it. Thus departed the Lord Chancellour out of the Kings Preſence as he came, with all his Train, the whole mould of all his deviſe being utterly broken.

The King revileth Wriſley Lord Chancellor.

The Lord Chancellor commanded to avant out of the Kings ſight.

Wriſlies deviſes, and Wincheſters platform, lye in the duſt.

The King, after his departure, immediately returned to the Queen. Whom ſhe perceiving to be very much chafed (albeit coming towards her, he inforced himſelf to put on a merry countenance) with as ſweet words as ſhe could utter, ſhe indeavoured to qualifie the King his diſpleaſure, with requeſt unto his Majeſty in the behalf of the Lord Chancellour, whom he ſeemed to be offended withal; ſaying, for his Excuſe, That albeit ſhe knew not what juſt cauſe his Majeſty had at that time to be offended with him, yet ſhe thought that ignorance, not will, was the cauſe of his Error, and ſo beſought his Majeſty (if the cauſe were not very heinous) at her humble ſute to take it.

The Queen makern excuſe for her Enemy.

Ah poor Scul, quoth he, thou little knoweſt how evil he deſerveth this grace at thy hands. Of my word, Sweet-heart, he hath been towards thee an arrant Knave, and ſo let him go. To this the Queen in charitable manner replying in few words, ended that talk; having alſo by Gods only bleſſing happily, for that time and ever, eſcaped the dangerous Snares of her bloody and cruel Enemies for the Goſpels ſake.

The Queen by God's marvellous bleſſing, delivered of all her Adverſaries.

The peſtiferous purpoſe of this Biſhop, and of ſuch like bloody Adverſaries practiſing thus againſt the Queen, and proceeding of Gods Goſpel (as ye have heard) putteth me in remembrance of ſuch another like ſtory of his wicked working in like manner, a little before: but much more pernicious and peſtilent to the publick Church of Jeſus Chriſt, than this was dangerous to the private eſtate of the Queen. Which Story likewiſe I thought here, as in convenient place, to be adjoyned and notified, to be known to all Poſterity, according as I have it faithfully recorded and ſtoried by him, which heard it of the Archbiſhop Cranmers own mouth declared, in order and form as followeth.

A Diſcourſe touching a certain policy uſed by Stephen Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, in ſtaying King Henry the Eighth from redreſſing of certain abuſes of Ceremonies in the Church, being Embaſſadour beyond the Seas.

Alſo the Communication of King Henry the Eighth had with the Embaſſadour of France at Hampton-Court concerning the Reformation of Religion, as well in France, as in England, Anno 1546. Menſ. Auguſt.

Steph. Gardiner Embaſſadour.

IT chanced in the time of King Henry the Eighth, when his Highneſs did laſtly (not many years before his death, conclude a League between the Emperour, the French King, and himſelf, that the Biſhop of Wincheſter, Stephen Gardiner by name, was ſent in Embaſſage beyond the Seas, for that purpoſe. In whoſe abſence the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Thomas Cranmer, attending upon the Kings Court, ſought occaſion ſomewhat to further the Reformation of the corrupt Religion, not yet fully reſtored unto perfection. For like as the ſaid Archbiſhop was always diligent and forward to prefer and advance the ſincere Doctrine of the Goſpel; ſo was that other Biſhop a contrary Inſtrument, continually ſpurning againſt the ſame, in whatſoever Coaſt of the World he remained. For even now he being beyond the Seas, in the temporal Affairs of the Realm, forgat not, but found the means, as a moſt valiant Champion of the Biſhop of Rome, to ſtop and hinder, as well the good diligence of the ſaid Archbiſhop, as the godly diſpoſition of the Kings Majeſty in that behalf, which thus chanced.

Wincheſter a great hinderer of the courſe of the Goſpel.

Whilſt the ſaid Biſhop of Wincheſter was now remaining beyond the Seas about the Affairs aforeſaid, the Kings Majeſty and the ſaid Archbiſhop having conference together for Reformation of ſome ſuperſtitious enormities in the Church; amongſt other things, the King determined forthwith to pull down the Roods in every Church, and to ſuppreſs the accuſtomed ringing on Allhallow-night, with a few ſuch like vain Ceremonies: and therefore when the ſaid Archbiſhop took his leave of the King, to go into Kent his Dioceſs, his Highneſs willed him to remember that he ſhould cauſe two Letters to be deviſed, by me, quoth the King, to be ſigned, the one to be directed unto you my Lord, and the other unto the Archbiſhop of York, wherein I will command you both to ſend forth your Precepts unto all other Biſhops within your Provinces, to ſee thoſe enormities and Ceremonies reformed undelayedly that we have communed of.

The Kings conference with Dr. Cranmer about Reformation of the Church Rood-lofts, ringing on Allhallow-night.

Letters of Reformation to be ſigned by the King.

So upon this the Kings pleaſure known, when the Archbiſhop of Canterbury was then come into Kent, he cauſed his Secretary to conceive and write theſe Letters according to the Kings mind, and being made in a readineſs, he ſent them to the Court to Sir Anthony Denie, for him to get them ſigned by the King. When Mr. Denie had moved the King thereunto; the King made anſwer; I am now otherways reſolved, for you ſhall ſend my Lord of Canterbury word, that ſithence I ſpake with him about thoſe matters, I have received Letters from from my Lord of Winchester, now being on the other ſide of the Sea, about the concluſion of a League between us and the Emperor, and the French King, and he writeth plainly unto us, That the League will not proſper nor go forward, if we make any other innovation, change, or alteration, either in Religion or Ceremonies, than heretofore hath been already commenced and done. Wherefore my Lord of Canterbury muſt take patience herein, and forbear until we may eſpy a more apt and convenient time for that purpoſe.

Anno 1546.

Which matter of Reformation began to be revived again, at what time the great Embaſſadour from the French King, came to the Kings Majeſty at Hampton Court, not long before his death. Where then no Gentleman was permitted to wait upon his Lord and Maſter, without a Velvet Coat and a Chain of Gold. And for that entertainment of the Embaſſadour, were builded in the Park there three very notable great and ſumptuous Banquetting Houſes. At the which it was purpoſed, that the ſaid Embaſſadour ſhould have been three ſundry nights very richly banquetted. But as it chanced, the French Kings great Affairs were then ſuddenly ſuch, that this Embaſſadour was ſent for home in poſt haſte, before he had received half the noble entertainment that was prepared for him, ſo that he had but the fruition of the firſt Banquetting Houſe.

This Embaſſador was Admiral of France, whoſe name was Mounſieur de Annebalt. he came to Hampton Court, the 20. day of Auguſt, ann. 1546. The matter of Reformation again renued a little before the Kings death.

Now what Prince-like order was there uſed in the furniture of the Banquet, as well in places of the noble Eſtates; namely, the Kings Majeſty, and the French Embaſſadour, with the Noblemen both of England and France on the one part, and of the Queens Highneſs and the Lady Anne of Cleve, with other Noble women and Ladies of the other part, as alſo touching the great and ſumptuous preparation of coſtly and fine diſhes there out of number ſpent; it is not our purpoſe here preſently to intreat thereof, but only to conſider and note the conference and communication had the firſt night after the ſaid banquet was finiſhed, between the Kings Majeſty, the ſaid Embaſſadour, and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury (the Kings Highneſs ſtanding openly in the Banquetting-Houſe, in the open face of all the people, and leaning one Arm upon the Shoulder of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the other Arm upon the Shoulder of the Embaſſadour) touching the eſtabliſhing of Godly Religion between thoſe two Princes in both their Realms: As by the report of the ſaid Archbiſhop unto his Secretary, upon occaſion of his ſervice to be done in King Edwards Viſitation, then being Regiſter in the ſame Viſitation, relation was made on that behalf in this ſort.

The. Kings Banquet for the French Embaſſadour.

Secret communication between the King and the French Embaſſadour and the Archb. of Canterbury. The teſtimony and credit of the ſtory.

When the ſaid Viſitation was put in a readineſs, before the Commiſſioners ſhould proceed in their Voyage, the ſaid Archbiſhop ſent for the ſaid Regiſter his man unto Hampton Court, and willed him in any wiſe to make Notes of certain things in the ſaid Viſitation; whereof he gave unto him inſtruction, having then further talk with him touching the good effect and ſucceſs of the ſaid Viſitation. Upon which occaſion the Regiſter ſaid unto his Maſter the Archbiſhop, I do remember, that you not long ago cauſed me to conceive and write Letters, which King Henry the eighth ſhould have ſigned and directed unto your Grace, and the Archbiſhop of York, for the Reformation of certain enormities in the Churches, as taking down of the Roods, and forbidding of ringing on Alhallow-night, and ſuch like vain Ceremonies. Which Letters your Grace ſent to the Court to be ſigned by the Kings Majeſty, but as yet I think that there was never any thing done therein.

The name of this Regiſter was M. Morice, Secretary ſometimes to the Arch. Tho. Cranmer.

Why, quoth the Archbiſhop again, never heard you thoſe Letters were ſuppreſſed and ſtopped? Whereunto the Archbiſhops Servant anſwering again; as it was (ſaid he) my duty to write thoſe Letters, ſo was it not my part to be inquiſitive what became thereupon. Mary, quoth the Archbiſhop, my Lord of Wincheſter then being beyond the Seas, about the concluſion of a league between the Emperor, the French King, and the King our Maſter, and fearing that ſome Reformation ſhould here paſs in the Realm, touching Religion in his abſence againſt his appetite, wrote to the Kings Majeſty, bearing him in hand, that the league then towards would not proſper nor go forwards on his Majeſties behalf if he made any other innovation, or alteration in Religion, or Ceremonies in the Church, than was already done; which his Advertiſement herein cauſed the King to ſtay the ſigning of thoſe Letters, as Sir Anthony Deny wrote to me by the Kings Commandment.

Mark the miſchievous ſtretches of this old Fox Wincheſter.

Then ſaid his Servant again unto him; Forſomuch as the Kings good intent took no place then, now your Grace may go forward in thoſe matters, the opportunity of the time much better ſerving thereunto than in King Henries days.

Not ſo, quoth the Archbiſhop. It was better to attempt ſuch Reformation in King Henry the eighth his days than at this time, the King being in his Infancy. For if the Kings Father had ſet forth any thing for the Reformation of abuſes, who was he that durſt gain ſay it? Mary, we are now in doubt how men will take the change, or alteration of abuſes in the Church, and therefore the Councel hath forborn eſpecially to ſpeak thereof, and of other things which gladly they would have reformed in this Viſitation, referring all thoſe and ſuch like matters unto the diſcretions of the Viſitors. But if King Henry the eighth had lived unto this day with the French King, it had been paſt my Lord of Wincheſters power to have viſured the Kings Highneſs as he did when he was about the ſame league.

I am ſure you were at Hampton-Court, quoth the Archbiſhop, when the French Kings Embaſſadour was entertained there at thoſe Solemn Banquetting Houſes, not long before the Kings death; Namely, when after the Banquet was done the firſt night, the King leaning upon the Embaſſadour and upon me; if I ſhould tell what Communication between the Kings Highneſs and the ſaid Embaſſadour was had, concerning the eſtabliſhing of ſincere Religion then, a man would hardly have believed it. Nor had I my ſelf thought the Kings Highneſs had been ſo forward in thoſe matters as then appeared. I may tell you it paſſed the pulling down of Roods, and ſuppreſſing the ringing of Bells. I take it, that few in England would have believed, that the Kings Majeſty and the French King had been at this point, not only within half a year after to have changed the Maſs in both the Realms into a Communion (as we now uſe it) but alſo utterly to have extirped and baniſhed the Biſhop of Rome, and his uſurped Power, out of both their Realms and Dominions.

The purpoſe of K. Henry and of the French King a little before their deaths.

Yea, they were ſo throughly and firmly reſolved in that behalf, that they meant alſo to exhort the Emperour to do the like in Flanders and other his Countries and Seigniories, or elſe they would break off from him. And herein the Kings Highneſs willed me (quoth the Archbiſhop) to pen a form thereof to be ſent to the French King to conſider of. But the deep and moſt ſecret Providence of Almighty God, owing to this Realm a ſharp ſcourge for our iniquities, prevented for a time this their moſt Godly device and intent, by taking to his mercy both theſe Princes.

A brief Narration of the trouble of Sir George Blage.

Sir George falſly accuſed.

HEre would alſo ſomething be ſaid of Sir George Blage, one of the Kings Privy Chamber, who being falſly accuſed by Sir Hugh Caverley, Knight, and Maſter Littleton, was ſent for by Wriſly Lord Chancellor the Sunday before Anne Askew ſuffered, and the next day was carried to Newgate, and from thence to Guildhall, where he was condemned the ſame day, and appointed to be burned the Wedneſday following. The words which his Accuſers laid unto him were theſe; What if a Mouſe ſhould eat the Bread? Then by my conſent they ſhould hang up the Mouſe. Whereas indeed theſe words he never ſpake, as to his lives end he proteſted. But the truth (as he ſaid) was this, that they craftily to undermine him, walking with him in Pauls Church after a Sermon of Doctor Crome, asked if he were at the Sermon. He ſaid, Yea. I heard ſay (ſaith Maſter Littleton) that he ſaid in his Sermon, That the Maſs profiteth neither for the quick nor for the dead. No, ſaith M. Blage, wherefore then? belike for a Gentleman when he rideth on hunting, to keep his Horſe from ſtumbling. And ſo they departing, immediately after he was apprehended (as is ſhewed) and condemned to be burned. When this was heard among them of the Privy Chamber, the King hearing them whiſpering together (which he could never abide) commanded them to tell him the matter. Whereupon the matter being opened, and ſute made to the King, eſpecially by the good Earl of Bedford, then Lord Privy Seal, the King being ſore offended with their doings, that they would come ſo near him, and even into his Privy Chamber, without his knowledge, ſent for Wriſley, commanding eftſoons to draw out his Pardon himſelf, and ſo was he ſet at liberty. Who coming after to the Kings Preſence; Ah my Pig (ſaith the King to him, for ſo he was wont to call him.) Yea, ſaid he, if your Majeſty had not been better to me than your Biſhops were, your Pig had been roſted e're this time.

Mr. Blage pardoned by the King.

The Kings Pig almoſt roſted.

But to let this matter of Sir George Blage paſs, we will now reduce our Story again to Anne Askew and her fellow Martyrs, who the ſame week were burned, and could find no Pardon.

Anno 1546.

Then the Catholick Fathers, when they had brought this Chriſtian Woman, with the reſidue (as above hath been declared) unto their Reſt, they being now in their Ruff and Triumph, like as the Phariſees when they had brought Chriſt to his Grave, deviſed with themſelves how to keep him down ſtill, and to over-tread Truth for ever. Whereupon conſulting with certain of the Councel, they made out a ſtreight and hard Proclamation, authorized by the Kings Name, for the aboliſhing of the Scripture, and all ſuch Engliſh Books which might give any ſight to the ſetting forth of Gods true Word, and Grace of the Goſpel. The Copy and Tenour of which Proclamation is this, as followeth.

A Proclamation for the aboliſhing of Engliſh Books, after the death of Anne Askew, ſet forth by the King, Anno 1546. the eighth day of July.

A Proclamation for the aboliſhing of Engliſh Books.

THe Kings moſt excellent Majeſty underſtanding how, under the pretence of expounding and declaring the truth of Gods Scripture, divers lewd and evil diſpoſed perſons have taken upon them to utter and ſow abroad, by Books imprinted in the Engliſh Tongue, ſundry pernicious and deteſtable Errors and Hereſies, not only contrary to the Laws of this Realm, but alſo repugnant to the true ſenſe of Gods Law and his Word, by reaſon whereof certain men of late, to the deſtruction of their own Bodies and Souls, and to the evil example of others, have attempted arrogantly and maliciouſly to impugn the Truth, and therewith trouble the ſober, quiet, and godly Religion, united and eſtabliſhed under the Kings Majeſty in this his Realm; his Highneſs minding to foreſee the dangers that might enſue of the ſaid Books, is enforced to uſe his general Prohibition, Commandment, and Proclamation, as followeth.

Nay rather for the ignorance and lack of Gods Scripture many have taken occaſion of Error and Hereſies intolerable.

The New Teſtament of Tindall and of Coverdales Tranſlation in Engliſh, forbidden.

First, That from henceforth no man, woman, or perſon, of what eſtate, condition, or degree ſoever he or they be, ſhall after the laſt day of Auguſt next enſuing, receive, have, take, or keep in his or their poſſeſſion, the Text of the New Teſtament of Tindals or Coverdales Tranſlation in Engliſh, nor any other than is permitted by the Act of Parliament made in the Seſſion of the Parliament holden at Weſtminſter in the four and thirtieth and five and thirtieth year of his Majeſties moſt noble Reign; nor after the ſaid day ſhall receive, have, take or keep in his or their poſſeſſion, any manner of Books printed or written in the Engliſh Tongue, which be, or ſhall be ſet forth in the names of Frith, Tindall, Wickliffe, Joy, Roy, Baſil, Bale, Barnes, Coverdale, Turner, Tracy, or by any of them, or any other Book or Books, containing matter contrary to the ſaid Act made in the year thirty four, or thirty five, but ſhall, before the laſt day of Auguſt next coming, deliver the ſame Engliſh Book, or Books, to his Maſter in that Houſhold, if he be a Servant, or dwell under any other, and the Maſter or Ruler of the Houſe, and ſuch other as dwell at large, ſhall deliver all ſuch Books of theſe ſorts as they have, or ſhall come to their hands, delivered as afore or otherwiſe, to the Maior, Bailiff, or chief Conſtable of the Town where they dwell, to be by them delivered over openly within fourty days next following after the ſaid delivery, to the Sheriff of the Shire, or to the Biſhops Chancellor, or Commiſſary of the ſame Dioceſs, to the intent the ſaid Biſhop, Chancellor, Commiſſary, and Sheriff, and every of them, may cauſe them incontinently to be openly burned: which thing the Kings Majeſties pleaſure is, that every of them ſhall ſee executed in moſt effectual ſort, and of their doings thereof make Certificate to the Kings Majeſties moſt honourable Councel, before the firſt day of October next coming.

Scripture Books in Engliſh reſtrained.

Burning Scripture Books.

And to the intent that no man ſhall miſtruſt any danger of ſuch Penal Statutes as be paſſed in this behalf, for the keeping of the ſaid Books, the Kings Majeſty is moſt graciouſly contented by this Proclamation to pardon that offence to the ſaid time appointed by this Proclamation for the delivery of the ſaid Books, and commandeth that no Biſhop, Chancellor, Commiſſary, Maior, Bailiff, Sheriff, or Conſtable, ſhall be curious to mark who bringeth forth ſuch Books, but only order and burn them openly, as is in this Proclamation ordered. And if any man, after the laſt day of Auguſt next coming, ſhall have any of the ſaid Books in his keeping, or be proved, and convinced by ſufficient witneſs before four of the Kings moſt honourable Councel, to have hidden them, or uſed them, or any Copy of any of them, or any part of them, whereby it ſhould appear that he willingly hath offended the true meaning of this Proclamation, the ſame ſhall not only ſuffer impriſonment and puniſhment of his Body at the Kings Majeſties will and pleaſure, but alſo ſhall make ſuch fine and ranſome to his Highneſs for the ſame, as by his Majeſty, or four of his Graces ſaid Councel, ſhall be determined, &c.

A Bait to bring in Books.

The Penalty limited.

Finally, His Majeſty ſtreightly chargeth and commandeth, that no perſon or perſons, of what eſtate, degree, or condition ſoever he or they be, from the day of this Proclamation, preſume to bring any manner of Engliſh Book, concerning any manner of Chriſtian Religion, printed in the parts beyond the Seas, into this Realm, to ſell, give or diſtribute any Engliſh Book printed in outward parts, or the Copy of any ſuch Book, or any part thereof, to any perſon, dwelling within this his Graces Realm, or any other his Majeſties Dominions, unleſs the ſame ſhall be ſpecially licenſed ſo to do by his Highneſs's expreſs Grant to be obtained in writing for the ſame, upon the pains before limited, and therewithal to incur his Majeſties extream indignation.

Foraſmuch as it is, and always hath been the common guiſe and practiſe of the Popes Church, to extinguiſh, condemn, and aboliſh all good Books and wholeſome Treatiſes of Learned men, under a falſe pretence of Errors and Hereſies, whereof Examples now abundantly appear in this Hiſtory above: Now for the better trial hereof, to ſee and try the impudent and ſhameleſs vanity of theſe Catholick Clergy-men, in miſtaking, falſifying, depraving, blaſpheming, and ſlandering where they have no cauſe, againſt all right and honeſt dealing, yea, againſt their own knowledge, conſcience, and manifeſt verity of Gods Word; I ſhall therefore deſire the attentive Reader, before we paſs any further, to conſider and expend here two things by the way: Firſt, What Opinions and Articles theſe men gather out of their Books for Errors and Hereſies. Secondly, How wittingly and willingly they wreſt, pervert, and miſconſtrue their ſayings and writings, in ſuch ſenſe as the writers never ſpake nor meant, and all to bring them into hatred of the world, after they have burned their Books.

The untrue dealing of the Papiſts in gathering Hereſies where none is.

So did they before with John Wickliffe, John Huss, and Hierome. So did they before with Mr. Luther, Tindall, Frith, Lambert, Barnes, Joy, Roy, Seton, and briefly yet do ſtill with all the Proteſtants, either perverting their ſayings otherwiſe than they meant, or noting for Hereſies ſuch as are manifeſt Principles, and Grounds of our Religion: or elſe falſly belying them, or untruly miſtaking them, either in mangling the places, or adding to their words, as may ſerve for their moſt advantage, to bring them out of credit with Princes and all the People.

Articles of Wickliffe and others, falſified by the Papiſts.

For the more evident probation and experience whereof, thou ſhalt ſee here (Chriſtian Reader) as in a Table laid before thine eyes, the Book or Catalogue of ſuch Errors, Blaſphemies and Hereſies, which the Catholick Papiſts pists in their own Registers have extracted out of their Books, whom in this, and other Proclamations, they have condemned. Whereunto moreover, we have annexed the very places also of the Authors, out of which every Article is gathered, keeping also the same signature of verse and page, which they in their Registers do send us unto. So that with little diligence thou maist now, loving Reader, easily perceive, conferring the Articles and Places together, what truth and fidelity these bloody Catholicks have used toward the Children of God: First in burning up their Bodies, then in consuming and abolishing their Books, and afterward drawing out Articles, such as they list themselves, out of their Works, to make the People believe what damnable Hereticks they were, as by these Articles hereunder insuing, collected and contained in their own Registers, may well appear. In all which Articles, there is not one (speaking of these Writers which here they have condemned) but either it is a perfect Truth and a Principle of Christian Doctrine, or else it is falsly gathered, or perversly recited, or craftily handled, and maliciously mangled, having either something cut from it, or some more added, or else racked out of his right place, or wrested to a wrong meaning, which the place giveth not, or else which some other place following doth not better expound and declare. This false and malicious dealing hath always been a common practise amongst Gods enemies from the beginning, to falsifie, wrest, and deprave all things whatsoever maketh not to their faction and affection, be it never so true and just. So began they with Stephen, the first Martyr of Jesus Christ, and so have they continued still, and yet do to this present day.

The words of S. Stephen falsly depraved. Acts 6.7.

Long it were to recite, but more grievous to behold what spite and falshood was used in the Articles of the Albingenses, Waldenses, Wickliffe, Swinderby, Brute, Thorpe, Armachanus, Sir John Oldcastle, John Hus, the Bohemians, and such other. Which thing, if the Booke and Places whence these Articles were gathered against them had been suffered to remain, we might more plainly understand. In the mean season, as touching these Articles here present, for so much as the Bishops own Registers have offered them unto us, and do yet remain with the self same Books from whence they be excerpted, I shall therefore desire thee (friendly Reader) first to consider the Articles, and lay them with the places which the Registers themselves do assign, and then judge thy self what is to be thought thereof. The Articles gathered out of the foresaid Books with the Bishops Decree prefixed before the same, is as hereunder followeth.

A Publick Instrument by the Bishops, for the abolishing of the Scripture, and other Books, to be read in English.

A writing of the Bishops against English Books.

IN the Name of God, Amen. Be it known to all and singular, true and faithful People, to whom these present Letters testimonial, or this present publick and authentick Instrument shall come to be seen, read, heard, or understood, and whom this under written shall or may teach, or appertain unto in any manner of wise in time to come; William by the sufferance of Almighty God, Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all the Realm of England, sendeth greeting in our Lord God everlasting. We signifie unto you all, and let you well to wit and know by these Presents, that the King our Soveraign Lord, hearing of many Books in the English Tongue, containing many detestable Errours, and damnable Opinions, printed in the parts beyond the Seas, to be brought into divers Towns, and sundry parts of this his Realm of England, and sown abroad in the same, to the great decay of our Faith Catholick, and perillous corruption of his People, unless speedy remedy were briefly provided; his Highness willing evermore to imploy all his study and mind, in the high degree which Almighty God hath called him unto, to the wealth of his Subjects, that they might live not only in tranquillity and peace, but also be kept pure and clean of all Contagion, and wrong Opinions in Christs Religion: considering also that he, being Defender of the Faith, would be full loath to suffer such evil Seed sown amongst his People, and so take root that it might overgrow the Corn of the Catholick Doctrine before sprung in the Souls of his Subjects; for the repelling of such Books, calling unto him of his great goodness and gracious disposition, not only certain of the chief Prelats and Clerks of his Realm, but also of each University a certain number of the chief Learned men, proposed such of those Books, as his Grace had ready to be read unto them, requiring to hear in that behalf their advice and judgment of them. Who, both by great diligence and mature deliberation, perusing over the said Books, found in them many Errours and Heresies, both detestable and damnable, being of such sort, that they were like briefly to corrupt a great part of his People; (if they might be suffered to remain in their hands any space) gathering also out of them many great Errours and Pestilent Heresies, and noting them in writing to the intent to shew for what cause they reputed the said Books damnable, of which hereafter out of each Book gathered many do ensue: albeit any more there be in the said Books, which Books totally do swarm full of Heresies and detestable Opinions.

Heresies and Errours collected by the Bishops out of the Book of Tindall, named the Wicked Mammon, with the places of the Book annexed to the same, out of which every Article is collected.

Heresies falsly gathered by the Papists out of the wicked Mammon.

1. FAith only justifieth, Fol. 59.

1. Article. The Papists, of the Principles of Divinity, make Heresie.

This Article being a Principle of the Scripture, and the ground of our Salvation, is plain enough by S. Paul and the whole Body of the Scripture: neither can any make this an Heresie, but they must make S. Paul an Heretick, and shew themselves enemies unto the promises of Grace, and to the Cross of Christ.

2. The Law maketh us to hear God, because we be born under the power of the Devil. Fol. 59.

2. Article.

3. It is impossible for us to consent to the will of God. Fol. 59.

3. Article.

The place of Tindall from whence these Articles be wrested, is in the Wicked Mammon, ar followeth. Which place I beseech thee indifferently to read, and then to judge.

In the faith which we have in Christ, and in Gods promises, find we mercy, life, favour, and peace. In the Law we find death, damnation, and wrath, moreover, the curse and vengeance of God upon us. And it, that is to say the Law, is called of Paul, the ministration of death and damnation. In the Law we are proved to be enemies of God, and that we hate him. For how can we be at peace with God, and love him, seeing we are conceived and born under the power of the Devil, and are his possession and kingdom, his captives and bondmen, and led at his will, and he holdeth our hearts, so that it is impossible for us to consent to the will of God? Much more impossible it is for a man to fulfill the law of his own strength and power, seeing that we are by birth and nature the heirs of eternal damnation, &c.

Herein is nothing contained but that which is rightly consonant unto the Scripture.

4. The Law requireth impossible things of us. Fol. 59.

4. Article. What Heresie is in these words?

Read the place. The Law when it commandeth that thou shalt not lust, giveth thee no power so to do, but damneth thee because thou canst not so do. If thou wilt therefore be at peace with God, and love him, then must thou turn to the Promises and to the Gospel, which is called of Paul the ministration of righteousness, and of the spirit.

2 Cor. 3.

5. The Spirit of God turneth us and our nature, that we do good, as naturally as a Tree doth bring forth fruit. Fol. 65.

5. Article.

The place is this: The Spirit of God accompanieth faith, and bringeth with her light, wherewith a man beholdeth himself in the Law of God, and seeth his miserable bondage and captivity, and humbleth himself, and abhorreth himself. She bringeth Gods promises of all good things in Christ: God worketh with his word, and in his word, and as his word is preached, faith rooteth her self in the hearts of the Elect: and as faith entreth, and the word of God is believed, the power of God looseth the heart from the captivity and bondage under ſin, and knitteth and coupleth him to God, and to the will of God, altereth and changeth him clean, faſhioneth and forgeth him anew, giveth him power to live and to do that which before was impoſſible for him either to love or do, and turneth him into a new Nature; ſo that he loveth that which before he hated, and hateth that which he before loved, and is clean altered and changed, and contrarily diſpoſed, and is knit and coupled faſt to Gods will, and naturally bringeth forth good works; that is to ſay, that which God commandeth to do, and not things of his own imagination; and that doth he of his own accord, as a tree bringeth forth fruit of his own accord, &c.

This place speaketh of the operation and effect of faith, containing nothing but which is maintainable by the Scripture.

6. Article. 6. Works do only declare to thee that thou art juſtified. Fol. 65.

If Tindal ſay, That works do only declare our juſtification; he doth not thereby deſtroy good works; but only ſheweth the right uſe and office of good works to be nothing to merit our juſtification, but rather to teſtifie a lively Faith, which only juſtifieth us: The Article is plain by the Scripture and S. Paul.

7. Article. 7. Chriſt with all his works did not deſerve Heaven. Fol. 69.

Read the place. All good works muſt be done freely with a ſingle eye, without reſpect of any thing, ſo that no profit be ſought thereby. That commandeth Chriſt, where he ſaith, Free have you received, free give again. *For look as Chriſt with all his works * did not deſerve Heaven (for that was his already) but did us ſervice therewith, and neither looked for, nor ſought his own profit, but ours, and the honour of God his Father only: even ſo we with all our works may not ſeek our own profit, neither in this World nor in Heaven, but muſt and ought freely to work to honour God withal, and without all manner of reſpect ſeek our Neighbours profit, and do him ſervice,* &c.

Matth 10. * He meaneth in his Divinity, but in his Humanity he deſerved Heaven by his works, not only for himſelf, but for us all.

8. Article. 8. *Labouring by good works to come to Heaven, thou ſhameſt Chriſts Blood. Fol.*69.

Read the place. If thou wouldeſt obtain Heaven with the merits and deſervings of thine own works, ſo doeſt thou wrong, yea, and ſhameſt the Blood of Chriſt, and unto thee Chriſt is dead in vain. Now is the true Believer heir of God by Chriſts deſervings, yea and in Chriſt was predeſtinate and ordained unto eternal life before the world began. And when the Goſpel is preached unto us, we believe the mercy of God, and in believing, we receive the Spirit of God, which is the earneſt of eternal life, and we are in eternal life already, and already feel in our hearts the ſweetneſs thereof, and are overcome with the kindneſs of God and Chriſt; and therefore love the will of God, and of love are ready to work freely, and not to obtain that which is given us freely, and whereof we are heirs already, &c.

To ſay that Heaven is gotten by our deſervings is a Popiſh Hereſie, and contrary to the Scriptures.

9. Article. 9. Saints in Heaven cannot help us thither. Fol. 69.

Whether Saints can help us unto Heaven, ſee the Scriptures; and mark well the Office of the Son of God, our only Saviour and Redeemer, and thou ſhalt not need to ſeek any further.

10. Article. 10. To build a Church in the honour of our Lady, or any other Saint, is in vain, they cannot help thee, they be not thy friends. Fol. 71.

The place annexed. Read the place of Tindal. What buildeſt thou Churches, foundeſt Abbeys, Chauntries and Colledges in the honour of Saints, to my Mother, S. Peter, Paul, and Saints that be dead, to make of them thy Friends? They need it not, yea, they be not thy Friends; thy Friends are thy poor Neighbours, which need thy help and ſuccour. Then make thy Friends with the unrighteous Mammon, that they may teſtifie of thy Faith, and that thou mayeſt know and feel that thy Faith is right, and not feigned, &c.

Our friends to be made of the wicked Mammon are meant the poor alive, and not the Saints departed.

11 Article. 11. All fleſh is in bondage of ſin, and cannot but ſin. Fol. 74.

This Article is evident enough of it ſelf, confirmed by the Scripture, and needeth no Allegations.

12. Article. 12. Thou canſt not be damned without Chriſt be damned, nor Chriſt be ſaved without thou be ſaved, Fol. 76.

The place annexed. Read the place. A Phyſician ſerveth but for ſick men, and that for ſuch men as feel their ſickneſs, and mourn therefore, and long for health. Chriſt likewiſe ſerveth but for ſinners only that feel their ſin, and that for ſuch ſinners as ſorrow and mourn in their hearts for health. Health is the power or ſtrength to fulfil the Law, or to keep the Commandments: Now he that longeth for that health, that is to ſay, to do the Law of God, is bleſſed in Chriſt, and hath a promiſe that his luſt ſhall be fulfilled, and that he ſhall be made whole. Bleſſed are they which hunger and thirſt for righteouſneſs ſake, (that is, to fulfil the Law) for their luſt ſhall be fulfilled, Matth. 5.

This longing, and the conſent of the heart unto the Law of God is the working of the Spirit, which God hath poured into thine heart, in earneſt, that thou mighteſt be ſure that God will fulfil all his promiſes that he hath made thee. It is alſo the ſeal and mark which God putteth on all men that he chuſeth unto everlaſting life. So long as thou ſeeſt thy ſin, and mourneſt, and conſenteſt to the Law, and longeſt (though thou be never ſo weak) yet the Spirit ſhall keep thee in all temptations from deſperation, and certifie thine heart, that God for his Truth ſhall deliver thee, and ſave thee, yea, and by thy good deeds ſhalt thou be ſaved, not which thou haſt done, but which Chriſt hath doue for thee. For Chriſt is thine, and all his deeds are thy deeds. Chriſt is in thee, and thou in him, knit together inſeparably, neither canſt thou be damned, except Chriſt be damned with thee, neither can Chriſt be ſaved, except thou be ſaved with him, &c. The like comfortable words he hath afterward, fol. 38. which are theſe. He that deſireth mercy, the ſame feeleth his own miſery and ſin, and mourneth in his heart to be delivered, that he might honour God, and God for his Truth muſt hear him, which ſaith by the mouth of Chriſt, Bleſſed are they which hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs, for they ſhall be ſatisfied. God, for his Truths ſake, muſt put the righteouſneſs of Chriſt in him, and waſh his unrighteouſneſs away in the blood of Chriſt. And be the ſinner never ſo weak, ſo feeble, and frail, though he have ſinned never ſo oft and ſo grievouſly; yet ſo long as this luſt, deſire, and mourning to be delivered, remaineth in him, God ſeeth not his ſins, reckoneth them not, for his Truths ſake, and love in Chriſt. He is not a ſinner in the ſight of God that would be no ſinner. He that would be delivered, hath his heart looſe already. His heart ſinneth not, but mourneth, repenteth, and conſenteth unto the Law and Will of God, and juſtifieth God, that is, beareth record that God, which made the Law, is righteous and juſt. And ſuch a heart truſting in Chriſts blood, is accepted for full righteouſneſs, and his weakneſs, infirmity, and frailty is pardoned, and his ſins are not looked upon, until God put more ſtrength in him, and fulfil his deſire, &c.

The Believing man ſtandeth upon the certainty of Gods promiſe, may aſſure himſelf of his ſalvation, as truly as Chriſt himſelf is ſaved, and he can no more than Chriſt himſelf be damned, and although the Scripture doth not uſe this phrase of ſpeaking, yet it importeth no leſs in effect by reaſon of the verity of Gods promiſe which is impoſſible it is to fail.

13 Article. 13. The Commandments be given us, not to do them, but to know our damnation, and to call for mercy of God. Fol. 76.

This Article is falſly wreſted out of theſe words: which do not ſay that we ſhould not do the Commandments, but that we cannot do them.

Read the place. If thou wilt enter into life, keep the Commandments, Matth. 15. 19. Firſt remember that when God commandeth us to do any thing, he doth it not therefore becauſe that we of our ſelves are able to do that he commandeth, but that by the Law we might ſee and know our horrible damnation and captivity under ſin, and ſo repent and come unto Chriſt and receive mercy, &c.

14. Article. 14. *Faſting is only to avoid ſurfet, and to tame the body; all other purpoſes be naught. Fol.*81.

The words of Tyndall be theſe: Faſting is to abſtain from ſurfeting or overmuch eating, from drunkenneſs and cares of the world, as thou mayeſt read, Luke 20. And the end of Faſting is to tame the body, that the ſpirit may have the free courſe to God, and may quietly talk with God. For overmuch eating and drinking, and care of worldly buſineſs, preſſeth down the ſpirit, choaketh it, and tangleth it, that it cannot lift up it ſelf to God. Now he that faſteth for any other intent than to ſubdue the body, that the ſpirit may wait on God, and freely exerciſe it ſelf in the things of God, the ſame is blind, and wotteth not what he doth, erreth, and ſhooteth at a wrong mark, and his intent and imagination is abominable in the ſight of God, &c.

The true end of Faſting.

15. Article. 15. To bid the poor man pray for me, is only to remember him to do his duty; not that I have any truſt in his Prayer. Fol. 42.

The

The place biddeth us put our truſt in Chriſt only, and not in poor mens prayers, and ſo doth the Scripture likewiſe, and yet no Hereſie therein.

The words of Tyndal be theſe. When we deſire one onother to pray for us, that do we to put our Neighbour in remembrance of his duty, and not that we truſt in his holineſs, our truſt is in God, in Chriſt, and in the truth of Gods promiſes. We have alſo a promiſe, that when two or three or more agree together in one thing, according to the will of God, God heareth us; notwithſtanding as God heareth many, ſo heareth he few, and ſo heareth he one, if he pray after the will of God, and deſire the honour of God, &c.

16. Article.

16. Though thou give me a thouſand pound to pray for thee, I am no more bound now than I was before. Fol. 83.

This place anſwereth for it ſelf ſufficiently.

The words be theſe. If thou give me a thouſand pound to pray for thee, I am no more bound then I was before. Mans Imagination can make the Commandment of God neither greater nor ſmaller, neither can the Law of God either add or diminiſh. Gods Commandments be as great as himſelf, &c.

17. Article.

17. A good deed done and not of fervent charity, as Chriſts was, is Sin. Fol. 83.

This place tendeth to no ſuch meaning as is in the Article, but only ſheweth our good deeds to be imperfect.

The words of Tyndal be theſe. Though then ſhew Mercy unto thy Neighbour, yet if thou do it not with ſuch burning love, as Chriſt did unto thee, ſo muſt thou knowledge thy Sin, and deſire Mercy, in Chriſt, &c.

18. Article. This place giveth to none any propriety of an other mans goods but only by way of Chriſtian Communion.

18. Every Man is Lord of another Mans goods. Fol. 83.

The words of Tyndal be theſe. Chriſt is Lord over all, and every Chriſtian is Heir annexed with Chriſt, and therefore Lord of all, and every one Lord of whatſoever another hath. If thy Brother or Neighbour therefore need, and thou have to help him, and yet ſheweſt not mercy, but withdraweſt thy hands from him, then robbeſt thou him of his own, and art a thief, &c. Read more hereof in the xx. Article following.

19. Article. To love the Turk to that end to win him to Chriſt, is no Hereſie but charity.

19. I am bound to love the Turk with the very bottom of my Heart. Fol. 83.

The place of this Article is this. I am bound to love the Turk with all my might and power, yea and above my power, even from the ground of my heart, after the example that Chriſt loved me, neither to ſpare Goods, Body, nor Life, to win him to Chriſt. And what can I do more for thee, if thou gaveſt me all the World? Where I ſee need, there can I not but pray, if Gods Spirit be in me, &c.

Lo, Reader how peeviſhly this place is wreſted. Firſt here is no mention made of any Turk. Secondly, this place ſpeaking of an Infidel, meaneth of ſuch Chriſtians which forſake their own houſholds. Thirdly, by his right in thy goods, he meaneth no propriety that he hath to claim, but only to put thee in mem[illegible] of [illegible] Chriſtian duty [illegible] to give.

20. The worſt Turk living hath as much right to my goods at his needs, as my houſhold, or mine own ſelf. Fol. 83.

Read and mark well the place in the Wicked Mammon.

In Chriſt we are all of one degree without reſpect of perſons. Notwitſtanding, though a Chriſtian Mans Heart be open unto all Men, and receiveth all Men, yet becauſe that his hability of goods extendeth not ſo far, this proviſion is made, that every Man ſhall care for his own houſhold, as Father and Mother, and thine elders that have holpen thee, Wife, Children, and Servants. If thou ſhouldeſt not care and provide for thine Houſhold, then were thou an Infidel, ſeeing thou haſt taken on thee ſo to do; and foraſmuch as that is thy part committed unto thee of the Congregation, when thou haſt done thy duty to thine houſhold, and yet haſt further abundance of the bleſſings of God, that oweſt thou to the poor that cannot labour, or would labour and can get no work, and are deſtitute of friends: to the poor I mean which thou knoweſt, to them of thine own Pariſh. If thy neighbours which thou knoweſt be ſerved, and thou yet have ſuperfluity, and heareſt neceſſity to be among the Brethren a thouſand mile off, to them art thou debtor. Yea, to the very Infidels we be debters if they need, as farr forth as we maintain them not againſt Chriſt, or to Blaſpheme Chriſt. Thus is every Man that needeth thy help, thy Father, Mother, Siſter, and Brother in Chriſt; even as every Man that doth the will of the Father, is Father, Mother, Siſter, and Brother unto Chriſt.

Moreover, if any be an Infidel and a falſe Chriſtian, and forſake his Houſhold, his Wife, Children, and ſuch as cannot help themſelves, then art thou bound to them, if thou have wherewith, even as much as to thine own Houſhold, and they have as good right in thy goods, as thou thy ſelf, &c. And if the whole World were thine, yet hath every Brother his right in thy goods, and is heir with thee, as we are all heirs of Chriſt.

21. Article. The place annexed.

21. Alms deſerveth no meed. Fol. 83.

The place is this: He that ſeeketh with his Alms more than to be merciful, to be a Neighbour, to ſuccour his Brothers need, to do his duty to his Brother, to give his Brother that he oweth him, the ſame is blind, and ſeeth not what it is to be a Chriſtian man, and to have fellowſhip in Chriſts Blood, &c.

22. There is no work better than another to pleaſe God, to make Water, to waſh diſhes; to be a Sowter, or an Apoſtle, all is one; to waſh diſhes and to preach is all one, as touching the deed to pleaſe God. Fol. 44.

The words of Tindal be theſe. As pertaining to good works, underſtand that all works are good which are done within the Law of God, in faith and with thankſgiving to God, and underſtand that thou in thy doing pleaſeſt God, whatſoever thou doeſt within the Law of God, as when thou makeſt water, &c.

The words of Tindal ſufficiently diſcharge the Article of all Hereſie, if they be well weighed The meaning whereof is this, that all our acceptation with God ſtandeth only upon our Faith in Chriſt, and upon no work nor Office. Where Cornelius the Souldier, believing in Chriſt, is as well juſtified before God, as the Apoſtle or Preacher, ſo that there is no rejoycing now neither in work nor Office, but only in our Faith in Chriſt, which only juſtifieth us before God, Rom. 8.

Moreover, put no difference between works, but whatſoever cometh into thy hands, that do, as time, place, and occaſion giveth, and as God hath put thee in degree, high or low. As touching to pleaſe God, there is no work better than another. God looketh not firſt on thy works, as the World doth, as though the beautifulneſs of the works pleaſed him, as it doth the World, or as though he had need of them; but God looketh firſt on the Heart, what Faith thou haſt to his words, how thou believeſt him, and how thou loveſt him for his great mercy that he hath ſhewed thee; he looketh with what Heart thou workeſt, and not what thou workeſt; how thou accepteſt the degree that he hath put thee in, and not of what degree thou art, whether thou be an Apoſtle or a Shoomaker. Set this Example before thine eyes: Thou art a Kitchin Page, and waſheſt thy maſters diſhes. Another is an Apoſtle, and preacheth the Word of God. Of this Apoſtle heark what S. Paul ſaith, If I preach (ſaith he) I have nought to rejoyce in, for neceſſity is put unto me. As who ſhould ſay, God hath made me ſo, woe is unto me if I preach not. If I do it willingly (ſaith he) then have I my reward, That is, then am I ſure that Gods Spirit is in me, and that I am elect to eternal life. If I do it againſt my will, an Office is committed unto me; That is, If I do it not of love to God, but to get a living thereby, and for a worldly purpoſe, and had lever otherwiſe live; then do I that Office which God hath put me in, and yet pleaſe not God my ſelf, &c. Moreover, howſoever he preach, he hath not to rejoyce in that he preacheth. But if he preach willingly with a true heart, and of Conſcience to God, then hath he his reward, that is, then feeleth he the earneſt of eternal life, and the working of the Spirit of God in him. And as he feeleth Gods goodneſs and mercy, ſo be thou ſure he feeleth his own infirmiry, weakneſs, and unworthineſs, and mourneth and knowledgeth his Sin, in that the Heart will not ariſe to work with that full luſt and love that is in Chriſt our Lord. And neverthleſs is he yet at peace with God, through Faith and truſt in Chriſt Jeſus. For the earneſt of the Spirit that worketh in him teſtifieth and beareth witneſs unto his Heart, that God hath choſen him, and that his Grace ſhall ſuffice him, which Grace is now not idle in him. In his works putteth he no truſt.

No difference of men before God in reſpect of deeds, but only in reſpect of Faith.

Now thou that miniſtreſt in the Kitchin, and art but a Kitchin Page, receiveſt all things at the hand of God, knoweſt that God hath put thee in that Office, ſubmitteſt thy ſelf to his will, and ſerveſt thy Maſter, not as a man, but as Chriſt himſelf, with a pure heart, according as Paul teacheth; putteſt thy truſt in God, and with him ſeekeſt thy reward. Moreover, there is not a good deed done, but thy Heart rejoyceth therein, yea when thou heareſt that the Word of God is Preached by this Apoſtle, and ſeeſt the people turn to God, thou conſenteſt unto the deed, thy Heart breaketh out in joy, ſpringeth and leapeth in thy breaſt, that God is honoured, and in thine Heart doſt the ſame that the Apoſtles do, and happily with greater delectation and a more fervent Spirit. Now, he that receiveth a Prophet, in the Name of a Prophet, ſhall receive the reward of a Prophet; That is, he that conſenteth to the deed of a Prophet and maintaineth it, the ſame hath the ſame Spirit, and earneſt of everlaſting life, which the Prophet hath, and is elect as the Prophet is.

Now if thou compare deed to deed, there is great difference betwixt waſhing of diſhes, and preaching the Word of God. But as touching to pleaſe God, none at all. For neither that, nor this pleaſeth, but as far forth as God hath choſen a man, hath put his Spirit in him, and purified his heart by faith and truſt in Chriſt. &c.

The place annexed. Read the place of Tindall, Seek the Word of God in all things, and without the Word of God do nothing, though it appear never ſo glorious. Whatſoever is done without the Word of God that count Idolatry. The Kingdom of Heaven is within us. Luke 7. Wonder therefore at no monſtrous appearance, nor at any outward thing without the Word. For the World was never drawn from God, but with an outward ſhew, and glorious appearance and ſhining of Hypocriſie, and of fained and uſurped faſting, praying, watching, ſinging, offering, ſacrificing, hallowing of Superſtitious Ceremonies, and monſtrous diſguiſing, &c.

24. Article. 24. Beware of good intents: They are Damned of God. Fol. 87.

25. Article. 25. See thou do nothing but that God biddeth thee. Fol. 87.

The place annexed. The words of Tindal out of the which theſe two Articles be gathered are theſe. Beware of thy good intent, good mind, good affection, or zeal as they call it. Peter of good mind, and of a good affection or zeal, chid Chriſt, becauſe he ſaid that he muſt go to Jeruſalem and there be ſlain. But Chriſt called him Satan for his labour; a Name that belongeth to the Devil, and ſaid that he perceived not Godly things, but Worldly. Of a good intent, and of a fervent affection to Chriſt, the Sons of Zebedee would have had fire to come down from Heaven to conſume the Samaritanes; but Chriſt rebuked them, ſaying, that they wiſt not of what Spirit they were; that is, that they underſtood not how that they were altogether Worldly and Fleſhly minded. Peter ſmote Malchus of a good zeal, but Chriſt condemned his deed. The Jews of a good intent and of a good zeal ſlew Chriſt and perſecuted the Apoſtles, as Paul beareth them record, Rom. 10. I bear them record (ſaith he) that they have a fervent mind to God-ward, but not according to knowledge. It is another thing then to do of a good mind, and to do of knowledge. Labour for Knowledge that thou mayeſt know Gods Will, and what he would have thee to do.

Mat. 16. Luke 9. Good intents. Rom. 10.

Our mind, intent, and affection, or zeal, are blinded, and all that we do of them is Damned of God, and for that cauſe hath God made a Teſtament between him and us, wherein is contained both what he would have us to do, and what he would have us to ask of him. See therefore that thou do nothing to pleaſe God withal, but that he commandeth, neither ask any thing of him but that he hath promiſed thee, &c.

26. Article. 26. Churches are for Preaching only, and not as they be uſed now. Fol. 78.

Saint Paul ſaith, If thou confeſs with thy Mouth that Jeſus is the Lord, and believe with thine heart that God raiſed him from death, thou ſhalt be ſafe: That is, if thou believe that he raiſed him up again for thy Salvation. Many believe that God is rich and almighty, but not unto themſelves: as that he will be good to them, and defend them, and be their God: Pharaoh for pain of the Plague was compelled to confeſs his Sins, but had yet no power to ſubmit himſelf unto the Will of God, and to let the Children of Iſrael go, and to loſe ſo great profit for Gods pleaſure. As our Prelates confeſs their Sins, ſaying, Though we be never ſo evil, yet we have the power. And again, the Scribes and the Phariſees, ſay they, ſate in Moſes Seat, do as they teach, but not as they do. Thus confeſs they that they are abominable, &c.

Here follow other Hereſies and Errors, collected by the Biſhops out of the book Named, The Obedience of a Chriſtian Man, with the places of the Book annexed to the ſame.

Articles of Hereſie gathered by the Papiſts out of W. Tindall obedience. HE ſaith, We are bound to make ſatisfaction to our Neighbour, but not to God. Fol. 132.

Satisfaction is a full recompence or amends making to him we have offended, which recompence we are able to make one man to another, and are bound ſo to do; but to God no man can make any amends or recompence, but only Gods own Son Chriſt Jeſus our Saviour: for elſe if man could have made ſatisfaction to God, then had Chriſt dyed in vain. Gal. 2. The place annexed. The words of Tindall in the Obedience be theſe: Let the Fathers and Mothers mark how they themſelves were diſpoſed at all ages, and by experience of their own infirmities, help their Children, and keep them from occaſions. Let them provide marriages for them in ſeaſon, teaching them alſo to know, That ſhe is not his Wife which the Son taketh, nor he her Husband which the Daughter taketh without the conſent or good will of their Elders, or them that have Authority over them. If their friends will not marry them, then are they not to be blame if they marry themſelves. Let not the Fathers and Mothers always take the uttermoſt of their Authority of their Children, but at all times ſuffer with them and bear their weakneſs as Chriſt doth ours, &c.

The Parents conſent in Marriage.

They that ſay that this Article is an Hereſie, let him ſhew where theſe Vows in all the New Teſtament be ordained of God, eſpecially ſuch Vows of ſingle life and wilful poverty, as by the Canon Law be obtruded to young Prieſts and Novices. S. Paul plainly forefendeth any Widows to be admitted under the Age of threeſcore years. Is not here trow you a perillous Hereſie?

And in the ſame Chapter he proveth by the Doctrine of Chriſt, that he was greater than the high Apoſtles: For Chriſt ſaith, To be great in the Kingdom of God, is to do ſervice, and take pain for other. Upon which Rule Paul diſputeth, ſaying. If they be the Miniſters of Chriſt, I am more. In labours more abundant, in ſtripes above meaſure, in Priſon more plenteous, in death oft, &c. The words in the Obedience be true, which are theſe. To pray one for another are we equally bound: and to pray is a thing that we may always do, whatſoever we have in hand; and that to do, may no man hire another: Chriſts Blood hath hired us already, &c.

16. Article.

16. Why ſhould I truſt, ſaith he, in Pauls Prayer or Holineſs? If Saint Paul were alive, he would compare himſelf to Saint Paul, and be as good as he, Fol. 159.

The place annexed. The words of Tindal import no ſuch meaning as in the Article.

The words of Tindall be theſe. Why am not I alſo a falſe Prophet if I teach thee to truſt in Paul, or in his Holineſs or Prayer, or in any thing ſaving in Gods Word, as Paul did? If Paul were here and loved me, as he loved them of his time, to whom he was a Servant to preach Chriſt, what good could he do for me, or wiſh me, but preach Chriſt, and pray to God for me to open my heart, to give me his Spirit, and to bring me to the full knowledge of Chriſt? Unto which Port or Haven when I am once come, I am as ſafe as Paul, joynt heir with Paul of all the promiſes of God, &c.

17. Article.

17. He ſaith that all that be baptized, become Chriſt himſelf. Fol. 163.

The place annexed.

With this Article confer the words of the Obedience, which be theſe. In Matth. 25. ſaith Chriſt, In as much as ye have done it to one of the leaſt of theſe my Brethren, ye have done it to me. And in as much as ye have not done it unto one of the leaſt of theſe, ye have not done it unto me. Here ſeeſt thou that we are Chriſts Brethren, and even Chriſt himſelf, and whatſoever we do one to another, that we do to Chriſt, &c.

18. Article.

18. He ſaith that the Children of Faith be under no Law. Fol. 163.

The place annexed. The Article is true being truly taken.

The words of Tindall be theſe. I ſerve thee not becauſe thou art my Maſter or King, for hope of reward or fear of pain, but for the love of Chriſt. For the Children of Faith are under no Law, as thou ſeeſt in the Epiſtle to the Romans, to the Galatians, and the firſt of Timothy, but are free. The Spirit of Chriſt hath written the lively Law of love in their hearts, which driveth them to work of their own accord, freely and willingly, for the great love ſake only which they ſee in Chriſt, and therefore need they no Law to compel them, &c.

19. Article.

19. There is no deed ſo good, but that the Law condemneth it. Fol. 177.

The place annexed

What Hereſie is in this?

The place in the Obedience is this. Thou haſt the ſtory of Peter, how he ſmote off Malchus eare, and how Chriſt healed it again: There haſt thou in the plain Text great fruit, and great edifying, which I paſs over. Then come I, when I preach of the Law, and the Goſpel, and borrow this example to expreſs the nature of the Law, and of the Goſpel, and to paint it unto thee before thine eyes, and of Peter and his Sword make I the Law, and of Chriſt the Goſpel, ſaying, as Peters Sword cutteth off the ear, ſo doth the Law. The Law damneth, the Law killeth and mangleth the Conſcience. There is no ear ſo righteous, that can abide the hearing of the Law. There is no deed ſo good, but that the Law damneth it. But Chriſt, that is to ſay, the Goſpel, the Promiſes and Teſtament that God hath made in Chriſt, healeth the ear and conſcience, which the ear hath hurt, &c.

20. Article.

20. To ask of God more than he hath promiſed, cometh of a falſe Faith, and is plain Idolatry. Fol. 171.

The place annexed.

What Hereſie is in this?

The words of Tindall are theſe. Look wherein thou canſt beſt keep the Commandments; thither get thy ſelf, and there abide, &c. If we have infirmities that draw us from the Laws of God, let us cure them with the remedies that God hath made. If thou burn, marry; for God hath promiſed thee no chaſtity, as long as thou mayſt uſe the remedy that he hath ordained; no more than he hath promiſed to ſlack thine hunger without meat. Now to ask of God, more than he hath promiſed, cometh of a falſe Faith, and is plain Idolatry, &c.

21. Article

21. Our pain taken in keeping the Commandments, doth nothing but parge the Sin that remaineth in the Fleſh, but to look for any other reward or promotion in Heaven, than God hath promiſed for Chriſts ſake, is abominable in the ſight of God. Fol. 171.

The place annexed.

Conſider the place in the Obedience, which is this. To look for any other reward, or promotion in Heaven, or in the life to come, than that which God hath promiſed for Chriſts ſake, and which Chriſt hath deſerved for us with

with his pain taking, is abominable in the ſight of God: for Chriſt only hath purchaſed the reward, and our pain taking to keep the Commandments doth but purge the Sin that remaineth in the Fleſh, and certifies us, that we are choſen and ſealed with Gods Spirit, unto the reward that Chriſt hath purchaſed for us, &c.

22. Article. 22. The Pope hath no other Authority but to preach only. Fol. 173.

Chriſt ſaid to Peter, Feed my Sheep, John 21. And thou being converted, confirm thy Brethren, Luke 22. And to his Apoſtles he ſaid, Go ye into all the World and preach the Goſpel, &c. Again, Saint Paul, 1 Cor. 1. ſaith, That Chriſt ſent him not to Baptize but to preach: to what other Office or Function he ſent the Pope, let them judge which conſider the Scriptures.

This Hereſie is only to the Pope: but none at all to God.

23. Article. 23. If thou bind thy ſelf to chaſtity to obtain that which Chriſt purchaſed for thee, ſo ſurely art thou an Infidel. Fol. 175.

Read and confer the place of Tindall which is this. Chaſtity canſt thou not give to God, further than God lendeth it thee. If thou canſt not live chaſte, thou art bound to marry, or to be damned, &c. For to what purpoſe thou bendeſt thy ſelf, muſt be ſeen. If thou do it to obtain thereby that which Chriſt hath purchaſed for thee, ſo art thou an Infidel, and haſt no part with Chriſt. If thou wilt ſee more of this matter, look into Deuteronomy, and there thou ſhalt find it more largely intreated, &c.

The place annexed. Chaſtity.

24. Article. 24. He denieth, rebuketh, and damneth miracles. Fol. 176.

The words in Tindals Obedience be theſe. And when they cry miracles, miracles, remember that God hath made an everlaſting Teſtament which is in Chriſts Blood, againſt which we may receive no miracles, no neither the Preaching of Paul himſelf if he come again, by his own teaching to the Galatians, neither yet the Preaching of the Angels of Heaven, &c.

The place annexed.

Miracles how far to be believed. The end of Gods miracles is good; the end of theſe miracles is evil. For the offerings, which are the cauſe of the miracles, do but miniſter and maintain vice, ſin, and all abomination, and are given to them that have too much, ſo that for very abundance they ſome out their own ſhame, and corrupt the whole World with the ſtinch of their filthineſs, &c.

25. Article. 25. He ſaith that no man ſhould ſerve God with good intent or zeal; for it is plain Idolatry. Fol. 77.

The place annexed. Good intents without Gods Word, God abhorreth. The place is in the Obedience: Remember Saul was caſt away of God for ever, for his good intent. God requireth Obedience unto his word, and abhorreth all good intents, and good zeals which are without Gods Word, for they are nothing elſe but plain Idolatry, and worſhipping of falſe Gods, &c.

Here follow other Hereſies and Errours collected by the Biſhops, out of the Book called the Revelation of Antichriſt, with the places of the Book, out of the which they were gathered, annexed to the ſame.

Articles out of the Book called the Revelation of Antichriſt. 1. TO bind a Man perpetually to any Vow of Religion, is without doubt an errour. Fol. 19.

The place of the Book called the Revelation, whence this Article is gathered, is this that followeth: which the Fathers did neither make nor keep, he meaneth Vows, but with the liberty of the Spirit, binding no man perpetually to them. For if they did, without doubt, they erred according to mans fragility.

2. Article. 2. To ſay the Conſtitutions of Religion are good becauſe holy men did ordain them, as Auguſtine, Benedict, Francis, Dominick, and ſuch other, and to follow ſuch examples of Fathers, is to leave the Faith. Fol. 19.

The place annexed.

The place of the Article is this. But they object; The Statutes and Ordinances are good. Holy men did make them, as Auguſtine, Benedict, Bernard, Francis, Dominick, and ſuch other. To this I anſwer, That is even it that Chriſt and the Apoſtles did mean, That theſe words ſhould be like to thoſe things which are taught in the Goſpel, for that they call counterfeiting of the Doctrine, and privily bringing in of Sects and Hereſies, becauſe they take only of the Fathers examples of works, and leave the Faith, &c.

2. Pet. 2.

3. Article. 3. All Moral Divines have a wicked Conſcience full of ſcrupuloſity. Fol. 3.

Moral Divines be they whoſe Doctrine and hope of Salvation conſiſteth in Moral Vertues, rather than in Chriſtian Faith, apprehending the free promiſes of God in Chriſt. And they that be ſuch can never be certified in Conſcience of their Salvation, but always be full of fear and ſcrupuloſity. Saint Paul therefore ſaith, It is therefore of Faith, that it might come by Grace, and the promiſe might be firm and ſure to the whole ſeed, Rom. 4.

Rom. 4. 4. Art.

4. Moral Vertues, as Juſtice, Temperance, Strength, Chaſtity, deſcribed by Natural Reaſon, maketh a Synagogue, and corrupteth Chriſts Faith. Fol. 64.

The place annexed.

The place of this Article, gathered out of the Revelation, is this: ſo many he (the Pope he meaneth) corrupteth, as he hath ſubdued and led under his Laws and Impery. And who is he in the World that is not ſubject under him, except they be Infants, or peradventure ſome ſimple perſons, which are reſerved by the inſcrutable Counſel and proviſion of God? O thou Man of Sin, O thou Son of Perdition, O thou abomination, O thou Corrupter, O thou Authour of evil Conſciences, O thou falſe Maſter of good Conſciences, O thou enemy of Faith and Chriſtian liberty, who is able to rehearſe, yea, or to comprehend in his mind the infinite waves of this monſtrous * Kings evils?

* By this King he meaneth the King of faces which Daniel ſpeaketh of in the eighth Chapter.

If he had ordained theſe his Laws in thoſe works of vertues that are commended in the ten Precepts, or elſe in ſuch as the Philoſophers and Natural Reaſon did deſcribe, as are Juſtice, Srength, Temperance, Chaſtity, Mildneſs, Truth, Goodneſs, and ſuch other, peradventure they ſhould only have made a Synagogue, or elſe have ordained in the World a certain Civil Juſtice, for through theſe alſo Faith ſhould have been corrupted, as it was among the Jews. Howbeit, now he keepeth not himſelf within theſe bounds, but runneth at riot, and more at large, raiſing infinite Tempeſts of miſchief, entiſing and drawing us to Ceremonies, and his own fained Traditions, and binding us like aſſes and ignorant fools, yea and like ſtocks unto them, &c.

5. Article. 5. Chriſt took away all Laws, and maketh us free and at liberty, and moſt of all he ſuppreſſeth all Ceremonies. Fol. 63, 65.

The place annexed. The place of this Article gathered out of the Revelation, is this: Chriſt taking away all Laws to make us free and at liberty, did moſt of all ſuppreſs and diſannul the Ceremonies which did conſiſt in places, perſons, garments, meats, days, and ſuch other, ſo that their uſe ſhould be to all men moſt free and indifferent, &c.

What he meaneth by taking away all Laws, he declareth a little before, ſaying, he hath not delivered us from the Law, but from the Power and Violence of the Law, which is the very true looſing. But for all that he hath not taken away from the Powers and Officers, their Right, Sword, and Authority to puniſh the evil, for ſuch pertain not to his Kingdom, until they are made ſpiritual, and then freely and with a glad heart they ſerve God

6. Article. 6. If the Pope would make all the obſervations of the Ceremonies, as Lent, faſting, holy-days, confeſſion, Matrimony, Maſs, Mattins, and Reliques, &c. free and indifferent, he ſhould not be Antichriſt; but now, becauſe he commandeth them in the name of Chriſt he utterly corrupteth the Church, ſuppreſſeth the Faith, and advanceth Sin. Fol. 67.

If the Pope will inferr a neceſſity of thoſe things, which Chriſt leaveth free and indifferent, then what doth he make himſelf but Antichriſt? The Article is plain, and is founded upon the doctrine of Chriſt, and Saint Paul.

7. Article. 7. To believe in Chriſt maketh ſure Inheritors with Chriſt. Fol. 1.

8. Article. 8. If a Man ſay, then ſhall we do no good works? I anſwer as Chriſt did: This is the work of God to believe in him whom he hath ſent. Fol. 1.

The place annexed. John 1. The place of theſe two Articles, gathered out of the Revelation is this; who is this light that we are exhorted to believe in? Truly it is Chriſt, as Saint John doth teſtifie; He was the true light that lightneth all men which come into the World. To believe in this light, maketh us the Children of light, and the ſure Inheritors with Jeſus Chriſt. Even now have we cruel Adverſaries, which ſet up their briſtles, ſaying, why, ſhall we then do no

John 6. good works? To theſe we anſwer as Chriſt did to the people in the ſixt of Saint John, which asked him what they ſhould do, that they might work the Works of God? Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, This is the Work of God, that ye believe in him whom he hath ſent. And after it followeth, Verily, verily I ſay unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlaſting life. To this alſo condeſcendeth Saint John, in his Epiſtle, ſaying, Theſe things have I written unto you that believe on the Name of the Son of God, that you may ſurely know how that you have Eternal Life. What is the Name of the Son of God? Truly his Name is Jeſus, that is to ſay, a Saviour; therefore thou muſt believe that he is a Saviour.

Jaco. 2. Matth. 8. But what availeth this? The Devils do thus believe and tremble. They know that he is the Son of God, and ſaid unto him, crying, O Jeſus the Son of God, what have we to do with thee? They know that he hath redeemed mankind by his paſſion, and they laboured to let it. For when Pilate was ſent down to give Judgment, his Matth. 27. Wife ſent unto him, ſaying, Have thou nothing to do with that juſt Man, For I have ſuffered many things this day in my ſleep about him. Oſe. 13. Heb. 2. 1 Cor. 15. Rom. 8. mankind. They know that he hath ſuppreſſed Sin and Death, as it is written, Death is conſumed into Victory. Death where is thy Sting? Hell where is thy Victory? The Sting of death is Sin: the ſtrength of Sin is the Law. But thanks be unto God which hath given us Victory through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; who by Sin damned Sin in the Fleſh. For God made him to be Sin for us, that is to ſay, a Sacrifice for our Sin (and ſo is Sin taken in many places) which knew do Sin, that we by his means, ſhould be that righteouſneſs which before God is allowed. It is not therefore ſufficient to believe that he is a Saviour and Redeemer; but that he is a Saviour and Redeemer unto thee, &c.

9. Article. 9. Numbring of Sins maketh a Man a more Sinner, yea, a blaſphemer of the Name of God. Fol. 3.

The place annexed. The place of this Article gathered out of the Revelation is this; Knowledge thy ſelf a Sinner, that thou mayſt be juſtified. Not that the numbering of thy Sins can make thee righteous, but rather a greater Sinner, yea, and a Blaſphemer of the Holy Name of God, as thou maiſt ſee in Cain, which ſaid that his Sins were greater than that he might receive forgiveneſs, and ſo was a Reprobate, &c.

10. Article. 10. God bindeth us to that which is impoſſible for us to accompliſh. Fol. 3.

The place annexed. The place of this Article gathered out of the Revelation is this; If thou ask of me, why he bindeth us to that which is impoſſible for us to accompliſh; thou ſhalt have S. Auguſtines anſwer, which ſaith in the ſecond Book that he wrote to Hierome, that the Law was given us, that we might know what to do, and what to eſchew, to the intent that when we ſee our ſelves not able to do that which we are bound to do, nor avoid the contrary, we may then know what we ſhall pray for, and of whom we ſhall ask this ſtrength, ſo that we may ſay unto our Father, Good Father command whatſoever it pleaſeth thee, but give us thy Grace to fulfil that thou commandeſt. And when we perceive that we cannot fulfil his will, yet let us confeſs that the Law is good and holy, and that we are Sinners and carnal, ſold under Sin. But let us

11. Article. 11. Sin cannot condemn us, for our ſatisfaction is made in Chriſt which dyed for us. Fol. 4.

The place annexed. The place of this Article gathered out of the Revelation is this: Sin hath no power over us, neither can condemn us, for our ſatisfaction is made in Chriſt, which dyed for us that were wicked, and naturally the Children of wrath. But God which is rich in mercy, through the great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead through Sin, hath quickned us with Chriſt, and Epheſ. 2. with him hath raiſed us up, and with him hath made us ſit in Heavenly places through Jeſus Chriſt; to ſhew in times to come the exceeding Riches of his Grace in kindneſs towards us through Chriſt Jeſus: For by Grace are ye ſaved through Faith, and that not of your ſelves; for it is the gift of God, and cometh not of works, leſt any man ſhould boaſt himſelf, &c.

12. Article. 12. I will ſhew thee an evident Argument and Reaſon that thou maiſt know without doubt, who is Antichriſt. All they that do purſue are Antichriſt; The Pope, Biſhops, Cardinals, and their Adherents do purſue; therefore the Pope, Biſhops, and Cardinals, and their Adherents, are Antichriſts. I ween our Syllogiſmus be well made. Fol. 9.

The place annexed. The place of this Article gathered out of the Revelation is; I will ſhew thee an evident Reaſon, that thou mayſt know without doubting which is the very Antichriſt: and this Argument may be grounded upon their furious perſecution, which Paul doth confirm, writing to the Galatians. We (dear Brethren) are the Children of Promiſe, as Iſaac was (not the Sons of the bondwoman, as Iſmael:) but as he that was born after the fleſh did perſecute him that was born after the Spirit, even ſo it is now. Mark Pauls Reaſon. By Iſaac are ſignified the Elect, and by Iſmael the reprobate. Iſaac did not perſecute Iſmael, but contrary, Iſmael did perſecute Iſaac. Now let us make our Reaſon.

Bar- All they that do perſecute are Iſmael, be Reprobates and Antichriſts. — Major.

ba- But all the Popes, Cardinals, Biſhops, and their Adherents do perſecute. — Minor.

ra. Therefore all the Popes, Cardinals, Biſhops, and their Adherents be Iſmael, Reprobates and Antichriſts. — Concluſion.

I ween our Syllogiſmus is well made, and in the firſt figure.

Read the place, and ſee how he proveth the parts of this Argument more at large.

13. Article. 13. I think verily, that ſo long as the Succeſſors of the Apoſtles were perſecuted and martyred, there were good Chriſtian Men, and no longer. Fol. 10.

The Biſhops of Rome in the Primitive Church were under perſecution the ſpace welnear of three hundred years, under the which perſecution, as good as thirty of them and more dyed Martyrs. Since that time have ſucceeded two hundred and four Popes which have lived in great wealth and abundance, amongſt whom if the Book of Revelation think that there be not four to be found good Chriſtian men, I think no leſs but that he may ſo think without any Hereſie?

14. Article. 14. It is impoſſible that the word of the Croſs ſhould be without affliction and perſecution. Fol. 10.

2 Tim. 3. Saint Paul ſaith, whoſoever will live vertuouſly in Chriſt Jeſus, ſhall ſuffer perſecution. And how then can this be true in Paul, and in this man Hereſie?

15. Article. 15. That the Apoſtles did ever curſe any man truly we cannot read in Scripture: for Chriſt commanded them to bleſs thoſe that curſed them. Fol. 11.

The place annexed. Upon what good ground of the Revelation this Hereſie is wrung out, let the place be conferred, which is written is theſe words following: They are as merciful as the Woolf is on his prey. They were ordained 1 Cor. 10. to bleſs men, but they curſe as the Devil were in them. 1 Cor. 13. Paul ſaith that he hath power to edifie, and not to deſtroy. But I wot not of whom theſe bloody Beaſts have their Authority, which do ſo much rejoyce in curſing and deſtruction. We read how Paul did Excommunicate the Corinthian (and that for a great tranſgreſſion) 1 Cor. 5. to the intent that he might be aſhamed of his iniquity, and deſired again the Corinthians to receive him with all 2 Cor. 2. charity: but that the Apoſtles did curſe any man, truly we cannot read in Scripture, for Chriſt commanded them to bleſs thoſe that curſed them, and to pray for thoſe that perſecuted them, &c.

16. Article. 16. By Works, Superſtitions, and Ceremonies, we decay from the Faith, which alone doth truly juſtifie and make holy. Fol. 15.

Note

Note here, good Reader, how perverſly and corruptly this Article is drawn. For where the place of this Book, which is written, fol. 15. expreſly ſpeaketh of truſting to works, meaning that we ſhould put no confidence in works, but only in Faith in Chriſt Jeſus, this Article, to make it appear more Infamous and Heretical, leaveth out the falſe truſt and ſpeaketh ſimply, as though works ſhould decay Faith. Read the place, which is written in theſe words following: Daniel calleth not this word Peſchiam, any manner of Sin, but thoſe ſpecial and chief Sins, which reſiſt and fight againſt the truth and that Faith: as are the truſting in Works, Superſtitions and Ceremonies, by the which we decay from the Faith, &c.

False wresting.

17. Article. 17. *The abuſion of the Maſs with all his Solemnities, with vigils, years-minds, foundations, burials, and all the buſineſs that is done for the dead, is but a face and a cloak of Godlineſs, and deceiving of the people: As if they were good Works, rather for the dead than for the quick. Fol.*24.

True Godlineſs conſiſteth in Faith, that is, in the true knowledge of the Son of God, whom he hath ſent, and in the obſervation of Gods Commandments. All their Rites and Additions inſtituted by Man, are no part of true Godlineſs. And who ſo putteth truſt and confidence therein, as being things meritorious for the dead, is deceived. Such Funerals Saint Auguſtine calleth rather refreſhings of the living, than relievings and helps of the dead.

18. Article. 18. To keep and obſerve one day to faſt, another to abſtain, to forbear ſuch a meat upon the faſting day to deſerve Heaven thereby, is a wicked face and cloak, and againſt Paul. Fol. 29.

The truth of this Article is manifeſt enough, to be void of all Error and Hereſie, unleſs it be Hereſie, to believe and hold with the Scripture. Saint Paul ſaith, if Heaven and our Righteouſneſs come by the Law, then Chriſt dyed in vain. Galatians the ſecond.

Galat 2.

19. Article. 19. The multiplication of holy days, of Feaſts of Corpus Chriſti, of the Viſitation of our Lady, &c. is a wicked face and colour, and indeed fooliſh, unprofitable and vain. Fol. 30.

This Article likewiſe needeth no Declaration, containing in it a true and neceſſary complaint of ſuch ſuperfluous Holy-days of the Popes making. Which as they bring with them much occaſion of Wickedneſs, Idleneſs, Drunkenneſs, and Vanity, and ſo having alſo joyned unto them opinion of Religion, and meritorious Devotion and Gods ſervice they gender Superſtition, and nouriſh the people in the ſame.

20. Article. 20. *Keeping of Virginity and Chaſtity of Religion is a devilliſh thing. Fol.*30.

Another place falſly depraved by the Papiſts.

The place, cited in the Book of the Revelation of Antichriſt, doth ſufficiently open it ſelf, ſpeaking and meaning only of thoſe Monkiſh Vows, which by the Canonical Conſtitution of the Pope are violently forced upon Prieſts and Monks, the coaction whereof Saint Paul doth rightly call the Doctrine of Devils. And here note by the way another trick of a Popiſh Caviller. For where the words of the Book ſpeak plainly of the chaſtity of the Religious, he fraudently turning it to an Univerſality ſaith, the chaſtity of the Religion, whereby it might ſeem to the ſimple Reader more odious and Heretical: the words of the place be theſe.

1 Tim. 4. Keeping of Virginity and Chaſtity of the Religious ſeemeth to be a Godly and a Heavenly thing: but it is a devilliſh thing. Of the which it is ſpoken in the fourth of the firſt Epiſtle to Timothy, Forbidding to marry, &c. Whereas again our moſt Reverend Father maketh that thing neceſſary, that Chriſt would have free, whereof Daniel in the 11. Chapter ſpeaketh, He ſhall not be deſirous of Women. Here Daniel meaneth that he ſhall refuſe and abſtain from marriage, for a cloak of Godlineſs, and not for love of Chaſtity.

Dan 11.

21. Article. 21. *Worſhipping of Reliques is a proper thing, and cloak of advantage againſt the precept of God, and nothing but the affection of Men. Fol.*30, 31.

The place annexed.

These be the words in the Rev. This (the worſhipping of Reliques he meaneth) is a proper and moſt fruitful cloak of advantage. Out of this were invented innumerable Pilgrimages, with the which the fooliſh and unlearned people might loſe their labour, money and time, nothing in the mean ſeaſon regarding their Houſes, Wives and Children, contrary to the commandment of God; when as they might do much better deeds to their Neighbours, which is the precept, &c.

22. Article. 22. There is but one ſpecial Office that pertaineth to thine Orders, and that is to preach the Word of God. Fol. 36.

Of this matter ſufficient hath been ſaid before in the two and twentieth Article alledged out of the Book of Obedience.

23. Article. 23. The Temple of God is not Stones and Wood, neither in the time of Paul was there any Houſe which was called the Temple of God. Fol. 36.

The place ſpeaking of the Temple where Antichriſt ſitteth, is not ſo grievous as the Article maketh.

The place of this Article is this: which is an Adverſary (the Pope he meaneth) and is exalted above all that is called God or that is Worſhipped: ſo that he ſhall ſit in the Temple of God and ſhew himſelf as God. Doth he not ſit in the Temple of God, which ſaith and profeſſeth himſelf to be the Maſter in the whole Church? What is the Temple of God? Is it Stones and Wood? doth not Paul ſay, The Temple of God is holy, which Temple are ye? Neither in the time of Paul was there any Houſe, which was called the Temple of God, as we now call them. What meaneth this ſitting, but reigning, teaching and judging? Who, ſith the beginning of the Church, durſt preſume to call himſelf the Maſter of the whole Church, but only the Pope? &c.

24. Article. 24. He that faſteth no day, that ſaith no Mattens, and doth none of the Precepts of the Pope, Sinneth not, if he think that he doth not Sin. Fol. 43.

The place is there clear and plain without any danger of Hereſie.

The place in the Revel. is this: Becauſe he feareth the Conſciences under the Title and pretence of Chriſts Name, he maketh of thoſe things which in themſelves are no Sins very grievous offences. For he that believeth that he doth Sin if he eat Fleſh on the Apoſtles Even, or ſay not Mattens and Prime in the morning, or elſe leave undone any of the Popes Precepts, no doubt he Sinneth; not becauſe the deed which he doth is Sin, but becauſe he believeth it is Sin, and that againſt this fooliſh Belief and Conſcience he offendeth. Of which fooliſh Conſcience only the Pope is Head Author; for another doing the ſame deed, thinking that he doth not Sin, truly offendeth not. And this is the cauſe that the Spirit of Paul complaineth that many ſhall depart from the Faith. And for this fooliſh Conſcience, mens Traditions be pernicious and noyſome, the ſnares of Souls, hurting the Faith and the liberty of the Goſpel. If it were not for this cauſe they ſhould do no hurt. Therefore the Devil through the Pope abuſeth theſe Conſciences to ſtabliſh the Laws of his Tyranny, to ſuppreſs the Faith and liberty, and to repleniſh the World with Error, Sin, and Perdition, &c.

Traditions how they do hurt.

25. Article. 25. Chriſt ordained the Sacrament of the Altar only to nouriſh the Faith of them that live, but the Pope maketh it a good work, and a Sacrifice to be applyed both to the quick and dead. Fol. 48.

The place toucheth the abuſe of the Sacrament, and is not againſt the Sacrament.

The place is this: Satan hated the Sacrament, and knew no way how to ſuppreſs and diſanul it. Therefore he found this craft, that the Sacrament, which Chriſt did only ordain to nouriſh and ſtabliſh the Faith of them that live, ſhould be counted a good work and Sacrifice, and bought and ſold; and ſo Faith is ſuppreſſed, and this wholſom miniſtry is applyed, not to the quick, but unto the dead, that is to ſay, neither to the quick, neither yet to the dead. Oh the incredible fury of God, &c.

26. Article. 26. Theſe ſigns (he ſpeaketh of miracles and viſions, or apparations) are not to the encreaſe of Faith and Goſpel, for they are rather againſt the Faith and Goſpel, and they are the operation of Satan, and lying ſigns. Fol. 49.

The place containeth a true complaint of falſe illuſions, and may well be born.

The place is as followeth; Who is able to number the monſtrous marvels only of them that are departed? Good Lord, what a ſea of lies hath invaded us, of Apparations, Conjurings, and Anſwers of Spirits? By the which it is brought to paſs, that the Pope is alſo made the King of them that are dead, and reigneth in Purgatory, to the great profit of his Prieſts, which had all their living, riches, and pomp out of Purgatory. Howbeit they ſhould have leſs if they did ſo well teach the Faith of them that live, as they do rideleſs them that are good.

Neither

Neither was there ſince the beginning of the World, any work found of ſo little labour and great advantage. For truly to this purpoſe were gathered almoſt the Poſſeſſions of all Princes and rich men. And through theſe riches ſprang up all pleaſures and idleneſs, and of idleneſs came very Babylon and Sodom, &c.

Neither are theſe ſigns to the encreaſe of the Faith and Goſpel (for they are rather againſt the Faith and Goſpel) but they are done to ſtabliſh the tyranny of theſe * faces and reedels, and to ſet up and confirm the truſt in works. Among theſe Illuſions are thoſe Miracles to be reputed, which are ſhewed in Viſions, Pilgrimages, and worſhippings of Saints, as there are plenty now adays, which the Pope confirmeth by his Bulls, yea, and ſometime doth canonize Saints that he knoweth not. Now behold what is the operation of Satan in lying ſigns, &c.

* This Book of the Revelation of Antichriſt treating upon the 8. Chap. of Dan. wherein there ſpeaketh of the King of faces and reedels, alludeth here to the ſame 27. Article.

27. The people of Chriſt do nothing, becauſe it is commanded, but becauſe it is pleaſant and acceptable unto them. Fol. 63.

The words out of the which this Article is gathered, are theſe: They are the people of Chriſt, which willingly do hear and follow him, not for any fear of the Law, but only enticed and led with a gracious liberty and faithful love; not doing any thing becauſe it is commanded, but becauſe it is pleaſant and acceptable unto them, though it were not commanded: for they that would do otherwiſe, ſhould be counted the people of the Law and Synagogue, &c.

The place giveth another meaning than the Article pretendeth.

28. Article. 28. In the whole new Law is no urgent precept, nor grievous, but only exhortations to obſerve things neceſſary for ſouls health. Fol. 63.

The place is found, and ſtandeth well with Scripture. 1 Tim. 2.

The place of this Article gathered out of the Revelation, is this: A Chriſtian ſhould work nothing by compulſion of the Law, but all through the Spirit of Liberty, as Paul ſaith in the ſecond of the firſt Epiſtle to Timothy. The Law is not given to a righteous man: for whatſoever is done by compulſion of the Law, is ſin, for it is not done with a glad and willing ſpirit, but with a contrary will, and rebelling againſt the Law, and this truly is ſin. Therefore in the fourth of the ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians, he calleth the Preachers of the New Teſtament the Miniſters of the Spirit, and not of the Letter, becauſe they teach Grace, and not the Law. Wherefore in the whole New Teſtament are there no urgent or grievous Precepts, but only exhortations to obſerve thoſe things which are neceſſary to our health. Neither did Chriſt and his Apoſtles at any time compel any man. And the Holy Ghoſt was for that cauſe called Paracletus, that is to ſay, an Exhorter and Comforter, &c.

2 Cor. 4.

29. Article 29. All things neceſſary are declared in the New Teſtament, but no man is compelled, but to do according to their own will. Therefore Chriſt teacheth, Matth. 18. That a Rebel ſhould not be killed, but avoided. Fol. 63. 66.

The place annexed.

The words in the Revelation are theſe: In the New Teſtament are all things declared, which we ought to do and leave and undone; what reward is ordained for them that do and leave undone; and of whom to ſeek, find, and obtain help to do and leave undone: But no man is compelled, but ſuffered to do according to their own will. Therefore in the eighteenth of Matthew, he teacheth that a Rebel ſhould not be killed, but avoided, and put out of company like a Gentile, &c.

30. Article. 30. Chriſt forbad that one place ſhould be taken as holy, and another prophane; but would that all places ſhould be indifferent. Fol. 68.

The place annexed. The Pope maketh difference of places; but the Goſpel maketh none.

The place is this: Chriſt taketh away the difference of all places, will be worſhipped in every place. Neither is there in his Kingdom one place holy, and another prophane, but all places are indifferent; neither canſt thou more heartily and better believe, truſt, and love God in the Temple at the Altar, in the Church-yard, than in thy Barn, Vineyard, Kitchin, or Bed. And to be ſhort, the Martyrs of Chriſt have honoured him in dark Dungeons and Priſons, &c.

31. Article. 31. He raileth againſt all the Rites and Ceremonies of the Maſs, as he were mad. Fol. 68.

The place out of the which this Article is collected, is as followeth. If a Nun touch the Super-altare, or Corpores, (as they call it) it is a ſin. To touch the Chalice is a great tranſgreſſion. To ſay a Maſs with an unhallowed Chalice, is a grievous offence. To do Sacrifice in Veſtiments which are not conſecrated, is a heinous crime. It is reputed for a ſin, if in miniſtring any Sacrament, the Prieſt doth lack any Ornament that pertaineth thereunto. If he call a child, or ſpeak in the words of a Canon, it is a ſin. He offendeth alſo that doth ſtut or ſtammer in the words of the Canon. He ſinneth that toucheth the holy Relicks of Saints. He that toucheth the Sacrament of the Altar, either with hand or finger, though it be for neceſſity, to pluck it from the roof of his mouth, committeth ſuch villanous iniquity, that they will ſcrape and ſhave off the quick fleſh from the part which did touch it. I think at length they will fley the tongue, the roof of the mouth, the throat, and the belly, becauſe they touch the Sacrament. But to hurt thy Neighbour, or privily to convey away any of his goods, or not to help him in his need, is in a manner counted for no ſin, nor yet regarded, &c.

This place noteth only the preposterous judgment of them which ſee more by the precepts of men, than by the commandments of God; and yet herein he uſeth no railing, or maketh terrour.

32. Article. 32. No labour is now adays more tedious than ſaying of Maſs, Mattins, &c. Which before God are nothing but grievous ſins. Fol. 70.

33. Article. 33. The ſins of Manaſſes, and other wicked Kings ſacrificing their own children, are but light and childiſh offences to thoſe. The curſed Sacrifices of the Gentiles may not be compared to ours, we are ſeven times worſe Gentiles than we were before we knew Chriſt. Fol. 70.

The words out of the which theſe two Articles are gathered, are theſe. They are ſo oppreſſed (thoſe he meaneth which are under the ſervitude of the Popes Laws and Decrees) that they fulfil them only with the outward work; for their wills are clean contrary, as we ſee by experience in troubleſom buſineſs of Vigils, Maſſes, and Hours, which both muſt be ſaid and ſung. In the which they labour with ſuch wearineſs, that now adays no labour is more tedious. Yet nevertheleſs, the cruel exactors of theſe moſt hard works compel men to work ſuch things without ceaſing, which before God are nothing but grievous ſins; although before men they be good works, and counted for the ſervice of God. Here are invented the intiſements of the Senſes through Organs, Muſick, and diverſity of Songs; but theſe are nothing to the Spirit, which rather is extinct through theſe wanton trifles. Ah Chriſt, with what violence, with what power are they driven headlong to ſin, and periſh through this abomination?

The place may ſeem to ſpeak ſomwhat vehemently peradventure, but yet I ſee no Hereſie in it.

It is horrible to look into theſe cruel Whirl-pools of Conſciences, which periſh with ſo great pains and labour: what light offences to theſe are the ſins wherein Manaſſes and other wicked Kings ſinned by doing Sacrifice with their own Children and Progeny? Truly the curſed Sacrifices of the moſt rude Gentiles, no not of the Leſtrigones, may be compared unto ours. The ſaying of Chriſt may be verified in us; ſeven more wicked Spirits make the end worſe than the beginning. For I ſay, that we are worſe Gentiles ſeven times than we were before we knew Chriſt, &c.

3 Reg. 3. 1. Leſtrigones were a people or gyants about the borders of Italy, who as Homer ſaith, uſed to eat mens fleſh.

34. Article. 34. It were better to receive neither of the parts of the Sacrament of the Altar, than the one alone. Fol. 73.

The truth of this place may well be avouched by good reaſon.

The words be theſe. Plainly I think that the whole is taken away ſith I ſee manifeſtly the one part gone (for the Bread and the Wine is but one Sacrament) the other is left only for a laughing ſtock. For he that in one part offendeth againſt God, is guilty in all. Therefore it were better to receive neither of the parts, than the one alone; for ſo we might the more ſurely eſchew the tranſgreſſion of that which Chriſt did inſtitute, &c.

35. Article. 35. The Law of the Pope that commandeth every man to communicate together upon one day, is a moſt cruel Law conſtraining men to their own deſtruction. Fol. 73.

The place annexed. Men ought not to be driven to the Communion againſt their wills, but to be exhorted and left to their own diſpoſition.

The place is this. He (the Pope he meanesh) ſetteth a moſt cruel and deadly Snare to tangle the Conſciences, ſuffereth not the uſe of this Sacrament to be free, but compelleth all together on one certain day once in the year to communicate. Here I pray thee, Chriſtian Brother, how many doeſt thou think to communicate only by the compulſion of this Precept, which truly in their heart had lever never communicate? and all theſe ſin (for they do not communicate in Spirit, that is to ſay, neither in faith nor will, but by the compulſion of this Letter and Law) ſith that this Bread requireth a hungry, and not a full heart, and much leſs a diſdaining and hateful mind. And of all theſe ſins the Pope is Author, conſtraining all men by his moſt cruel Law to their own deſtruction, whereas he ought to leave this Communion free to every man, and only call and exhort them, and not compel and drive them unto it, &c.

36. Article. 36. The Spirit would that nothing ſhould be done, but that which is expreſly rehearſed in the Scripture. Fol. 81.

In things pertaining to Gods worſhip, it is true. In things appertaining to Gods Worſhip and Service, true it is that he is not to be worſhipped, but only according to that which he hath revealed and expreſſed unto us in his own word. And this is the meaning of the Author, as by his words doth plainly appear.

37. Article. 37. S. Thomas de Aquine ſavoureth nothing of the Spirit of God. Fol. 83.

Tho. Aquine. The Doctrine of Thomas Aquine referreth the greateſt, or a very great part of our righteouſneſs to opus operatum, and unto merits. The Spirit of God referreth all our righteouſneſs before God, only to our faith in Chriſt. Now how theſe ſavour together, let any indifferent Reader judge.

38. Article. 38. The Pope did condemn the truth of the Word of God openly at Conſtance in John Hus, perſevering unto this day in the ſame ſtubbornneſs. Fol. 86.

John Hus. Touching the condemnation of John Hus, and the manner of his handling, and the cauſe of his death, read his Story before, and conſider moreover his Propheſie of the hundred years after him expired, how truly the ſequel did follow in Martin Luther, and then judge of his Cauſe, good Reader, as the truth of Gods Word ſhall lead thee. And thus much concerning theſe ſlanderous Articles.

Articles out of the Sum of the Scripture. Here follow other Hereſies and Errors, collected by the Biſhops out of the Book named The Sum of the Scripture, with the places of the Book annexed to the ſame.

1. Article. THe water of the Fount hath no more virtue in it than hath any other water. Fol. 1.

2. Article. 2. *The virtue of Baptiſm lieth not in hallowed water, or in other outward thing, but only in Faith. Fol.*6.

The place annexed. The place of theſe two Articles gathered out of the Sum of the Scripture, is this. The water of Baptiſm taketh not away our ſin; for then were it a precious water, and then it behoved us daily to waſh our ſelves therein. Neither hath the water of the Fount more virtue in it ſelf, than the water that runneth in the River of Rhene. When Philip baptized the Eunuch, the Servant of Candace the Queen of Ethiope, there was then no hallowed Water, nor Candle, nor Salt, nor Cream, neither white Habit; but he baptized him in the firſt water they came to upon the way. Here mayeſt thou perceive that the virtue of Baptiſm lieth not in hallowed water, or in the outward things that we have at the Fount, but in the Faith only, &c. Chriſt hath healed us (ſaith S. Paul) by the Bath of regeneration and renovation of the Holy Ghoſt.

Acts 8. Tit. 3.

3. Article. 3. Godfathers and Godmothers be bound to help their Children that they be put to School, that they may underſtand the Goſpel, and the Epiſtles of S. Paul. Fol. 15.

The place annexed. The place of this Article gathered out of the ſaid Book, is this: The Godfathers and Godmothers be bound to help the Children that they be put to School, to the intent that they may underſtand the Goſpel, the joyful Meſſage of God with the Epiſtles of S. Paul. God hath commanded to publiſh, and to ſhew the Goſpel, not only to Prieſts, but to every Creature: Go ye (ſaith Chriſt unto his Diſciples) into the univerſal World, and preach the Goſpel to every Creature. For we be all equally bound to know the Goſpel and the Doctrine of the New Teſtament, &c. And S. Paul, writing to the Corinthians, confeſſeth that he ſendeth his Epiſtles to all the Church, that is to ſay, to all the Aſſembly of Chriſtian men, and to all them that call on the Name of Jeſus, &c.

Mark 16.

4. Article. 4. We think when we believe that God is God, and can our Creed, that we have the faith that a Chriſtian man is bound to have; but ſo doth the Devil believe. Fol. 17.

5. Article. 5. To believe that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt be one God, is not the Principal that we muſt believe: our faith doth not lye principally in that, for ſo believeth the Devil. Fol. 18.

The place annexed. The place out of the which theſe two Articles are collected, is this: We think, when we believe that God is God, and can our Creed, that we have the Faith which a Chriſtian is bound to have. The Devil believeth alſo that there is a God, and Life everlaſting, and a Hell, but he is never the better for it; and he trembleth alway for his faith, as ſaith S. James, The Devils believe, and they tremble. A man might ask, What ſhall I then believe? Thou ſhalt believe plainly and undoubtedly, That the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt is one only God, &c. But this likewiſe believeth the wicked Spirits, and are nothing the better therefore. There is yet another Faith which Chriſt ſo much requireth of us in the Goſpel, and whereunto S. Paul almoſt in all his Epiſtles ſo ſtrongly exhorteth us, that is, that we believe the Goſpel. When our Lord began firſt to preach, he ſaid, (as rehearſeth S. Mark) Repent and believe the Goſpel. Of this faith read before in the firſt Article gathered out of the Wicked Mammon, and in the ninth and tenth of the Revelation of Antichriſt.

James 2.

What true faith is that juſtifieth.

Mark 1.

6. Article. 6. If we believe that God hath promiſed everlaſting Life, it is impoſſible that we ſhould periſh. Fol. 20.

The place of the Author falſly wreſted. Lo here, good Reader, another manifeſt Example of the unhoneſt dealing and falſe cogging of theſe men. For where the place of the Author ſpeaketh expreſly of putting our truſt in God and his promiſes, the Article prettily leaveth out our truſting in Gods promiſe, and ſaith only, If we believe that God hath promiſed. Read the place, and confer it with the Article, and then judge whether there be no difference between truſting in the promiſe that God hath made of everlaſting Life, and believing only that God hath made the promiſe of everlaſting life. The place here followeth as it is there written.

When with a perfect courage we put all our truſt in God and in his promiſes, it is impoſſible that we ſhould periſh, for he hath promiſed us Life everlaſting. And foraſmuch as he is Almighty, he may well perform that that he hath promiſed; and in that he is merciful and true, he will perform his promiſe made unto us, if we can believe it ſtedfaſtly, and put all our truſt in him.

7. Article. 7. *If thou canſt ſurely and ſtedfaſtly believe in God, he will hold his promiſe. For he hath bound himſelf to us, and by his promiſe he oweth us Heaven, in caſe that we believe him. Fol.*21.

True Doctrine made Hereſie. Seeing all our hope ſtandeth only upon the promiſe of God, what Hereſie then is in this Doctrine, to ſay that God oweth us Heaven by his promiſe, which is no other to mean but that God cannot break promiſe? And now judge thou (good Reader) whether is more Hereſie to ſay, That God oweth us Heaven by his promiſe, as we ſay; or this, that God oweth us Heaven by the condignity and congruity of our works, as the Papiſts ſay.

8. Article. 8. All Chriſts glory is ours. Fol. 27.

9. Article. 9. We need not to labour to be Chriſts heirs, and ſons of God, and to have Heaven; for we have all theſe things already. Fol. 24.

The words, out of the which theſe two Hereſies are gathered, be theſe: We be made his heirs, and all his glory is ours, as S. Paul largely declareth. This hath God given us without our deſerving, and we need not to labour for all theſe things, for theſe we have already, &c.

True Doctrine made Hereſie. John 7. They which note theſe Articles for Hereſie, by the ſame Judgment they may make Hereſie of S. Johns Goſpel, and of Pauls Epiſtle, and of all together. S. John ſaith, The glory which thou gaveſt me, I have given them that they may be one, as we alſo are one. As many as received him, to them gave he power to be the ſons of God. S. Paul ſaith, The ſame Spirit certifieth our ſpirit, that we are the ſons of God. If we be ſons, then are we alſo heirs, the heirs I mean of God, and heirs annexed with Chriſt.

John 1. Rom. 8.

10. Article. 10. We need not to labour by our good works to get everlaſting Life, for we have it already; we be all juſtified, we be all the children of God. Fol. 28.

11. All

11. Article. 11. All that think that good works help or profit any thing to get the gift of Salvation, they blaſpheme againſt God, and rob God of his honour. Fol. 28.

12. Article. 12. If we be Circumciſed, that is to ſay, if we put any truſt in works, Chriſt ſhall not help us. Fol. 18.

13. Article. 13. We deſerve nothing of God. Fol. 30.

14. Article. 14. We deſerve not everlaſting life by our good works; for God hath promiſed it unto us, before that we began to do good. Fol. 40.

15. Article. 15. Every Chriſtian man muſt keep Gods Commandments by love, and not by hope to get for his ſervice everlaſting life. Fol. 42.

16. Article. 16. The Jews kept the Commandments, and the Law of God; yet they could not come to Heaven. Fol. 43.

17. Article. 17. Men truſting in their good works, are like to the thief on the left ſide, and are ſuch men as come to the Church daily, keep Holy days and Faſting days, and hear Maſſes, and theſe people be ſooneſt damned; for this is one of the greateſt Errours in Chriſtendome, to think that thy good works ſhall help to thy ſalvation. Fol. 47.

True Chriſtianity turned into Hereſie. If theſe Articles be made Hereſies, which refer the benefit of our inheritance of life and ſalvation to Gods gift, and not to our labours; to grace, and not to merits; to faith, and not to the law of works; then let us ſhut up clean the New Teſtament, and away with Gods Word, and ſet up a new Divinity of the Popes making; yea, let us leave Chriſt with his heretical Goſpel, and in his ſtead ſet up the Biſhop of Rome with his Talmud, and become the Diſciples of his Decretals. And certainly, except Chriſtian Princes begin betime to take ſome zeal of God unto them, and look more ſeriouſly upon the matter, the proceedings of theſe men ſeem to tend to little better, than to drive us at length from true Chriſtianity, to another kind and form of Religion of their own invention, if they have not brought it well-near to paſs already.

18. Article. 18. To ſerve God in a tediouſneſs, or for fear of Hell, or for the joyes of Heaven, is but a ſhadow of good works, and ſuch ſervice doth not pleaſe God. Fol. 41.

Theſe contain no matter either of Errour or Hereſie. The place is this: Works done in Faith be only pleaſant unto God, and worthy to be called good works; for they be the works of the Holy Ghoſt that dwelleth in us by this Faith. But they that are done by tediouſneſs and evil will, for fear of Hell, or for deſire of Heaven, be nothing elſe but ſhadows of works, making Hypocrites. The end of our good works is only to pleaſe God, knowledging that if we do never ſo much, we can never do our duty; for they that for fear of Hell, or for the joyes of Heaven do ſerve God, do a conſtrained ſervice, which God will not have. Such people do not ſerve God, becauſe he is their God and their Father, but to have their reward, and to avoid his puniſhments; and ſuch people are hired men and waged ſervants, and are not children. But the children of God ſerve their Father for love, &c.

19. Article. 19. We muſt love death, and more deſire to dye, than to fear death. Fol. 36.

Although our Nature be frail and full of imperfection, ſo that we do not as we ſhould, yet doing as we ought, and as we are led by the Scriptures to do, we ſhould not dread, but deſire rather to dye and be with Chriſt, as the place it ſelf doth well declare, which is this:

The place is ſound and perfect. We muſt love death, and more deſire to dye and to be with God, as did S. Paul, than to fear death. For Jeſus Chriſt died for us, to the intent that we ſhould not fear to dye, and he hath ſlain death, and deſtroyed the ſting of death, as writeth S. Paul, ſaying, O death where is thy ſting? Death is ſwallowed up in victory. And to the Philippians, Chriſt is to me life, and Death is to me advantage.

1 Cor. 15. Phil. 1.

20. Article. 20. God made us his Children and his Heirs, while we were his Enemies, and before we knew him Fol. 44.

I marvel what the Papiſts mean in the Regiſters to condemn this Article as an Hereſie, unleſs their purpoſe be utterly to impugn and gainſtand the Scripture, and the Writings of S. Paul, who in the Fifth Chapter to the Romans, and other his Epiſtles, importeth even the ſame Doctrine in all reſpects, declaring in formal words that we be made the Children and Heirs of God, and that we were reconciled unto him when we were his Enemies.

21. Article. 21. It were better never to have done good work, and ask mercy therefore, than to do good works, and think that for them God is bound to a man by promiſe. Fol. 48.

22. Article. 22. We can ſhew no more honour to God, than faith and truſt in him. Fol. 48.

What Hereſie can be drawn out of this place? The place out of the which theſe two Articles be gathered, is this: It were better for thee a thouſand fold that thou hadſt been a ſinner, and never had done good deed, and to acknowledge thine offences and evil life unto God, aſking mercy with a good heart, lamenting thy ſins, than to have done good works, and in them to put thy truſt, thinking that therefore God were bound to thee. There is nothing which (after the manner of ſpeaking) bindeth God, but firm and ſtedfaſt faith and truſt in him and his promiſes, &c. For we can ſhew unto God no greater honour, than to have faith and truſt in him: For whoſoever doth that, he confeſſeth that God is true, good, mighty, and merciful, &c.

23. Article. 23. Faith without good works, is not little or feeble faith, but it is no faith. Fol. 50.

24. Article. 24. Every man doth as much as he believeth Fol. 50.

The place out of which theſe two Articles be gathered, is this: If thy faith induce thee not to do good works, then haſt not thou the right faith, thou doeſt but only think that thou haſt it. For S. James ſaith, That faith without works is dead in it ſelf. He ſaith not that it is little or feeble, but that it is dead; and that which is dead, is not: therefore when thou art not moved by faith unto the love of God, and by the love of God unto good works, thou haſt no faith, but faith is dead in thee; for the Spirit of God, that by faith cometh into our hearts to ſtir up love, cannot be idle: Every one doth as much as he believeth, and loveth as much as he hopeth, as writeth S. John; He that hath this hope that he is the Son of God, purifieth himſelf as he is pure: He ſaith not, he that purifieth himſelf hath this hope, for the hope muſt come before, proceeding from the faith, as it behoveth that the Tree muſt firſt be good which muſt bring forth good fruit.

James 2. Hereſie picked out where none is.

25. Article. 25. We cannot be without motions of evil deſires; but we muſt mortifie them in reſiſting them. Fol. 52.

They which note this Article of Hereſie, may note themſelves rather to be like the Phariſee, Luke 18. who, fooliſhly flattering himſelf in the falſe opinion of his own righteouſneſs, was not ſubdued to the righteouſneſs, which ſtandeth before God by faith, and therefore went home to his Houſe leſs juſtified than the Publican. If the Scriptures condemn the heart of man to be crooked, even from his youth, Geneſ. 6. and alſo condemneth all the righteouſneſs of man to be like a filed cloth, and if S. Paul could find in his fleſh no good thing dwelling, but ſheweth a continual reſiſtance between the old man and the new, then muſt it follow, that theſe Phariſees, which condemn this Article of Hereſie, either carry no fleſh, and no old man about them to be reſiſted; or verily, ſay what they will, they cannot chooſe but be cumbred with evil motions for the inward man continually to fight againſt. The place of the Author ſufficiently defendeth it ſelf, as followeth.

No man can find any Hereſie in this place, except he be a Phariſee.

S. Paul biddeth us mortifie all our evil deſires and carnal luſts, as uncleanneſs, covetouſneſs, wrath, blaſphemy, detraction, pride, and other like Vices. And unto the Romans the ſixth, he ſaith, Let not ſin reign in your mortal bodies: that is to ſay, albeit we cannot live without the motion of ſuch evil deſires, yet we ſhall not ſuffer them to rule in us, but ſhall mortifie them in reſiſting them, &c.

Col. 3. The place of the Author.

26. Article. 26. All true Chriſtianity lieth in love of our Neighbours for God, and not in faſting, keeping of Holydays, watching, praying, and ſinging, and long prayers daily, and all day long hearing Maſs, running on Pilgrimage, &c. Fol. 52.

How Chriſtians may war lawfully.

As touching war, to be moved or ſtirred firſt of our parts againſt any People or Country upon any raſh cauſe, as Ambition, Malice, or Revenge, the Goſpel of Chriſt giveth us no ſuch Sword to fight withal. Notwithſtanding, for defence of Country and Subjects, the Magiſtrate, being invaded or provoked by other, may lawfully, and is bound to do his beſt; as the City of Marburgh did well in defending it ſelf againſt the Emperor, &c.

39. Article.

39. The Goſpel maketh all true Chriſtian men ſervants to all the World. Fol. 79.

Crafty coging in this Article.

He that compiled this Article, craftily to make the matter to appear more heinous, leaveth out the latter part which ſhould expound the other, that is, by the rule of Charity; for that the Author addeth withal. By which Rule of Charity, and not of Office and Duty, every Chriſtian man is bound one to help another, as Chriſt himſelf being Lord of all, yet of Charity was a ſervant to every man to do him good: Read the place of the ſum of the Scripture in the Page as in the Article it is aſſigned.

40. Article.

40. The Goſpel is written for all Perſons, Eſtates, Prince, Duke, Pope, Emperour. Fol. 112.

They which noted this Article for an Hereſie, I ſuppoſe could little tell either what God, or what the Scripture meaneth.

41. Article.

41. When Judges have hope that an evil doer will amend, they muſt be always merciful, as Chriſt was to the woman taken in Advoutry. The Temporal Law muſt obey the Goſpel; and them that we may amend by warning, we ſhall not correct by Juſtice. Fol. 113.

The purpoſe of the Book whence this Article is wreſted being well underſtood, intendeth not to bind Temporal Judges and Magiſtrates from due execution of good Laws, but putteth both them, and eſpecially Spiritual Judges, in remembrance by the example of Chriſt, to diſcern who be penitent Offenders, and who be otherwiſe; and where they ſee evident hope of earneſt repentance and amendment, if they be Eccleſiaſtical Judges, to ſpare them; if they be Civil Magiſtrates, yet to temper the rigour of the Law as much as conveniently they may, with merciful moderation, which the Greeks do call ἐπιείκεια.

AND thus much hitherto of theſe Hereſies and Articles collected by the Biſhops, and inſerted in their own Regiſters out of the Books above ſpecified. The names of the Biſhops and Collectors were theſe, Sir Thomas Moor Lord Chancellor, William Warham Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Tonſtall Biſhop of London, Stephen Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, Richard Sampſon Dean of the Chappel, Richard Woolman Maſter of the Requeſts, John Bell, Dr. Wilſon, with a great number more, as in the Regiſters doth appear. Ex Regiſt. Cant. & Lond.

I ſhall not need, I truſt, (gentle Reader) further here to ſtay with reciting more places, when theſe already rehearſed may ſuffice for a taſte and a trial for thee, ſufficient to note and conſider how falſly and moſt ſlanderouſly theſe Catholicks have depraved and miſreported the Books and Writings of good men; who might almoſt gather Hereſies as well of S. Johns Goſpel, and S. Pauls Epiſtles, as out of theſe places. Thus may we ſee, what cannot malice do, being ſet on miſchief? or what cannot the ſpirit of ſpite and cavilling find out, being inflamed with hatred, and blown with the billows of Ambition and Iniquity? And as they have done with theſe, the like parts they have and do practiſe ſtill againſt all other, whoſoever in defence of Truth dare touch never ſo little either the Popes Crown, or the Bellies of his Clergy; for theſe two ſores in no caſe they can abide to be touched. And hereof only cometh all this crying out, Hereſie, Hereſie, Blaſphemy, Error, and Schiſm. Although the Doctrine be never ſo ſound and perfect after the Scripture, yet if the Writer be not ſuch in all points (eſpecially in theſe two above touched) as will ſing after their tune, and dance after their Pipe, he is by and by an Heretick, by virtue of their Inquiſition. So did they with the Articles of the learned Earl Joannes Picus Mirandula. So did they alſo with J. Reculine or Capnion. So did they alſo with good John Colet here in England. Alſo with the ſpirit of lying and cavilling the Catholick Faculties of Lovain, Spain, and Paris, condemned the Works and Writings of Eraſmus, and many more. So full they are of Cenſures, Articles, Suſpicions, Offences, Inquiſitions. So captious they be in taking, ſo raſh in judging, ſo ſlanderous of report, ſo practiſed in depraving, miſconſtruing, and wreſting true meanings unto wrong purpoſes; briefly, ſo pregnant they be in finding Hereſies where none are, that either a man muſt ſay nothing, or ſerve their Devotion, or elſe he ſhall procure their diſpleaſure, that is, ſhall be deemed for an Heretick. Yea, and though no juſt cauſe of any Hereſie be miniſtred, yet where they once take diſliking, they will not ſtick ſometimes with falſe Accuſations to preſs him with matter which he never ſpake nor thought. If Luther had not ſtirred againſt the Popes Pardons and Authority, he had remained ſtill a white Son of the Mother Catholick Church, and all had been well done whatſoever he did. But becauſe he adventured to touch once the triple Crown, what Floods of Hereſies, Blaſphemies, and Articles were caſt out againſt him, enough to drown a whole World? what lies and forged crimes were invented againſt him?

Truth maliciouſly ſlandered and depraved of the Papiſts.

The Popes Crown and the Monks Bellies, two perillous things to be touched.

The Popes Church upholden with lying and cavilling.

Impudent lies upon M. Luther.

Here now cometh Staphylus and furious Surius, with their Fraternity, and ſay, That he learned his Divinity of the Devil. Then followeth another certain Chronographer, who in his flying Story reporteth moſt falſly, That Luther died of drunkenneſs. With like malice the ſaid Chronographer writeth alſo of Mr. Bucer, falſly affirming upon his Information, That he ſhould deny at his death Chriſt our Meſſias to be come: When not only Dr. Redman, which preached at his Burial, but alſo all Engliſh men, which knew the name of Bucer, did know it to be contrary.

M. Bucer moſt ſhamefully ſlandered.

Singleton maliciouſly ſlandered and condemned of Sedition.

So was it laid againſt one Singleton, Chaplain ſometime to Queen Anne Bullen, that he was the murtherer of Packington, and afterward, that he was a ſtirrer up of Sedition and Commotion; who alſo ſuffered as a Traytor for the ſame: Wherein very deed the true cauſe was for nothing elſe, but for preaching the Goſpel unto the People, whoſe purpoſe was ever ſo far from ſtirring Sedition, that he never once dreamed of any ſuch matter, as he himſelf declared and proteſted to one Richard Lante his Scholar, who is yet alive, and can teſtifie the truth hereof. But this is no new practiſe amongſt the Roman Biſhops; whereof enough hath been ſaid before in the Story of Sir John Oldcaſtle, and Sir Roger Acton, &c.

Merial falſly belied and miſreported of the Papiſts.

Another like practiſe of ſuch malicious ſlander we find alſo in one Merial a Bricklayer, whoſe Name, with his Abjuration, remaineth yet in the Regiſters of the Biſhop of London.

The Story is this, and not unworthy to be remembred. In the Year of our Lord 1534. which was about the firſt beginning of Queen Anne Bullen, at what time Purgatory and ſuch Trumpery began to grow in contempt; Stokeſley Biſhop of London made a Sermon in the Shrouds upon the Sunday before May-day: Where he preaching in the commendation of the virtue of Maſſes, declared to the People that for a little coſt, if they procured Maſſes to be ſaid, Wives might deliver their Husbands, and Husbands their Wives out of the bitter pains of Purgatory. At his Sermon, beſides many other, was Thomas Merial, a zealous favourer of Gods Word; who, being in the Watch on May-Even, made a relation of theſe words of the Biſhop unto the Company about him, amongſt whom then was one John Twyford, a furious Papiſt, and who had the ſame time the ſetting up of the Stakes in Smithfield, whereat the good Saints of God were burned.

Bp. Stokeſleys Sermons in the Shrouds.

Twiford the common Tormentor of the Martyrs that ſuffered in Smithfield.

This Twiford, which then kept a Tavern, and had an old grudge againſt the ſaid Merial for ſtriking his Boy, hearing theſe words, allured home to his houſe certain Perſons, to the number of ten, whoſe names were theſe; Blackwell, Laurence Wilſon, Thomas Clark, John Duffield, William Kenningham, Thomas Hoſier, Worme a Cutler, Allen Riſe, with another that was the tenth. Beſides theſe he procured alſo ſecretly Mr. Chambers Clerk, whoſe name was Bright. And when he had craftily overcome them with Wine, and made them to report what words he liſted, and which they knew not themſelves, the Clerk by and by received the ſame in writing. Whereupon this Article was gathered againſt

Meriall, that he ſhould hold and affirm, That the Paſſion of Chriſt doth not help them which came after him, but only them which were in Limbo before: and alſo that he ſhould ſay, That his Wife was as good as our Lady. Upon this Writing of the Notary, he was immediately brought to Biſhop Stokeſley, and there by the depoſition of theſe ten falſe Witneſſes wrongfully accuſed, and alſo for the ſame ſhould have been condemned, had not Dr. Barret the ſame time bid him ſpeak one word (which he knew not) as the Sentence was in reading, whereby the Condemnation was ſtayed, and he put to do open Penance, and to bear a Fagot. Notwithſtanding the ſaid Meriall ſware before the Biſhop that he never ſpake nor meant any ſuch words as there was ſaid unto him, but only recited the words of the Biſhops Sermon, reporting the ſame in the Perſon of the Biſhop, and not his own. Which alſo was teſtified to be true by the Oaths of three other, to wit, William Tompſon, Gregory Newman, and William Wit, who being in the foreſaid Watch the ſame time, did take upon their Oath before the Biſhop, that his words were no other, but as is above declared. Which three Witneſſes at the ſecond Edition hereof were alſo living, with the Wife of the foreſaid Meriall, who would then alſo be ſworn that the ſame was true: Whereas contrary, the other ten perſons be all gone, and none of them all remaining. Of whom moreover, the moſt of all the ſaid ten came to a miſerable end; whereas the other three which teſtified the truth with Meriall, being living at the ſecond Edition hereof, did ſee the end of all the other. And as for Twyford, which was the Executioner of Frith, Bayfield, Bainham, Teukesbury, Lambert, and other good men, he died rotting above the ground, that none could abide him, and ſo came to a wretched end. Ex teſtim. uxoris, Meriall, W. Tomſon, Gregorij Newman, W. Wit, &c.

False accuſation.

Meriall wrongfully accuſed and put to Penance.

Gods juſt puniſhment upon a cruel Perſecutor.

Of this malicious and perverſe dealing of theſe men contrary to all truth and honeſty, in defaming them for Hereticks which indeed are none, and with opprobrious railing to ſlander their Cauſe, which is nothing elſe but the ſimple truth of Chriſts Goſpel, who liſteth to ſearch further (if theſe examples hitherto recited do not ſuffice) let him read the Story of Merindoll and Angrongne. Let him conſider the furious Bull of Pope Martin; the like ſlanderous Bull alſo of Pope Leo the Tenth, with the Edict of Charles the Emperour againſt Luther. Alſo let him ſurvey the railing Stories of Surius the Monk of Colen, the Book of Oſius, of Lindus, the Chronology of Genebrardus, the Story of Cochleus againſt the Huſſits and the Lutherans, with the Preface of Conradus Brunus the Lawyer prefixed before the ſame, wherein he moſt falſly and untruly railing againſt theſe Proteſtants, whom he calleth Hereticks, chargeth them to be blaſphemers of God, contemners of God and Men, Churchrobbers, cruel, falſe liers, crafty deceivers, unfaithful, promiſe-breakers, diſturbers of publick peace and tranquillity, corrupters and ſubverters of Commonweals, and all elſe that naught is.

Examples of falſe accuſations. Acts 21. Rom. 3.

In much like ſort was Socrates accuſed of his Country-men for a corrupter of the youth, whom Plato notwithſtanding defendeth. Ariſtides the juſt lacked not his unjuſt Accuſers. Was it not objected unto S. Paul, That he was a ſubverter of the Law of Moſes, and that we might do evil that good might come thereof? How was it laid to the Chriſtian Martyrs in the Primitive Church for worſhipping of an Aſſes Head, and for ſacrificing of Infants. And to come more near to theſe our latter days, you heard likewiſe how falſly the Chriſtian Congregation of the Frenchmen gathered together in the night at Paris, to celebrate the holy Communion, were accuſed of filthy commixtion of men and women together, and the King the ſame time, Henry the Second, was made to believe that Beds with Pillows and Mats were found there in the floor where they lay together; whereupon the ſame time divers were condemned to the fire, and burned. Finally, what Innocency is ſo pure, or Truth ſo perfect, which can be void of theſe ſlanders and criminations, when alſo our Saviour Chriſt himſelf was noted for a Wine drinker, and a common haunter of the Publicans, &c.

No truth ſafe from falſe Detraction.

Even ſo likewiſe it pleaſeth our Lord and Saviour Chriſt to keep and to exerciſe his Church under the like kind of Adverſaries now reigning in the Church, who under the name of the Church will needs maintain a portly State and Kingdom in this World; and becauſe they cannot uphold their Cauſe by plain Scripture and the Word of God, they bear it out with facing, railing, and ſlandering, making Princes and the ſimple People believe, that all be Hereticks, Schiſmaticks, Blaſphemers, Rebels, and Subverters of all Authority and Commonweals, whoſoever dare reply with any Scripture againſt their doings.

It is written of Nero, that when he himſelf had burnt the City of Rome ſix days and ſeven nights, he made open Proclamations that the innocent Chriſtians had ſet the City on fire, to ſtir the People againſt them, whereby he might burn and deſtroy them as Rebels and Traitors.

Suetonius in Nerone.

Not much unlike ſeemeth the dealing of theſe religious Catholicks, who when they be the true Hereticks themſelves, and have burnt and deſtroyed the Church of Chriſt, make out their Exclamations, Bulls, Briefs, Articles, Books, Cenſures, Letters, and Edicts againſt the poor Lutherans, to make the People believe, that they be the Hereticks, Schiſmaticks, Diſturbers of the whole World. Who if they could prove them, as they reprove them to be Hereticks, they were worthy to be heard. But now they cry out upon them Hereticks, and can prove no Hereſie; they accuſe them of Error, and can prove no Error; they call them Schiſmaticks, and what Church ſince the World ſtood, hath been the Mother of ſo many Schiſms as the Mother-Church of Rome? they charge them with diſſention and rebellion; and what diſſention can be greater than to diſſent from the Scripture and Word of God? Or what rebellion is like, as to rebel againſt the Son of God, and againſt the will of his eternal Teſtament? They are diſturbers, they ſay, of Peace and Publick Authority; which is as true, as that the Chriſtians ſet the City of Rome on fire. What Doctrine did ever attribute ſo much to Publick Authority of Magiſtrates, as do the Proteſtants? or who ever attributed leſs to Magiſtrates, or depoſed more Dukes, Kings, and Emperours, than the Papiſts? They that ſay that the Biſhop of Rome is no more but the Biſhop of Rome, and ought to wear no Crown, is not by and by a rebel againſt his King and Magiſtrates, but rather a maintainer of their Authority; which indeed the Biſhop of Rome cannot abide. Briefly, wilt thou ſee whether be the greater Hereticks, the Proteſtants or the Papiſts? Let us try it by a meaſure, and let this meaſure be the glory only of the Son of God, which cannot fail. Now judge, I beſeech thee, whoſoever knoweſt the Doctrine of them both, whether of theſe two do aſcribe more or leſs to the Majeſty of Chriſt Jeſus our King and Lord; the Proteſtants which admit none other Head of the Church, nor Juſtifier of our Souls, nor forgiver of our Sins, nor Advocate to his Father, but him alone, or elſe the Papiſts which can abide none of theſe Articles, but condemn the ſame for Hereſie. Which being ſo (as they themſelves will not deny) now judge, good Reader, who hath ſet the City of Rome on fire, Nero, or elſe the Chriſtians.

Papiſts accuſe the Proteſtants of Hereſie, and they be the Hereticks themſelves.

A meaſure between the Proteſtants and the Papiſts to try whether of them two are the greater Hereticks. Compariſon between the Doctrine of the Papiſts and of the Proteſtants.

But to return again to the purpoſe of our former matter, which was to ſhew forth the Proclamation of the Biſhops, for the aboliſhing of Engliſh Books above rehearſed, as being corrupt and full of Hereſie, which notwithſtanding we have declared to contain no Hereſie, but ſound and wholſome Doctrine, according to the perfect Word and Scripture of God.

Here now when the Prelats of the Popes ſide had procured this Edict and Proclamation aforeſaid, for the condemnation of all ſuch Engliſh Books, printed or unprinted, which made againſt their advantage, they triumphed not a little, weening they had made a great hand againſt the Goſpel for ever to riſe again, and that they had eſtabliſhed their Kingdom for ever, as indeed to all mens thinking it might ſeem no leſs. For who would have thought, after ſo ſtreight, ſo preciſe and ſo ſolemn a Proclamation, ſet forth and armed with the Kings terrible Authority; alſo after the cruel execution of Anne Askew, Lacels, and the reſt: Item, After the buſie ſearching moreover, and names taking of many other, of whom ſome were chaſed away, ſome apprehended and laid up, divers in preſent peril, and expectation of their attachment, who would have thought (I ſay) otherotherwiſe poſſible, but that the Goſpel muſt needs have an overthrow? ſeeing what ſure work the Papiſts here had made, in ſetting up their ſide, and throwing down the contrary.

Gods power worketh commonly againſt mans preſumption.

But it is no new thing with the Lord, to ſhew his power againſt mans preſumption, who when he counteth himſelf moſt ſure, then is he furtheſt off, and when he ſuppoſeth to have done all, then is he new to begin again. So was it in the Primitive Church before Conſtantinus time, that when Nero, Domitianus, Marentius, Decius, and other Emperours impugning the Goſpel and profeſſion of Chriſt, did not only conſtitute Laws and Proclamations againſt the Chriſtians, but alſo did ingrave the ſame Laws in Tables of Braſs, minding to make all things firm for ever and a day; yet we ſee, how with a little turning of Gods hand, all their puiſſant deviſes, and braſen Laws turned all to wind and duſt. So little doth it avail for man to wreſtle againſt the Lord and his proceedings. Howſoever mans building is mortal and ruinous, of brittle brick, and mouldring ſtones; yet that which the Lord taketh in hand to build, neither can time waſte, nor man pluck down. What God ſetteth up, there is neither power nor ſtriving to the contrary. What he intendeth, ſtandeth; what he bleſſeth that prevaileth. And yet mans unquiet preſumption will not ceaſe ſtill to erect up Towers of Babel againſt the Lord, which the higher they are builded up, fall with the greater ruine. For what can ſtand, that ſtandeth not with the Lord? Which thing as in example of all ages is to be ſeen; ſo in this late Proclamation deviſed by the Biſhops, is in like manner exemplified.

Towers of Babel againſt the Lord.

Mans device againſt the Lord overthrown.

The which Proclamation though it was ſore and terrible for the time, yet not long after, by reaſon of the Kings death (whom the Lord ſhortly thereupon took to his mercy) it made at length but a Caſtle come down. So that where the Prelates thought to make their Jubile, it turned them to the Threnes of Jeremy. Such be the admirable workings of the Lord of Hoſts, whoſe Name be ſanctified for ever.

This do I not infer for any other purpoſe, but only for the works of the Lord to be ſeen; premoniſhing thee (good Reader) withal, that as touching the King (who in this Proclamation had nothing but the Name only) here is nothing ſpoken but to his laud and praiſe. Who, of his own nature and diſpoſition, was ſo inclinable and forward in all things vertuous and commendable, that the like enterpriſe of redreſs of Religion hath not lightly been ſeen in any other Prince Chriſtened. As in aboliſhing the ſtout and almoſt invincible Authority of the Pope, in ſuppreſſing Monaſteries, in repreſſing cuſtom of Idolatry and Pilgrimage, &c. Which enterpriſes as never King of England did accompliſh (though ſome began to attempt them) before him; ſo yet to this day we ſee but few in other Realms dare follow the ſame.

The praiſe of K. Henry 8.

If Princes have always their Councel about them, that is but a common thing. If ſometimes they have evil Counſel miniſtred, that I take to be the fault rather of ſuch as are are about them, than of Princes themſelves. So long as Queen Anne, Thomas Cromwel, Biſhop Cranmer, Maſter Doctor Buts, with ſuch like were about him, and could prevail with him, what Organ of Chriſts Glory did more good in the Church than he? as is apparent by ſuch Monuments, Inſtruments, and Acts ſet forth by him, in ſetting up the Bible in the Church, in exploding the Pope with his vile Pardons, in removing divers Superſtitious Ceremonies, in bringing into order the inordinate Orders of Friers and Sects, in putting Chantery Prieſts to their penſions, in permitting white meat in Lent, in deſtroying pilgrimage-worſhip, in abrogating idle and ſuperfluous holy days, both by Act publick, and alſo by private Letters ſent to Boner tending to this effect.

Much ſuperſtition purged by K. Henry.

By the King.

The Kings Letter to Boner.

RIght Reverend Father in God, right truſty and well beloved, we greet you well. And whereas conſidering the manifold inconveniences which have enſued, and daily do enſue to our Subjects by the great ſuperfluity of Holy-days, we have by [the aſſents and conſents of all you the Biſhops and other notable perſonages of the Clergy of this our Realm, in full congregation and aſſembly had for that purpoſe, abrogated and aboliſhed ſuch as be neither Canonical, nor meet to be ſuffered in a Commonwealth, for the manifold inconveniences which do enſue of the ſame, as is rehearſed, and to the intent our determination therein may be duly obſerved and accompliſhed, we have thought convenient to command you immediately upon the receit hereof, to addreſs your commandments in our Name to all the Curates, Religious Houſes, and Colledges within your Dioceſs, with a copy of the Act made for the Abrogation of the holy days aforeſaid a tranſumpt whereof ye ſhall receive herewith, commanding them and every of them, in no wiſe, either in the Church or otherwiſe, to indict or ſpeak of any of the ſaid days and feaſts aboliſhed, whereby the people might take occaſion either to murmure, or to contemn the order taken therein, and to continue in their accuſtomed idleneſs, the ſame notwithſtanding; but to paſs over the ſame with ſuch ſecret ſilence, as they may have like abrogattion by diſuſe, as they have already by our Authority in Convocation. And foraſmuch as the time of harveſt now approacheth, our pleaſure is ye ſhall with ſuch diligence and dexterity put this matter in execution, as it may immediately take place for the benefit of our Subjects at this time accordingly without failing, as ye will anſwer unto us for the contrary.

Abrogation of holy days.

Given under our Signet, at our Monaſtery of Chertеſey, the eleventh day of Auguſt.

Thus while good Counſel was about him, and could be heard, he did much good. So again when ſiniſter and wicked Counſel under ſubtil and crafty pretences had gotten once the foot in, thruſting truth and verity out of the Princes ears, how much Religion and all good things went proſperouſly forward before, ſo much on the contrary ſide all revolted backward again. Whereupon proceeded this Proclamation above mentioned, concerning the aboliſhing and burning of Engliſh Books.

K. Henry according as his Counſel was about him, ſo was he led.

Which Proclamation bearing the Name of the Kings Majeſty, but being the very deed of the Popiſh Biſhops, no doubt had done much hurt in the Church among the Godly ſort, bringing them either into great danger, or elſe keeping them in much blindneſs, had not the ſhortneſs of the Kings days ſtopped the malignant purpoſes of the foreſaid Prelates, cauſing the King to leave that by death unto the people, which by his life he would not grant. For within four Months after, the Proclamation coming out in Auguſt, he deceaſed in the beginning of January, in the eight and thirtieth year of his Reign, Anno 1547. leaving behind him three Children, who ſucceeded him in his Kingdom, King Edward, Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth; of whom it remaineth now to proſecute (by the permiſſion and ſufferance of Chriſt our high Lord and Prince) in the proceſs of this hiſtory, according as the order of their ſucceſſion, and Acts done by them in the Church ſhall require: after that firſt I ſhall have proſecuted certain other matters by the way, according to my promiſe here to be inſerted.

To proceed therefore in the Hiſtory of theſe Scotland matters, next after the mention of David Stratton and Maſter Nicolas Gurlay, with whom we ended before, the order of time would require next to infer the memory of Sir John Borthwike, Knight, commonly called Captain Borthwike. Who being accuſed of Hereſie, as the Papiſts call it, and cited therefore, Anno 1540. and not appearing, and eſcaping out into other Countries, was condemned for the ſame being abſent, by the ſentence of David Beaton, Archbiſhop of Saint Andrews, and other Prelates of Scotland, and all his goods confiſcate, and his Picture at laſt burned in the open market place. Whoſe ſtory, with his Articles objected againſt him, and his confutations of the ſame, here enſueth in Proceſs under expreſſed, as followeth.

The Act or Proceſs or certain Articles againſt Sir John Borthwike, Knight, in Scotland, with the anſwer and confutation of the ſaid Borthwike; whoſe Preface to the Reader here followeth.

Captain Borthwike.

BY the help of a certain friend of mine there came certain Articles unto my hand, for the which the Scotiſh Cardinal, and ſuch other like of his Sect and Affinity did condemn me as an Heretick. And forſomuch as this condemnation ſhould not lack his Cloak or defence, they gathered together a great number of witneſſes, where as beſides the bare Names of the witneſſes they alledged none other proof at all. Wherefore I thought good to beſtow ſome labour in refelling thoſe Articles which they could not prove, partly that I might take away from all true Chriſtians the occaſion of all evil ſuſpition, as though that I being vanquiſhed or overthrown by their threatnings would deny Chriſt; and partly that their errors being thereby made manifeſt, they would even for very ſhame repent, or elſe hereafter the leſs abuſe the furor or madneſs of ſuch witneſſes to ſhed Blood. Therefore I will firſt confirm by evident teſtimonies of the Scriptures thoſe things which in times paſt I have taught, and afterward I will refell their vain ſophiſtication, whereby they go about to ſubvert the truth of God.

SIr John Borthwike Knight, commonly called Captain Borthwike, being accuſed, ſuſpected, ſlandered, and convict by witneſſes, without all doubt of greater eſtimation than he himſelf, in the year of our Lord, 1540. the eight and twentieth day of May, in the Cloiſter of S. Andrews in the preſence of the moſt reverend Fathers, Gawine Archbiſhop of Glaſquine, Chancellor of Scotland, William Biſhop of Aburdin, Henry of Candicatia, John Biſhop of Brecknock, and William of Dunbar Biſhop, Andrew of Melrowes, George of Dunerveling, John of Paſlet, John of Londroſe, Robert of Rillos and William of Rulroſe Abbots, Mancolalyne of Quiterne and John of Petinuaim Priors, Maſter Alexander Kalfour Vicar of Kitman, Rector of Law, official of Saint Andrews, John Winton Subprior, John Anand and Thomas Eminghame, Canons of Saint Andrews, and Maſter John Major and Peter Capel and Batchelours of Divinity and Doctors, Martin Ballfour Bachelour of Divinity, and of his fellow Priour of the Friers Auguſtines of the ſame City, John Tulidaffe, Warden of the Friers Minors, and John Patterſon of the ſame Covent; and alſo in the preſence of the moſt noble, mighty and honourable Lords, George of Huntelo, James of Arrain, William Marſhall, William of Montros, Earles, Malcolm Lord of Flemming, Chamberlain of Scotland, John Lord of Linſey, John Lord of Erskine, George Lord of Seton, James Hamelton of Finwart, Walter Lord of Saint-John, Maſter James of Colinton Clerk to the Kings Regiſter, with divers other Lords, Barons, and honeſt perſons, being called and deſired together for witneſſes, that he did hold, publiſh and openly teach theſe errors following.

The firſt Article.

That our holy Father the Pope, as Chriſts Vicar hath not, neither can exerciſe greater Authority over Chriſtians here on Earth, than any other Biſhop or Prelate.

Borthwike.

Theſe holy ones do magnifie their Lord by like title as common Thieves and Robbers are accuſtomed to prefer the Captains and Ringleaders of their Robberies and Miſchiefs, calling them in every place the moſt honeſt and good men, whereas likewiſe it is evident that in the whole World there is no man more given to riot, which more greedily doth ſeek after all kind of delicateneſs and wantonneſs, and finally aboundeth with all kind of vice, as Treaſon, Murther, Rapine, and all kind of ſuch evils. Furthermore, whereas they affirm him to be the Vicar of Chriſt here in Earth, it ſhall be eaſily convinced, when as it ſhall be made manifeſt, that he neither hath nor can exerciſe more Power or Authority over Chriſtians than any other Biſhop or Prelate. For unto that Office of being Vicar they refer that great Authority the which they do ſo greatly boaſt and brag of, which being taken away, the Office of Vicar doth alſo fall and decay. But now to attempt the matter, I will firſt demand of the maintainers of thir preheminency and Authority, whereupon they will ground the ſame? I know that they will anſwer unto me that Peter had power and Authority over the other Apoſtles, and conſequently over the Univerſal Church, the which power by ſucceſſion is tranſlated unto the Biſhops of Rome. But how unſhamefaſtly do they lye herein, any may eaſily perceive which hath but any ſmall ſpark of Judgment in him, when as he ſhall hear the Teſtimonies of the Scriptures, which we will alledge to confirm this our opinion. For Peter, in the fifteenth of the Acts, in the Councel doth declare what is to be done, and admoniſheth us what of neceſſity we ought to do. And he there did alſo hear other ſpeak, and did not only give them place to ſay their minds, but alſo permit and receive their judgment; and whereas they decreed, he followed and obeyed the ſame. Is this then to have power over others? Furthermore, whereas in his firſt Epiſtle he writeth unto Biſhops and Paſtors, he doth not command them as a Superiour or head over them, by Power and Authority, but maketh them his fellow companions, and gently exhorteth them as is accuſtomed to be done between equals of degree; for theſe are his words: I beſeech and deſire the Biſhops and Paſtors which are amongſt you, for ſo much as I my ſelf am alſo a Biſhop, and a witneſs of the afflictions of Chriſt, and alſo a partaker of the glory which ſhall be revealed, that they diligently feed the Flock of Chriſt, which is committed unto them. Why then do they ſo challenge unto them the authority of Peter, which he never acknowledged in himſelf? Truly I do not doubt, but if that Peter were here preſent, he would with like ſeverity rebuke their folly and madneſs, as Moſes in times paſt did unto Joſua, which burned with too earneſt a zeal towards him. I doubt not but that many in this fained Authority of Peter do ſeek out more vain helps to maintain and uphold the Tyranny of Popes, rather than to make him ruler and governor over all other. For whereas in the eight Chapter of the Acts he is commanded by his fellows to go with John into Samaria, he did not refuſe ſo to do. Inſomuch then as the Apoſtles do ſend him, they declare thereby, that they do not count him as their Head and Superiour, and in that he doth obey them, and taketh upon him the Office or Miniſtry committed unto him, he confeſſeth thereby that he hath a ſociety and fellowſhip with them, but no rule or impery over them, as he writeth in his Epiſtle. But if none of theſe examples were evident or manifeſt, the only Epiſtle to the Galatians were ſufficient to put us out of all doubt: where Saint Paul, almoſt throughout two whole Chapters, doth nothing elſe but declare and affirm himſelf to be equal unto Peter, in the honour or dignity of the Apoſtleſhip. For firſt of all he rehearſeth how he went up to Jeruſalem unto Peter, not to the intent to profeſs any homage and ſubjection unto him, but only to witneſs with a common conſent and agreement unto all men the Doctrine which they taught; and that Peter did require no ſuch thing at his hand, but gave unto him the right ſide or upper hand of the fellowſhip, that they might joyntly together labor in the Vineyard of the Lord; Moreover, that he had no leſs favour vour and Grace among the Gentiles, than Peter had amongſt the Jews; and finally, when as Peter did not faithfully execute his Office and Miniſtry, he was by him rebuked, and Peter became obedient to his correction. All theſe things do evidently prove, that there was equality between Paul and Peter, and alſo that Peter had no more power over the reſidue of the Apoſtles, than he had over Paul. The which thing S. Paul even of purpoſe doth intreat of, leſt that any man ſhould preferr Peter or John before him in the Office of Apoſtleſhip, which were but his Companions, and not Lords over one another: whereupon theſe places of Scripture work this effect, that I cannot acknowledge Peter to be Superior or Head over other Apoſtles, neither the Pope over other Biſhops. But I acknowledge and confeſs Chriſt to be the only Head of the Church, the Foundation and high Prieſt thereof, the which with one Oblation hath made perfect for evermore all thoſe which are ſanctified. And I boldly do affirm and ſay with Saint Gregory, that whoſoever calleth himſelf, or deſireth to be named or called the Head or Univerſal Prieſt or Biſhop, in that his pride he is the forerider or predeceſſor of Antichriſt; forſomuch as through his pride he doth exalt himſelf above all others. Furthermore, whereas they alledge out of the old Law, the high Prieſthood and the Supream Judgment, which God did inſtitute and ordain at Jeruſalem; I anſwer thereunto, that Chriſt was that high Biſhop, unto whom the right and title of Prieſthood is now tranſported and referred. Neither is there any man ſo impudent, which will take upon him to ſucceed in the place or degree of his Honour; forſomuch as this Prieſthood doth not conſiſt only in learning, but in the propitiation and mercy of God, which Chriſt hath fulfilled by his Death, and in the Interceſſion, by the which he doth now intreat for us unto his Father.

Peter hath ſociety with the Apoſtles, but no rule over the Apoſtles.

Paul equal with Peter.

Chriſt the only head of the Church.

The high Prieſthood in the old Law, doth not prove Peters or the Popes Supremacy.

The place of Matth. Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock Matth. 16. expounded Cyprian.

Whereas alſo they do alledge out of the 16. Chapter of Matthew, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock, &c. If they do think that this was particularly ſpoken unto Peter; Saint Cyprian, and Saint Auguſtine ſhall ſufficiently anſwer them, that Chriſt did it not for this purpoſe, to prefer one man above all the reſidue, but that thereby he might commend and ſet forth the Unity of the Church, for ſo ſaith S. Cyprian, In the perſon of one man God gave unto them all the Keyes, that he might thereby ſignifie the Unity of them all. For even as Peter was, even the very ſame were all the reſidue, being indued with like fellowſhip of honor and dignity. But it was convenient that it ſhould take his original of one, that the Church of God might be manifeſted to be one only. Saint Auguſtines words are theſe, If the myſtery of the Church were not in Peter, the Lord would not have ſaid unto him, I will give unto thee the Keyes of the Kingdom of Heaven. If this were ſpoken unto Peter, the Church hath them not. If the Church have them, then Peter when he received the Keyes, did figurate the whole Church. Again, when as they were all demanded and asked, only Peter anſwered, Thou art Chriſt. Then was it ſaid unto him, I will give unto thee the Keyes, as though that he alone had received the power of binding and looſing; for like as he alone ſpake that for them all, ſo he, as it were, bearing the perſon of that Unity, received the ſame with them all. Therefore for them all, becauſe he is united unto them all; Another one Argument they do gather upon the words which Chriſt ſpake unto Peter, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church. The which words are not found to be ſpoken unto any other of the Apoſtles. The which Argument ſhall eaſily be diſſolved, if we did underſtand and know why Chriſt did give Peter that Name, which otherwiſe was called Simon. In the firſt Chapter of Saint John, Chriſt ſpeaketh thus unto him, Thou ſhalt be called Cephas. The which by interpretation ſignifieth Peter, in that point having reſpect unto the conſtant confeſſion of Chriſt, which he had made, like as God changed the Name of Abraham, who at firſt was called Abram, becauſe he ſhould be a Father of many Nations: then even as Abraham took his Name of the multitude, which ſhould come forth of his ſeed, ſo likewiſe Peter took his Name of the conſtant confeſſion of Chriſt, which indeed is the true Rock whereupon the Church is builded, and not Peter himſelf; no otherwiſe than Abraham, which was not the multitude it ſelf, whereof he took his Name. Beſides this, the Church ſhould be ſtayed, or builded upon over weak a foundation, if it ſhould have Peter for the ground or Foundation thereof, who being amazed and overcome with the words of a little wench, did ſo inſtantly deny Chriſt. Now therefore I think there is no man but he doth underſtand how theſe Romiſh builders do wreſt the Scriptures hither and thither, and like unto the rule or ſquare, do apply them according to their wills, to what end and uſe they themſelves think good. Furthermore in that they do alledge out of the twentieth Chapter of John, Feed my Sheep, it is an overchildiſh Argument; for to Feed is not to bear rule and Dominion over the whole Church. Beſides all this, as Peter had received Commandment of the Lord, ſo doth he exhort all other Biſhops to feed their Flock in his firſt Epiſtle and fifth Chapter. Hereby a man may gather by theſe words of Chriſt, that either there was no Authority given unto Peter more than unto others, or elſe that Peter did equally communicate that Right and Authority, which he had received, unto others, and did not reſerve it unto himſelf after his death, to be tranſported unto the Biſhops of Rome. As for ſuch Reaſons as they do alledge which are not gathered and taken out of holy Scriptures, I paſs them over, leſt I might ſeem to contend with ſhadows.

The ſecond Article.

That Indulgences and Pardons, granted by our Supream Head the Pope, are of no force, ſtrength, or effect, but tend only to the abuſe of the people and the deceiving of their Souls.

Borthwike.

It ſhall be evidently declared, that Indulgences and Pardons are of none effect, after that I have firſt of all taught what they do call Indulgences or Pardons. They ſay, they are the Treaſure of the Church, that is to ſay, the merits of Chriſt, of the Saints, Apoſtles and Martyrs, which they impudently affirm to have performed and merited more at Gods hand, at the time of their death, than was neceſſary or needful for the m; and that of the abundance of their merits there did ſo much ſuperabound, which was not only ſufficient for themſelves, but alſo might redound to the help of others: And becauſe ſo great a goodneſs ſhould not be ſuperfluous or in vain, they affirm and teach that their Blood was mixed and joyned with the Blood of Chriſt; and of them both the Treaſure of the Church was compound and made for the remiſſion and ſatisfaction of Sins. How cunning and notable Cooks theſe are, which can make a confection of ſo many ſundry herbs. Furthermore, they do fain the cuſtody and keeping of this Treaſure to be committed wholly to the Biſhop of Rome, in whoſe power conſiſteth the diſpenſation of ſo great Treaſures, that either by himſelf he may give or grant, or otherwiſe give power unto other to give the ſame. And hereupon riſe the plenary Indulgences and Pardons granted by the Pope for certain years, by Cardinals for an hundred days, by Biſhops for forty days. This is the judgment and opinion which they hold of the Indulgences. But I pray you, who taught thoſe Saints to work or deſerve for other, but only Satan, who would utterly have the merits of Chriſt extinguiſhed and blotted out, which he knoweth to be the only remedy of Salvation? For if the Scripture doth teach us that no man of himſelf can deſerve or work their Salvation, how did the Saints then work or merit for others? It is manifeſt that Chriſt ſaith in the ſeventeenth of Luke, When ye have done all that which is commanded you to do, yet, ſaith he, ye are unprofitable ſervants. Beſides this, all that which may be deſerved or merited in the righteouſneſs of man, in the threeſcore and fourth Chapter of Eſay, is compared unto the Garment menſtruous and defiled, to be caſt out.

Indulgences to be of no effect.

The treaſure of the Church as Popeholders take it:

Lord Treaſurer of the Church, Papiſts hold to be the Pope.

No man of himſelf can work his own Salvation.

There are almoſt infinite places in the Scripture, wherein mans power is ſo extenuate, and the corruption and frowardneſs of our nature ſo made manifeſt, that even in the beſt and moſt perfect works there lacketh not imperfection. Notwithſtanding the parable of the ten Virgins,

The Parable of the ten Virgins expounded.

Virgins, written in the five and twentieth Chapter of Matthew, ought to put us out of all controverſie and doubt: There Chriſt deſcribeth two kinds of men, the one kind of holy men which obſerve and keep the inward righteouſneſs of the heart, as the oil of faith; the other ſort is of ſuch which having no mind of their oil, are anſwered by them which are wiſe, No, leſt that there be not ſufficient for you and for us, but go you rather to them which do ſell, and buy for your ſelves: In the which place it is manifeſtly declared how vainly the ſecond ſort of men do flie to the patronage of the Elect, by whoſe merits they think to be ſaved.

Now let us weigh and conſider upon what places of Scripture they build or eſtabliſh their feigned invention of Pardons; they alledge the ſaying of S. Paul to the Coloſſians, I ſupply or fulfill the afflictions of Chriſt, whichwere wanting in my fleſh, for his Body which is the Church. But Paul in this place doth not refer that defect or ſupplement to any work of Redemption, Expiation, or Satisfaction, but to thoſe Afflictions, by the which the Members of Chriſt, that is to ſay, all faithful ſhould be afflicted, ſo long as they live in the fleſh; wherefore he ſaith, that this doth yet remain of the Paſſions of Chriſt, that thoſe Afflictions which once he ſuffered in his own Body, he now daily ſuffereth in his Members. For Chriſt hath vouchſafed to honour us with this honour, that he doth impute and call our Afflictions to be his. And whereas S. Paul doth add this word for the Church, he doth not underſtand thereby for their Redemption, Reconciliation, Satisfaction, or Expiation of the Church, but for the edifying and the profitting of the ſame, as in the ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy, he ſaith, That for the Elect ſake he ſuffered all theſe things that they might obtain ſalvation. But to the intent no man ſhould think that Salvation to depend upon thoſe things which he himſelf had ſuffered, he added further, The which is in Chriſt Jeſus. As touching the reaſon that the Blood of the Martyrs is not ſhed in vain without fruit or profit, and therefore ought to be conferred to the common utility and profit of the Church; I anſwer that the profit and fruit thereof is abundant to glorifie God by their death, to ſubſcribe and bear witneſs unto the truth by their blood, and by the contempt of this preſent life to witneſs, that he doth ſeek after a better life by his conſtancy and ſtedfaſtneſs, to confirm and eſtabliſh the faith of the Church, and ſubdue and vanquiſh the Enemy.

Another Objection diſſolved.

The third Article.

That the Pope is an open uſer of Simony, daily ſelling the gifts of the Spiritualties, and that it is lawful for all Biſhops to be coupled and joyned in Matrimony.

Borthwike.

This Article hath his ſeveral parts, for thoſe things which we have ſpoken or anſwered unto the Article before-written, do ſufficiently declare, that the Pope is not only a uſer of Simony, but alſo a notable Deceiver, which ſelleth ſuch kind of Merchandze as can in no place help or prevail; forſomuch as his Pardons are nothing leſs then ſuch as he feigneth them to be. Doth he not then ſhew himſelf a manifeſt Deceiver, when as he maketh Fairs and Markets of them? But to the intent I will not ſeem in this behalf vainly to labour or travel, I will paſs unto the ſecond part, whereas I do ſay, that it is not only done againſt the Word of God, but alſo againſt Equity and Juſtice, to forbid Prieſts to marry, forſomuch as it is not lawful for any man by any means to forbid that thing which the Lord hath left at liberty. For S. Paul, in the Thirteenth Chapter unto the Hebrews, declareth that Matrimony is lawful for all men, ſaying, That Marriage and the undefiled Bed, or Chamber, is honorable amongſt all men. And in the firſt to the Corinthians and ſeventh Chapter, he ſaith, For avoiding of whoredom, let every man have a wife of his own. But I know what theſe obſtinate and ſtiff-necked will anſwer unto me, That the ſame is ſpoken and meant of others, and not of Prieſts. But what will they anſwer unto me, as touching that which is written in the firſt to Timothy, and third Chapter, A Biſhop ought to be without rebuke, the Husband of one Wife: and by and by after he ſaith, Deacons ought to be the Husbands of one Wife, the which ſhould rule and govern their Children and Family uprightly? Unto theſe Paul affirmeth Matrimony to be meet and neceſſary, let them ſay what they can to the contrary. What could be more vehemently ſpoken againſt their wicked tyranny, than that which by the Holy Ghoſt he declareth in the fourth Chapter of the ſame Epiſtle, That in the latter days there ſhould come wicked men which ſhould forbid Matrimony, and calleth them not only deceivers, but alſo wicked ſpirits, attending unto the Doctrine of wicked ſpirits; but theſe men think that they have very well eſcaped, when as they wreſt this Sentence to thoſe old ancient Hereticks the Tatianes; They (ſay theſe men) did condemn Matrimony, we do not condemn it, but only forbid Church-men to marry, unto whom we think Matrimony is not convenient. As though that albeit this Prophecy were firſt of all compleat and fulfilled in the Tatianes, that it did not alſo redound unto them; or as though this their ſubtil ſophiſtication were worthy to be regarded, that they do not deny or prohibit Matrimony, becauſe they do not forbid it unto all men generally. Like as if a Tyrant would contend and affirm his Law to be good, by the extremity and violence whereof only one part of the City is oppreſſed. But now let us hear the Reaſons of the contrary part: It behoveth, ſay they, a Prieſt to differ from the common ſort of the people by ſome notable mark or token. But read S. Paul, whereas he deſcribeth the perfect Image of a good Biſhop, did he not reckon and account Marriage amongſt the other good gifts which he required to be in them? But I know very well how theſe men interpret Paul. Verily that a Biſhop ought not to be choſen, which hath married his ſecond Wife. But alſo it appeareth openly by the Text, that this Interpretation is falſe, forſomuch as he doth by and by declare and ſhew what manner of women the Wives of Biſhops and Deacons ought for to be. Wherefore S. Paul numbreth Matrimony amongſt the principal vertues pertaining unto a Biſhop. And theſe men do teach it to be an intolerable vice amongſt the Orders of the Church, and not being content with that general reproach or ſlander, they call it in the Canons, the uncleanlineſs, polluting, and defiling of the fleſh. Now let every man conſider with himſelf out of what Shop this ſtuff is taken. God inſtituted Matrimony, Chriſt ſanctified it with his preſence, by turning water into wine, and vouchſafed ſo to honour it, that he would have it the Image or Figure of his love and friendſhip with the Church: What can be more famous or notably ſpoken to the commendation and praiſe of Wedlock? But theſe unſhamefaſt faces do call it a filthy and unclean thing, alledging the Levitical Prieſts, which, as often as they came unto the Office of Miniſtration, were bound to lye apart from their Wives, whereby they being clean and undefiled, might handle the holy things: and our Sacraments, forſomuch as they are much more noble and excellent than theirs, and daily uſed, it would be a very uncomly thing that they ſhould be handled by married men. As though that the Office of the Miniſtry of the Goſpel were all one with the Levitical Prieſthood. For they, as Figures, did repreſent Chriſt, which being Mediator between God and Man, by his ſingular and abſolute purity and cleanneſs ſhould reconcile the Father unto us, forſomuch as on no part ſinners could exhibit or ſhew forth any type or form of his Sanctity or Holineſs: yet to the intent they might ſhadow him out with certain ſimilitudes or lineaments they were commanded that whenſoever they ſhould come unto the Sanctuary or holy Place, they ſhould purifie themſelves above all mens order or faſhion: for then did they moſt near and properly figurate Chriſt which appeared in the Tabernacle, as Peace-maker to reconcile the people unto God. This Image or Perſonage, forſomuch as our Eccleſiaſtical Paſtors at this day do not take upon them to execute, in vain are they compared unto them. Wherefore the Apoſtle, without all exception, upon a ſure and good ground doth pronounce and ſay, That marriage is honourable amongſt all men, and that Whoremongers and Adulterers do abide the judgment of God. Beſides all this, the Apoſtles themſelves by their examples do prove that Matrimony is worthy of any Office or Function, be it never ſo

Saint John in his eleventh Chapter, declareth how Caiaphas high Biſhop of Jeruſalem did propheſie that Jeſus ſhould dye for the people, which thing he ſpake being utterly ignorant. The like Image of blindneſs we have now preſently in our luxurious Cardinal of Saint Andrews, and his Adherents, which accuſed Religion of Hereſie, which in the year of our Lord, 1540. was had in eſtimation in England, at the which time they proclaimed me an Achheretick, although they eſteem the ſame Religion for moſt Chriſtian; for what Religion at the time was uſed in England, the like the whole Realm of Scotland did embrace: in this point only the Engliſhmen differed from the Scots, that they had caſt off the Yoke of Antichriſt, the other not. Idols were worſhipped of both Nations, the prophaning of the Supper and Baptiſm was like unto them both, wicked Superſtition reigned on both parts, and true worſhip was deformed and defaced with deteſtable Hypocriſie.

The ſtate of Religion in England, an. 1540.

Truly it is moſt falſe that they do affirm and ſay, that I had ſubſcribed unto ſuch kind of Hereſies, as though they had been conformable unto the Law of God, when as nothing is more adverſe or repugnant thereunto: for even now of late, God of his goodneſs and mercy had opened my dazling eyes, and had thrown me out of the filthy ſlow of Idolatry and Superſtition, in the which amongſt others I have ſo long time wallowed and trembled. Neither is it any leſs abſurd, that they affirm me to have allured many to embrace the ſame, except peradventure they do underſtand that I have oftentimes wiſhed that the Yoke of Antichriſt would be ſhaken and caſt off from the Necks of the Scots, as it is from the Engliſh men; which thing with ſincere and upright heart, and with an earneſt mind I do now alſo wiſh and deſire.

Borthwike.

No man will deny that people to be blinded which neither heareth Chriſt nor his Apoſtles. Such is the people of Scotland, I ſpeak of thoſe unto whom the verity and truth of Chriſt hath not yet opened or manifeſted it ſelf. There is no cauſe therefore why they ſhould accuſe me of Hereſie. Furthermore, how far off the Nation and the people of Scotland be from the hearing of Chriſt, albeit the premiſſes do ſufficiently declare, in that they do challenge unto the Romiſh Antichriſt the Authority which Chriſt and his Apoſtles do declare Chriſt himſelf to be endued withal, and that contrary to the word of God they forbid Prieſts to marry; I will add ſomething more unto it, whereby the matter may be more evident. Chriſt calleth himſelf the door whereby all men ought to enter in, the tenth Chapter of John. Contrariwiſe, the Scots do ſay and affirm, that we muſt enter in by the Virgin Mary and Saint Peter. Chriſt in the fourth of John ſaith, The time ſhall come when as the true worſhippers ſhall worſhip the Father in Spirit and Truth the Scots build themſelves high Temples and Chappels for Idols, in the which, even as Iſrael in times paſt, they commit fornication. Paul in his Epiſtle to the Hebrews, and tenth Chapter, ſaith, That Chriſt by one only Oblation hath made perfect all thoſe for evermore, which are ſanctified: which ſaying confirmeth alſo the words of Chriſts hanging upon the Croſs, ſaying, It is finiſhed; ſignifying that by his death there was a final end ſet to all Sacrifices, which are offered up for Sins. But the Scotiſh Churchmen, as they are Blaſphemers indeed, ſo do they brag and boaſt that they daily offer up Chriſt for the Sins both of the quick, and of the dead. God commandeth us that we ſhall not worſhip any Image; the Scots do not only fall down flat before Images, but alſo offer up Incenſe unto them. Saint Paul teacheth us that Chriſt is made our wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption; the Scots, being wiſe men in their own conceits, prefer and embrace Traditions feigned and invented out by mans head before the Law of God, they ſtabliſh righteouſneſs in their own works, ſanctification in holy Water and other external things, redemption in pieces of lead, which they do buy of their great Antichriſt. Who then will quarrel with me, that I do lye that the people of Scotland are blind? and that my Faith, which doth only behold the Word of God, is much more better and excellent than theirs?

Borthwike.

The Lord in the eighteenth Chapter of the Book of Numbers ſaid thus unto Aaron, Thou ſhalt poſſeſs nothing in their Land, neither ſhalt thou have any portion amongſt them, I am thy Portion and Inheritance amongſt the Children of Iſrael: for unto the Sons of Levi I have given all the Tithes of Iſrael, that they ſhould poſſeſs them for their Miniſtry which they do execute in the Tabernacle of the Congregation. Albeit I do not doubt, but that the Order of the Levites and of the Clergy is far different and variable. For the Adminiſtration of their ſacred and holy things, after their death, paſſed unto their Poſterity as it were by right of Inheritance; which happeneth not unto the Poſterity of our Clergy in theſe days. Furthermore, if any heritage be provided or gotten for them, I do not gainſay but that they ſhall poſſeſs it. But ſtill I do affirm, That all Temporal Juriſdiction ſhould be taken from them. For when as twice there roſe a contention amongſt the Diſciples, which of them ſhould be thought the greateſt, Chriſt anſwered; The Kings of Nations have Dominion over them, and ſuch which have power over them are called beneficial: you ſhall not do ſo; for he which is greateſt amongſt you ſhall be made equal unto the youngeſt or leaſt, and he which is the Prince or Ruler amongſt you ſhall be made equal unto him that doth miniſter. Minding thereby, and willing utterly to debar the Miniſters of his Word from all terrene and civil Dominion and Empire. For by theſe points he doth not only declare that the Office of a Paſtor is diſtinct and divided from the Office of a Prince and Ruler, but that they are in effect ſo much different and ſeparate, that they cannot agree or joyn together in one man. Neither is it to be thought that Chriſt did ſet or ordain an harder Law then he himſelf before did take upon him. Forſomuch as in the twelfth of Luke certain of the company ſaid unto him, Maſter command my Brother that he divide his Inheritance with me. He anſwered; Man, who made me a Judge or Divider amongſt you? We ſee therefore that Chriſt even ſimply did reject and refuſe the Office of a Judge, the which thing he would not have done if it had been agreeable unto his Office or Duty. Chapter of John, when as he refuſed to give Judgment upon the Woman taken in Adultery, which was brought before him. Whereas they do alledge that Moſes did ſupply both Offices at once, I anſwer, that it was done by a rare miracle. Furthermore, that it continued but for a time until things were brought unto a better ſtate. Beſides that, there was a certain form and rule preſcribed him of the Lord, then took he upon him the Civil governance, and the Prieſthood he was commanded to reſign unto his Brother; and that not without good cauſe, for it is againſt nature, that one man ſhould ſuffice both charges: wherefore it was diligently foreſeen and provided for in all ages. Neither was there any Biſhop, ſo long as any true face or ſhew of the Church did continue, who once thought to uſurp the right and title of the Sword. Whereupon in the time of Saint Ambroſe this proverb took his Original, That Emperors did rather wiſh or deſire the Office of Prieſthood, than Prieſts any Empire. For it was all mens Opinions at that time, that ſumptuous Palaces did pertain unto Emperors, and Churches unto Prieſts. Saint Bernard alſo writeth many things which are agreeable unto this our Opinion; as is this his ſaying, Peter could not give that which he had not, but he gave unto his Succeſſors that which he had, that is to ſay, carefulneſs over the Congregation; for when as the Lord and Maſter ſaith, That he is not conſtitute or ordained Judge between two, the Servant or Diſciple ought not to take it ſcornfully if that he may not judge all men. And leſt that he might ſeem in that place to ſpeak of the Spiritual Judgment, he ſtraightway annexeth, Therefore, ſaith he, your Power and Authority ſhall be in offence and tranſgreſſion, not in poſſeſſions. For this purpoſe, and not for the other, have you received the Keyes of the Kingdom of Heaven. Why then do you invade other mens bounds or borders? The reſt I paſs over for brevities ſake.

An objection made by the example of Moſes ſupplying both the offices anſwered unto.

The 7. Article. Falſely, and againſt the honour, eſtate, and reverence of the ſacred Majeſty of the King of Scots, he hath ſaid, holden, and affirmed, that our moſt noble King of Scots, Defender of the Chriſtian Faith, would appropriate unto himſelf all the poſſeſſions, lands, and rents of the Church, given and granted by his Predeceſſours, and alſo by himſelf, and convert them unto his own private uſe. And for this end and purpoſe, as he hath many times written unto him, ſo hath he with his whole endeavour perſwaded our ſaid noble Lord and King thereunto.

Borthwike.

It is no marvel though theſe mad Dogs do ſo bark againſt me, whom they think to have counſelled the Kings Majeſty (I would to God I had alſo thorowly perſwaded him) that he ſhould take away from theſe unjuſt ſacrilegious poſſeſſors, the riches wherewith all they are fatted and engreaſed like Swine. For this is the nature of Doggs, if any man go about to take away the bone out of their mouth, by and by to ſnatch at him and tare him with their teeth. It is out of all controverſie unto ſuch as have ony wit at all, that ſuch were very childiſh, that is to ſay, ignorant of all learning and judgment, which did ſo fat and feed with their poſſeſſions theſe Belly-beaſts. For who would not judge it more then childiſh, to beſtow the Kings Victuals or meat upon the bellies of the Prophets of Baal and Jeſabel? But all they which at this preſent do endue ſuch filthy ſinks (I will not call them Dens of Thieves) with ſuch revenues, they do follow the ſteps of Jeſabel; for what other thing do they, when as daily they are bleating and bowing before their Images, burning of Incenſe, and fall flat down before their Altars, but that which is times paſt the Prophets of Baal did when as they tranſported the worſhip of God unto an Idol? Wherefore If Daniel and Elias were ſpotted with Hereſie when they would have deſtroyed the Prieſts of Baal, I grant that I alſo muſt be an Heretick.

A compariſon between our Belly-Prieſts and the Prieſts of Baal.

But forſomuch as then he did nothing but which was commanded him of the Lord, that was able to kill the Prophet which had allured the people to follow ſtrange Gods, he could not truly and juſtly be accuſed of Hereſie; ſo neither can my Adverſaries ſpot me therewithal, except peradventure they will condemn in me that (whereas Elias dealt more rigorouſly with the Prophets of Baal, for he caſt them into the Brook Kidron) I required or deſired no more, but that the riches which was wickedly beſtowed upon them, and their poſſeſſions might be taken from them.

He willed and deſired, and oftentimes with his whole heart prayed that the Church of Scotland might come and be brought to the ſame point and ſtate, and to like ruine as the Church of England was already come unto. The 8. Article.

If the Church of Iſrael decayed, when as in the time of Zorobabel, Nehemias, and other holy men, it was releaſed and ſet at liberty out of Babylon; I grant alſo, that it was a ruine unto the Engliſh men, to have departed and gone away out of Babylon, the Mother of all Whoredom; upon whoſe rotten and filthy paps and breaſts they have a long time depended and hanged, being made drunk with the Wine of her Whoredom and unſhamefaſtneſs. They had rather cauſe to give me thanks, who with ſo ſincere and good a heart wiſhed unto them ſo happy a fall. But theſe unthankful perſons thought it not enough with ſlander and reproach to tear me aſunder, but now alſo, as blind rage and madneſs hath taken away all ſincerity and uprightneſs of mind and judgment, they lye in wait, and lay ſnares for my life. Spiritual Babylon.

The ninth Article.

He hath openly holden, ſaid, und affirmed, preached, and taught, that the Laws of the Church, that is to ſay, the ſacred Canons, approved and allowed by the holy Catholick and Apoſtolick Church, are of no force, ſtrength, or effect; alledging therefore and affirming, that they are made and invented contrary to the Law of God. The 9. Article.

Borthwike.

God forbid that I ſhould ſay, that thoſe things which are approved by the holy Catholick Church ſhould be of no effect or value. For well I know, that the holy Apoſtolick Church hath never allowed, ordained, or taught any thing which ſhe hath not learned of the Lord: the Apoſtles are witneſſes thereof, Peter and Paul, whereof the one of them dareth not freely utter or ſpeak of any of thoſe things which Chriſt hath not wrought by himſelf for the obedience of the Gentiles. Apoſtol Church.

The other exhorteth, That if any man ſpeak, he ſhould ſpeak the praiſes of God: but I condemn thoſe Laws which the Biſhops of Rome had made according to their own will and mind, and ſay that they are ſpiritual, pertaining unto the Salvation of the Soul, and neceſſary unto everlaſting life, forſomuch as the writings of the Apoſtles do evidently declare, that there was no Authority known amongſt them to make or ordain any Ordinances or Laws. The Rc Church

Furthermore, the Scriptures do manifeſtly ſhew the ſame, how oftentimes, even by the Lords own mouth this foreſaid Authority is taken from the Miniſters of the Church; ſo that no excuſe for them remaineth, but that they be plain Rebels againſt the Word of God, how many ſoever do preſume or take upon them to appoint or ſet any new Laws upon the people of God. Which thing is more manifeſt and evident than the light it ſelf, in many places of the Scripture. For in the three and twentieth Chapter of Joſhuah, it is written; You ſhall obſerve and do all that is written in the Law of Moſes, neither ſhall you ſwarve from that, either to the right hand or to the left hand. But that which is written in the twelfth Chapter of Duteronomy ought to move them ſomewhat the more. Prelate have n Author by the to bin mens C ſcienc with n Laws.

What-

Whatſoevr I command, faith the Lord, that ſhall ye obſerve and do; thereunto you ſhall add nothing, neither ſhall you take any thing from it, The like he had ſaid before in the fourth Chapter of the ſame Book. And again, Moſes in the thirteenth Chapter of the ſame Book doth witneſs, that he did put forth life and bleſſing unto Iſrael, when as he gave them that Law which he had received of theLord.How can they then excuſe themſelves of Perjury, which ordain new Laws to live by; But let us proceed further,and ſee what Authority the Prieſts of Levi's ſtock had to make Laws. I do not deny, but that God, in the ſeventeenth Chapter of Deuternomy, ordained under a great penalty, that the Authority of the Prieſts ſhould not be contemned, but had in Reverence. But in the ſecond of Malachy he alſo declareth under what condition they are to be heard,whereas he ſaith, He hath made a Covenant with Levi, that the Law of truth ſhould be in his mouth; and by and by after he addeth, The lips of the Prieſt ſhall keep and maintain wiſdom, and the Law they ſhall require at his mouth,which is theMeſſenger of theLord of Hoſts.Therefore it is fit and neceſſary, if a Prieſt will be heard, that he doth ſhew himſelf the Meſſenger of God,that is to ſay, that he faithfully report and declare the commandments which he hath received of the Lord. For whereas Malachy ſpeaketh of hearing of them, he putteth this ſpecially, that they do anſwer according to the Law of the Lord. Therefore like as the Levitical Prieſts did break their Covenant made with God, if they did teach any other Law than that which they had received of him; ſo likewiſe theſe men muſt either acknowledge themſelves to be Covenant-Breakers, or elſe they may not bind the Conſciences of men with any new Law.

How far the office of Prieſts extendeth.

Furthermore, what Power the Prophets had univerſally, it is very lively deſcribed in Ezekiel, in his 33. Chapter.

Ezek. 33.

Thou Son of Man, ſaith the Lord, I have made thee a guide unto the Houſe of Iſrael, thou ſhalt hear the Word out of mine own mouth, and declare it unto them from me. He then which his commanded to hear of the mouth of the Lord, is he not forbiddeu to rehearſe or ſpeak any thing of himſelf? For what other thing is it to ſpeak from theLord,but ſo to ſpeak that he may boldly affirm and ſay, that it is not his word, but the Word of the Lord which he ſpeaketh?

Further, God by his Prophet Jeremy calleth it chaff, whatſoever doth not proceed from himſelf. Wherefore none of the Prophets have opened their mouths at any time to ſpeak,but being premoniſhed before the Word of God. Whereupon it hapneth, that theſe words are ſo often pronounced by them, The Word of the Lord; the charge or burthen of the Lord; the Viſion of the Lord; Thus ſaith the Lord; the mouth of the Lord hath ſpoken it.

Now that we may alſo confirm that which is before ſpoken, by the examples of the Apoſtles, that they have taught nothing but that which they have learned of the Lord, the Law which Chriſt preſcribed unto them,when as he indued them with the dignity and honour of the Apoſtleſhip, is ſomewhat more profoundly to be repeated. In the laſt Chapter of Matthew, he commandeth them to go forth and teach,not ſuch things as they themſelves did raſhly invent and deviſe, but thoſe things which he had commanded them.

Furthermore, Paul in the ſecond to the Corinthians, denieth that he hath any dominion or rule over the Faith of the Corinthians, albeit he was ordained by the Lord to be their Apoſtle. If you require and deſire a further reaſon of the moderation of Saint Paul, read the tenth Chapter of the Epiſtle to the Romans, whereas he teacheth, That Faith cometh by hearing, it cometh not by the Dreams of the Biſhop of Rome, or by any other Biſhop, but onely by the Word of God; neither ought any man to think it ſtrange, that neither Chriſt reſtrained his Apoſtles by the Law,that they ſhould not teach any thing but that which they had learned of the mouth of the Lord. He ſet the ſame Law upon himſelf, becauſe it ſhould not be lawful for any man to refuſe it.

My Doctrine ſaith Chriſt is not mine, but his which ſent me, my Fathers; he which hath been the onely and eternal Counſellour of the Father, which alſo is ordained by the Father, the Lord and Maſter over all, for ſo much as yet he doth the Office and part of a Miniſter, he doth by his example preſcribe unto all Miniſters, what rule and order they ought to follow in teaching; wherefore the Power of the Church is not ſuch, that it may at her own will and diſcretion teach new Doctrines, either, as they term it, frame new Articles of Faith, either eſtabliſh new Laws, but is ſubject unto the Word of theLord,and as it were included in the ſame. But now let us behold what defence they do bring for their Conſtitutions.The Apoſtles, ſay they,and the Elders of the Primitive Church,eſtabliſhed a Decree, beſides the commandment of Chriſt, whereby they did command all people to abſtain from all things offered unto Idols,Suffocation, and Blood. If that were lawful for them ſo to do, why is it not lawful for their Succeſſour,as often as neceſſity ſhall require, to imitate and to follow them in doing the like?

The Church ſubject to the Word of God.Reaſons wherewith they defend their Conſtitutions.

But I deny that the Apoſtles in that behalf did make any new Decree or Ordinance, forſomuch as Peter in the ſame Councel pronounceth God to be tempted, if any yoke be laid upon the necks of the Diſciples: Even he himſelf doth ſubvert and overthrow his own Sentence if they conſent to lay any yoke upon them. But a yoke is laid upon them if the Apoſtles by their own Authority do decree to probibit the Gentiles not to touch any thing offered unto Idols or ſtrangled; but you will ſay,they do write they ſhould abſtain from thoſe things. I grant that they do ſo write: But what doth Saint James declare? That the Gentiles which are converted unto God are not to be troubled and vexed in ſuch extern Decrees and outward Elements as theſe be. And the Apoſtle ſufficiently declareth that he goeth about nothing leſs then to reſtrain the liberty of the Gentiles, but onely to admoniſh and warn them how they ſhould moderate and rule themſelves among their Brethren, leſt they ſhould abuſe their liberty to the offence of others.

Answer to the reaſons above.

They alledge furthermore, that which is written in the three and twentieth of Matthew, the Scribes and Phariſees have ſitten in the Chair of Moſes, therefore all things whatſoever they command you to obſerve and keep, the ſame obſerve and do,but do you not as they do. I anſwer, the Lord in this place doth inveigh againſt the manners of the Phariſees, ſimply inſtructing his Hearers which before he had taught, that albeit they could perceive or ſee nothing in their life which they ſhould follow yet for all that they ſhould not refuſe to do the things which they did teach by the Word, I ſay by the Word, and not of their own head.

Another reaſon.

10. Article.

Divers and many ways he hath ſaid, holden, and alſo affirmed, and openly taught that there is no Religion to be obſerved or kept, but ſimply to be aboliſhed and deſtroyed, as it is now in England; and deſpiſing all Religion, affirming that it is but abuſing of the People, he hath taught that their habits and veſtures are deformed and very monſtrous, having in them no manner of utility or holineſs, inducing and alluring as much as in him lay, all the adherents of his opinion, that all Religion in the Kingdom of Scotland ſhould be ſubverted and utterly taken away, to the great offence of the Catholick Church, and the diminiſhing and detriment of the Chriſtian Religion.

Borthwike.

The Prophet Iſaiah in his fifth Chapter crieth out, ſaying, Wo be unto you which call evil good, and good evil, darkneſs light,and light darkneſs, ſower ſweet,and ſweet ſower. And it followeth in the ſame place,in the ſaid Prophet, Wo, ſaith he, to you that be wiſe and ſapient in your own eyes and prudent in your own eſtimation. No man can deny but that the Cardinal of Scotland and his Adherents be under this moſt heavy and grievous curſe, when as they do ſo generally confound the Chriſtian Religion and their wicked Monkery, that they do entitle them both by one name of Holineſs. I truſt I will make it appear more manifeſt than the day, that they do it by a ſacrilegious audacity or boldneſs,unto ſuch as ſetting apart all prepoſterous affection will embrace the truth, when as ſhe doth manifeſtly ſhew her ſelf.

But before I enter into the matter, I will all men to underſtand, that I do not touch that kind of Monkery, which Saint Auguſtine and other do ſo often make mention of; as in which the Monks being gathered together utterly contemning and deſpiſing the Vanities of this world, did lead a moſt chaſt and godly life, living in prayers, reading, and diſputations, not puffed up with pride, nor contentious with frowardneſs, neither full of envy, no man poſſeſſed any things of his own, no man was chargeable or burdenous unto others, they wrought with their Hands to get that which might ſuſtain the Body, the Spirit anp minde not let and hindred from God. Whatſoever did ſuperabound more than was neceſſary for their ſuſtentation, as by the reſtraint of their delicious and delicate fare much did redound of the labours of their Hands, it was with ſuch diligence diſtributed unto the poor and needy, as it was not with greater diligence gotten by them which did give the ſame.

For they by no means went about to have abundance lying by them, but ſought all means poſſible that nothing ſhould remain by them more than ſufficient: beſides this, no man was forced to any extremity, which he could not bear or ſuffer, no man had any thing laid upon him which he refuſed, neither was he condemned of the reſt, which confeſſed himſelf unable to imitate or follow; they had always in their mind how commendable a thing love and charity was; they remembred that all things are clean to them which are clean. Therfore they did not refuſe or reject any kinds of meat as polluted or defiled; but all their whole induſtry and labour was applied to ſubdue luſt and concupiſcence, and to retain love amongſt Brethren. Many of them did drink no Wine, yet notwithſtanding they thought not themſelves defiled therewithal. For unto ſuch as were ſick and diſeaſed, who could not recover the health of their Body without the ſame, they did moſt gently permit it. And whereas many fooliſhly refuſed the ſame, they brotherly admoniſhed them to take heed that they became not rather the weaker than the holier, through their vain ſuperſtition.

Hitherto I have repeated that which St. Auguſtine writeth of the Monks of his time, whereby I would as it were paint out in a Table, what manner of Monkry there was in the old time, that all men might underſtand how great difference there is between that and the Monkery in theſe our later days. For he would have all extreme Compulſion to be taken away in ſuch things as by the Word of God are left to us at liberty. But now adays there is nothing more ſeverely and cruelly exacted. For they ſay it is a remedileſs offence if any do but never ſo little ſwerve from their preſcript order in colour or kind of garment, or in any kind of meat, or in any other frivolous or vain ceremony.

Precepts of men more cruelly exacted than the precepts of God.

Saint Auguſtine doth ſtraightly affirm that it is not lawful for Monks to live idle upon other mens labour; he plainly denyeth that in his time there was any ſuch example of any well ordered Monaſtery: but our Monks do conſtitute the principal part of holineſs in idleneſs, which they call a contemplative life; wherefore the ſtate or Monkery of the old time, and of theſe our days, is in all points ſo divers, that ſcarſe can any thing be more unlike, I will not ſay utterly contrary; for our Monks not content with that godlineſs to the ſtudy and deſire whereof Chriſt commandeth all his contiually to be intentive, they imagine a new kind of godlineſs, I know not what, by the mediation whereof they are more perfect, than all other. But it is a moſt peſtilent errour (which all godly men ought to abhor) to fain any other rule of perfection, than that common rule delivered unto the whole Univerſal Church, which we ſuppoſe to be ſufficiently approved in the refutation of the Article before paſſed. Now I alſo paſs over with ſilence the great Blaſphemy, whereby they compare their Monaſtical Confeſſion unto Baptiſm. I alſo hold my peace that they do diſſipate and divide the Communion of the Church, when, as they do ſeparate themſelves from the lawful ſociety and fellowſhip of the faithful, and claim unto themſelves a peculiar miniſtery and private Adminiſtration of the Sacraments: but as St. Auguſtine witneſſeth, it was ſo far off, that the Monks in times paſt had any ſeveral Church or Adminiſtration of the Sacrament from others, as that they were a part and portion of the common people albeit that they dwelt aſunder.

Idleneſs & pleaſure the weapons of the ancient enemy.

But if a man may touch the manner of theſe our Monks, what ſhall I call the Cloiſters in theſe our days, otherwiſe then Brothel Houſes, ſwine ſties, and dens of diſcord. Beſides that, I will paſs over their Fairs and Markets, which in theſe later days they do make of their Reliques of Martyrs, to build up Sodom again. Wherefore I conclude that this their kind of life which they claim unto themſelves, is utterly wicked and naught, the which is not eſtabliſhed or grounded upon any certain calling of God, neither allowed by him: wherefore I may be bold to ſay that it is unlawful, becauſe their Conſcience hath nothing whereby to ſuſtain it ſelf before God, and whatſoever is not of Faith is ſin.

And furthermore, ſo long as they do intangle and bind themſelves with ſo many and ſo perverſe and wicked kinds of worſhipping, as the Monkery now adays doth contain in it, I may well ſay that they are not conſecrated unto God, but unto the Devil. For why, was it lawful for the Prophets to ſay, that the Iſraelites did offer their Children unto wicked Spirits, and not unto God, becauſe that they did corrupt and violate the true worſhipping of God with prophane Ceremonies? Is it not lawful then to ſpeak the like of our Monks, which together with their Cowls have put on a thouſand ſnares of moſt wicked ſuperſtitions? Let every man now weigh and conſider with himſelf, if I have done wickedly to wiſh ſuch Religions, as is this our Monkery, to be utterly extinguiſhed and rooted out. Moreover all Chriſtian Princes ſhould rightly and truly do their office, if as in times paſt Joſias pulled down and overthrew the High Places which his Elders the Kings of Juda had builded ſo they would aboliſh and drive away this kind of Monks.

It is plainly manifeſt by lawful proofs, that the ſaid John Borthwike had, and preſently hath divers Books ſuſpected of Hereſie, condemned as well by the Papal, as alſo Regal and ordinary Authority, and prohibited by the Law: that is to ſay, ſpecially the New Teſtament commonly printed in Engliſh, Oecolampadius, Melanchon, and divers Treatiſes of Eraſmus and other condemned Hereticks, alſo a Book intituled Vnio diſſidentium, the which containeth moſt manifeſt and great Errours and Heretical Aſſumptions, and hath read and ſtudied the ſame as well openly as privately, and hath preſented and communicated them unto others, and alſo hath inſtructed and taught many Chriſtians in the ſame, to the end and purpoſe to divert and turn them away from the true Chriſtian and Catholick Faith.

Borthwike.

O good God! who can ſuffer ſo great a Blaſphemy? with what a filthy Cankered ſtomack do theſe Romiſh ſwine note the New Teſtament with Hereſie? who would not judge it a moſt Venemous Tongue which dare pronounce and utter ſuch contumelious words againſt the Holy Goſpel of our Saviour Chriſt? Truly theſe men (howſoever they do pronounce me an Arch-Heretick) do fill up the meaſure of all other Hereticks (I will not ſay Blaſphemers) as the Jews which put Chriſt to death did of all other Murtherers. How then ſhall theſe Serpents and ſtock of Vipers eſcape and flee the judgment of everlaſting fire? I do not greatly ſtand or ſtay, that they do ſuſpect Oecolampadius, Melanchon, or Eraſmus, neither am I ſo mad to plead their cauſe, who as they are men of ſingular learning and eloquence, ſo do their writings manifeſtly declare, how falſely and wickedly theſe ſycophants impute this crime and ſlander of Hereſie unto them.

It is manifeſt, that the ſaid John Brothwike was ſo obſtinate in all the foreſaid Errors and Hereſies, and ſo maintained and taught them with ſuch an obdurate heart and mind, that he would not by any means be perſwaded from them by his Friends and divers other perſons which did dearly love and favour him, but choſe rather obſtinately to perſevere in his ſaid Errors.

I am willingly contented to be reduced to the Catholick Faith, but if that Satan raiſe up any ſtorms or tempeſts againſt that, thoſe I do ſomething reſiſt. Wherefore they moſt ſhamefully lye which do otherwiſe jeſt or talk of me; for I know not by what reaſon they call them my Friends which ſo greatly laboured to convert me, neither will more eſteem them, than the Madianites, which in times paſt called the Children of Iſrael to do ſacrifice unto their Idols. And furthermore, I deſire the moſt high and mighty God, that he will never ſuffer me to ſwarve or turn away from this ſo holy, godly, and Chriſtian obſtinacy and ſtubborneſs. The man is bleſt that hath ſet his whole hope and confidence upon the Lord, and hath not regarded or looked upon the proud or thoſe which follow after lies.

The Sentence of Condemnation againſt Sir John Borthwike Knight, by the Cardinal, Biſhops, and Abbots in Scotland, Anno 1540.

Sentence of Condemnation againſt Borthwike.

OF all which the Premiſſes and many other Errors by him holden, ſpoken, publiſhed, affirmed, preached and taught, the common fame and report is, that the ſaid Sir John Borthwike is holden, reputed, and accounted of very many as an Heretick, and principal Heretick, which holdeth evil Opinions of the Catholick Faith.

Where we David by the Title of St. Stephen in Mount Celio, Prelate and Cardinal of the holy Church of Rome, Archbiſhop of Saint Andrews, Primate of the whole Kingdom of Scotland, and born Legate or the Apoſtolick See, ſitting after the manner of Judges in our Tribunal Seat, the moſt holy Goſpels of God being laid before us, that our judgment might proceed from the face of God, and our eyes might behold and look upon equity and juſtice, having only God and the verity and truth of the Catholick Faith before our eyes, his holy Name being firſt called upon, having, as is before ſaid, hereupon holden a Council of wiſe Men, as well Divines as Lawyers, We pronounce, declare, decree, determine, and give ſentence, that the ſaid Sir John Borthwike, called Captain Borthwike, being ſuſpected, infamed, and accuſed of the Errors and Hereſies before ſaid, and wicked Doctrines manifoldly condemned, as is aforeſaid, and by lawful proofs againſt him in every of the premiſſes had, being convict and lawfully cited and called, not appearing, but as a Fugitive, Runaway, and abſent, even as though he were preſent, to be an Heretick, And is, and hath been convict as an Heretick; And as a convict Heretick and Hereſiarch to be puniſhed and chaſtened with due puniſhment, and afterward to be delivered and left unto the Secular Power. Moreover, we confiſcate and make forfeit, and by theſe preſents declare and decree to be confiſcated and made forfeit all and ſingular his goods, moveables and unmoveables, howſoever and by whatſoever Title they be gotten, and in what place or part ſoever they be, and all his Offices whatſoever he hath hitherto had, reſerving notwithſtanding the Dowry and ſuch part and portion of his goods, as by the Law, Cuſtom and Right of this Realm unto perſons confiſcate ought to appertain. Alſo we decree, that the Picture of the ſaid John Borthwike being formed, made, and painted to his likeneſs, be carried through this our City to our Cathedral Church, and afterward to the Market-Croſs of the ſame City, and there in token of malediction and curſe, and to the terrour and example of others, and for a perpetual remembrance of his obſtinacy and condemnation, to be burned. Likewiſe we declare and decree, that notwithſtanding, if the ſaid John Borthwike be hereafter apprehended and taken, he ſhall ſuffer ſuch like puniſhment due by order of Law unto Hereticks, without any hope of grace or mercy to be obtained in that behalf. Alſo we plainly admoniſh and warn, by the tenour of theſe preſents, all and ſingular faithful Chriſtians, both Men and Women, of what dignity, ſtate, decree, order, condition, or preheminence ſoever they be, or with whatſoever dignity or honour Eccleſiaſtical or Temporal they be honoured, that from this day forward they do not receive or harbour the ſaid Sir John Borthwike, commonly called Captain Borthwike, being accuſed, convict, and declared an Heretick, and Arch-heretick, into their Houſes, Hoſpitals, Caſtles, Cities, Towns, Villages, or other Cottages whatſoever they be, or by any manner of means admit him thereunto, either by helping him with meat, drink, or victuals, or any other thing whatſoever it be, they do ſhew unto him any manner of humanity, help, comfort, or ſolace, under the pain and penalty of greater and further excommunication, confiſcation and forfeitures; and if it happen that they be found culpable or faulty in the premiſſes, that they ſhall be accuſed therefore as the favourers, receivers, defenders, maintainers and abettors of Hereticks, and ſhall be puniſhed therefore according to the order of Law, and with ſuch pain and puniſhment as ſhall be due unto men in ſuch behalf.

David Beaton Biſhop, and Cardinal of Saint Andrews.

George Triechton, Biſhop of Dunkelden.

NOt long after the burning of David Stratton and Mr. Gurlay above mentioned, in the days of David Beaton, Biſhop, and Cardinal of St. Andrews, and George Treichton Biſhop of Dunkelden, a Canon of St. Colmes Inche, and Vicar of Dolone called Dean Thomas Forret, preached every Sunday to his Pariſhioners out of the Epiſtle or Goſpel as it fell for the time; which then was a great novelty in Scotland, to ſee any man preach, except a Black-Frier or a Gray-Frier: and therefore the Friers envied him, and accuſed him to the Biſhop of Dunkelden (in whoſe Dioceſs he remained) as an Heretick, and one that ſhewed the Myſteries of the Scriptures to the Vulgar people in Engliſh, to make the Clergy deteſtable in the ſight of the People. The Biſhop of Dunkelden, moved by the Friers inſtigation, called the ſaid Dean Thomas, and ſaid to him, My Joy Dean Thomas, I love you well, and therefore I muſt give you my counſel, how you ſhall rule and guide your ſelf. To whom Thomas ſaid, I thank your Lordſhip heartily. Then the Biſhop began his counſel after this manner.

Tho. Forret, Prieſt.

George Treichton Biſhop of Dunkelden and Perſecutor.

My Joy Dean Thomas, I am informed that you preach the Epiſtle or Goſpel every Sunday to your Pariſhoners, and that you take not the Cow, nor the uppermoſt Cloth from your Pariſhoners, which thing is very prejudicial to the Churchmen; and therefore my Joy Dean Thomas, I would you took your Cow and your uppermoſt Cloth as other Churchmen do, or elſe it is too much to preach every Sunday; for in ſo doing you may make the people think that we ſhould preach likewiſe. But it is enough for you, when you find any Good Epiſtle, or any good Goſpel, that ſetteth forth the liberty of the holy Church, to preach that, and let the reſt be.

Tho. Forret preacheth and will take no Mortuary nor Chryſom of his Pariſhioners. Ergo, he is an Heretick againſt the Popes Catholick Church.

Thomas anſwered, My Lord, I think that none of my Pariſhoners will complain that I take not the Cow, nor the uppermoſt Cloth, but will gladly give me the ſame, together with any other thing that they have, and I will give and communicate with them any thing that I have, and ſo my Lord, we agree right well, and there is no diſcord among us.

And where your Lordſhip ſaith, It is too much to preach every Sunday; indeed I think it is too little, and alſo would wiſh that your Lorſhip did the like. Nay, nay, Deane Thomas (ſaith my Lord) let that be, for we are not ordained to Preach. Then ſaid Thomas, where your Lordſhip biddeth me preach, when I find any good Epiſtle, or a good Goſpel, truly my Lord, I have read the New Teſtament and the Old, and all the Epiſtles and Goſpels, and among them all I could never find an evil Epiſtle, or an evil Goſpel; but if your Lordſhip will ſhew me the good Epiſtle, and the good Goſpel, and the evil Epiſtle and the evil Goſpel, then I ſhall preach the good, and omit the evil. Then ſpake my Lord ſtoutly and ſaid, I thank God that I never knew what the Old and New Teſtament was, (and of theſe words roſe a Proverb which is Common in Scotland, Ye are like the Biſhop of Dunkelden, that knew neither new nor old Law:) therefore Dean Thomas, I will know nothing but my Portuiſe and my Pontifical. Go your way, and let be all theſe Fantaſies, for if you perſevere in theſe erroneous opinions, ye will repent it when you may not mend it. Thomas ſaid, I truſt my cauſe be juſt in the Preſence of God, and therefore I paſs not much what do follow thereupon, and ſo my Lord and he departed at that time. And ſoon after a Summons was directed from the Cardinal of Saint Andrews, and the ſaid Biſhop of Dundkelden upon the ſaid Dean Thomas Forret, upon two Black Friers, called Frier John Kelow, and another called Benarage, and upon one Prieſt of Striveling called Duncane Sympſon, and one Gentleman called Robert Foſter in Striveling, with other three or four, with them of the Town of Striveling; who at the day of their appearance after their ſummoning, were condemned to the death without any place for recantation, becauſe (as was alledged) they were Hereſiarchs, or chief Hereticks and Teachers of Hereſies, and eſpecially becauſe many of them were at the Bridal and Marriage of a Prieſt, who was Vicar of Tawbody beſide Striveling, and did eat Fleſh in Lent at the ſaid Bridal, and ſo they were all together burnt upon the Caſtle Hill at Edenborough, where they that were firſt bound to the Stake godly and marvellouſly did comfort them which came behind.

It is too much in the Popes Church to preach every Sunday. The Biſhop of Dunkelden was not ordained to preach.

Here followeth the manner of perſecution uſed by the Cardinal of Scotland againſt certain Perſons in Perth.

Anno 1543.

Perſecutors.	Martyrs.
David Beton Biſhop, and Cardinal of St. Andrews.	Robert Lambe. William Anderſon. James Hunter. James Raveleſon. James Founleſon. Hellen Stirke his Wife.

Their Cauſes.

FIrſt, there was a certain Act of Parliament made in the Government of the Lord Hamelton, Earl of Arran, and Governour of Scotland, giving priviledge to all Men of the Realm of Scotland, to read the Scriptures in their Mother Tongue and Language, ſecluding nevertheleſs all reaſoning, conference, convocation of people to hear the Scriptures read or expounded. Which liberty of private reading being granted by publique Proclamation, lacked not his own fruit, ſo that in ſundry parts of Scotland thereby were opened the eyes of the elect of God to ſee the truth, and abhor the Papiſtical Abominations. Amongſt the which were certain perſons in S. Johnſton, as after is declared.

Proclamation in Scotland, permitting the private reading of the Scripture.

Blaſphemous Doctrine of a Papiſt.

At this time there was a Sermon made by Frier Spenſe, in Saint Johnſton, alias called Perth, affirming Prayer made to Saints to be ſo neceſſary, that without it their could be no hope of Salvation to Man. Which Blaſphemous Doctrine a Burgeſs of the ſaid Town, called Robert Lambe, could not abide, but accuſed him in open audience of Erroneous Doctrine, and adjured him in Gods name to utter the truth: The which the Frier, being ſtricken with fear, promiſed to do: but the trouble, Tumult, and ſtirr of the people increaſed ſo, that the Frier could have no audience, and yet the ſaid Robert with great danger of his life ſcaped the Hands of the Multitude, namely of the Women, who contrary to nature addreſſed them to extreme cruelty againſt him.

Robert Lambs Martyr.

Rob. Lambe in great danger.

At this time in the year of our Lord, 1543. the Enemies of the truth procured John Chartuous, who favoured the truth, and was Provoſt of the ſaid City and Town of Perth, to be depoſed from his Office by the ſaid Governors Authority, and a Papiſt called Maſter Alexander Marbeck to be choſen in his Room, that they might bring the more eaſily their wicked and ungodly enterpriſe to an end.

A Papiſt ſet in office.

After the depoſing of the former Provoſt, and Election of the other, in the Month of January the year aforeſaid, on Saint Pauls day, came to Saint Johnſton, the Governor, the Cardinal, the Earl of Argile, Juſtice Sir John Cambel of Lunde, Knight, and Juſtice Defort, the Lord Borthwike, the Biſhops of Dunblane, and Orkeney, with certain other of the Nobility. And although there were many accuſed for the Crime of Hereſie (as they term it) yet theſe perſons onely were apprehended upon the ſaid St. Pauls day, Robert Lambe, William Anderſon, James Hunter, James Raveleſon, James Founleſon, and Hellen Stirke his Wife, and were caſt that night in the Spay Tower of the ſaid City, the morrow after to abide judgment.

Rob. Lambe, W. Anderſon, James Hunter, James Raveleſon, James Founleſon. Hellen Stirke his wife caſt in Priſon.

Upon the morrow, when they appeared and were brought forth to judgment in the Town, was laid in general to all their charge the violating of the Act of Parliament before expreſſed, and their conference and aſſemblies in hearing and expounding of Scripture againſt the tenor of the ſaid Act. Robert Lambe was accuſed in ſpecial for interrupting of the Frier in the Pulpit; which he not onely confeſſed, but alſo affirmed conſtantly, that it was the duty of no man, which underſtood and knew the truth, to hear the ſame impugned without contradiction; and therefore ſundry which there were preſent in judgement, who hid the knowledge of the Truth, ſhould bear the burden in Gods preſence for conſenting to the ſame.

The ſaid Robert alſo with William Anderſon, and James Raveleſon were accuſed for hanging up the Jmage of Saint Francis in a cord, nailing of Rams Horns to his head, and a Cowes rump to his tail, and for eating of a gooſe on Alhallow Even.

Lambe, Anderſon, Raveleſon, for hanging S. Francis in a cord.

James Hunter being a ſimple man and without learning, and a Fletcher by occupation, ſo that he could be charged with no great knowledge in Doctrine, yet becauſe he often uſed that ſuſpect company of the reſt, he was accuſed.

Jam. Hunter, for uſing ſuſpect company.

The Woman Hellen Stirke was accuſed, for that in her Child-bed ſhe was not accuſtomed to call upon the name of the Virgin Mary, being exhorted thereto by her neighbours, but onely upon God for Jeſus Chriſts ſake, and becauſe ſhe ſaid in like manner, that if ſhe herſelf had been in the time of the Virgin Mary, God might have looked to her humility and baſe eſtate, as he did to the Virgins, in making her the Mother of Chriſt, thereby meaning, that there were no merits in the Virgin, which procured her that honour to be made the Mother of Chriſt, and to be preferred before other Women, but Gods onely free mercy exalted her to that eſtate. Which words were counted moſt execrable in the face of all the Clergy, and of the whole multitude.

Hellen Stirke for calling upon Jeſus and not our Lady, in Childbed.

James Raveleſon aforeſaid, building a Houſe, ſet upon the round of his fourth ſtair the three Crowned Diadem of Peter carved of Tree, which the Cardinal took as done in mockage of his Cardinals Hat, and this procured no favour to the ſaid James at their Hands.

Raveleſon, for ſetting up in his houſe a triple crown of S. Peter.

Theſe forenamed perſons upon the morrow after Saint Pauls day were condemned and judged to death, and that by an Aſſiſe, for violating (as was alledged) the Act of Parliament, in reaſoning and conferring upon Scripture, for eating Fleſh upon days forbidden, for for interrupting the holy Frier in the Pulpit, for dithonouring of Images, and blaſpheming of the Virgin Mary, as they alleadged.

After Sentence given, their hands were bound, and the men cruelly intreated. Which thing the Woman beholding, deſired likewiſe to be bound by the Sergeants with her Husband for Chriſt his ſake.

There was great interceſſion made by the Town in the mean ſeaſon for the life of theſe perſons aforenamed, to the Governour, who of himſelf was willing ſo to have done, that they might have been delivered. But the Governour was ſo ſubject to the appetite of the cruel Prieſts, that he could not do that which he would. Yea, they menaced to aſſiſt his Enemies and to depoſe him, except he aſſiſted their cruelty.

There were certain Prieſts in the City, who did eat and drink before in theſe honeſt mens Houſes, to whom the Prieſts were much bounden. Theſe Prieſts were earneſtly deſired to intreat for their Hoſteſs at the Cardinals hands: but they altogether refuſed, deſiring rather their death, than preſervation. So cruel are theſe Beaſts from the loweſt to the higheſt.

Then after, they were carried by a great band of Armed men (for they feared Rebellion in the Town except they had their Men of War) to the place of Execution, which was common to all Thieves, and that to make their cauſe appear more odious to the People.

The Martyrdom of theſe good Men.

Robert Lambe at the Gallows-foot made his Exhortation to the People, deſiring them to fear God, and leave the Leaven of Papiſtical abominations, and manifeſtly there propheſied of the ruine and plague which came upon the Cardinal thereafter. So every one comforting another, and aſſuring themſelves that they ſhould Sup together in the Kingdom of Heaven that Night, they commended themſelves to God, and died conſtantly in the Lord.

The Woman deſired earneſtly to die with her Husband, but ſhe was not ſuffered; yet following him to the place of Execution, ſhe gave him comfort, exhorting him to perſeverance and patience for Chriſts ſake, and parting from him with a kiſs, ſaid on this manner, Husband, rejoyce, for we have lived together many joyful days; but this day, in which we muſt die, ought to be moſt joyful unto us both, becauſe we muſt have joy for ever; therefore I will not bid you good Night, for we ſhall ſuddenly meet with joy in the Kingdom of Heaven. The Woman after that was taken to a place to be drowned, and albeit ſhe had a Child ſucking on her Breaſt, yet this moved nothing the unmerciful hearts of the Enemies. So after ſhe had commended her Children to the Neighbours of the Town for Gods ſake, and the ſucking Barn was given to the Nurſe, ſhe ſealed up the Truth by her death. Ex Regiſt. & inſtrumentis à Scotia miſſis.

The Condemnation of Mr. George Wiſehart Gentleman, who ſuffered Martyrdom for the Faith of Chriſt Jeſus at St. Andrews in Scotland, An. 1546. Mar. 1. with the Articles objected againſt him, and his Anſwers to the ſame.

Anno 1545.

The Examination of Mr. George Wiſehart.

WIth moſt tender affection and unfeigned heart conſider (gentle Reader) the uncharitable manner of the Accuſation of Mr. George Wiſehart, made by the bloody Enemies of Chriſts Faith. Note alſo the Articles whereof he was accuſed, by order digeſted, and his meek Anſwers ſo far as he had leave and leiſure to ſpeak. Finally, ponder with no diſſembling Spirit the furious rage and tragical cruelneſs of the malignant Church, in perſecuting of this bleſſed Man of God; and of the contrary, his humble, patient, and moſt godly Anſwers made to them ſuddenly without all fear, not having reſpect to their glorious menacings and boiſterous threats, but charitably and without ſtop anſwering, not moving his countenance, nor changing his viſage, as in his Accuſation hereafter following manifeſtly ſhall appear.

But before I enter into his Articles, I thought it not impertinent ſomewhat to touch concerning the life and converſation of this godly man, according as of late it came to my hands, and certified in Writing by a certain Scholar of his, ſometime named Emery Tylney, whoſe words of Teſtimonial, as he wrote them to me, here follow.

About the Year of our Lord 1543. there was in the Univerſity of Cambridge one Mr. George Wiſehart, commonly called Mr. George of Benets Colledge, who was a Man of Tall ſtature, Pold-headed, and on the ſame a round French-Cap of the beſt; judged to be of melancholy complexion by his Phyſiognomy, black haired, long bearded, comly of perſonage, well ſpoken after his Country of Scotland, courteous, lowly, lovely, glad to teach, deſirous to learn, and was well travelled, having on him for his habit or cloathing, never but a Mantle or Frieze Gown to the Shoes, a black Millian Fuſtian Doublet, and plain black Hoſen, courſe new Canvaſs for his Shirts, and white falling Bands and Cuffs at his hands. All the which Apparel he gave to the Poor, ſome weekly, ſome monthly, ſome quarterly, as he liked, ſaving his French-Cap, which he kept the whole year of my being with him.

He was a Man modeſt, temperate, fearing God, hating covetouſneſs; for his Charity had never end, night, noon, nor day; he forbare one meal in three, one day in four for the moſt part, except ſomething to comfort Nature. He lay hard upon a puff of Straw, and courſe new Canvaſs Sheets, which when he changed, he gave away. He had commonly by his Bed-ſide a Tub of Water, in the which, (his People being in Bed, the Candle put out and all quiet) he uſed to bathe himſelf, as I being very young, being aſſured, often heard him, and in one light Night diſcerned him; he loved me tenderly, and I him, for my age, as effectually. He taught with great modeſty and gravity, ſo that ſome of his People thought him ſevere, and would have ſlain him, but the Lord was his defence. And he, after due correction for their malice, by good exhortation amended them and went his way. O that the Lord had left him to me his poor Boy, that he might have finiſhed that he had begun! For in his Religon he was as you ſee here in the reſt of his life, when he went into Scotland with divers of the Nobility, that came for a Treaty to King Henry the Eighth. His Learning was no leſs ſufficient, than his deſire; always preſt and ready to do good in that he was able, both in the Houſe privately, and in the School publickly, profeſſing and reading divers Authors.

If I ſhould declare his love to me, and all men, his charity to the poor, in giving, relieving, caring, helping, providing, yea, infinitely ſtudying how to do good unto all, and hurt to none, I ſhould ſooner want words than juſt cauſe to commend him.

All this I teſtifie with my whole heart, and truth, of this godly man. He that made all, governeth all, and ſhall judge all, knoweth that I ſpeak the truth, that the ſimple may be ſatisfied, the arrogant confounded, the hypocrite diſcloſed.

Miſſæ miniſterium, myſterium iniquitatis.

To the ſaid Mr. George being in Captivity in the Caſtle of St. Andrews, the Dean of the ſame Town was ſent by the commandment of the Cardinal, and his wicked Counſel, and there ſummoned the ſaid Maſter George, that he ſhould upon the Morning following appear before the Judge, then and there to give account of his ſeditious and heretical Doctrine.

Mr. George Wiſehart ſummoned out of Priſon to appear.

To whom Mr. George anſwered, What needeth, ſaid he, my Lord Cardinal to ſummon me to anſwer for my Doctrine openly before him, under whoſe power and dominion I am thus ſtraightly bound with Irons? May not my Lord compel me to anſwer of his extort power? Or believeth he that I am unprovided to render account of my Doctrine? To manifeſt your ſelves what man ye are, it is well done that ye keep your old Ceremonies, and Conſtitutions made by men.

Mr George Wiſeharts anſwer to the Dean that ſummoned him.

Upon the next morning, the Lord Cardinal cauſed his Servants to addreſs themſelves in their moſt warlike array, with Jack, Knapskal, Splent, Speare, and Ax, more ſeeming for the Warr, than for the preaching of the true Word of God.

Mr. Wiſehart brought again before the Biſhops.

And when theſe armed Champions marching in warlike order had conveyed the Biſhops into the Abbey Church, incontinently they ſent for Maſter George, who was conveyed into the ſaid Church by the Captain of the Caſtle, accompanied with an hundred men addreſſed in manner aforeſaid; Like a Lamb led they him to Sacrifice. As he entred into the Abbey Church Door, there was a poor man lying, vexed with great infirmities asking of his Alms, to whom he flung his purſe.

Mr. Wiſehart caſteth his purſe to a poor man.

And when he came before the Lord Cardinal, by and by the Subprior of the Abbey, called Dean John Winryme, ſtood up in the Pulpit, and made a Sermon to all the Congregation there then aſſembled, taking his matter out of xiij. Chapter of Matthew, whoſe Sermon was divided into four principal parts.

The Sermon of John Winryme.

The firſt part was a brief and ſhort declaration of the Evangeliſt.

The ſecond part, of the interpretation of the good ſeed. And becauſe he called the Word of God the good ſeed, and Hereſie the evil ſeed, he declared what Hereſie was, and how it ſhould be known; which he defined on this manner, Hereſie is a falſe opinion defended with pertinacy, clearly repugning the Word of God.

Hereſie defined.

The cauſe of Hereſie.

The third part of the Sermon was, the cauſe of Hereſie within that Realm, and all other Realms. The cauſe of Hereſie (quoth he) is the ignorance of them which have the cures of mens Souls: to whom it neceſſarily belongeth to have the true underſtanding of the Word of God, that they may be able to win again the falſe Doctors of Hereſies, with the Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God; and not onely to win again, but alſo to overcome them, as ſaith Paul. A Biſhop muſt be faultleſs, as it becometh the Miniſter of God, not ſtubborn, nor angry, no drunkard, no fighter, nor given to filthy lucre, but harborous, one that loveth goodneſs, ſober minded, righteous, holy, temperate, and ſuch as cleaveth unto the true Word of Doctrine, that he may be able to exhort with wholeſome learning, and to improve that which they ſay againſt him.

Tit. 1. 7.

The manner to know an Heretick.

The fourth part of his Sermon was how Hereſies ſhould be known. Hereſies (quoth he) be known after this manner: as the Goldſmith knoweth the fine gold from the unperfect, by the Touchſtone; ſo likewiſe may we know Hereſie by the undoubted Touchſtone, that is, the true, ſincere, and undefiled Word of God. At the laſt he added, That Hereticks ſhould be put down in this preſent life. To which Propoſition the Goſpel appeared to repugn; which he intreated of; Let them go unto the Harveſt; the Harveſt is the end of the world. Nevertheleſs, he affirmed that they ſhould be put down by the Civil Magiſtrate and Law. And when he ended his Sermon, incontinently they cauſed Maſter George to aſcend into the Pulpit, there to hear his Accuſation and Articles. And right againſt them ſtood by one of the fed flock, a Monſter, John Lauder, laden full of curſings written in Paper. Of which he took out a Roll, both long and alſo full of curſings, threats, maledictions, and words of deviliſh ſpight and malice, ſaying to the innocent Mr. George ſo many cruel and abominable words and he hit him ſo ſpightfully with the Popes thunder, that the ignorant people dreaded leſt the earth then would have ſwallowed him up quick. Notwithſtanding he ſtood ſtill with great patience, hearing their ſayings, not once moving or changing his countenance.

The Goſpel was of letting the tares to grow unto Harveſt.

John Lauder accuſer.

The way to fear the Ignorant.

When that this fed Sow had read throughout all his lying menacings, his face running down with ſweat, and frothing at his mouth like a Boar, he ſpit at Maſter George's face, ſaying, what anſwereſt thou to theſe ſayings, thou runnagate Traitor, Thief, which we have duely proved by ſufficient witneſs againſt thee? Maſter George hearing this, kneeled down upon his knees in the Pulpit, making his prayer to God. When he had ended his prayer, ſweetly and Chriſtianly he anſwered to them all in this manner.

The fruits of their charity.

Maſter George his Anſwer.

Mr. Wiſeharts anſwer.

MAny horrible ſayings unto me a Chriſtian man, many words abominable to hear ye have ſpoken here this day, which not onely to teach, but alſo to think, I thought ever great abomination. Wherefore I pray your Diſcretions quietly to hear me, that ye may know what were my ſayings and the manner of my Doctrine. This my Petition (my Lord) I deſire to be heard for three cauſes.

Three cauſes why Maſter Wiſehart deſired to be heard.

The firſt is, Becauſe through preaching of the Word of God, his glory is made manifeſt. It is reaſonable therefore, for the advancing of the glory of God, that ye hear me, teaching truly the pure Word of God, without any diſſimulation.

The ſecond reaſon is, Becauſe that your health ſpringeth of the Word of God; for he worketh all things, by his Word. It were therefore an unrighteous thing if ye ſhould ſtop your Ears from me, teaching truly the Word of God.

The 2. cauſe.

The third reaſon is, becauſe your Doctrine uttereth many Blaſphemous and abominable words, not coming of the inſpiration of God, but of the Devil, with no leſs peril than of my life. It is juſt therefore and reaſonable that your Diſcretions ſhould know what my words and Doctrine are, and what I have ever taught in my time in this Realm, that I periſh not unjuſtly, to the great peril of your Souls. Wherefore both for the glory and honour of God, your own health, and ſafeguard of my life, I beſeech your Diſcretions to hear me, and in the mean time I ſhall recite my Doctrine without any colour.

The 3. cauſe.

Mr. Wiſeharts Doctrine.

Firſt and chiefly, ſince the time I came into this Realm I taught nothing but the ten Commandments of God, the twelve Articles of the Faith, and the Prayer of the Lord in the Mother Tongue. Moreover, in Dundee I taught the Epiſtle of Saint Paul to the Romans. And I ſhall ſhew your Diſcretions faithfully, what faſhion and manner I uſed when I taught, without any human dread; ſo that your Diſcretions give your Ears benevolent and attent.

Suddenly then with an high voice cried the Accuſer, the fed Sow, Thou Heretick, Runnagate, Traitor, and Thief, it was not lawful for three to preach. Thou haſt taken the Power at thine own hand, without any Authority of the Church. We forethink that thou haſt been a Preacher ſo long. Then all the whole Congregation of the Prelates, with their Complices, ſaid theſe words; If we give him licence to preach, he is ſo crafty, and in the Holy Scripture ſo exerciſed, that he will perſwade the people to his opinion, and raiſe them againſt us.

The cry of the Scribes and Phariſees

Maſter George ſeeing their malicious and wicked intent appealed from the Lord Cardinal to the Lord Governor, as to an indifferent and equal Judg. To whom the Accuſer, John Lauder aforeſaid, with hoggiſh voice anſwered; Is not my Lord Cardinal the ſecond Perſon within this Realm, Chancellor of Scotland, Archbiſhop of Saint Andrews, Biſhop of Meropois, Commendator of Aberbroſhok, Legatus natus, Legatus à Latere? And ſo reciting as many Titles of his unworthy honours as would have loden a Ship, much ſooner an Aſſe; Is not he (quoth John Lauder) an equal Judge apparently unto thee? Whom other deſireſt thou to be thy Judge?

Wiſehart appealeth to the Governor.

The ſtyle and title of the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews.

To whom this humble man anſwering, ſaid, I refuſe not my Lord Cardinal, but I deſire the Word of God to be my Judge, and the Temporal Eſtate, with ſome of your Lordſhips mine Auditors, becauſe I am here my Lord Governors Priſoner. Whereupon the prideful and ſcornful people that ſtood by mocked him, ſaying, Such man, ſuch Judge; ſpeaking ſeditious and reproachful words againſt the Governor and other the Nobles, meaning them alſo to be Hereticks. And incontinent without all delay they would have given Sentence upon Maſter George, and that without further Proceſs, had not certain men there counſelled the Cardinal to read again the Articles, and to hear his Anſwers thereupon, that the people might not complain of his wrongful Condemnation.

The words of the people againſt the L. Governor.

And

And ſhortly to declare, theſe were the Articles following, with his Anſwers, as far as they would give him leave to ſpeak. For when he intended to mitigate their leaſings, and ſhew the manner of his Doctrin, by and by they ſtopped his mouth with another Article.

1 THou falſe Heretick, Runnagate, Traitour and Theif, deceiver of the people, thou deſpiſeſt the Holy Church, and in it like caſe contemneſt my Lord Governors Authority. And this we know for ſurety, that when thou preachedſt in Dundee, and was charged by my Lord Governors Authority to deſiſt, nevertheleſs thou wouldeſt not obey, but perſeveredſt in the ſame; and therefore the Biſhop of Brothen curſed thee, and delivered thee into the Devils Hands, and gave thee in commandment that thou ſhouldſt preach no more. That notwithſtanding, thou didſt continue obſtinately.

Anſwer. My Lords, I have read in the Acts of the Apoſtles, that it is not lawful to deſiſt from the preaching of the Goſpel for the threats and menaces of men. Therefore Acts 5. it is written, We ſhall rather obey God than Man. I have Malach. 2. alſo read in the Prophet Malachy, I ſhall curſe your bleſſings, and bleſs your curſings, believing firmly, that the Lord will turn your curſings into bleſſings.

2 Article. 2 Thou falſe Heretick didſt ſay, That the Prieſt, ſtanding at the Altar ſaying Maſs, was like a Fox wagging his tail in July.

Anſwer. My Lords, I ſaid not ſo, Theſe were my ſayings; The moving of the Body outward, without the inward moving of the Heart, is naught elſe but the playing of an Ape, and not the true ſerving of God. For God is a Secret Searcher of Mens Hearts; therefore who will truely Adore and Honour God, he muſt in Spirit and Verity honour him. Then the Accuſer ſtopped his mouth with another Article.

3 Article. 3 Thou falſe Heretick preachedſt againſt the Sacraments, ſaying, that there were not ſeven Sacraments.

Anſwer. Of the ſeven Sacraments. My Lords, if it be your pleaſures, I never taught of the number of the Sacraments, whether they were ſeven or eleven. So many as are inſtituted by Chriſt are ſhewed to us by the Evangel, I profeſs openly. Except it be the Word of God I dare affirm nothing.

4 Article. 4 Thou falſe Heretick haſt openly taught, that Auricular Confeſſion is not a bleſſed Sacrament. And thou ſayeſt that we ſhould onely confeſs us to God, and to no Prieſt.

Anſwer. Confeſſion, what it is and towhom it ought to be made. My Lords, I ſay, that Auricular Confeſſion, ſeeing that it hath no promiſe of the Evangel, therefore it cannot be a Sacrament. Of the Confeſſion to be made to God, there are many Teſtimonies in Scripture, as when David ſaith, I thought I would knowledge mine iniquity againſt my ſelf unto the Lord, and he forgave the puniſhment of my ſin, Pſalm, 32. Here Confeſſion ſignifieth the ſecret knowledge of our ſins before God. When I exhorted the people in this manner, I reproved James 3. no manner of Confeſſion. And further Saint James ſaith, Knowledge your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that you may be healed. When that he had ſaid theſe words, the Biſhops and their Complices cried, and grinned with their teeth, ſaying, See ye not what colours he hath in his ſpeaking, that he may beguile us and ſeduce us to his opinion?

5 Article. 5 Thou Heretick didſt ſay openly, that it was neceſſary to every man to know and underſtand his Baptiſm, and what it was, contrary to general Councels and the Eſtate of the Holy Church.

Anſwer. Baptiſme, how neceſſary it is to be known of all men. Confirmation wherefore it ſerveth. Ex ore Infantium. My Lords, I believe there be none ſo unwiſe here, that will make Merchandiſe with a French Man, or any other unknown ſtranger, except he know and underſtand firſt the condition or promiſe made by the French Man or ſtranger: So likewiſe I would that we underſtood what thing we promiſe in the name of the Infant unto God in Baptiſm. For this cauſe I believe ye have Confirmation. Then ſaid Maſter Bleiter Chaplain, that he had the Devil within him, and the Spirit of Error. Then anſwered him a Child, ſaying, The Devil cannot ſpeak ſuch words as yonder Man doth ſpeak.

6 Article. 6 Thou Heretick, Traitor, Thief, thou ſaidſt that the Sacrament of the Altar was but a piece of Bread baked upon the aſhes, and no other thing elſe, and all that is there done, is but a Superſtitious Rite againſt the Commandment of God.

Anſwer. The Papiſts reproved for liers and miſreporters. Oh Lord God! ſo manifeſt Lies and Blaſphemies the Scripture doth not teach you. As concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, my Lords, I never taught any thing againſt the Scripture, the which I ſhall, by Gods Grace, make manifeſt this day, I being ready therefore to ſuffer death.

The lawful uſe of the Sacrament. The lawful uſe of the Sacrament is moſt acceptable unto God; but the great abuſe of it is very deteſtable unto him. But what occaſion they have to ſay ſuch words of me, I ſhall ſhortly ſhew your Lordſhips. I The ſtory of a Jew. once chanced to meet with a Jew, when I was ſailing upon the water of Rhene. I did inquire of him what was the cauſe of his pertinacy, that he did not believe that the true Meſſias was come, conſidering that they had ſeen all the Prophecies which were ſpoken of him to be fulfilled. Moreover the Prophecies taken away, and the Scepter of Juda, and by many other Teſtimonies of the Scripture I vanquiſhed him that Meſſias was come, the which they called Jeſus of Nazareth. This Jew anſwered again unto me, when Meſſias cometh, he ſhall reſtore all things, and he ſhall not abrogate the Law, which was given to our Forefathers, as ye do. For why? we ſee the poor almoſt periſh through hunger amongſt you; yet you are not moved with pity toward them: but amongſt us Jews (though we be poor) there are no beggars found. The principal cauſes which ſtop the Jews from Chriſtianitie.

Secondarily, it is forbidden by the Law to fain any kind of Imagery of things in Heaven above, or in the Earth beneath, or in the Sea under the Earth, but one God onely is to be honoured: but your Sanctuaries and Churches are full of Idols. Images. The Sacrament of the Altar.

Thirdly, a piece of Bread baken upon the aſhes ye adore and worſhip, and ſay, that it is your God. I have rehearſed here but the ſayings of the Jew, which I never affirmed to be true. Then the Biſhops ſhook their Heads, and ſpitted on the Earth, and what I meant further in this matter they would not hear.

7 Article. 7 Thou falſe Heretick didſt ſay, that Extreme Unction was not a Sacrament.

Anſwer. My Lords, forſooth I never taught any thing of Extreme Unction in my Doctrine, whether it were a Sacrament or no.

8 Article. 8 Thou falſe Heretick ſaidſt, that Holy Water is not ſo good as waſh and ſuch like. Thou condemnedſt Conjuring, and ſaidſt Holy Churches curſings avail not.

Anſwer. My Lords, as for Holy Water what ſtrength it is of I taught never in my Doctrin, Conjurings and Exorciſms, if they were conformable to the Word of God I would commend them; but inſomuch as they are not conformable to the Commandment and Word of God, I reprove them.

9 Article. 9 Thou falſe Heretick and Runnagate haſt ſaid, that every lay-man is a Prieſt, and ſuch like, Thou ſaidſt, that the Pope hath no more Power, than any other Man.

Anſwer. My Lords, I taught nothing but the Word of God, I Remember that I have read in ſome places in St. John and St. Peter, of the which the one ſaith He hath made us Kings and Prieſts. The other ſaith, He hath made Apoc. 1 and 5. 1 Pet. 2. us a Kingly Prieſthood. Wherefore I have affirmed that any man being cunning in the Word of God, and the true Faith of Jeſus Chriſt, hath this Power given him from God, and not by the Power or Violence of Men, but by the Vertue of the Word of God, the which Word is called the Power of God as witneſſeth St. Paul evidently Rom. 1. enough. And again I ſay, that any unlearned Man, The inſtrument to bind and looſe. not exerciſed in the Word of God, nor yet conſtant in his Faith, whatſoever Eſtate or Order he be of, I ſay, he hath no power to bind or looſe, ſeeing he wanteth the Inſtrument, by the which he bindeth or looſeth, that is to ſay, the Word of God.

After that he had ſaid theſe words, all the Biſhops laughed, and mocked him. When that he beheld their laughing, Laugh ye (ſaith he) my Lords? Though that theſe ſayings appear ſcornful and worthy of deriſion to your Lordſhips, nevertheleſs they are very weighty to me, and of a great value, becauſe they ſtand not onely upon my ſelf, but alſo the honour and glory of God. In the mean time many godly men beholding the woodneſs and great cruelty of the Biſhops, and the invincible patience of Maſter George, did greatly mourn and lament.

10 Article. 10 Thou falſe Heretick ſaidſt, that a man hath no free will, but is like to the Stoikes, which ſay, that it is not in mans will to do any thing, but that all concupiſcence and deſire cometh by God, whatſoever kind it be of.

Anſwer. My Lords, I ſaid not ſo, truly; I ſay, that as many as believe in Chriſt firmly, unto them is given liberty, conformable to the ſaying of St. John, If the Son make you free, then ſhall ye verily be free. Of the contrary, as many as believe not in Chriſt Jeſus, they are Bondſervants of Sin, He that ſinneth is bound to ſin.

John 8.

11 Article. 11 Thou falſe Heretick ſaidſt, it is as lawful to eat Fleſh upon the Friday, as on Sunday.

Anſwer. Tim. 1. Pleaſeth in your Lordſhips, I have read in the Epiſtles of Saint Paul, that who is clean, unto him all things are clean. On the contrary, to the filthy man all things are unclean. A faithful man, clean and holy, ſanctifieth by the Word the Creature of God. But the Creature maketh no man acceptable unto God. So that a Creature may not ſanctifie any impure and unfaithful man. But to the faithful man all things are ſanctified by the Word of God and Prayer. After theſe ſayings of Maſter George then ſaid all the Biſhops with their Complices; what needeth us any witneſs againſt him? hath he not openly here ſpoken Blaſphemy?

Eating of meats. The creature doth not ſanctifie without the Word.

12 Article. 12 Thou falſe Heretick doſt ſay, that we ſhould not pray to Saints, but to God onely, Say whether thou haſt ſaid this, or no; ſay ſhortly.

Anſwer. For the weakneſs and Infirmity of the Hearers he ſaid without doubt plainly, that Saints ſhould not be honoured. My Lord (ſaid he) there are two things worthy of Note. The one is certain, the other uncertain. It is found plainly and certain in Scripture, that we ſhould worſhip and honour one God, according to the ſaying of the Firſt Commandment, Thou ſhalt onely worſhip and honour thy Lord God, with all thy Heart. But as for praying to and honouring of Saints, there is great doubt among many, whether they hear, or no, Invocation made unto them. Therefore I exhorted all men equally in my Doctrin, that they ſhould leave the unſure way, and follow that way which was taught us by our Maſter Chriſt. He is our onely Mediatour, and maketh interceſſion for us to God his Father. He is the Door by the which we muſt enter in. He that entreth not in by this Door but climbeth another way, is a Thief and a Murtherer. He is the Verity and life. He that goeth out of this way, there is no doubt but he ſhall fall into the mire; yea verily, is fallen into it already. This is the faſhion of my Doctrine, the which I have ever followed. Verily, that which I have heard and read in the Word of God I taught openly, and in no Corners. And now ye ſhall witneſs the ſame, if your Lordſhips will hear me. Except it ſtand by the Word of God, I dare not be ſo bold to affirm any thing. Theſe ſayings he rehearſed divers times.

To honour one God is certain. Mat. 4.

The ſure way is to be followed.

13 Article. 13 Thou falſe Heretick haſt Preached plainly, ſaying that there is no Purgatory, and that it is a fained thing, any man after this life to be puniſhed in Purgatory.

Anſwer. My Lords, as I have oftentimes ſaid heretofore, without expreſs Witneſs and Teſtimony of the Scripture I dare affirm nothing. I have oft and divers times read over the Bible, and yet ſuch a term found I never, nor yet any place of Scripture applicable thereunto. Therefore I was aſhamed ever to teach of that thing which I could not find in the Scripture. Then ſaid he to Maſter John Lauder his Accuſer, If you have any Teſtimony of the Scripture, by the which you may prove any ſuch place, ſhew it now before this Auditory. But this dolt had not a word to ſay for himſelf, but was as dumb as a Beetle in that matter.

Purgatory not once named in Scripture.

14 Article. 14 Thou falſe Heretick haſt taught plainly againſt the Vows of Monks, Friers, Nuns, and Prieſts; ſaying, That whoſoever was bound to ſuch like Vows, they Vowed themſelves to the Eſtate of Damnation. Moreover, that it was lawful for Prieſts to Marry Wives, and not to live ſole.

Anſwer. Mat. 19. Three kinds of chaſte men. Of ſooth, my Lords, I have read in the Evangel, that there are three kinds of chaſt men; ſome are gelded from their Mothers Womb; ſome are gelded by men; and ſome have gelded themſelves for the Kingdom of Heavens ſake. Verily, I ſay theſe men are bleſſed by the Scripture of God. But as many as have not the gift of Chaſtity, nor yet for the Evangel have overcome the Concupiſcence of the Fleſh, and have Vowed Chaſtity; ye have experience, although I ſhould hold my peace, to what Inconvenience they have Vowed themſelves.

The danger of unchaſtity.

When he had ſaid theſe words, they were all dumb, thinking better to have ten Concubines, than one Married Wife.

15 Article. 15 Thou falſe Heretick and Runnagate ſayſt, thou wilt not obey our General nor Provincial Councels.

Anſwer. My Lords, what your General Councels are I know not, I was never exerciſed in them, but to the pure Word of God I gave my labours. Read here your General Councels, or elſe give me a Book wherein they are contained, that I may read them. If they agree with the Word of God, I will not diſagree. Then the ravening Wolves turned into Woodneſs and ſaid. Wherefore let we him ſpeak any further? Read forth the reſt of the Articles, and ſtay not upon them. Among theſe cruel Tygers there was one falſe Hypocrite, a ſeducer of the People, called John Graiſind Scot, ſtanding behind John Lauders Back, haſtning him to read the reſt of the Articles, and not to tarry upon his witty and godly Anſwers. For we may not abide them, quoth he, no more than the Devil may abide the ſign of the Croſs, when it is named.

The run a pace to ſhed Blood.

Jo. Grayſind Scot an haſty butcher to his ſlaughter.

16 Article. 16 Thou Heretick ſayſt, that it is in vain to build to the honour of God Coſtly Churches, ſeeing that God remaineth not in the Churches made with Mens Hands, nor yet can God be in ſo little ſpace as betwixt the Prieſts Hands.

Anſwer. 3 Reg. 8. Job 11. My Lords, Solomon ſaith, If that the Heaven of Heavens cannot comprehend thee, how much leſs this Houſe that I have builded? And Job conſenteth to the ſame Sentence, Seeing that he is higher than the Heavens, therefore what canſt thou build unto him? He is deeper than Hell, then how ſhalt thou know him? He is longer than the Earth, and broader than the Sea. So that God cannot be comprehended in one place, becauſe that he is infinite. Theſe ſayings notwithſtanding, I never ſaid that Churches ſhould be deſtroyed, but of the contrary I affirm ever, that Churches ſhould be ſuſtained and upholden, that the people ſhould be Congregated into them, there to hear of God. And moreover, whereſoever is true Preaching of the Word of God, and the lawful uſe of the Sacraments, undoubtedly there is God himſelf: ſo that both theſe ſayings are true together; God cannot be comprehended in any place, and whereſoever two or three are gathered together in his name, there is he preſent in the midſt of them.

Whereunto Churches ſhould ſerve.

Then ſaid he to his Accuſer, If you think any otherwiſe than I ſay, ſhew forth your Reaſons before this Auditory. Then he without all reaſon being dumb, and not anſwering one word, proceeded forth in his Articles.

17 Article. 17 Thou falſe Heretick contemneſt faſting and ſayſt thou ſhouldſt not faſt.

Anſwer. True faſting he alloweth. My Lords, I find that faſting is commended in the Scripture; therefore I were a ſlanderer of the Goſpel, if I contemned faſting. And not ſo onely, but I have learned by experience, that faſting is good for the health of the Body; but God knoweth who faſteth the true faſt.

18 Article. 18 Thou falſe Heretick haſt Preached openly ſaying, that the Soul of Man ſhall ſleep till the latter day of Judgment, and ſhall not obtain life immortal until that day.

God

Anſwer. The faithful Soul ſhall never ſleep.

God full of mercy and goodneſs forgive them that ſay ſuch things of me: I wot and know ſurely by the Word of God, that he which hath begun to have the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt, and believeth firmly in him, I know ſurely that the Soul of that man ſhall never ſleep, but ever ſhall live an immortal life. The which life from day to day is reaued in grace and augmented; nor yet ſhall ever periſh or have an end, but ever immortal ſhall live with Chriſt. To the which life all that believe in him ſhall come, and reſt in eternal glory, Amen.

When the Biſhops with their Complices had accuſed this innocent men in manner and form aforeſaid, incontinently they condemned him to be burnt as an Heretick, not having reſpect to his godly Anſwers and true Reaſons which he alledged, nor yet to their own Conſciences, thinking verily that they ſhould do to God good Sacrifice, conformable to the ſaying of Saint John, They ſhall excommunicate you: yea, and the time ſhall come, that he which killeth you, ſhall think that he hath done to God good ſervice.

John 16.

The Prayer of Maſter George Wiſehart.

The Prayer of Maſter George Wiſehart, for the Congregation of God.

O Immortal God, how long ſhalt thou ſuffer the woodneſs and great cruelty of the ungodly to exerciſe their fury upon thy Servants which do further thy word in this world, ſeeing they deſire to be contrary, that is, to choke and deſtroy the true Doctrine and verity, by the which thou haſt ſhewed thy ſelf unto the world, which was all drowed in blindneſs and misknowledge of thy Name. O Lord, we know ſurely that thy true Servants muſt needs ſuffer, for thy Names ſake, Perſecution, Affliction and Troubles in this preſent life, which is but a ſhadow, as thou haſt ſhewed to us, by thy Prophets and Apoſtles. But yet we deſire thee heartily, that thou conſerve, defend and help thy Congregation, which thou haſt choſen before the beginning of the world, and give them thy grace to hear thy word, and to be thy true Servants in this preſent life.

Then by and by they cauſed the common People to void away, whoſe deſire was always to hear that innocent man to ſpeak. Then the Sons of darkneſs pronounced their Sentence definitive, not having reſpect to the judgment of God. And when all this was done and ſaid, the Cardinal cauſed his Warders to paſs again with the meek Lamb into the Caſtle, until ſuch time as the fire was made ready. When he was come into the Caſtle, then there came two gray fiends, Frier Scot and his mate, ſaying, Sir, ye muſt make your confeſſion unto us. He anſwere and ſaid, I will make no confeſſion unto you. Go fetch me yonder man that preached this day, and I will make my confeſſion unto him. Then they ſent for the Subprior of the Abbey, who came to him with all diligence. But what he ſaid in this confeſſion, I cannot ſhew.

When the fire was made ready, and the Gallows at the Weſt part of the Caſtle near to the Priory, the Lord Cardinal dreading that Maſter George ſhould have been taken away by his Friends, commanded to bend all the Ordnance of the Caſtle right againſt that part, and commanded all his Gunners to be ready and ſtand beſide their Guns, until ſuch time as he were burned. All this being done, they bound Maſter Georges hands behind his back, and led him forth with their Souldiers from the Caſtle, to the place of their wicked Execution. As he came forth of the Caſtle Gate, there met him certain Beggars asking him Alms for Gods ſake. To whom he anſwered, I want my hands wherewith I ſhould give you Alms, but the merciful Lord, of his benignity and abundance of grace that feedeth all men, vouchſafe to give you neceſſaries both unto your Bodies and Souls. Then afterward met him two falſe fiends, I ſhould ſay Friers, ſaying, Maſter George, pray to our Lady, that ſhe may be Mediatrix for you to her Son. To whom he anſwered meekly, Ceaſe, tempt me not, my Brethren. After this he was led to the fire with a Rope about his neck, and a Chain of Iron about his middle.

M. Wiſehart prayeth for the relief of the poor.

The martyrdome of maſter George Wiſehart. The burning of the bleſſed Martyr Adam Wallace.

When that he came to the fire, he ſate down upon his knees and roſe again, and thrice he ſaid theſe words, O thou Saviour of the world have mercy on me. Father of Heaven I commend my Spirit into thy holy hands. When he had made this Prayer, he turned him to the People and ſaid theſe words.

The words and exhortation of Mr. Wiſehart at his death to the People.

I beſeech you Chriſtian Brethren and Siſters, that ye be not offended in the Word of God for the Affliction and Torments, which ye ſee already prepared for me; But I exhort you that you love the Word of God, and ſuffer patiently and with a comfortable heart for the words ſake, which is your undoubted Salvation, and everlaſting comfort.

Moreover, I pray you ſhew my Brethren and Siſters, which have heard me oft before, that they ceaſe not, nor leave off the Word of God which I taught unto them, after the grace given to me, for any Perſecutions or Troubles in this world, which laſt not; and ſhew unto them, that my Doctrine was no old Wives Fables after the Conſtitutions made by men. And if I had taught mens Doctrine, I had gotten great thanks by men. But for the words ſake and true Evangel, which was given to me by the grace of God, I suffer this day by men, not sorrowfully, but with a glad heart and mind. For this cause I was sent, that I should suffer this fire for Christs sake. Consider and behold my visage, ye shall not see me change my colour. This grim fire I fear not. And so I pray you to do, if that any Persecution come unto you for the Words sake, and not to fear them that slay the Body, and afterward have no power to slay the Soul. Some have said of me, that I taught, that the Soul of man should sleep until the last day. But I know surely, and my Faith is such, that my Soul shall Sup with my Saviour Christ this night, ere it be six hours; for whom I suffer this. Then he prayed for them which accused him, saying, I beseech thee Father of Heaven to forgive them that have of any ignorance, or else have of any evil mind, forged any lies upon me, I forgive them with all my heart. I beseech Christ to forgive them that have condemned me to death this day ignorantly.

M. George Wisehart prayeth for his enemies and forgiveth them

M. George Wisehart prophesieth of the death of the Cardinal, which followed after.

And last of all he said to the People on this manner; I beseech you Brethren and Sisters to exhort your Prelates to the learning of the Word of God, that they at the last may be ashamed to do evil, and learn to do good. And if they will not convert themselves from their wicked Errour, there shall hastily come upon them the wrath of God, which they shall not eschew. Many faithful words said he in the mean time, taking no heed or care of the cruel Torments, which were then prepared for him.

And at last of all the Hangman, that was his Tormentor, sate down upon his knees, and said; Sir, I pray you forgive me, for I am not guilty of your death. To whom he answered, come hither to me. When that he was come to him, he kissed his Cheek, and said, Lo here is a token that I forgive thee. My heart, do thine Office; and by and by he was put upon the Gibbet and hanged, and there burnt to Powder. When that the People beheld the great tormenting, they might not withhold from pitious mourning and complaining of this innocent Lambs slaughter.

A Note of the just punishment of God upon the cruel Cardinal Archbishop of St. Andrews, named Beaton.

The just judgment of God upon D. Beaton, a bloody murtherer of Gods Saints.

IT was not long after the Martyrdom of the blessed man of God, Master George Wisehart aforesaid, who was put to death by David Beaton, the bloody Archbishop and Cardinal of Scotland, as is above specified, Anno, 1546. the first day of March, but the said David Beaton Archbishop of St. Andrews, by the just revenge of Gods mighty Judgment, was slain within his own Castle of St. Andrews by the hands of one Lech and other Gentlemen, who, by the Lord stirred up, brake in suddenly into his Castle upon him, and in his bed murthered him the said year, the last day of May, crying out, Alas, alas, slay me not, I am a Priest. And so like a Butcher he lived, and like a Butcher he died, and lay seven months and more unburied, and at last like a Carrion buried in a Dunghil, Anno, 1546. *Maii ult. After this David Beaton succeeded John Hamelton Archbishop of St. Andrews, Anno 1549. who to the intent that he might in no ways appear inferiour to his Predecessour, in augmenting the number of the holy Martyrs of God, in the next year following called a certain poor man to judgment, whose name was Adam Wallace. The order and manner of whose Story here followeth.

The Story and Martyrdom of Adam Wallace in Scotland.

Adam Wallace Martyr.

THere was set upon a Scaffold made hard to the Chancelary Wall of the Black-Friers Church in Edenborough, on Seats made thereupon, the L. Governour. Above him at his back sate Master Gawin Hamelton Dean of Glasgue, representing the Metropolitane Pastor thereof. Upon a seat on his right hand sate the Archbishop of Saint Andrews. At his back and side somewhat stood the Official Louthaine. Next to the Bishop of St. Andrews, the Bishop of Dunblane, the Bishop of Murray, the Abbot of Dunfermeling, the Abbot of Gleuluce, with other Churchmen of lower estimation, as the Official of St. Andrews, and other Doctors of that nest and City. And at the other end of the Seat sate Master Uchiltrie. On his left hand sate the Earl of Argyle Justice, with his Deputy Sir John Campbel of Lunde at his feet. Next him the Earl of Huntley. Then the Earl of Anguish, the Bishop of Gallaway, the Prior of St. Andrews, the Bishop of Orkenay, the Lord Forbes, Dean John Winryme Subprior of Saint Andrews, and behinde the seats stood the whole Senate, the Clark of the Register, &c.

The condemnation of Adam Wallace, a poor man. Conveniunt Scribæ & Pharisæi adversus Dominum, & adversus Christum ejus.

At the further end of the Chancelarie wall in the Pulpit was placed Master John Lauder Parson of Marbottle Accuser, clad in a Surplice, and red Hood, and a great Congregation of the whole People in the Body of the Church, standing on the ground. After that Sir John Ker, Prebendary of Saint Giles Church, was accused, convicted, and condemned, for the false making and giving forth of a Sentence of divorce, whereby he falsely divorced and parted a man and his lawful Wife in the name of the Dean of Roscalrige and certain other Judges appointed by the holy Father the Pope. He granted the falsehood, and that never any such thing was done indeed, nor yet meant nor moved by the foresaid Judges, and was agreed to be banished the Realms of Scotland and England for his life time, and to lose his right hand, if he were found or apprehended therein after, and in the mean time to leave his Benefices for ever, and they to be vacant.

Barrabas let go, poor Christ taken and crucified.

After that was brought in Adam Wallace, a simple poor man in appearance, conveyed by John of Cunnoke Servant to the Bishop of Saint Andrews, and set in the midst of the Scaffold, who was commanded to look to the Accuser; who asked him what was his name; he answered, Adam Wallace. The Accuser said he had another name, which he granted, and said he was commonly called Feane. Then asked he where he was born? Within two mile of Fayle, said he, in Kyle. Then said the Accuser, I repent that ever such a poor man as you should put these Noble Lords to so great encumbrance this day by your vain speaking. And I must speak, said he, as God giveth me grace, and I believe I have said no evil to hurt any body. Would God (said the Accuser) ye had never spoken; but you are brought forth for so horrible crimes of Heresie, as never were imagined nor heard of in this Country before, and shall be sufficiently proved, that ye cannot deny it; and I forethink that it should be heard, for hurting of weak Consciences. Now I will ye thee no more, and thou shalt hear the points that thou art accused of.

Adam Wallace brought in before the Scribes and Pharisees. J. Lauder his Accuser. Adam Wallace otherwise named J. Fean.

Adam Wallace, alias Fean: thou art openly delated and accused for preaching, saying, and teaching of the Blasphemies and abominable Heresies under written. In the first thou hast said and taught that the Bread and Wine on the Altar, after the words of Consecration, are not the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ. He turned to the Lord Governour, and Lords aforesaid, saying; I never said, nor taught any thing but that I found in this Book and Writ (having there a Bible at his belt in French, Dutch, and English) which is the Word of God, and if you will be content that the Lord God and his Word be judge to me, and this his holy Writ here it is, and where I have said wrong, I shall take that punishment you shall put to me; for I never said any thing concerning this that I am accused of, but that which I found in this Writ.

The Sacrament of the Popish Altar. The Doctrin of Adam Wallace touching the Sacrament of the Lords Body.

What didst thou say, said the Accuser? I said, quoth he, that after our Lord Jesus Christ had eaten the Paschal Lamb in his latter Supper with his Apostles, and fulfilled the Ceremonies of the old Law, he instituted a new Sacrament in remembrance of his death then to come. He took Bread, he blessed, and brake it, and gave it to his Disciples, and said, Take ye, eat ye, this is my Body which shall be broken and given for you. And likewise the Cup, blessed, and bade them drink all thereof, for that was the Cup of the New Testament which should be shed for the forgiving of many. How oft ye do this, do it in my remembrance. Matth. 26.

Then

The Archbiſhop of St. Andrews ſpeaketh. The Earl of Huntley

Then ſaid the Biſhop of Saint Andrews and the Official of Louthain, with the Dean of Glaſgue, and many other Prelats, We know this well enough. The Earl of Huntley ſaid, Thou anſwereſt not to that which is laid to thee; ſay either nay or yea thereto. He anſwered, if ye will admit God and his word ſpoken by the mouth of his bleſſed Son Jeſus Chriſt our Lord and Saviour, ye will admit that which I have ſaid; for I have ſaid and taught nothing but what the Word, which is the Trial and Touchſtone, ſaith; which ought to be judge to me, and to all the World.

Why (quoth the Earl of Huntley) haſt thou not a Judge good enough? and troweſt thou that we know not God and his Word? Anſwer to that is ſpoken to thee. And then they made the Accuſer ſpeak the ſamething over again. Thou ſayſt, quoth the Accuſer, and haſt taught, that the Bread and the Wine in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of the Conſecration, are not the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

He anſwered, I never ſaid more than the Writ ſaith, nor yet more than I have ſaid before. For I know well by St. Paul when he ſaith, Whoſoever eateth this Bread, and drinketh of this Cup unworthily, receiveth to himſelf damnation. And therefore when I taught (which was but ſeldom, and to them only which required and deſired me) I ſaid, That if the Sacrament of the Altar were truly miniſtred, and uſed as the Son of the living God did inſtitute it, where that was done, there was God himſelf by his Divine Power, by the which he is over all.

The Biſhop of Orknay asked him, Believeſt thou not, ſaid he, that the Bread and Wine in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of the Conſecration, is the very Body of God, Fleſh, Blood, and Bone?

He anſwered, I wote not what that word Conſecration meaneth. I have not much Latin, but I believe that the Son of God was conceived of the holy Ghoſt, and born of the Virgin Mary, and hath a natural Body, with hands, feet, and other Members, and in the ſame Body he walked up and down in the world, preached and taught, he ſuffered death under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried, and that by his godly power he raiſed that ſame Body again the third day; and the ſame Body aſcended into Heaven, and ſitteth at the right hand of the Father, which ſhall come again to Judge both the quick and the dead. And that this Body is a natural Body with hands and feet, and cannot be in two places at once, he ſheweth well himſelf; for the which everlaſting thanks be to him that maketh this matter clear: when the Woman brake that Ointment on him, anſwering to ſome of his Diſciples which grudged thereat, he ſaid, The Poor ſhall you always have with you, but me ye ſhall not have always. Meaning of his natural Body. And likewiſe at his aſcenſion ſaid he to the ſame Diſciples that were fleſhly, and would ever have had him remaining with them Corporally; It is needful for you that I paſs away, for if I paſs not away, the Comforter the holy Ghoſt ſhall not come to you; (meaning that his natural Body behooved to be taken away from them) But be ſtout and be of good chear, for I am with you unto the Worlds end.

Chriſts natural Body cannot be in two places at once.

Matth. 26.

John 16.

Matth 28.

And that the eating of his very Fleſh profiteth not, may well be known by his words which he ſpake in the ſixth of John; where after that he had ſaid, Except ye eat my fleſh and drink my Blood, yē ſhall not have life in you; they murmuring thereat, he reproved them for their groſs and fleſhly taking of his words, and ſaid, What will ye think when ye ſee the Son of man aſcend to the place that he came from? It is the Spirit that quickneth, the fleſh profiteth nothing, to be eaten as they took it, and even ſo take ye it.

The eating of the very fleſh of Chriſt profiteth nothing. John 6.

The Biſhop of Orknay ſpeaketh

It is an horrible Hereſie, ſaid the Biſhop of Orknay. When he began to ſpeak again, and bade the Lord Governour judge if he had right by the Writ, the Accuſer cried, Ad ſecundam. Nunc ad ſecundām, anſwered the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews.

The 2. Article againſt A. Wallace.

Then was he bidden to hear the Accuſer, who pronounded the ſecond Article, and ſaid, Thou ſaidſt likewiſe, and openly didſt teach that the Maſs is very Idolatry, and abominable in the ſight of God.

He anſwered and ſaid, I have read the Bible and Word of God in three Tongues, and have underſtood them ſo far as God gave me grace, and yet never read I that word Maſs in it all: but I found, ſaid he, that the thing that was higheſt and moſt in eſtimation amongſt men, and not in the Word of God, was Idolatry, and abominable in the ſight of God. And I ſay the Maſs is holden greatly in eſtimation, and high amongſt men, and is not founded in the Word, therefore I ſaid it was Idolatry, and abominable in the ſight of God. But if any man will find it in the Scripture, and prove it by Gods Word, I will grant mine Errour, and that I have failed; Otherwiſe not. And in that caſe I will ſubmit me to all lawful correction and puniſhment. Ad tertiam, ſaid the Archbiſhop.

Anſwer.

The Maſs not found in Scripture Argumentum.

Then ſaid the Accuſer, Thou haſt ſaid and openly taught, That the God which we worſhip, is but Bread, ſown of Corn, growing of the earth, baked of mens hands, and nothing elſe.

3. Article

He anſwered, I worſhip the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, three Perſons in one Godhead, which made and faſhioned the Heaven and Earth, and all that is therin of nought; but I know not which God you worſhip: and if you will ſhew me whom you worſhip, I will ſhew you what he is, as I can by my Judgment.

Anſwer.

The Pope God.

Believeſt thou not (ſaid the Accuſer) that the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of the Conſecration betwixt the Prieſts hands, is the very Body and Blood of the Son of God, and God himſelf? What the Body of God, is ſaid he, and what kind of Body he hath, I have ſhewed you, ſo far as I have found in the Scripture.

Then ſaid the Accuſer, Thou haſt preached, ſaid, and openly taught divers and ſundry other great Errours and abominable Hereſies againſt all the ſeven Sacraments, which for ſhortneſs of time I pretermit and overpaſs. Whether doſt thou grant thy foreſaid Articles that thou art accuſed of, or no, and thou ſhalt hear them ſhortly. And then repeated the Accuſer the three Articles aforeſain ſhortly over, and asked him whether he granted or denied them?

He anſwered that which before he had ſaid of his Anſwers, and that he ſaid nothing but agreeing to the holy word as he underſtood, ſo God judge him, and his own Conſcience accuſe him, and thereby would he abide unto the time he were better inſtructed by Scripture, and the contrary proved, even to the death: and he ſaid to the Lord Governour and other Lords, if you condemn me for holding by Gods Word, my innocent Blood ſhall be required at your hands, when ye ſhall be brought before the Judgment Seat of Chriſt, who is mighty to defend my innocent cauſe, before whom ye ſhall not deny it, nor yet be able to reſiſt his wrath, to whom I refer the vengence, as it is written, Vengence is mine and I will reward. Heb. 10.

The wor of Adam Wallace to the Lord Governour and the Lords.

Then gave they forth Sentence, and condemned him by the Laws, and ſo left him to the Secular Power, in the hands of Sir John Campbel Juſtice Deputy, who delivered him to the Provoſt of Edenborough to be burnt on the Caſtle-Hill, who incontinent made him to be put in the uppermoſt houſe in the Town, with Irons about his Legs and neck, and gave charge to Sir Hugh Terry to keep the Key of the ſaid houſe, an ignorant Miniſter and Imp of Satan and of the Biſhops; who by direction ſent to the poor man two Gray Friers, to inſtruct him, with whom he would enter into no communing. Soon after that were ſent in two black Friers, an Engliſh Frier, and another ſubtile Sophiſter, called Arbirotomy, with the which Engliſh Frier he would have reaſoned and declared his Faith by the Scriptures. Who anſwered, he had no Commiſſion to enter into diſputation with him, and ſo departed and left him.

Friers ſent to inſtruct A. Wallace

Then was ſent to him a worldly wiſe man, and not ungodly in the underſtanding of the Truth, the Dean of Roſcalrige, who gave him Chriſtian conſolation, among the which he exhorted him to believe the reality of the Sacrament after the Conſecration. But he would conſent to nothing that had not evidence in the holy Scripture, and ſo paſſed over that night in ſinging, and lauding God to the ears of divers hearers, having learned the Pſalter of David without Book, ſo his conſolation: For they had before ſpoiled him of his Bible, which always, till after he was condemned, was with him where ever he went. After that Sir Hugh knew that he had certain Books to read and comfort his Spirit, he came in a rage rage and took the ſame from him, leaving him deſolate (to his power) of all conſolation, and gave divers ungodly and injurious provocations by his deviliſh venom, to have perverted him a poor Innocent, from the patience and hope he had in Chriſt his Saviour; but God ſuffered him not to be moved therewith, as plainly appeared to the hearers and ſeers for the time.

So all the next Morning abode this poor man in Irons, and proviſion was commanded to be made for his burning againſt the next day. Which day the Lord Governour, and all the Principal both ſpiritual and temporal Lords, departed from Edenborough to their other buſineſs.

The Dean cometh again to Ad. Wallace.

After they were departed, came the Dean of Roſcalrige to him again, and reaſoned with him after his wit. Who anſwered as before, he would ſay nothing concerning his Faith, but as the Scripture teſtifieth, yea, though an Angel came from Heaven to perſwade him to the ſame; ſaving that he confeſſed himſelf to have received good conſolation of the ſaid Dean in other behalf as becometh a Chriſtian.

Sir Hugh Terry cometh again to Ad. Wallace.

Then after came in the ſaid Terry again, and examined him after his old manner, and ſaid he would gar Devils to come forth of him ere Even. To whom he anſwered, You ſhould rather be a godly man to give me conſolation in my caſe. When I knew you were come, I prayed God I might reſiſt your temptations; which, I thank him, he hath made me able to do; therefore I pray you, let me alone in peace. Then he asked of one of the Officers that ſtood by, Is your Fire making ready? Who told him it was. He anſwered, as it pleaſeth God; I am ready ſoon or late as it ſhall pleaſe him; and then he ſpake to one faithful in that company, and bade him commend him to all the Faithful, being ſure to meet together with them in Heaven. From that time, to his forth coming to the Fire, ſpake no man with him.

The Provoſt of Edenborough forbiddeth him to ſpeak to any man.

At his forth coming, the Provoſt with great menacing words forbade him to ſpeak to any man, or any to him, as belike he had commandment of his Superiours. Coming from the Town to the Caſtle-Hill, the common People ſaid, God have mercy upon him. And on you too (ſaid he.) Being beſide the Fire, he lifted up his eyes to Heaven twice or thrice, and ſaid to the People, Let it not offend you that I ſuffer death this day for the Truths ſake; for the Diſciple is not greater than his Maſter. Then was the Provoſt angry that he ſpake. Then looked he to Heaven again, and ſaid, They will not let me ſpeak. The Cord being about his Neck, the Fire was lighted, and ſo departed he to God conſtantly, and with good countenance to our ſights. Ex teſtimoniis & literis è Scotia petitis, Anno 1550.

The words of Adam Wallace to the People.

The Schiſm that aroſe in Scotland for the Pater Noſter.

A Schiſm in Scotland by a Sermon of Ric. Marſhal a Black-Frier, preaching that the Pater noſter ſhould not be ſaid to Saints.

AFter that Richard Marſhall, Doctor of Divinity, and Prior of the Black-Friers at the New-Caſtle in England, had declared in his Preaching at St. Andrews in Scotland, that the Lords Prayer (commonly called the Paſter Noſter) ſhould be done only to God, and not to Saints, neither to any other Creature; the Doctors of the Univerſity of St. Andrews, together with the Gray-Friers, who had long ago taught the People to pray the Pater Noſter to Saints, had great indignation that their old Doctrine ſhould be repugned, and ſtirred up a Gray-Frier, called Frier Toittis, to preach again to the People, that they ſhould and might pray the Pater Noſter to Saints. Who finding no part of the Scripture to found his purpoſe upon, yet came to the Pulpit the firſt of November, being the Feaſt of All-hallows, Anno 1551. and took the Text of the Goſpel for that day read in their Maſs, written in the fifth of Matthew containing theſe words, Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit, for to them pertaineth the Kingdom of Heaven.

Matth. 5.

The Doctrine of the Papiſts holdeth, that the Pater noſter may be ſaid to Saints, and why.

This feeble foundation being laid, the Frier began to reaſon moſt impertinently, that the Lords Prayer might be offered to Saints, becauſe every Petition thereof appertaineth to them. For if we meet an Old man in the Street, ſaid he, we will ſay to him, Good-day Father, and therefore much more may we call the Saints our Fathers; and becauſe we grant alſo that they be in Heaven, we may ſay to every one of them, Our Father which art in Heaven. Our Father, God, hath made their Names holy, and therefore ought we as followers of God, to hold their Names holy, and ſo we may ſay to any of the Saints, Our Father which art in Heaven, hallowed be thy Name. And for the ſame cauſe, ſaid the Frier, as they are in the Kingdom of Heaven, ſo that Kingdom is theirs by poſſeſſion, and ſo praying for the Kingdom of Heaven, we may ſay to them, and every one of them, Thy Kingdom come. And except their will had been the very will of God, they had never come to that Kingdom. And therefore ſeeing their will is Gods will we may ſay with every one of them, Thy will be done.

Blaſphemous Doctrine againſt the glory and name of God.

A Frierly gloſing upon the Pater noſter.

But when the Frier came to the fourth Petition, touching our daily Bread, he began to be aſtoniſhed and aſhamed, ſo that he did ſweat abundantly, partly becauſe his ſophiſtry began to fail him, not finding ſuch a colour for that part as for the other which went before, and partly becauſe he ſpake againſt his own knowledge and Conſcience; and ſo he was compelled to confeſs that it was not in the Saints power to give us our daily Bread, but that they ſhould pray to God for us, ſaid he, that we may obtain our daily Bread by their Interceſſion: and ſo gloſed he the reſt to the end. Not ſtanding yet content with this deteſtable Doctrine, he affirmed moſt blaſphemouſly, that St. Pauls Napkin, and St. Peters Shadow did Miracles, and that the virtue of Eliſeus Cloak divided the Waters; attributing nothing to the power of God: with many other Errors of the Papiſts, horrible to be heard.

The Friers Sophiſtry here failed him.

Upon this, followed incontinent a dangerous Schiſm in the Church of Scotland: for not only the Clergy, but the whole People were divided among themſelves, one defending the Truth, and another the Papiſtry; in ſuch ſort that there roſe a Proverb, To whom ſay you your Pater Noſter? And although the Papiſts had the upper hand as then, whoſe words were almoſt holden for Law (ſo great was the blindneſs of that Age,) yet God ſo inſpired the hearts of the common People, that ſo many as could get the underſtanding of the bare words of the Lords Prayer in Engliſh (which was then ſaid in Latin) utterly deteſted that Opinion, holding that it ſhould in no wiſe be ſaid to Saints: ſo that the Crafts-men and their Servants in their Booths, when the Frier came, exploded him with ſhame enough, crying, Frier Pater Noſter, Frier Pater Noſter. Who at the laſt being convict in his own Conſcience, and aſhamed of his former Sermon, was compelled to leave the Town of St. Andrews.

A Scotiſh Proverb.

Frier Pater noſter driven out of St. Andrews.

In the mean time of this brute there were two Paſquils ſet on the Abbey-Church, the one in Latin bearing theſe words:

Doctores noſtri de Collegio
Concludunt idem cum Lucifero.
Quod ſancti ſunt ſimiles altiſſimo:
Et ſe tuentur gravatorio
De mandato Officialis,
Ad inſtantiam fiſcalis,
Gaw & Harvey non varii
In præmiſſis connotarii.

Mr. D. Gaw and Mr. T. Harvey two Procurators.

The other in Engliſh, bearing theſe words:

Doctors of Theology, of fourſcore of years,
And old jolly Lupoys the bald Gray-Friers;
They would be called Rabbi and Magiſter noſter,
And wot not to whom they ſay their Pater Noſter.

Shortly, the Chriſtians were ſo hotly offended, and the Papiſts on the other ſide ſo proud and wilful, that neceſſary it was, to eſchew greater inconveniences, that the Clergy at laſt ſhould be aſſembled to diſpute and conclude the whole matter, that the Lay-people might be put out of doubt. Which being done, and the Univerſity agreed, whoſoever had been preſent might have heard much ſubtile Sophiſtry. For ſome of the Popiſh Doctors affirmed that it ſhould be ſaid to God formaliter, and to Saints materialiter. Others, ultimatè, & non ultimatè. Others ſaid it ſhould be ſaid to God Principaliter, and to Saints minus Principaliter. Others that it ſhould be ſaid to God primariè, and to Saints ſecundariè. Others that it ſhould be ſaid to God capiendo ſtrictè, and to Saints capiendo largè. Which vain diſtinctions being heard and conſidered by the People, they that were ſimple remained in greater doubtfulneſs than they were in before: ſo that a well aged man, and a Servant to the Subprior of Saint Andrews, called the Subprior Thome, being demanded to whom he ſaid his Pater noſter? he anſwered, to God only. Then they asked again what ſhould be ſaid to the Saints? he anſwered, give them Aves and Creeds enow in the Devils name, for that may ſuffice them well enough, albeit they do ſpoyl God of his right. Others, making their Vaunts of the Doctors, ſaid, that becauſe Chriſt (who made the Pater Noſter) never came inte the Iſle of Britain, and ſo underſtood not the Engliſh Tongue, therefore it was that the Doctors concluded it ſhould be ſaid in Latin.

The answer of an old man to whom they ſhould ſay their Pater noſter.

A doctorly reaſon why the Pater noſter ſhould be ſaid in Latin.

This perturbation and open ſlander yet depending, it was thought good to call a Provincial Councel to decide the matter. Which being aſſembled at Edenborough, the Papiſts being deſtitute of reaſon defended their parts with lies, alledging that the Univerſity of Paris had concluded that the Lords Prayer ſhould be ſaid to Saints. But becauſe that could not be proved, and that they could not prevail by reaſon, they uſed their will in place of reaſon, and ſome time deſpiteful, and injurious talk. As Frier Scot, being asked of one to whom he ſhould ſay the Pater noſter, he anſwered, ſaying, ſay it to the Devil Knave. So the Councel perceiving they could profit nothing by reaſoning, they were compelled to paſs, voting

The Councel of Edenborough could not agree to whom they ſhould ſay their Pater noſter.

The Papiſts maintain their cauſe with lies and railing, when reaſon lacketh.

But then incontinent they that were called Churchmen were found divided and repugned among themſelves. For ſome Biſhops, with the Doctors and Friers conſented that the Pater noſter ſhould be ſaid to Saints; but the Biſhops of St. Andrews, Caitnes and Atheins with other more learned men, refuſed utterly to ſubſcribe to the ſame. Finally with conſent of both the parties, Commiſſion was given by the holy Church to Dean John Winrame, then Subprior of St. Andrews to declare to the People how and after what manner they ſhould pray the Lords Prayer. Who, accepting of the Commiſſion declared that it ſhould be ſaid to God, with ſome other reſtrictions, which are not neceſſary to be put in memory. And ſo, by little and little, the brute and tumult ceaſed, Ex teſtim. è Scotia allato.

† That is, to the numbring of voices.

The Friers and Prelates could not agree among themſelves about ſaying the Pater noſter.

* This Winram is now become a godly Miniſter in the Church of God, and a married man.

The Martyrdom of the bleſſed Servant of God, Walter Mille.

W. Mille Martyr.

AMong the reſt of the Martyrs of Scotland, the mavellous conſtancy of Walter Mille is not to be paſſed over with ſilence. Out of whoſe Aſhes ſprang thouſands of his Opinion and Religion in Scotland, who altogether choſe rather to die than to be any longer over trodden by the Tyranny of the foreſaid cruel, ignorant, and beaſtly Biſhops, Abbots, Monks, and Friers; and ſo began the Congregation of Scotland to debate the true Religion of Chriſt againſt the Frenchmen and Papiſts, who ſought always to depreſs and keep down the ſame; for it began ſoon after the Martyrdom of Walter Mille, of the which the form hereafter followeth.

In the year of our Lord, 1558. in the time of Mary Dutcheſſe of Longaway, Queen Regent of Scotland and the ſaid John Hamelton being Biſhop of Saint Andrews, and Primate of Scotland, this Walter Mille (who in his youth had been a Papiſt) after that he had been in Almain, and had heard the Doctrine of the Goſpel returned again into Scotland, and, ſetting aſide all Papiſtry and compelled Chaſtity, married a Wife, which thing made him, unto the Biſhops of Scotland to be ſuſpected of Hereſie; and after long watching of him he was taken by two Popiſh Prieſts, one called Sir George Traqwhen, and the other Sir Hugh Turry Servants to the ſaid Biſhop for the time, within the Town of Dyſart in Fyffe, and brought to Saint Andrews and impriſoned in the Caſtle thereof. He being in Priſon, the Papiſts earneſtly travelled and laboured to have ſeduced him, and threatned him with death and corporal Torments, to the intent they might cauſe him to recant and forſake the Truth But ſeeing they could profit nothing thereby, and that he remained ſtill firm and conſtant, they laboured to perſwade him by fair promiſes, and offered unto him a Monks portion for all the days of his life, in the Abbey of Dunfermeling, ſo that he would deny the things he had taught, and grant that they were Hereſie; but he, continuing in the Truth even unto the end, deſpiſed their threatnings and fair promiſes.

Mille contrary to his Popiſh vow married.

W. Mille firſt ſuſpected of Hereſie.

W. Mille taken by two Popiſh Prieſts, G. Straqwhen, and Sir Hugh Turry.

Then aſſembled together the Biſhop of Saint Andrews Murrey, Brechin, Caitnes, and Atheins, the Abbots of Dunfermeling, Landors, Balindrinot, and Towpers with Doctors of Theology of Saint Andrews, as John Greſon Black Frier, and Dean John Wynrame, Subprior of St. Andrews, William Tranſton, Provoſt of the Old Colledge, with divers others, as ſundry Friers Black and Gray. Theſe being aſſembled, and having conſulted together, he was taken out of Priſon, and brought to the Metropolitan Church, where he was put in a Pulpit before the Biſhops to be accuſed, the twentieth day of April. Being brought into the Church, and climbing up into the Pulpit, they ſeeing him ſo weak and feeble of Perſon, partly by age and travel, and partly by evil intreatment, that without help he could not climb up, they were out of hope to have heard him for weakneſs of voice. But when he began to ſpeak, he made the Church to ring and ſound again, with ſo great courage and ſtoutneſs, that the Chriſtians which were preſent were no leſs rejoyced, than the Adverſaries were confounded and aſhamed. He being in the Pulpit, and on his knees at Prayer, Sir Andrew Oliphant, one of the Biſhops Prieſts, commanded him to ariſe and to anſwer to his Articles, ſaying on this manner, Sir Walter Mille, ariſe and anſwer to the Articles for you hold my Lord here overlong. To whom Walter, after he had finiſhed his Prayer, anſwered, ſaying, We ought to obey God more than men, I ſerve one more mighty, even the Omnipotent Lord: and where ye call me Sir Walter, call me Walter and not Sir Walter, I have been overlong one of the Popes Knights. Now ſay what thou haſt to ſay.

W. Mille for age could ſcarce climb to the Pulpit.

God giveth ſtrength contrary to mans expectation.

Andrew Oliphant the Archbiſhops Chaplain.

Theſe were the Articles whereof he was accuſed, with his Anſwers unto the ſame.

Oliphant. What think you of Prieſts Marriage?

Mille. I hold it a bleſſed Band: for Chriſt himſelf maintained it, and approved the ſame, and alſo made it free to all men; but you think it not free to you, ye abhor it, and in the mean time take other mens Wives and Daughters, and will not keep the Band that God hath made. Ye vow Chaſtity, and break the ſame. Saint Paul had rather marry than burn; the which I have done, for God never forbad marriage to any man, of what State or degree ſoever he were.

Oliphant. Thou ſaieſt there be not ſeven Sacraments.

Mille. Give me the Lords Supper and Baptiſm, and take you the reſt, and part them among you. For if there be ſeven, why have you omitted one of them, to wit, Marriage, and give your ſelves to ſlanderous and ungodly Whoredom?

Oliph. Thou art againſt the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, and ſaieſt, that the Maſs is wrong, and is Idolatry.

Mille. A Lord or a King ſendeth and calleth many to a Dinner, and when the Dinner is in readineſs, he cauſeth to ring a Bell, and the men come to the Hall, and ſit down to be partakers of the Dinner, but the Lord turning his back unto them eateth all himſelf, and mocketh them; ſo do ye.

A ſimilitude aptly applied.

Oliph. Thou denieſt the Sacrament of the Altar to be the very Body of Chriſt really in Fleſh and Blood.

Mille. The Scripture of God is not to be taken Carnally but Spiritually, and ſtandeth in Faith only; and as for the Maſs it is wrong, for Chriſt was once offered on the Croſs for mans treſpaſs, and will never be offered again, for then he ended all Sacrifice.

Oliphant. Oliph. Thou ſpakeſt againſt Pilgrimage, and calledſt it a Pilgrimage to whoredom.

Mille. Mille. I affirm and ſay, that it is not commanded in the Scripture, and that there is no greater whoredom in any place, than at your Pilgrimages, except it be in common Brothels.

Oliph. Thou preachedſt ſecretly and privately in Houſes, and openly in the Fields.

Mille. Yea man, and on the Sea alſo, ſayling in a Ship.

Theſe things rehearſed they of purpoſe, with other light trifles, to augment their final Accuſation, and then Sir Andrew Oliphant pronounced Sentence againſt him, that he ſhould be delivered to the Temporal Judge, and puniſhed as an Heretick, which was to be burnt. Notwithſtanding, his boldneſs and conſtancy moved ſo the hearts of many, that the Biſhops Steward of his Regality, Provoſt of the Town, called Patrick Learmond, refuſed to be his Temporal Judge, to whom it appertained, if the cauſe had been juſt. Alſo the Biſhops Chamberlain, being therewith charged, would in no wiſe take upon him ſo ungodly an Office. Yea, the whole Town was ſo offended with his unjuſt Condemnation, that the Biſhops Servants could not get for their mony ſo much as one Cord to tye him to the Stake, or a Tar-Barrel to burn him, but were conſtrained to cut the Cords of their Maſters own Pavilion to ſerve their turn.

Nevertheleſs one Servant of the Biſhops more ignorant and cruel than the reſt, called Alexander Simmerwail, enterpriſing the Office of a Temporal Judge in that part, conveyed him to the Fire, where, againſt all natural reaſon of man, his boldneſs and hardineſs did more and more increaſe, ſo that the Spirit of God working miraculouſly in him, made it manifeſt to the People, that his Cauſe and Articles were moſt juſt, and he innocently put down.

The Burning of Walter Mille.

ow when all things were ready for his death, and onveyed with Armed men to the Fire, Oliphant bade paſs to the Stake: and he ſaid, Nay, but wilt thou put me up with thy hand and take part of my death, thou ſhalt ſee me paſs up gladly; for by the Law of God I am forbidden to put hands upon my ſelf. Then Oliphant put him up with his hand, and he aſcended gladly, ſaying, Introibo ad Altare Dei, and deſired that he might have ſpace to ſpeak to the People; the which Oliphant and other of the Burners denied, ſaying, That he had ſpoken overmuch, for the Biſhops were altogether offended that the matter was ſo long continued. Then ſome of the young men committed both the Burners and the Biſhops their Maſters to the Devil, ſaying, that they believed they ſhould lament that day, and deſired the ſaid Walter to ſpeak what he pleaſed.

W. Mille denied by the Biſhops to ſpeak.

W. Mille permitted by the young men to ſpeak.

And ſo after he made his humble Supplication to God on his knees, he aroſe, and ſtanding upon the Coals ſaid on this wiſe. Dear Friends, the cauſe why I ſuffer this day is not for any Crime laid to my charge (albeit I be a miſerable Sinner before God,) but only for the defence of the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt, ſet forth in the New and old Teſtament unto us; for which as the faithful Martyrs have offered themſelves gladly before, being aſſured after the death of their Bodies of eternal Felicity; ſo this day I praiſe God, that he hath called me of his mercy among the reſt of his Servants to ſeal up his Truth with my life: which as I have received it of him, ſo willingly I offer it to his glory. Therefore as you will eſcape the eternal Death, be no more ſeduced with the Lies of Prieſts, Monks, Friers, Priors, Abbots, Biſhops, and the reſt of the Sect of Antichriſt, but depend only upon Jeſus Chriſt and his mercy, that ye may be delivered from condemnation. All that while there was great mourning and lamentation of the Multitude; for they perceiving his patience, ſtoutneſs and boldneſs, conſtancy and hardineſs, were not only moved and ſtirred up, but their hearts alſo were ſo inflamed, that he was the laſt Martyr that died in Scotland for the Religion. After his Prayer, he was hoiſed up upon the Stake, and being in the Fire, he ſaid, Lord have mercy on me; Pray People while there is time: and ſo he conſtantly departed.

Their meaning was this, That Prieſts can claim no more vertue or higher ſtate by their Order, than can a Lay-man.

3. That no power is given of God to Prieſts, of miniſtring Sacraments, ſaying Maſs, or other Divine Service, more than to Lay-men.

4. That the ſolemnization of Matrimony is not neceſſary to ſalvation of Souls, neither was inſtituted of God (for a Sacrament they meant.)

5. That the Sacrament of Extream Unction is not available nor neceſſary to Souls health.

6. That the Images of the Croſs, of the Crucifix, of the bleſſed Virgin, and other Saints, are not to be worſhipped; and that they which worſhip them do commit Idolatry.

7. That Pilgrimages to holy Places, and holy Relicks be not neceſſary, nor meritorious to Souls health.

8. That Invocation is not to be made to Saints, but only to God, and that he only heareth their Prayers.

9. That holy Bread and holy Water have no more virtue after their Conſecration than before.

10. That they have believed, taught, and holden all and every of the ſame damnable Opinions before; as they did at that preſent.

11. That where they now have confeſſed their Errours, they would not have ſo done but only for fear of manifeſt proofs brought againſt them, or elſe but for fear to be convicted by them, they would never have confeſſed the ſame of their own accord.

12. That they have communed and talked of the ſaid damnable Errours heretofore with divers other Perſons, and have had Books concerning the ſame.

The order and form of Proceſs uſed againſt theſe five Martyrs aforeſaid: and firſt of William Carder, Anno 1511.

The proteſt or Judgment againſt W. Carder, Martyr.

WIlliam Carder being convented before William Warham Archbiſhop, and his Chancellor Cuthbert Tonſtall, Doctor Sylveſter, Doctor Welles, Clement, Brown, with other more, the Notaries being William Potking, and David Couper, the Articles and Interrogatories above ſpecified were laid unto him. Which Articles he there and then denied, affirming that he never did; nor doth hold any ſuch Opinion, otherwiſe than becometh that every Chriſtian man ſhould do, ready to conform himſelf in all points to their Doctrine; and therefore to clear himſelf the better againſt thoſe Interrogatories objected againſt him, he ſtood in denial of the ſame. The like alſo did every of the other four Martyrs after him.

The ſtraight dealing of W. Warham Archbp. of Canterbury. Witneſſes againſt W. Carder.

All which notwithſtanding, the uncharitable Archbiſhop ſeeking all advantages againſt him that he might, and more then right Law would give, brought in againſt him ſuch witneſſes, as before were abjured, whom he knew, for fear of relapſe, durſt do none other but diſcloſe whatſoever they knew, to wit, Chriſtopher Grebil, William Rich, Agnes Ive, John Grebil, Robert Hilles, and Steven Caſtelin. Whoſe Depoſitions being taken, and the ſaid Carder being asked what he could ſay for himſelf, he had nothing, he ſaid, to produce againſt their Atteſtations, but ſubmitted him unto their mercy: ſaying moreover, that if he had ever any misbelief of the Sacraments of the Church, contrary to the common holding of the Catholicks, he now was ſorry and repented him thereof. Which being done, the Archbiſhop, this his ſubmiſſion notwithſtanding, and notwithſtanding that the Regiſter maketh no mention of any Relapſe, contrary to good Law, at leaſt contrary to all Chriſtian Charity, proceeded to the reading of his blind Sentence, and ſo condemned him: who neither ſtood ſtubbornly to that which he did hold, neither yet did hold any thing contrary to the mind of holy Scripture, to the execution of burning.

Then after him was called forth Agnes Grebil, and examined of the ſaid twelve Articles above recited, which ſhe in like manner denied, as the other had done before, putting her Adverſaries to their proof. Then the Archbiſhop called for John Grebil her Husband, and Chriſtopher and John Grebil her two Sons (who before had been abjured,) cauſed them upon their Oath to depoſe againſt their own natural Mother, and ſo they did.

The Catholick Clergy of the Papiſts ſet the Husband againſt the Wife.

Firſt John Grebil the elder, her Husband, examined by vertue of his Oath, to ſay how Agnes his Wife hath and doth believe of the Sacrament of the Altar, of going in Pilgrimage, Offerings and worſhipping of Saints, Images, &c. and how long ſhe hath holden thus, depoſed; that firſt about the end of King Edwards days the fourth, in his houſe, by the teaching of John Ive, ſhe was brought to that belief, and ſo forth from thence daily, until the time of detection, ſhe hath continued.

The Catholick Papiſts ſet the Children to accuſe their own Mother.

And beſides that, ſaid he, when my Children Chriſtopher and John, being about ſeven years of age, were then taught of me in my houſe the ſaid Errour of the Sacrament of the Altar, and by the ſaid Agnes my Wife divers times, ſhe was always of one mind in the ſaid miſbelief againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, that it was not Chriſts Body, Fleſh and Blood, but only Bread. Furthermore, being examined how he knew that ſhe was ſtedfaſt in the ſaid Errour, he ſaid that ſhe always without contradiction affirmed this teaching, and ſaid the ſaid Opinion was good, and was well contented that her Children aforeſaid were of the ſame Opinions againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, &c. Ex verbis Regiſtri.

The Biſhop, with his Catholick Doctors, not yet contented with this, to ſet the Husband againſt the Wife, proceeding further in their Catholick zeal, cauſed her two Children, Chriſtopher and John to be produced, one of the age of two and twenty, the other of nineteen, againſt their own natural Mother. Who likewiſe, being preſſed with their Oath, witneſſed, and ſaid, that the foreſaid Agnes their Mother held, believed, taught, and defended, that the Sacrament of the Altar was but Bread, and not the very Body of Chriſts Fleſh and Blood; That Baptiſm was no better in the Fount, than out of the Fount; That Confirmation was of no effect; that the ſolemnization of Matrimony was no Sacrament; That Confeſſion to God alone was ſufficient; Alſo that going in Pilgrimage and worſhipping of Saints and Images was of none effect, &c. Item, That their Father and the ſaid Agnes their Mother, held, taught and communed of the ſaid Errours within their houſe divers times, by the ſpace of thoſe three years paſt, as well on Holy-days, as Working days, affirming and teaching that the ſaid Opinions were good and lawful, and to be holden and maintained, and agreement was made amongſt them, that none of them ſhould diſcover or bewray either of theſe beliefs in any wiſe. Finally, that they never heard their ſaid Father and Mother holding or teaching any other Opinions, than be the ſaid Errours againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, and Pilgrimages, Offerings, worſhipping of Saints and Images, as far as they could remember, &c. Ex verbis Regiſt.

Chriſtopher Grebil and J. Grebil witneſs againſt Ag. Grebil their Mother.

Example of an unnatural Husband and of unnatural Children.

Here haſt thou (Chriſtian reader) before thine eyes an horrible Spectacle of a ſingular, yea of a double impiety, firſt of an unnatural Husband, witneſſing againſt his own Wife; and of as unnatural Children, accuſing and witneſſing againſt their own natural Mother. Which although they had ſo done, the cauſe being of it ſelf juſt and true, (as it was not) yet they had done more than nature would have led them to do. Now the caſe being ſuch, as which by Gods Word ſtandeth firm, ſound, and perfect, what Impiety were it for men to accuſe a poor Innocent in caſe of Hereſie, which is no Hereſie? Now beſides all this, the Husband to come in againſt his own Wife, and the Children to bring in the Knife wherewith to cut the Throat of their own natural Mother that bare them, that nouriſhed them, that brought them up, what is this, but Impiety upon Impiety, prodigious and horrible for all Chriſtian ears to hear? And yet the greateſt Impiety of all reſteth in theſe pretenſed Catholicks and Clergy men, which were the authors and cauſers of all this miſchief.

Great impiety of the Husband toward the wife.

Greater impiety in the Children againſt the Mother.

The cauſe why this good Woman ſo ſtood (as ſhe did) in the denial of theſe foreſaid Articles objected, was this, for that ſhe never thought that her Husband and her own Children, who only were privy of her Religion, would teſtifie againſt her. Whom notwithſtanding after ſhe perceived to come in, and to depoſe this againſt her, denying ſtill (as ſhe did, before) that ſhe did ever hold ſuch manner of Errours, and being now deſtitute of all Friends, and comfort, braſt out in theſe words openly (as the Regiſter reporteth) that ſhe repented the time that ever ſhe bare thoſe Children of her Body. And thus the Archbiſhop with his Doctors having now the thing that they ſought for, albeit ſhe was ready to deny all Errours, and to conform her ſelf to their Religion, yet notwithſtanding, they refuſing her readineſs and conformity proceeded to their Sentence, and ſo condemned her to death.

Ex Regiſt. W. Warham Folio. 177. Ag. Grebil condemned by the Sentence of the Archbiſhop.

After whoſe Condemnation, next was brought to Examination Robert Harriſon, who in like manner becauſe he ſtood in his denial, contrary witneſſes againſt him were produced, to wit, Chriſtopher Grebil, William Rich, William Olberd, Agnes Ive, who a little before had been abjured, and therefore were ſo much the more apt and appliable to ſerve the Biſhops humor for danger of relapſe. After the depoſition and conviction of which witneſſes, although he ſubmitted himſelf to repentance and conformity, yet notwithſtanding it would nor be received, but Sentence was read, and he condemned with the other two aforeſaid to the fire.

R. Harriſon examined. W. Carder. Agnes Grebil, R. Harriſon Martyrs.

The Biſhops Certificate to the King

And thus theſe three were condemned and burned, and Certificate given up of them together to the King, from Warham the Archbiſhop, upon the ſame. Anno 1511. Maii 2. Ex Regiſt. Cantuarienſis. Arch.

Over and beſides theſe three godly Martyrs above recited, I find in the foreſaid Regiſters of W. Warham two other like godly Martyrs alſo in the ſame year, and for the ſame twelve Articles above ſpecified, to be condemned upon the depoſitions of certain witneſſes brought in againſt them, to wit, Thomas Harwood, Phil. Harwood, Steven Caſtelyn, William Baker, Robert Reynold, John Bampton, Robert Bright, William Rich, &c. Whereupon they were adjudged likewiſe for Hereticks to be burned, the year aforeſaid, 1511. The names of which two Martyrs were John Brown and Edward Walker. Ex Regiſt. W. Warh. fol. 179.

J. Brown Ed. Walker, Martyrs. Witneſſes againſt theſe two Martyrs.

Now as you have heard the names of theſe bleſſed Martyrs, with their Articles recited, let us alſo hear the Tenor of the Biſhops Sentence, by the which they were condemned one after another. Their Sentence containeth one uniform manner of words in form as followeth.

The Tenor of the Sentence.

The condemnation of theſe five aforeſaid Martyrs.

IN Nomine Dei, Amen, *Willielmus permiſſione divina Cantuarienſis Archiepiſcopus, totius Angliæ Primas & Apoſtolicæ ſedis Legatus, in quodam negotio hæreticæ pravitatis contra te Willielmum Carder de Tenderden noſtr. Moreover, beſides theſe five bleſſed Saints of God, whom they ſo cruelly by their Sentence did condemn to death, we find alſo in the ſame Regiſters of William Warham, a great number of other whom they for the ſame Doctrine and like Articles cauſed to be apprehended and put to open Recantation; the Names of which Perſons in the Catalogue here following be expreſſed.

The Articles laid to theſe Abjurers appear in the Regiſters to be the ſame which before were objected to the other five Martyrs aforeſaid, which was for believing and defending.

Their Articles.

1. FIrſt, that the Sacrament of the Altar was not the very Body of Chriſt, but material Bread.
2. That Confeſſion of Sins ought not to be made to a Prieſt.
3. That there is no more power given of God to a Prieſt, than to a Lay-man.
4. That the ſolemnization of Matrimony is not neceſſary for the weal of mans Soul.
5. That the Sacrament of extream Unction, called Aneyling, is not profitable nor neceſſary for mans Soul.
6. That Pilgrimages to holy and devout places, be not neceſſary nor meritorious for mans Soul.
7. That Images of Saints, or of the Crucifix, or of our Lady, are not to be worſhipped.
8. That a man ſhould pray to no Saint, but only to God.
9. That holy Water and holy Bread is not better after the Benediction made by the Prieſt, Ex verbis Regiſt. W. Warham, fol. 176. An. 1511.

Ex Regiſt. W. Warham.

The Doctrine of the Goſpel in England before Mr. Luther began.

By theſe Articles and Abjurations of the fore-named perſons, thou haſt to underſtand, Chriſtian Reader, what Doctrine of Religion was here ſtirring in this our Realm of England, before the time that the name of Martin Luther was ever heard of here amongſt us.

Three divers ſorts of Judgments amongſt the Papiſts, againſt Hereticks as they call them.

Three ſorts of proceedings of the Papiſts againſt the Hereticks.

AS touching the penance and penalty enjoyned to theſe aforeſaid, as alſo to all other ſuch like, firſt here is to be noted, that the Catholick Fathers, in their Proceſſes of Heretical pravity, have three divers and diſtinct kinds of Judgments and proceedings.

The Proceſs of the Papiſts in condemning Hereticks.

For ſome they judge to be burned, to the intent that other being brought into terrour by them, they might therefore more quietly hold up their Kingdom, and Reign as they liſt. And thus condemned they theſe five aforeſaid, and notwithſtanding they were willing to ſubmit themſelves to the boſom of the Mother Church, yet could they not be received, as by the words of the Regiſter, and by the tenour of their Sentence above-ſpecified, may well appear.

And this ſort of Perſons, thus by them condemned, conſiſteth either in ſuch as have been before abjured, and fallen again into relapſe; or elſe ſuch as ſtand conſtantly in their Doctrine, and refuſe to abjure; or elſe ſuch as they intend to make a terrour and example to all other, notwithſtanding that they be willing and ready to ſubmit themſelves, and yet cannot be received: and of this laſt ſort were theſe five Martyrs laſt named. So was alſo John Lambert, who ſubmitting himſelf to the King could not be accepted. So was likewiſe Richard Mekins the ſilly Lad, and the three Women of Gerneſey, whoſe ſubmiſſion would not ſerve to ſave their lives, with many other in like caſe. Againſt this ſort of Perſons, the Proceſs which the Papiſts uſe is this. Firſt, after they began once to be ſuſpected by ſome Promoter, they are denounced and cited; then by virtue of Inquiſition they are taken and clapt faſt in Irons in Priſon; from thence they are brought forth at laſt to examination, if they be not before killed by Famine, cold, or ſtraightneſs of the Priſon, then be Articles drawn, or rather wreſted out of their writings of preachings, and they put to their Oath, to anſwer truly to every point and circumſtance articulated againſt them. Which Articles if they ſeem to deny, or ſalve by true expounding, then are Witneſſes called in and admitted, what witneſſes ſoever they are be they never ſo much infamous, Uſurers, Ribalds, Women, yea, and common Harlots. Or if no other Witneſſes can be found, then is the Husband brought in and forced to ſwear againſt the Wife or the Wife againſt the Husband, or the Children againſt the natural Mother, as in this example of Agnes Grebil. Or if no ſuch witneſs at all can be found, then are they ſtrained upon the Rack, or by other bitter Torments forced to confeſs their knowledge, and to peach others. Neither muſt any be ſuffered to come to them, what need ſoever they have. Neither muſt any publick or quiet audience be given them to ſpeak for themſelves, till at laſt Sentence be read againſt them, to give them up to the Secular Arm, or to degrade them, if they be Prieſts, and ſo to burn them. Ex hiſt. Cochlai, contra Huſſitas.

Ex hiſt. Cochl. contra Huſſitas lib.

And yet the malignity of theſe Adverſaries doth not here ceaſe. For after that the fire hath conſumed their Bodies, then they fall upon their Books, and condemn them in like manner to be burned, and no man muſt be ſo hardy as to read them, or keep them, under pain of Hereſie. But before they have aboliſhed theſe Books, firſt they gather Articles out of them, ſuch as they liſt themſelves, and ſo perverſly wreſt and wring them after their own purpoſe, falſely, and contrary to the right meaning of the Author, as may ſeem, after their putting down, to be moſt Heretical and execrable. Which being done, and the Books then aboliſhed, that no man may confer them with their Articles, to ſpie their falſehood; then they divulge and ſet abroad thoſe Articles, in ſuch ſort as Princes and People may ſee what Hereticks they were. And this is the rigor of their proceſs and proceeding againſt theſe Perſons whom thus they purpoſe to condemn and burn.

The uſe and manner how the Papiſts draw out Articles of Books after the authors be condemned.

To the ſecond order belongeth that ſort of Hereticks whom theſe Papiſts do not condemn to death, but aſſign them unto Monaſteries, there to continue, and to faſt all their life, In pane doloris & aqua anguſtiæ, that is, with Bread of ſorrow, and Water of affliction; and that they ſhould not remove one mile out of the precinct of the ſaid Monaſtery ſo long as they lived, without they were otherwiſe by the Archbiſhop himſelf or his Succeſſours diſpenſed withal. Albeit many times the ſaid perſons were ſo diſpenſed withal, that their Penance of Bread and Water was turned for them to woolward Wedneſdays and Fridays every week, or ſome other like puniſhment, &c.

The puniſhment of them whom the Papiſts condem to perpetual Priſon after their ſubmiſſion.

The third kind of Hereticks were thoſe whom theſe Prelates did judge not to perpetual Priſon, but only enjoyned them Penance, either to ſtand before the Preacher, or elſe to bear a Fagot about the Market, or in Proceſſion; or elſe to wear the Picture of a Fagot bordered on their left ſleeves, without any Cloak or Gown upon the ſame; or elſe to kneel at the ſaying of certain Maſſes, or to ſay ſo many Pater noſters, Aues, and Creeds, to ſuch or ſuch a Saint: or to go in Pilgrimage to ſuch or ſuch a place; or elſe to bear a Fagot to the burning of ſome Heretick; or elſe to faſt certain Fridays Bread and Water; or if it were a Woman, to wear no ſmock on Fridays, but to go woolward, &c. As appeareth, Regiſt. fol. 159.

The puniſhment of them which be enjoyned Penance after their recantation

And thus much by the way out of the Regiſter of William Warham aforeſaid, like as alſo out of other Biſhops Regiſters many more ſuch like matters and examples might be collected, if either leiſure would ſerve me to ſearch, or if the largeneſs of this Volum would ſuffer all to be inſerted that might be found. Howbeit, amongſt many other things omitted, the ſtory and Martyrdom of Luncelot and his fellows is not to be forgotten. The Story of whom with their names is this.

The Martyrdom of Launcelot one of the Kings Guard, John a Painter, and Giles German.

Launcelot, Jo. a Painter, G. German, Martyrs.

ABout the year of our Lord 1539. one John a Painter, and Giles German were accuſed of Hereſie, and whileſt they were in examination at London before the Biſhop and other Judges, by chance there came in one of the Kings Servants named Launcelot, a very tall man, and of no leſs godly mind and diſpoſition, than ſtrong and tall of Body.

This man ſtanding by, ſeemed by his countenance and geſture to favour both, the cauſe and the poor men his Friends. Whereupon he being apprehended, was examined and condemned together with them. And the next day at five of the Clock in the morning was carried with them into Saint Giles in the field, and there burned, there being but a ſmall concourſe or Company of People at their death.

The Story of one Stile, Martyr.

One Stile, Martyr, burned in Smithfield with the Apocalyps. Exceſtimon. D. Rob. Outredi.

IN the Company and Fellowſhip of theſe bleſſed Saints and Martyrs of Chriſt, which innocently ſuffered within the time of King Henries Reign, for the Teſtimony of Gods Word and Truth, an other good man alſo cometh to my mind, not to be excluded out of this number, who was with like cruelty oppreſſed, and burned in Smithfield about the latter end of Cuthbert Tonſtalls time, Biſhop of London. Whoſe name was called Stile, as is credibly reported unto us by a worthy and ancient Knight, named Sir Robert Outred, who was the ſame time preſent himſelf at his burning and Martyrdom, and eie witneſs of the ſame. With him there was burned alſo a Book of the Apocalyps, which belike he was wont to read upon. This Book when he ſaw faſtened unto the Stake, to be burned with him; lifting up his voyce, O bleſſed Apocalyps, ſaid he, how happy am I, that ſhall be burned with thee? And ſo this good man and the bleſſed Apocalyps were both together in the fire conſumed.

AND thus (through the gracious ſupportation of Chriſt our Lord) we have run over theſe ſeven and thirty laborious years of King Henries Reign. Under whoſe time and governance, ſuch Acts and Records, Troubles, Perſecutions, Recantations, Practiſes, Alterations, and Reformations as then happened in the Church, we have here diſcourſed, with ſuch Statutes, Injunctions and Proclamations, as by him were ſet forth in cauſes and matters to the ſaid Church appertaining: Albeit not comprehending all things ſo fully as might be, yet pretermitting ſo few things as we could, of ſuch matters as came to our hands; ſave only that certain Inſtruments, with a few other occurrents ſomwhat pertaining to the courſe of this Kings Hiſtory, have paſt our hands, as the falſe lying Bull of Pope Leo the tenth, againſt M. Luther, with the form alſo of the ſaid M. Luthers appeal from the Pope unto a general Councel. All which, with other matters more beſides omitted, we have deferred by themſelves hereafter to be exhibited and declared in the ſequel of this preſent Story, as in his due place ſhall appear.

Pope Leo his Bull againſt Luther. M. Luthers appeal from the Pope to a general Councel.

In the mean ſeaſon, amongſt other omiſſions here overpaſt, forſomuch as a certain inſtrument of the Popes Sentence definitive againſt King Henries firſt divorce with Lady Katharine Dowager hath of late come to our hands, containing matter neither impertinent nor unmeet to be committed to Hiſtory, I thought here preſently to place the ſame, to the intent that the Reader ſeeing the arrogant and impudent preſumption of the Pope in the ſaid Sentence, going about by force and Authority ſo to conſtrain and compel Kings and Princes againſt their wills, and againſt right and Scripture to apply to his imperious purpoſe, may the better underſtand thereby what was the true cauſe and ground why the King firſt began to take ſtomach againſt the Pope, and to ſend him clean packing out of this Realm. But before I ſhall produce this aforeſaid Sentence definitive of the Pope, to make the matter more plain to the Reader, it ſhall not be amiſs, firſt to decipher and rip up the original original of ſuch occaſions, as ſhall induce the Reader to the better underſtanding of this falling out between the King and the Pope.

The Sentence definitive of P. Clement 7. againſt the divorce of K. Henry

For ſo I find by the Letters of Dr. Stephen Gardiner, written to Cardinal Wolſey from Rome, (at what time he and Fox were ſent Embaſſadours by the King to Pope Clement the Seventh, about the expedition of the Kings Divorce, An. 1532.) that the ſaid Pope Clement, with the counſel of the Cardinal Sanctorum quatuor and other Cardinals, at firſt was well willing and very inclinable to the accompliſhment and ſatisfaction of the Kings deſire in that behalf, and that for divers reſpects.

The Cauſes moving the Pope at the firſt to favour the cauſe of the Kings Divorce.

As firſt, for the great benefits received, and the ſingular devotion of the King toward the See Apoſtolick, in taking War for the Churches cauſe, in ſurceaſing War at the Popes deſire, and eſpecially in procuring the Popes deliverance, whereby the Pope then thought himſelf with his whole See much obliged to the King in all reſpects, to paſs by his Authority whatſoever reaſonably might be granted in gratifying the Kings ſo ample merits and deſerts.

Secondly, for the evident Reaſons and ſubſtantial Arguments in the * Kings Book contained, which ſeemed well to ſatisfie the Popes liking, and to remove away all ſcruples.

* This Book, called the Kings Book, was a certain Treatiſe concerning the Reaſons and Arguments of divers Learned men for the lawful diſſolution of the Kings Marriage, with Anſwer alſo to the contrary Objections of Abel and others. And this Book here the King ſent to the Pope.

Thirdly, for the good opinion and confidence that the Pope had in the excellent Wiſdom, profound Learning, and mature Judgment of the King, which the Pope (as he ſaid in formal words) would ſooner lean unto, than unto any other Learned mans mind or ſentence, ſo that the Kings Reaſons, he ſaid, muſt needs be of great efficacy and ſtrength of themſelves to order and direct this matter.

The fourth cauſe moving the Pope to favour the Kings Requeſt, was, for the quiet and tranquillity of his Conſcience, which otherwiſe in that unlawful Marriage with his Brothers Wife could not be ſetled.

The fifth Cauſe.

The fifth cauſe was for the conſideration of the perils and dangers, which otherwiſe might happen to the Realm by the pretenſed Titles of the King of Scots, and other, without any Heir Male to eſtabliſh the Kings Succeſſion: for the avoiding of which perils, and alſo for the other cauſes above rehearſed, the Pope ſhewed himſelf at that time propenſe and forward to promote and ſet forward the Kings deſired purpoſe in that behalf.

And thus much touching this by-matter I thought here to ſuggeſt and repeat to the Reader, albeit the ſame is alſo ſufficiently expreſſed before: to the end that the ſtudious Reader pondering theſe firſt proceedings of the Pope, und comparing them with this Sentence diffinitive which under followeth, may the better underſtand what inconſtant levity, what falſe dealing, what crafty packing, and what contrariety in it ſelf is in this holy See of Rome, as by this caſe of the Pope may well appear; who in ſhort time, after all this, was ſo clean altered from that he was, that whereas before he pretended to eſteem ſo gratefully the Kings Travel and Benefits exhibited to the See Apoſtolick, in his defence againſt the Emperour and the Spaniards, now he joyneth utterly with the Ceſarians againſt the King. And where before he ſo greatly magnified the Kings profound Learning, and mature Judgment, eſteeming his mind and ſentence above all other Learned men, to be as a Judge ſufficient in the direction of this caſe; now turning head to the tayl, he utterly refuſeth to bring the matter in judicium Orbis, but will needs detain it at home.

The double dealing of the Pope with King Henry.

The Pope falſe, double and contrary to himſelf.

Again, where before he pretended a tender proviſion for the State of this Realm, now he ſetteth all other Realms againſt it: and finally, where he before ſeemed to reſpect the quiet and tranquillity of the Kings Conſcience, now he goeth about to command and compel the King, againſt his Will and Conſcience, to do clean contrary to that which he himſelf before in his Judgment had allowed, thinking to have the King at his beck, and to do and undo what he liſted and commanded; as by the tenour and true Copy of this his Sentence diffinitive ye may underſtand. Which as it came newly to our hands, I thought here to exhibit unto the world, that all men might ſee what juſt cauſe the King had, being ſo preſumptuouſly provoked by the Pope, to ſhake of his proud Authority, and utterly to exile him out of his Realm. Mark, I pray thee, the manner of the Popes proud Sentence how preſumptuouſly it proceedeth.

The Pope, how preſumptuouſly he compelleth and commandeth Kings and Princes.

Bloſius.

(a) The Pope ſitteth in the Throne of Juſtice, with the like humility and ſame faſhion, as Lucifer did ſit in the ſeat of the higheſt, and Antichriſt ſitteth in the Temple of God.

(b) And ſaid never a word.

(c) Id eſt, having no bribe of mony in his hands, nor any fear of the Emperour in his heart.

(d) Is not this a glorious Father that will have no beggars to his Sons and Daughters, but Emperours, Kings and Queens?

(e) And why then did you ſend Campeius to England to diſſolve the ſame Matrimony before, as appeareth above?

(f) By his own Canon Law, he meaneth, and not by the Law of God.

(g) Here thou maiſt ſee (good Reader) how the Pope may and doth err like a falſe Prophet. For where he thought to put the King to ſilence, the ſame ſilence lighted upon himſelf, and whereby the Pope is driven himſelf to ſtand mute in England, and God grant he may ſo ſtand for ever, Amen.

Now as you have heard the preſumptuous and arrogant Sentence of Pope Clement, wherein he taketh upon him, contrary to the Ordinance of God in his Levitical Law (as is before ſhewed), and contrary to the beſt learned Judgments of Chriſtendom, to command and compel the King, againſt his Conſcience, to retain in Matrimony his Brothers Wife; here followeth in like order to be inferred, according to my promiſe, another like wicked, blaſphemous and ſlanderous Bull of Pope Leo againſt Martin Luther, with the juſt Appellation alſo of the ſaid Martin Luther from the Pope to a general Council. Wherein may appear to all men the lying ſpirit of the Pope, both in teaching moſt Heretical Doctrine, derogating from the Blood of Chriſt; and alſo falſly depraving and perverting the ſound Doctrine of Luther, falſly and untruly charging him with Hereſie, when he is the greater Heretick himſelf. For what Heretick would ever ſay that the Church of Rome was conſecrated and ſanctified by the Blood of Peter, but only the Pope? Or who would call this Hereſie, to refer all our ſalvation and ſanctification only and totally to the Blood of the Son of God; unleſs he were an Heretick of all Hereticks himſelf?

Pope Leo his Bull againſt Luther, and the Appellation of M. Luther, from the Pope by way of an Appendix.

After the like dealing we read, 3 Reg. 18. of wicked King Ahab, who being only the diſturber of Iſrael himſelf, crieth out upon Elias for troubling Iſrael. So here in ſemblable wiſe Pope Leo, with what heaps of tragical words and exclamations doth he fare and rage againſt the true Servant of God, poor Luther, for diſturbing the Church of God, when it is the Pope only and his Fathers Houſe that troubleth, and long hath troubled the true Church of the Lord, as by his doings all the world may ſee enough and too much. In the mean time read, I beſeech thee, with judgment this impudent and falſe ſlanderous Bull of the Pope, with the Appeal alſo of Luther again from the ſaid Pope. The Copy whereof, becauſe it is rare to be gotten, and hath not been hitherto commonly ſeen, being before omitted, I thought to commit here to hiſtory, as I had it out of certain Regiſters; the manner and tenour whereof is this that followeth.

The Pope playeth with Luther, as Ahab played with Elias, ſaying, he was the troubler of Iſrael, when it was he himſelf and his Fathers Houſe that ſo did.

The Bull of Pope Leo againſt M. Luther

Quæ ſequuntur vide ſupe-riore editione.

The ſaid ſlanderous and barbarous Bull of Pope Leo the Tenth, againſt Luther, in Engliſh, with the Anſwer of Luther joyned to the ſame.

The Popes Bull in Engliſh.

LEO Biſhop, Servant of the Servants of God, for a perpetual memory: Riſe up, O Lord, and judge thy cauſe; remember the rebukes wherewith we are ſcorned all the day long of fooliſh Rebukers. Incline thine ear unto our Prayers; for Foxes are riſen up, ſeeking to deſtroy thy Vineyard, the Vinepreſs whereof thou only haſt troden, and aſcending up to thy Father haſt committed the charge and regiment thereof unto Peter as chief Head, and to thy Vicar and his Succeſſors. The wild Boar out of the wood ſeeketh to exterminate and root up the Vineyard. Riſe up Peter, and for this thy Paſtoral charge committed to thee from above, intend to the cauſe of the holy Church of Rome, the Mother of all Churches and of our Faith, which thou by the commandment of God didſt conſecrate with thine own Blood; againſt which (as thou haſt foretold us) falſe liars have riſen up, bringing in Sects of perdition, to their own ſpeedy deſtruction. Whoſe Tongue is like fire, full of unquietneſs, and repleniſhed with deadly poyſon; who having a wicked zeal, and nouriſhing contentions in their hearts, do brag and lie againſt the Verity.

Note here and mark good Reader, how the Church of Rome holdeth by the Blood of St. Peter, and not by the Blood of Chriſt.

Riſe up Paul alſo, we pray thee, which haſt illuminate the ſame Church with thy Doctrine and like Martyrdom. For now is ſprung up a new Porphiry, who as the ſaid Porphiry then unjuſtly did ſlander the holy Apoſtles, ſo ſemblably doth this man now ſlandered, revile, rebuke, bite, and bark againſt the holy Biſhops our Predeceſſors, not in beſeeching them, but in rebuking them. And where he diſtruſteth his cauſe, there he falleth to opprobious checks and rebukes, after the wonted uſe of Hereticks, whoſe uttermoſt refuge is this (as Hierom ſaith) that when they ſee their cauſe go to wreck, then like Serpents they caſt out the venom with their Tongue, and when they ſee themſelves near to be overcom, they fall to railing. For though Hereſies (as thou ſaiſt) muſt needs be, for the exerciſe of the Faithful; yet leſt theſe Hereſies ſhould further increaſe, and theſe Foxes gather ſtrength againſt us, it is needful that by thy means and help they be ſuppreſſed and extinguiſhed at the beginning.

Finally,

Finally, let all the whole univerſal Church of Gods Saints and Doctors riſe up, whoſe true expounding of holy Scriptures being rejected, certain Perſons (whoſe hearts the Father of lies hath blinded) wiſe in their own conceits (as the manner of Hereticks is) do expound the Scriptures otherwiſe than the holy Ghoſt doth require, following only their own ſenſe of ambition and vain glory; yea rather do wreſt and adulterate the Scriptures. So that, as Hierome ſaith, now they make it not the Goſpel of Chriſt, but of man, or which is worſe, of the Devil.

Let all the holy Church, I ſay, riſe up, and with the bleſſed Apoſtles together make interceſſion to Almighty God, that the Errours of all Schiſmaticks being rooted and ſtocked up, his holy Church may be conſerved in peace and unity.

For of late (which for ſorrow we cannot expreſs) by credible information and alſo by Publick Fame it hath come to our ears, yea we have ſeen alſo and read with our eyes divers and ſundry Errours, of which ſome have been condemned by Councels, and Conſtitutions of our Predeceſſors, containing expreſly the Hereſies of the Greeks and of the Bohemians; ſome again reſpectively, either Heretical, or falſe, or ſlanderous, or offenſive to good ears, or ſuch as may ſeduce ſimple minds, newly to be raiſed up, by certain falſe pretenſed Goſpellers; who, by curious pride, ſeeking worldly glory againſt the Doctrine of the Apoſtles, would be more wiſe than becometh them, whoſe babling (as Saint Hierome calleth it) without Authority of the Scripture, would find no credit, unleſs they ſhould ſeem to confirm their falſe Doctrine even with Teſtimonies of the Scripture, but yet falſely interpreted. Which worketh us ſo much the more grief, for that thoſe Hereſies be ſprung in the noble Nation of the Germans, unto the which Nation we with our Predeceſſors have always born ſpecial favour and affection. For after the Empire firſt tranſlated by the Church of Rome, from the Greeks unto the Germans, the ſaid our Predeceſſors and we have always had them as ſpecial fautors and defenders of this our Church, and they have always ſhewed themſelves as moſt earneſt ſuppreſſors of Hereſies; as witneſs whereof yet remain thoſe laudable Conſtitutions of German Emperours, ſet forth and confirmed by our Predeceſſors, for the liberty of the Church, and for expulſing Hereticks out of all Germany, and that under grievous penalty and loſs of all their Goods and Lands. Which Conſtitutions, if they were obſerved this preſent day, both we and they ſhould now be free from this diſturbance.

Reſpectively.

The Germans in old time moſt addicted to Popery above all other Nations.

Furthermore, the Hereſie of the Huſſites, Wickleviſts, and of Hierome of Prague, being condemned and puniſhed in the Council of Conſtance, doth witneſs the ſame. Moreover, ſo much Blood of the Germans, ſpilt fighting againſt the Bohemians, doth witneſs the ſame. To conclude, the ſame alſo is confirmed and witneſſed by the learned and true Confutation, Reprobation, and Condemnation ſet forth by the Univerſities of Colen and Lovane in Germany, againſt the foreſaid Errors. Many other witneſſes alſo we might alledge, which here (leſt we ſhould ſeem to write a ſtory) we pretermit.

Wherefore we, for the charge of our Paſtoral Office committed unto us, can no longer forbear or wink at the peſtiferous poyſon of theſe foreſaid Errors: of the which Errors we thought here good to recite certain; the tenor of which is this as followeth.

Articles of Luther.

It is an old Hereſie to ſay, that the Sacraments of the new Law do give grace to them, qui non ponunt obicem, (i.) which have in themſelves, to the contrary, no let.

To deny that ſin remaineth in a Child after his Baptiſm, is to tread down Paul and Chriſt under foot.

The origine of ſin, although no actual ſin do follow after, doth ſtay the Soul, leaving the Body, from the entrance into Heaven.

Unperfect charity of a man departing muſt needs bring with it great fear, which is enough to deſerve the pain of Purgatory, and ſtoppeth the entrance into the Kingdom of Heaven.

To ſay that Penance ſtandeth of three parts, to wit, Contrition, Confeſſion, Satisfaction, is not founded in holy Scriptures, nor in ancient, holy, and Chriſtian Doctors.

Contrition, which a man ſtirreth up in himſelf, by diſcuſſing, remembring and deteſting his ſins, in revolving his former years in bitterneſs of Soul, and in pondering the weight, number and filthineſs of his ſins, the loſing of eternal Bliſs, and getting of eternal Damnation: this Contrition maketh a man an hypocrite, and a great ſinner.

It is an old Proverb, and to be preferred before the Doctrine of all that have written hitherto of Contrition: from henceforth to tranſgreſs no more. The chiefeſt and the beſt Penance is a new life.

• Beſt repentance is a new life.

Neither preſume to confeſs thy venial ſins, nor yet all thy mortal ſins; for it is impoſſible to remember all the mortal ſins that thou haſt committed, and therefore in the Primitive Church they confeſſed the mortal ſins which only were manifeſt.

While we ſeek to number up all our ſins ſincerely unto the Prieſt, we mean nothing elſe herein, but that we will leave nothing to the mercy of God to be forgiven.

In Confeſſion no man hath his ſins forgiven, except he believe, when the Prieſt forgiveth, the ſame to be remitted: yea, otherwiſe his ſin remaineth unforgiven, unleſs he believe the ſame to be forgiven. For elſe remiſſion of the Prieſt, and giving of Grace doth not ſuffice, except belief come on his part that is remitted.

Think not thy ſin to be aſſoiled for the worthineſs of thy contrition, but for the word of Chriſt, Whatſoever thou looſeſt, &c. When thou art abſolved of the Prieſt, truſt confidently upon theſe words do, and believe firmly thy ſelf to be abſolved, and then art thou truly remitted.

*Admit the party that is confeſſed were not contrite, (which is * impoſſible) or that the Prieſt pronounced the words of looſing not in earneſt, but in jeſt; yet if the party believe that he is abſolved, he is truly abſolved indeed.*

* Impoſſible, becauſe it cannot be that the Faith of the true Confeſſor can be without contrition

In the Sacrament of Penance and Abſolution, the Pope or Biſhop do no more then any inferiour Prieſt can do: yea, and where a Prieſt is not to be had, there every Chriſtian man, yea or Chriſtian Woman ſtandeth in as good ſtead.

† None ought to ſay to the Prieſt, that he is contrite; neither ought the Prieſt to ask any ſuch matter.

† He meaneth this, becauſe that as no man knoweth all his ſins; ſo no man can be contrite for them ſufficiently.

It is a great Errour of them which come to the holy Houſel truſting upon this, that they are confeſſed, that their Conſcience grudgeth them in no deadly ſin, that they have ſaid their Prayers, and done ſuch other preparatives before; all thoſe do eat and drink to their own judgment; but if they believe there to obtain Gods grace this Faith maketh them pure and worthy.

It were good that the Church ſhould determine in a general Council, Lay-men to communicate under both kinds; and the Bohemians ſo doing be therein neither Hereticks nor Schiſmaticks.

The Treaſures out of which the Pope doth grant his Indulgences, are not the merits of Chriſt, nor of his Saints.

*Indulgences and Pardons be a devout ſeducing of the Faithful, and hindrance to good works, and are in the number of them which be things * lawful, but not expedient.*

* This he correcteth in his aſſertions of theſe Articles, and ſaith, that Indulgences be neither lawful nor expedient. And likewiſe he correcteth and revoketh the Articles.

Pardons and Indulgences, to them which have them, avail not to remiſſion of the puniſhment due before God for actual ſins committed.

They which think that Indulgences are wholſom and conducible to the fruit of the Spirit, are deceived.

Indulgences are only neceſſary for publick Tranſgreſſions, and are only granted to them that are obſtinate and impatient.

Indulgences and Pardons are unprofitable to ſix ſorts of perſons. Firſt, To them that be dead, or lie in dying. Secondly, To them that be weak and infirm. Thirdly, To ſuch as have lawful impediments. Fourthly, To them that have not offended. Fifthly, To ſuch as have offended, but not publickly. Sixthly, To thoſe that amend and do well.

Excommunications be only outward puniſhments, and do not deprive a man of the publick ſpiritual Prayers of the Church.

Indulgences and Pardons taken clean away.

Chriſtians are to be taught rather to love Excommunication, than to dread it.

The Biſhop of Rome, Succeſſor of Peter, is not the Vicar of Chriſt, ordained by Chriſt and St. Peter, to have Authority over all the Churches in the World.

The

The Words of Chriſt to Peter, Whatſoever thou looſeſt &c. Matth. 16. extend no fureher but onely to thoſe things which be bound of Peter himſelf.

It is not in the Hands either of the Church or of the Pope to make Articles of the Faith, yea, or Laws either of manners or good works.

Albeit the Pope with a great part of the Church teaching ſo or ſo, do not err therein; yet is it no ſin nor Hereſie for a Man to hold contrary to them, namely, in ſuch things which are not neceſſary to ſalvation, ſo long as it is not otherwiſe condemned or approved by a General Councel.

We have a way made plain unto us to infringe the Authority of Councels and freely to gainſtand their doings, and to judge upon their Decrees, and boldly to ſpeak our knowledge whatſoever we judge to be true, whether the ſame be approved or reproved by any General Councel.

Some of the Articles of John Hus, condemned in the Councel of Conſtance, are Chriſtian, moſt true and Evangelical, whom the Univerſal Church cannot condemn.

In every good work the Juſt Man ſinneth.

"This Article is true if the work ſhould be brought to be tried by Gods judgment. And here alſo he correcteth himſelf in this word venial, becauſe all ſins are damnable.

"Every good work of ours, when it is beſt done, it is a venial ſin.

To burn Hereticks is againſt the will of the Spirit.

"He meaneth that we ſhould ſpecially reform our lives, which deſerve the Turks to plague us.

"To fight againſt the Turks is to repugn againſt God, Viſiting our Iniquities by them.

Freewil after ſin is a title and name onely of a thing. and while man doth that which lieth in him, he ſinneth deadly.

Purgatory cannot be proved out of Holy Scripture which is Canonical.

"Theſe Articles alſo of Purgatory he correcteth and taketh Purgatory clean away.

Souls in Purgatory be not certain of their ſafety, at leaſt not all. neither is it proved by Reaſons or by Scriptures, that they be utterly out of the ſtate to deſerve or increaſe charity.

"Souls in Purgatory do ſin without intermiſſion, ſo long as they ſeek reſt, and dread puniſhment.

The Souls being delivered out of Purgatory by the Prayers of the living be leſs bleſſed, than if they had ſatisfied for themſelves.

Eccleſiaſtical Prelates and worldly Princes ſhould not do amiſs, if they would ſcoure away all the bags of begging Friers.

All which Errors there is no Man in his right wits but he knoweth the ſame, in their ſeveral reſpects, how peſtilent they be, how pernitious, how much they ſeduce godly and ſimple minds, and finally, how much they be againſt all charity, and againſt the Reverence of the Holy Church of Rome the Mother of all faithful, and Miſtreſs of the Faith it ſelf, and againſt the ſinews and ſtrength of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, which is obedience, the Fountain and Welſpring of all vertues, and without the which every man is to be convinced eaſily to be an Infidel.

We therefore deſiring to proceed in the premiſſes more earneſtly, as behoveth in things of moſt importance, and meaning to cut off the courſe of this peſtiferous and cankered diſeaſe, leſt it ſhould ſpread it ſelf further in the Lords field, like hurtful Brambles or Briers, and uſing upon the ſaid Errors, and every of them, diligent trial, debating, ſtreight examination, ripe deliberation: And further, weighing and thorowly ſifting all and every of the ſame together, with our reverend Brethren the Cardinals of the Church of Rome, the Priors of the Orders regular, or Miniſters General, alſo with divers other Profeſſors and Maſters of Divinity, and of both the Laws, and thoſe the beſt learned; do find the foreſaid Errors or Articles, reſpectively, as is aforeſaid not to be Catholick, nor to be taught as Catholick, but to be againſt the Doctrin or Tradition of the Catholick Church, and againſt the true interpretation of Holy Scripture, received by the ſame; to whoſe Authority Auguſtine thuought he ought ſo much to lean, that he would not (as he ſaid) have believed the Goſpel, if the Authority of the Church had not thereunto moved him.

Concilium malignantium.

For by theſe Errors, or at leaſt be ſome of them, it followeth conſequently, that the ſame Church, which is guided by the Holy Ghoſt, now doth, and ever hath erred: which is utterly againſt that which Chriſt at the time of his aſcenſion (as we read in the Holy Goſpel of Matthew) promiſed to his Diſciples, ſaying, I am with you until the end of the world, &c. And alſo againſt the Determination of the Holy Fathers, againſt the expreſs Ordinances or Canons of Councels and head Biſhops, whom not to obey hath always been the cauſe and nurſe of all Hereſies and Schiſms, as Cyprian doth witneſs.

The Articles of Luther condemned.

Wherefore by the Counſel and Aſſent of the ſaid our Reverend Brethren, upon due conſideration of all and ſingular the Premiſſes, by the Authority of Almighty God, and of the Bleſſed Apoſtles, of Peter and Paul, and our own, we do condemn, reprove, and utterly reject all and ſingular the Articles or Errours aforeſaid reſpectively, as ſome to be Heretick, ſome to be ſlanderous, ſome to be offenſive to godly ears, or elſe ſeducing ſimple minds, and regugnant to the Catholick truth, and by the tenour hereof we here decree, and declare that they ought of all Chriſtian People, both Men and Women, to be taken as damned, reproved and rejected. And therefore forbidding here under pain of the Greater Curſe and Excommunication, loſing of their Dignities, whether they be Eccleſiaſtical or Temporal, and to be deprived and made uncapable of all Regular Orders and Priviledges, given and granted by the See Apoſtolick, of what condition ſoever they be; alſo of loſing of their liberties to hold General Schools, to read and profeſs any Science and Faculty; of loſing alſo their Tenures and Feoffments, and of inhability for ever to recover the ſame again, or any other; moreover, under pain of ſecluding from Chriſtian Burial, yea and of Treaſon alſo, and incurring ſuch pains and puniſhments expreſſed in the Law, as are due for all Hereticks and Fautors of the ſame ſame; we charge and command all and ſingular Chriſtian People, both Men and Women, as well of the Laity, as of the Clergy, both Secular and alſo Regular, of what Order ſoever they be, and briefly all other Perſons, of what degree or condition ſoever they be, or in what Dignity ſoever they are placed, either Eccleſiaſtical or Temporal; as firſt the Cardinals of the Holy Church of Rome, Patriarchs, Primates, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, which the Prelates and Heads of the Churches Patriarchical, Metropolitane, or other Cathedral, Collegiate, and other ſmall and inferiour Churches; alſo all Clerks and other Perſons Eccleſiaſtical, as Abbots, Priors, or Miniſters, general or particular, Brethren or Religious Men, exempt and not exempt; Alſo Univerſities of Schools, and all other, as well Secular Prieſts, as Regular and Religious Perſons of all Orders, yea of the begging Friers alſo. Item, Kings, Electors of the Imperial Crown, Princes, Dukes, Marqueſſes, Barons, Captains, Conductors and Servitours, and all Officers, Judges, Notaries, whether they be Eccleſiaſtical, or Secular; Communalties, Univerſities, Dominions, Cities, Caſtles, Lordſhips, and places, with the Inhabiters of the ſame; and finally all other Perſons whatſoever, Eccleſiaſtical or Regular, diperſed in whatſoever places through the whole "Univerſal World, or which ſhall be hereafter diſperſed, but eſpecially in high Almany, that they ſhall not preſume publickly or privately under any manner of pretence or colour, colourably or expreſſly, or how elſe ſoever, to hold, maintain, defend, preach, or favour the foreſaid Errours or any of them, or any ſuch perverſe Doctrine.

Behold how Kings come after bags and wallets, and begging Friers.

"Here may be a doubt, whether the man in the Moon be exempted with his buſh of thorns on his neck out of this Bull or not.

Over and beſides, forſomuch as the foreſaid Errours, and many other are contained in the Books or Writings of the foreſaid Martin Luther, therefore we condemn, reprove, and utterly reject, and hold for utterly condemned, reproved and rejected, the foreſaid Books, and all the Writings of the ſaid Martin, with his Preachings, in what tongue ſoever they are found, wherein the ſaid Errours or any of them is contained, willing and commanding under the vertue of Holy Obedienoe, and incurring the Penalties aforeſaid, to all and ſingular Chriſtian People, both Men and Women above rehearſed, that they preſume not by any manner of ways, directly, colourably or expreſſly, privily or apertly, either in their Houſes, in other publique or private places, to read, hold, preach, print, publiſh, or defund, either by themſelves or by others, but ſtraightwayes after the the publiſhing hereof, they do burn or cauſe to be burned the ſaid errors, by their Ordinaries diligently being ſearched out, and ſolemnly preſented in the ſight of the whole Clergy and the People, under all and ſingular the penalties aforeſaid.

Let us ſee here what ye have not done: firſt Luther gently ſubmitted himſelf; but you rejected him: he then referred him to the judgment of 4. Univerſities in Germany; it would not be taken: he then appealed from the Cardinal to the Pope; the Pope refuſed him: then he appealed from the Pope to the Council; neither did the Pope admit that: he required, to be convinced by the Scriptures, the Pope neither would not could ſo do. And yet the Pope ſaith he left nothing undone Ierem. 8. Here note, good reader, that Luther appealed from the Pope to the Councel two years before this Bull which was Anno. 1518.

Now as touching the ſaid Martin, O good Lord, what have we left undone? what have we left unattempted? what fatherly charity have we not ſhewed, whereby to have reduced him from theſe errours? For after that we did cite him, thinking to proceed with him more favourably, we invited and exhorted him as well by divers Tractations had with our Legate, as by our own Letters, that he would relinquiſh the foreſaid Errours, or elſe having ſafe Conduct offered to him, with Mony neceſſary for his journey, to come to us without any fear or dread, which perfect charity ought to caſt out, and ſo after the example of our Saviour, and his Apoſtle Saint Paul, he would ſpeak, not in Corners and in ſecret, but openly to our Face. Which if he had done, of truth we think no leſs, but that reforming himſelf, he would have Recogniſed his Errours, neither ſhould have found ſo many faults in the Court of Rome, which he being ſeduced with the Rumors of Malicious people, more than he ought, doth ſo much reprehend. Where we would have taught him to ſee more cleerly than the light day, that the Holy Fathers of Rome our Predeceſſours, (whom he without all modeſty moſt injuriouſly doth rail upon) did never erre in their Canons and Conſtitutions (which he ſo much depraveth.) For as ſaith the Prophet, Neither is there Roſin or Phyſitian lacking in Galaad. But he hath always ſhewed himſelf diſobedient, and refuſed at our citation to appear, and yet to this preſent day, continuing ſtill in his ſtubborn Mind and Heart indurate, hath remained now more than a year under our Curſe; yea and moreover, adding miſchief to miſchief, (which is worſt of all) he hearing of this our Citation, burſt out into a preſumptuous Appellation from us, unto the next General Council, againſt the Conſtitution both of Pope Pius the ſecond, and Pope Julius the ſecond, our Predeceſſors, which ſo decreed, that all they which ſo did appeal ſhould be puniſhed as Hereticks.

In vain alſo he ſeeketh Refuge to the General Council, which profeſſeth himſelf not greatly to regard ſuch Councels. So that now we might lawfully proceed againſt him, as againſt one Notoriouſly ſuſpected of his Faith, yea a very Heretick indeed, without any further Citation or delay, to the Condemnation of him, as of an Heretick, and to the ſeverity of all and ſingular pains and cenſures afore written. Yet we nowithſtanding by the Counſel of our Brethren aforeſaid, following the Clemency of Almighty God, which will not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he ſhould convert and live, and forgetting all injuries heretofore done unto us and to the See Apoſtolique, have thought good to uſe all favourable means towards him that we might, and ſo to work, (as much as in us lieth) that he, by this way of manſuetude, might be brought to reformation, ſo that he forſaking his former Errors might be received as the loſt Child, and return again into the lap of his Mother the Church.

Wherefore in moſt hearty wiſe we exhort and beſeech the ſaid Martin and all his Adherents, Receivers and Fautors, by the Bowels of the Mercy of our God, and by the ſprinkling of the Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in whom, and by whom, is made the Redemption of Mankind, and the edification of his Holy Mother Church, that they will ceaſe to diſturb the Peace, Unity and Verity of the ſaid Church; for the which our Saviour ſo inſtantly prayed to his Father, and that they will abſtain from ſuch Pernicious Errors aforeſaid. Who in ſo doing ſhall find with us (if they ſhall obey, or ſhall certifie us by lawful witneſſes to have obeyed effectually herein) the affection of fatherly charity, and a full fountain opened of all mercy and clemency; willing and charging the ſaid Martin notwithſtanding from henceforth, that he utterly deſiſt in the mean time from all preaching and office of preaching. Or elſe if the love of Juſtice and Vertue ſhall not reſtrain the ſaid Martin from Sin, neither the hope of our Pardon ſhall reduce and bring him to Repentance; to the intent that the terror of puniſhment and of diſcipline may bridle him, we require and admoniſh the ſaid Martin and his Adherents, Abettors, Fautors, and Receivers, by the tenor hereof, in the Verity of Holy Obedince, and under incurring all the penalties aforeſaid, diſtrictly charging and commanding that within forty days (whereof twenty we aſſign for the firſt, ten for the ſecond, and the other ten for the third and peremptory term) immediatly following after the ſetting up of theſe preſent Letters, the ſaid Martin, his Abettors, Fautors, Adherents, and Receivers aforeſaid, do ſurceaſe from the foreſaid Errors, and from the preaching, publiſhing, maintaining, and defending of the ſame alſo from ſetting out of Book or Scriptures upon the ſaid Errors, or any of them; and furthermore, that they burn or cauſe to be burned all and ſingular ſuch Books and Scriptures as contain the foreſaid Errors, or any of them, by any manner of way.

Alſo that the ſaid Martin do uttterly revoke thoſe Errors and Aſſertions, and ſo certifie us of the revoking thereof by publick Teſtimony, in due form of Law, ſigned by the Hands of two Prelates, to be ſent unto us within the term of other like forty days or elſe to be brought by him unto us, if he himſelf will come (which would pleaſe us much rather) with a full ſafe conduct above mentioned, which from henceforth we are content to offer unto him, to the intent that no ſcruple of doubt, touching his true Obedience ſhould hereafter remain.

The Popes ſafe conduct to Luther offered.

Contrariwiſe, if the ſaid Martin (which God defend) his Abettors, Fautors, Adherents, and Maintainers aforeſaid, ſhall otherwiſe do, or ſhall not fulfil, to every effect and purpoſe, all and ſingular the premiſſes within the term aforeſaid, we then following the Doctrine of the Apoſtles, which teacheth us to void an Heretical perſon after the firſt and ſecond correction, as well now as before, and as well before as now, declaring by our Authority the ſaid Martin, his Abettors, Fautors Adherents, Maintainers, and Receivers, as withered Branches not remaining in Chriſt, but teaching and preaching contrary Doctrine, repugnant to the Catholick Faith, ſlanderous and damnable, to the great offence of Gods Majeſty, to the detriment and ſlander of the Univerſal Church and Catholick Faith, and deſpiſing the Keys of the Church, to be, and to have been notorious and obſtinate Hereticks, do condemn the ſame for ſuch by the tenor hereof, willing and commanding them to be holden and taken for ſuch of all Chriſtian people aforeſaid.

All the Books of Luther both good and bad condemned by the Pope.

Over and beſides, we forbid, under the incurring of all and ſingular the penalties afore expreſſed in ſo doing, that any man preſume by any manner of way, directly or indirectly, ſecretly or expreſly, privily or apertly, to read, hold, preach, praiſe, print, publiſh or defend, either by themſelves or by any other, the ſaid Books and Writings, not only thoſe wherein the Errours aforſaid are contained, but alſo all others whatſoever have been or ſhall be ſet forth, written or made by the ſaid Martin, vehemently ſuſpected as a pernicious enemy of the Catholick Faith, to the intent that his memory may utterly be rooted out from the fellowſhip of all Chriſtian people or rather with fire to conſume them, as is before declared.

We admoniſh moreover all and ſingular Chriſts faithful people, under the ſaid pain of the Great Curſe, to avoid or cauſe to be avoided, ſo much as in them doth lie, the foreſaid Hereticks not obedient to our commandment, and to have no Fellowſhip nor any Converſation or Communion with them, or with any of them, neither to Miniſter to them things Neceſſary.

Apoc. 13. And he ſhall have power and commandment upon every company, & people, and tongue, and nation, &c.

And moreover, to the more confuſion of the ſaid Martin, with his Abettors, Adherents, and Retainers aforeſaid, thus being declared and condemned as Hereticks, after the expiring of the term aforeſaid, we command all and ſingular Chriſts faithful people both Men and Women, as Patriarchs, Archbiſhops, Prelates of Churches, either Patriarchal, Metropolit[illegible] and other Cathedral, Collegiate, and other i[illegible]ur Churches; to Deans and Chapters, and other Eccleſiaſtical Perſons Secular, and of all other Orders, even of the begging Friers alſo, namely of that Congregation, where the ſaid Martin is profeſſed, or hath his abode; alſo to Regular, exempt, and not exempt; Item, to all and ſingular Princes what what Dignity or Calling soever, either Ecclesiastical or Temporal, they be of; to Kings, Princes Electors, Dukes, Marquesses, Earls, Barons, Captains, Conductors, Servitors, Communalties, Universities, Dominions, Cities, Lands, Castles, and Places, or the Citizens and Inhabitants thereof; and briefly, to all and singular other aforesaid, through the Universal World dispersed, specially in Almany, that they, and every of them, under all and singular Penalties aforesaid, do personally apprehend the said Martin, his Abettors, Adherents, Receivers, and Fautors, and retain them being apprehended, at our instance, and send them unto us (who in so doing, for their good work, shall receive of us and the See Apostolick condign reward and recompence) or at least, that they utterly drive them, and every one of them, out of their Metropolitan, Cathedral, Collegiate, and other Churches, Houses, Monasteries, Covents, Cities, Dominions, Universities, Communalties, Castles, Lands, and places respectively, as well the Clergy-men, as the Regular and Lay-men, all and singular aforesaid.

The Pope here dreameth of a dry Summer, thinking all the World to be subject unto him.

These Cities, Dominions, Lands, Castles, Villages, Communalties, Holds, Towns and Places, whersoever they be situate respectively, Metropolitan, Cathedral, Collegiate, and other Churches, Monasteries also, Priories, Covents, and religious and devout places, of what Order soever (as is aforesaid) unto the which it shall chance the said Martin to come, so long as he or they shall there remain, and three days after their departing from thence, we here give over to the Ecclesiastical Interdiction.

And that the Premisses may be known to all men, we command moreover all Patriarchs, Archbishops, Bishops, Prelats of the Patriarchal, Metropolitan, and other Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, to Deans and Chapters, and other persons Ecclesiastical, and of what Order else soever aforesaid, to Regular Brethren, Religious Monks, exempt and not exempt aforesaid, wheresoever they dwell, and especially within Almany, that they and every of them, under like Censures and Pains, do publickly denounce, and cause and command to be denounced of others, the said Martin, with all and singular his foresaid Adherents, which shall not obey our Commandments and Monitions, within the term aforesaid, upon every Sunday, and other Festival days, within their Churches, when as the greatest concourse of people shall resort to Divine Service, to be declared and condemned for Hereticks, and that all Christs faithful People shall avoid them under the said Censures and Penalties as be afore expressed, and that they do set up these Presents, or cause to be set up, or the Transcript of them made under the form hereafter ensuing, in their Churches, Monasteries, Houses, Covents, and other places there openly to be seen and read.

Item, We do Excommunicate and Curse all and singular persons, of whatsoever state, degree, condition, preheminence, dignity, or excellency they be, which shall procure, or cause to be procured, by themselves or other, privily or apertly, directly or indirectly, secretly or expressly, whereby these Presents, or the Copies transcript, or the examples of them cannot be read, set up, and published in their Lands and Dominions, &c.

Let no man therefore be so bold to dare to infringe, or with rash presumption to contrary this Writing of our Damnation, Reprobation, Rejection, Decree, Declaration, Inhibition, Will, Commandment, Exhortation, Beseeching, Request, Admonition, Assignation, Grant, Condemnation, Subjection, Excommunication and Curse. And if any person and persons dare presume to attempt the same, let him know and be sure that he shall incur the indignation of Almighty God, and his blessed Apostles Peter and Paul.

Cujus contrarium verum est.

Given at Rome at S. Peters, Anno 1520. 17 Calend. Julii. And of our Popedom the eighth year.

M. Luther answering again to the Popes Bull.

Although it was somewhat long before this Bull aforesaid of Pope Leo, being sent and dispersed through all other places abroad, could come to the hands of Luther, yet so soon as he by means of his Friends might get a sight thereof, he shaped again an Answer to the same; in such sort, as I am sure the Pope himself will say that this Bull was never so baited, and so well-favouredly shaken in all his days, as by the handling of the matter, and reading of his Answer, may evidently appear. The Contents and Copy of the which Answer I thought here, next after the said Bull, immediatly to exhibit to the Christian Reader, that whoso is disposed to confer the one with the other, having them both at hand, may judge the better of the whole matter and cause, and also may see the true image of the Pope, out of his painted vizor, appear in his own perfect colours. The Answer now to the Bull here followeth.

Martinus Lutherus Christiano Lectori, gratiam Christi in salutem æternam.

The answer of M. Luther to the Popes Bull in Latin.

FAma pervenit ad me, Christiane Lector, exiisse Bullam quandam adversum me, pene in omnem terram, priusquam ad me, in quem unicè fuerit, & cui maximè erat inferenda, veniret. Fortè, quòd noctis & tenebrarum scilicet filia, timet lucem vultus mei. Hanc tamen ipsam noctuam, vix tandem multum adjuvantibus amicis, in imagine sua, datum est videre, &c.

Quæ sequuntur vide superiore editione, p. 1465.

Here followeth the same Answer of Martin Luther against the execrable Bull of Pope Leo in English.

The Copy of M. Luthers answer to the Bull of Pope Leo in English.

MArtin Luther to the Christian Reader, wisheth the Grace of Christ to eternal Salvation. I heard a fame afar off (Christian Reader) that a certain Bull was past out against me, and sent almost over all the World before it came to me, against whom it was specially directed, and to whom it most chiefly appertained. For what cause I cannot tell, except peradventure it was for that the said Bull, like unto a night Crow, and as a Bird of darkness hatched in the night, durst not flee in the day, nor abide to come in my sight. Notwithstanding the said night Fowl after long time, by help of Friends, was caught at length, and brought unto me in his own likeness to behold. Which causeth me yet to be uncertain what to think, whether my Papists do dally and jest with me, in setting out such famous Libels without any name, against me; or whether in truth and earnest they play the mad men so against me at Rome, or no. For first, neither do I see here the Stile (as it is called) nor the Process of the Court of Rome observed. And again (which maketh me more to doubt) herein be brought and condemned such Articles, which it is plain and manifest to be most Christian: whereby it seemeth to me most like, the said Monster to be hatched by John Eckius, a man wholly compact and framed altogether of lies, dissimulations, errors, and heresies.

Eckius a false Apostle.

The said suspicion this also partly confirmeth, for that I hear it so bruted abroad, that the said Eckius is thought and said to be the Apostle of such a goodly Bull. And not unlike, when none could be more meet Apostle for such an Apostleship than he. And indeed I heard no less long since, that a Bull was in working against me at Rome, partly by the workmanship of Eckius; which because (as the stile and composition thereof declareth) it displeaseth the good and learned men there) was therefore deferred) and should have been suppressed.

But whatsoever the matter be, it seemeth to me not unlike, wheresoever this Apostle Eckius beareth rule, there to be the Kingdom of Antichrist, and all kind of madness there to reign. In the mean time I will so deal, that I will not seem to believe Pope Leo the Tenth, with his learned Cardinals, to be the Authors of this furious madness: Which I do not so much for the honour of the See of Rome, as because I will not be puft up too much with pride, and seem to my self as one worthy to suffer such, so great, and so glorious things for the Verity of God. For if it were so indeed, that the Bishop of Rome did so furiously rage against me, who were then so happy before God as Luther, to be condemned for so manifest a Truth of such a proud Prelat? Wherein what were more to be wished for of me, than that I should never be absolved, reconciled, nor have any part with that so doltish and unlearned, wicked and furious Anti-christ? Happy were that day, happy were that death, and to be received with all joy and thankfulnes to God, if it might be my hap at any time, in such a cause as this is, to be apprehended and to suffer death. But give the honour of this cause unto others, and let this matter find his Martyr worthy for the same; I for my Sins am not worthy to come to that honour.

M. Luther thinketh himself not worthy to suffer in so good acaute.

Let other men therefore think of these Romanists what they list; thus I think, that whosoever was the Author of this Bull he is a very Antichrist; and against Antichrist these things I write, to redeem the verity of Christ, so much as in me lieth, which he laboureth to extinguish. And first, that he shall obtain no part of his Will in any thing against me, here I protest before God and our Lord Jesus Christ, and his holy Angels, and all the World, that I dissent with all my heart from the condemnation of this Bull, which Bull I also do curse and execrate, as an Enemy, a Church-Robber, and Blasphemy against Christ the Son of God, our Lord, Amen.

M. Luthers protestation.

Furthermore, I hold, defend, and embrace with the full trust of my Spirit, those Articles in the said Bull condemned and excommunicate, and affirm that the same ought to be holden of all Faithful Christians, under pain of eternal malediction, and that they are to be counted for Antichrists, whosoever have consented to the said Bull, whom I also, together with the Spirit of all them which know the truth, do utterly detest, and shun them, according to the Precept of our Lord Jesus Christ, Amen. And let this stand for thy revocation, O Bulla, verè Bullarum filia: (i) O thou Bull, which art the very Daughter of all vain * bubbles.

Mark here how Luther recanteth.

* Bulla in Latin signifieth as much in English, as a bubble in the Water.

This my Confession and Protestation made (for witness whereof I take them all that shall read these presents) before I proceed to defend and declare these foresaid Articles, I will first begin with certain Arguments for the confutation of the said Bull; whereof the first I will take of the blind ignorance of this blockish Antichrist. For the Apostle Peter so commandeth, that we should be ready to render a Reason of that Faith and Hope which is in us. And the Apostle Paul willeth a Bishop to be mighty to exhort in sound Doctrine, and to refute the gainsayers. And these things be they which now three years ago I have desired and looked for out of Rome, or from them which take part with Rome. Which things also we do read to be observed most diligently amongst the ancient Fathers, whensoever they condemned Heresie. Neither do we read that the Apostles did ever decree any thing in their Councels, but they first alledged the holy Scripture. So I also when I waited that they would answer me with Grapes, and enform me with true Testimonies of the Scripture, behold they bring to me sowre and wild Grapes, condemning me with nothing else but bare words, whereas I have fortified my matter with plain Scriptures.

Tit. 1.

The Papists will not abide the trial of the Scripture.

I say unto thee, O thou most unlearned Antichrist, hast thou joyned such brain-sick rashnes together with such barbarous ignorance, that thou wilt presume to think all men to be turned into Stocks and blocks, and to think that thou with thy bare and naked words only canst triumph against the invincible force and power of Gods holy Word? Hast thou learned this manner of condemning the Magistralities of Colen and of Lovaine?

If this be the manner of the Church to damn Errors, only to say, I like it not, I deny it, I will not, what Fool, what Patch, what Ass, what Block cannot condemn after this manner? Is not thy whorish face ashamed, in the publick sight of the Church to dare once to set the trifling vanities only of thy naked and bare words against the Thunderbolts of Gods eternal Word? O impudent condemnation and right seemly for Antichrist! which hath not one jot or tittle to bring against such evident Scriptures inferred against him, but only with one word cometh and saith, I condemn thee. And why then do we not believe the Turk? Why do we not admit the Jews? Why do we not honour the Heretick which also condemn our writings as well as he, if it be enough only to condemn? unless we do not therefore peradventure give place unto them, because they condemn us not utterly without some Scriptures and Reasons: but these men after a new-found fashion, utterly without all Scriptures or Reason, do condemn us. What then shall I think to be the cause why they proceeded against me with their Bull condemnatory, so vain, so ridiculous, so trifling, but only their meer blockishnes, whereby they seeing my allegations to be true, and not able to abide, nor yet to confute the same, thought to terrifie me with their vain ratling of their rotten parchment. But I tell thee Antichrist, that Luther, being accustomed to War, will not be terrified with these vain Bulls, and hath learned to put a difference between a piece of Paper and the omnipotent Word of God.

The Pope's Bull terrifieth not Luther afraid.

Of the like ignorance proceedeth this also, that they, against their own Conscience, durst not particularly digest all and singular the Articles in their Orders; for they feared lest they should note him for an Heretick; whom they were not able perhaps to convince either to be erroneous or offensive, and therefore they have found out this Adverb respectivè: and after the numbring of the Articles, then come they and say that some be respectively Heretical, some erroneous, and some offensive, which is as much to say, as we suppose them to be Heretical, some erroneous, and some slanderous, but we cannot tell qui, qualis, quanti, i. which, what manner, and how great they are. O dastardly ignorance, how slippery and cowardly art thou? how art thou afraid of the light? how dost thou turn and return all things, lest thou shouldst be taken like a Proteus? and yet for all that thou shalt not so escape, yea in thy wilines thou shalt the rather be overtaken and subverted.

Respectively.

Proteus is a certain Monster among the Poets, which turneth himself into all colours.

Come out therefore, O thou Ass-headed Antichrist, shew forth thy wisdom, and dispose thy matters in order. Tell us if thou canst, what sayest thou or meanest thou, when thou sayest this Article is Heretical, this is erroneous, this is offensive. For it becometh such a worshipful condemner to know what he condemneth. And too shameful it is to condemn an Article for Heretical, and yet cannot name the same. Neither will I be answered here with respectively, but I look to be taught simply and plainly, for I am one of Occams faction which contemneth these respectives, and love to have all things simple and absolute.

Thou seest therefore (good Reader) the ignorant dotage of this Antichrist, how craftily, and yet grosly he thinketh to walk in a net under his adverb, respectively, who not only doth not teach the truth, and cause of his condemning, but neither also dare prove any errour, nor shew forth what it is that he condemneth, and yet must he needs condemn. Is not this trow you a proper kind of damning, to damn and cannot tell what he damneth? Is not this a fine manner of loquution, passing all Rhetorick, to speak, and yet not to know what he speaketh? what Purgatories might we wish sufficient to purge the doltish brains of these Bull bragging Bedlems? with such blindnes and doltishnes are all these Adversaries of Gods truth worthy to be plagued.

The dotage of Antichrist.

But I know whereupon all this grief riseth. The origine whereof is this; Eckius mine old Adversary remembring how he was put to shame enough at Lypsia, when he rousing himself upon his stage, and frothing at the mouth like a Bore, with a furious mouth called me three hundred times Heretick, for the Article of Hus's, and yet afterward was was not able to prove the same, whereas the Sentence Condemnatory of the Councel of Constance, alledged by me otherwise than Eckius looked for, noted there no certain note for Heretical; and also the same condemnation, much like to this of ours, with the like foolishnes called some of his Articles Heretical, some erroneous, and some offensive; and Eckius hearing this, being confounded in himself for his impudent rashnes, perceiving that he had called me Heretick falsely and untruly: he thought then to heal this wound again at Rome, and there to stablish his false and impudent lying. But the lying Sophister shall not prevail by the help, I trust, of Christ: for I ask and require you still, that they absolutely and not respectively, distinctly and not confusedly, simply and not dissemblingly, plainly and not obscurely, particularly and not in general, do shew what is, and what is not Heretical. But when will they so do? when Christ and Beliall, or when light and darkness shall agree together.

Eckius

Eckius taken with a lye.

And

And what ſhall I do then in the mean time? firſt I will contemn theſe daſtardly Dotipoles and unlearned Papiſts and Apoſtles of Antichriſt. And I will ſcorn them as Helias did, and ſay, If Baal be God, let him anſwer: peradventure he is drunk, or buſie in his journey, cry out higher, for he is a God and peradventure ſleepeth. For what other thing do theſe Bull-bragging Aſſes deſerve elſe, which condemn that they know not, and confeſs all their own ignorance?

3 Reg. 18.

Secondly, I will not be troubled nor diſquieted for the matter, neither am I to be counted heretick, erroneous, or offenſive, ſo long as I ſhall not be proved and plainly convicted with ſimple and manifeſt words in what Article I am ſo judged. Neither do I here charge my Papiſts, theſe Blockheads, that I will put them to their proofs, but only that they will ſhew me at leaſt my errour, that is, that they will ſhew me, if they know what it is that they themſelves do prattle of, or have any feeling of their own doings. For ſo long as they aſſign me no Heretical Article, I am at free liberty to deny what Article ſoever they lay unto me to be heretical, and ſay it is Catholick.

The brutiſh diſtinction of the Papiſts between Articles heretical, erroneous, ſlanderous, and offenſive.

Again, what a rudeneſs is it in this wicked and doltiſh Antichriſt, worthy to be laughed at, whereas theſe Dromedaries do diſtinguiſh heretical Articles from thoſe that be erroneous, and the erroneous from offenſive, and thoſe again from ſlanderous? By the which ſubtile diſtinction of thoſe groſs headed Dolts this we do gather, That that Article which is erroneous is not heretical, and if it be not heretical, what doth it then appertain to theſe Eccleſiaſtical Condemners, which ought to condemn thoſe things only which be heretical? For that which is not heretical is Catholick, as Chriſt himſelf ſaith, He that is not againſt us is with us. Yea, I would wiſh that theſe jolly Sophiſters would ſhew me in all the Church an Article that is erroneous and not heretical: for if it be erroneous, it differeth nothing from heretical, but only in ſtiffneſs of defending. For all things be equally either true or falſe, although affection, in ſome one thing which is true or falſe, may be greater or leſſer. Ye ſee therefore again, how theſe men for all their bragging Bulls are not able to produce me one Article which is erroneous and not heretical, and yet like wiſe brain-ſick men, they will needs babble they know not themſelves what, condemning that which they find erroneous and not heretical, which cannot ſtand either in matter or in words, ſo that ſuch as are the Articles, ſuch is the Condemnation.

Luke 9.

Erroneous.

Scandalous.

The like wiſdom alſo they ſhew in affirming that to be ſcandalous, which is neither heretical nor erroneous. That Article I would fain ſee either in my Books, or in the words and works of any Writer elſe from the beginning of the World to the latter end. What made my Papiſts then to excogitate theſe ſo prodigious Monſters, but only their monſtrous fury and madneſs? Unleſs peradventure they mean thoſe Articles ſo to be ſcandalous, as commonly all true and Catholick Articles are wont to be. For what is more ſcandalous than Verity? Yea, only Truth and Verity is ſcandalous to all proud and ſenſleſs perſons, as it is ſaid of Chriſt, 1 Cor. 1. We preach, ſaith S. Paul, Chriſt crucified, a ſtumbling ſtone to the Jews, and to the Gentiles fooliſhneſs. And in Luke 2. He is ſet to be the fall and riſing up of many in Iſrael. wherefore, whereas my Papiſts do diſtinguiſh ſcandalous Articles from heretical and erroneous; and forſomuch as that which is not heretical or erroneous muſt needs be Catholick and true; it followeth thereof, that theſe ſcandalous Articles be underſtood and condemned of them for ſuch as be very Catholick and ſound. O worthy commendations and meet for the Papiſts!

1 Cor. 1.

Luke 2.

Mark here, good Reader, the impiety of theſe blind Buzzards, whither they roll themſelves, how they deride and mock themſelves, how eaſily they are taken in their own words, how fond and fooliſh they are in their ſtudies, not only in not proving any error or ſlander in theſe Articles, but alſo in going about only to expreſs them, how they caſt out things impoſſible and moſt fooliſhly repugnant to themſelves. Where is then, thou moſt preſumptuous and ſhameleſs Bull, thy doltiſh reſpective now become? whither reſpectedſt thou? Verily into the bottomleſs pit of impiety, and thine own brutiſh ſtolidity.

The like alſo is to be ſaid touching the Articles offenſive, which muſt be neither ſlanderous, neither erroneous, nor heretical, ſeeing they are made diſtinct by ſuch great Rabbines. Who will not now marvel at the deep and profound wiſdom of theſe Papiſts, which could find out that to be offenſive in the Church, which is neither falſe, neither heretical, nor ſlanderous; but true, ſound, Catholick and edifying, and yet muſt that alſo be condemned. And who would not now deſire and covet to be condemned alſo of ſuch hair-brained Ideots, who by their own condemning, do utter themſelves to approve things damnable, and to condemn things juſtifiable, that is, which openly ſhew themſelves, to their own great ignominy and ſhame, to be more ſenſleſs than ſtocks, rocks, or blocks. Go ye now therefore, O ye impious and brainleſs Papiſts, and if ye will needs write, ſhew your ſelves more ſober: for this Bull, it appeared, was either ſpued out in your night Feaſts, among Drabs and Harlots, or elſe huddled up in the Canicular days, or mad Midſummer Moon: for never were there any Dizzards that would ſhew themſelves ſo mad.

Offenſive.

Let us now return this durt of Antichriſt, and caſt it in his own teeth, and of his own words let us judge him and condemn him, that hereafter he may learn to take better heed, and to be better adviſed in his lying. For as the Proverb ſaith, A lyar had need to have a good memory. If ſome Articles be offenſive, and other heretical, and thou condemneſt him which is no Heretick, and conſequently a true Catholick, although he be ſix hundred times offenſive; Doth not thy ſhameleſs mouth then condemn thy ſelf, not only of Hereſie, but of extream Impiety, Blaſphemy and Treaſon againſt Gods holy Truth, ſhewing thy ſelf to be the Man in deed which is the Adverſary, and is extolled above all which is called God, or is worſhipped? Art not thou then the Man of Sin, the Son of Perdition, which denieth God his Redeemer, and taketh away the love of Truth, to ſtabliſh the ſetting forth of his Error, for men to believe iniquity, as Paul foretold? for if the Article be not heretical, it cannot be offenſive or ſlanderous, but only to ſuch Hereticks as Antichriſt is, and Sataniſts of all Piety. See therefore how his ſhameleſs and moſt fooliſh Bull, whiles it condemneth in me one thing to be heretical, and another offenſive, doth manifeſtly declare the Authors thereof to be true Hereticks, and the Enemies of God indeed. So that now it may appear that there is no knowledge nor counſel againſt the Lord, ſeeing blind Impiety is thus caught in the words of his own mouth; ſo truly it is ſaid, That he which caſteth up a ſtone on high, it falleth down again upon his own pate.

The Popes dirt caſt in his own teeth.

Prov. 12.

And (which is chiefeſt of all) by this their wicked contradiction it cometh to paſs; that the cogitations of their own hearts be revealed, and that they themſelves chiefly do utter and diſcloſe their own wickedneſs which they covet moſt to conceal, that all men may ſee how ready they are to condemn all Verity even at once. For when they affirm ſuch Articles to be heretical which neither they can, nor know, nor yet dare ſhew or name to be heretical, what have we thereby to underſtand, but that they are Adverſaries of Chriſt from the bottom of their hearts, and ready to impugn all Truth, and yet notwithſtanding with their damnable hypocriſie, they pretend themſelves to be Condemners of Hereſies? Learn, learn, ye beetle-headed Aſſes with your bluſtering Bulls, learn, I ſay, what it is, Chriſt to be a ſign of contradiction, and a ſtone of offence. How ſoon and eaſily is all your inward impiety and your ignominy diſcloſed with the ſame covert of words, wherewith in vain you went about to cloak the ſame? Thus then have we here proved by this firſt and manifeſt Argument, that the foreſaid Bull proceedeth from none other, than very Antichriſt himſelf, the chiefeſt Adverſary of God and of all Godlineſs. And now let either Eckius, or the Pope, acknowledge if he dare, and then conſider what Opinion we ought to have of him, or what Name to give him; in whom all curſed names, as in one heap, do concur together and agree, as impiety, blaſphemy, ignorance, fooliſhneſs, hypocriſie, lying, yea briefly Satan himſelf with his Antichriſt.

The Pope uttereth his own wickedneſs.

Luke 2.

1 Pet. 2.

The Popes Bull condemneth alſo ſuch Books of M. Luthers which have no error.

Neither doth this impiety any thing leſs appear in that alſo which I will now ſay. For this worſhipful Bull decreeth in plain and moſt impudent words, that thoſe

Books also of mine ought to be burned, in the which are no Errors contained, to the end that the memory of me may be utterly rooted out.

Canst thou, O Christian Reader, now doubt that the great Dragon of Hell himself speaketh in this Bull? It is an old Proverb, That the Ass singeth therefore evil favouredly, because he taketh his note too high. So this Bull in like manner should have piped more tuneable, if he had not set out his blasphemous throat so open against Heaven, so impudently and devillishly condemning also the manifest and evident truth. For hitherto Satan, whensoever he oppressed the truth, did it under the colour of truth; but this Man of Sin, the Adversary which is extolled above God, without all colour, not privily but apertly, and that in the open Church of God, without all shame taketh upon him to condemn, and commandeth to be burned the sincere verity of Christ, known and allowed both of him and of all others. What could be more done amongst the Turks? what place is this worthy of, I pray thee, but the deep dungeon of Hell? And are ye not afraid, ye Antichrists, with your brutish Bulls, least Stones and Trees should sweat with blood, at the most horrible sight of this your execrable impiety and blasphemy?

The Papists pretend to know and maintain the verity of Christ, and yet cannot abide it.

Where art thou now, good Emperour Charles? Where are ye Christian Kings and Princes? Ye have given your names to Christ in Baptism, and can ye now abide these Infernal Voices of such an Antichrist? Where be ye Bishops, Where be ye Doctors, Where be all ye that confess Christ? Can ye hold your peace at these horrible and prodigious Monsters of the Papists? O miserable Church of God, which art made now so great a scorn, and a very mocking stock of Satan! O miserable are all they which live in these times! The wrath of God is finally come upon the Papists, Enemies to the Cross of Christ and Verity of God, resisting all men, and forbidding the truth of Christ to be taught and preached, as S. Paul said of the Jews. Admit, I pray you, that I were such a one indeed, as that cursed and malicious Bull doth make me to be, an Heretick, erroneous, schismatical, offensive, scandalous, in certain of my Books; yet why should the other Books of mine be condemned which are Catholick, Christian, true, edifying and peaceable. Where have these wretched Papists learned this Religion, that, for the persons cause being evil, they should damn and burn the holy and sound Verity of God? Can ye not destroy men, but you must also destroy the truth? Will ye pluck up the good Wheat also with the Cocle? Will ye also scatter the Corn away together with the Chaff? And why then receive ye Origen in his Catholick Books, and do not utterly reject him altogether? Yea, why suffer ye wicked Aristotle (in whom is nothing taught but Errors) and do not at least in some part condemn him? Why burn ye not and set on fire the wicked, barbarous, unlearned, and heretical Decretals of the Pope? Why do ye not all this I say? but only for that ye are set in this holy place for none other cause, but only to be the abomination spoken of in Daniel, which should put down truth, and set up lies, and the operation of error. For this thing, and none other, becometh the Seat of Antichrist.

The Pope condemneth as well the good Books of M. Luthers as the other, without all respect of truth, or of the cause.

Dan 9.

Wherefore this I say to thee (Pope Leo the Tenth, and to you Lord Cardinals, and all other whosoever is in any part or doing in that Court of Rome) and this I speak boldly unto your faces, if this Bull hath come out in your name, and by your knowledge, and if you will so acknowledge it for your own, then will I likewise use my power, by the which I am made in my baptism the Son of God, and Coheir with Christ, being founded upon a sure Rock, which neither feareth the gates of Hell, nor Heaven, nor Earth, and say, monish, and exhort you in the Lord, that you will reform your selves, and take a better way, and refrain hereafter from those Diabolical Blasphemies, and too much exceeding presumptuous impieties; and this I alledge, That unless ye so do, know it for certain, that I, with all them that worship Christ, do recount your Seat, possessed and oppressed of Satan himself, to be the damned Seat of Antichrist, which we not only do not obey, and will not be subject, nor concorporate unto, but also do detest and abhor the same, as the principal and chiefest Enemy of Christ, being ready in this our Sentence and Profession, not only to suffer gladly your fond foolish Censures, but also do pray you heartily that you will never assoil us again, nor ever number us in your Fellowship; and moreover, to fulfil your bloody tyranny, we do willingly offer our selves to dye for the same. And according to the power and might, that the Spirit of Christ and efficacy of our Faith can do in these our Writings, if ye shall persist so still in your fury, we condemn you, and together with this Bull, and all the Decretals, we give you to Satan, to the destruction of the Flesh, that your Spirit in the day of our Lord may be delivered, in the Name which you persecute, of Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen.

M. Luthers warning to the Pope.

M. Luther curseth the Pope.

For our Lord Jesus Christ yet liveth and reigneth (in whom I do nothing doubt) who I firmly trust will shortly come and slay with the Spirit of his Mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming, this Man of Sin, and Son of Perdition; forsomuch as I cannot deny, if the Pope be the Author and Doer of these misshapen and monstrous doings, but he is the true, final, most wicked, and that famous Antichrist, that subverteth the whole World by the operation of his delusions, as we see it in all places fulfilled and accomplished.

The Pope the true Antichrist.

But whither doth the burning zeal of Charity carry me? neither am I as yet fully perswaded this to be the Popes Bull, but to proceed from his wicked Apostle Eckius, who with his Fautors, furiously gaping at me like a Wolf, would swallow me clean up, singing with the wicked thus, Let us swallow him up quick and whole like Hell, and like one descending down into the Pit. For little careth this furious Madbrain how the verity of God be extinguished, (yea, he would count that for a lucre) so he might fill his malicious desire with the blood of his Brother. O miserable state of the Church at this time, worthy to be bewailed with tears of blood! But who heareth our groanings? or who comforteth our weepings? The fury of the Lord seemeth to be inexorable against us.

Eckius. Prov. 1.

Over and besides, what a ridiculous toy or pretty figment have they invented, whereby belike to sport themselves with some merry matter amongst their earnest business, writing, That besides other great friendship which they have shewed unto me, they have also offered to support me with money, and to bear my charges with their liberality, in my journey to Rome. Will ye see what a charity is newly come upon the City of Rome, which after it hath pilled and polled the whole World of their money, and hath consumed and wasted the same by intollerable tyranny, now cometh, and to me only offereth money. But this impudent lye I know with whose hammer it was coined: Cajetanus the Cardinal, a man born and formed to lye for the Whetstone, after his worshipful Legacy depeached in Germany, coming home to Rome, there forged and feigned that he promised me money, whereas he being at Auspurge, was there in such miserable penury, and so pinching in his house, that it was thought he would have famished his Family. But thus it becometh the Bull to be verè Bulla, that is, a thing of nought, void of all truth and wit.

The Pope lieth in his Bull, where he saith that he offered money to Luther to come to Rome.

And so these great Judges and Condemners, after all this, yet have Authority to command us to believe them to say truth, when they do nothing but lye, and that they are good Catholicks, when they be stark Hereticks; and that they are true Christians, when they play the very Antichrist; and all by the virtue of this Universal, Quodcunque ligaveris, &c. i. Whatsoever thing thou bindest, &c. So that where nothing is excepted, they think they may do all things. Who not only do lye most loudly and manifestly, but also (which passeth all impudency) do vaunt and commend their liberality before the people, to bring me more in hatred, making men falsly to believe that they offered friendship and money unto me: Whereas these Tyrants of Rome, if they had had any truth, goodness, or godliness in them, should have taken some better heed in their doing and speaking, so that no Adversary might conceive any suspicion of evil against them. But now if there were no other matter else to bring this Bull out of credit, only this gross and foolish lie were sufficient to declare, how light, vain, and false this Bull is? What? Would Rome (think

The Pope by the virtue of this universal Quodcunque ligaveris, can do all things.

(think ye) offer money to me? And how then cometh this (which I know to be most certain) that out of the Bank (as they call it) two or three hundred Crowns were assigned in Germany to be disposed and given to Ruffians and Catchpoles, to murther Luther? For these be the Reasons and Arguments whereby now fighteth, reigneth, and triumpheth the holy Apostolick See, the Mistress of Faith, and Mother of all Churches, which long since should have been proved to be the very seat of Antichrist, and manifold ways Heretical, if she had fought with the Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God; whereof she her self is nothing ignorant, and therefore because she would not be brought to that issue, thus she fareth and taketh on like as she were mad in the Church of Christ, confounding and consuming all things, with wars, murders, bloodshed, death, and destruction, and yet for all this they must needs be counted most holy Fathers in God, Vicars of Christ, and Pastors of his Flock.

Man hired by the Papists to kill Luther.

The Popes Church flieth the trial of the Scripture.

But go to (that I may also dally with them a while) let them yet send me the money they spake of; for as touching their promise and safe conduct (because I will not overcharge them) that I gladly resign to them again, seeing I have no great need thereof, so that the money may come to my hands. But here I must require so much as may suffice me, to wit, that I may be furnished with fifty thousand Footmen, and ten thousand Horsmen to conduct me safe to Rome, and so, for any other promise of safe conduct I will not trouble them. And this I require because of the danger that is in Rome, which devoureth up her Inhabitants, neither keepeth, nor ever did keep promise with any; where these most holy Fathers do slay their beloved Children in the Charity of God, and Brethren destroy their Brethren, to do service to Christ, as their manner is, and stile of Rome. In the mean time I will keep my self free and safe from the citation of this most reverend Bull. O ye miserable Varlets, which are so confounded with the truth, and with your own Conscience, that neither ye can lye handsomly, neither dare ye speak the truth, and yet neither can ye so keep your selves quiet, to your perpetual ignominy and confusion.

What safe conduct M. Luther requireth of the Pope.

Furthermore, here in this Bull is brought in a strange fashion of stile not heard of before. For where Augustine would have said, that he would not believe the Gospel, except he had been moved by the Authority of the Church, now cometh in this goodly Bull, and maketh this Catholick Church to be a few reverend Cardinals, his Brethren, and Priors of Regular Orders, Masters of Divinity, and Doctors of the Law, out of whose counsel the said Bull boasteth her self to be born and brought forth; blessed Babe, forsooth, of such an Universal Church. O happy travel (no doubt) of this Catholick Church, never seen nor heard of before, and such as Augustine the valiant impugner of Sects, if he did see it, would not doubt to call it the Synagogue of the Devil. See therefore the madness of these Papists: the Universal Church is a few Cardinals, Priors, and Doctors, scarcely perhaps twenty persons in all, when also it is possible enough, that never a one of them all is the Member of one Chappel or Altar. And whereas the Church is the Communion of Saints, as we say in the Creed; out of this Communion of Saints, that is, out of this Universal Church, all they then must needs be excluded, whosoever be not in the number of these twenty persons; and so whatsoever these holy men do think or judge, by and by the Universal Church must needs hold and believe the same, albeit they be Liars, Hereticks, and Antichrists, thinking and judging nothing but that which is abominable.

A new Universal Church of the Popes making.

The Universal Church bound to twenty persons.

What Augustine calleth the Universal Church.

No Universal Catholick Book but only the Scriptures.

Would there ever any man think such doltishness and madness to be in Rome? Is there any brains in these mens heads, think ye, or hearts in their bodies? Austin speaketh of the Church dispersed thorow the whole World, confessing the Gospel with one consent. Neither would God that any Book else should be received with such consent of the whole World as the holy Scripture, (as the said Augustine in his Confessions affirmeth) lest by the receiving of other Books, Schisms may take occasion to rise, according as the wicked See of Rome hath long sought by her Decrees, and hath for a great part brought the same to pass already. But yet the Universal Church did never agree thereto. For in the East, West, and South there have been Christians, which being content only with the Gospel, have not regarded how Rome hath gone about of a particular Church to make her self an Universal Church, and accuseth other Churches as Schismatical, when as she hath cut off her self from the Universal Church, and striveth in vain to draw the whole Universal Church to her, being the Mother and Fountain of all Schisms, and all by the means of this tyranny.

The Catholick Church, and the Church of Rome, are two things.

Let no man therefore ever think, that this true Catholick Church aforesaid will believe or maintain those things which this detestable Bull here pratleth, when as neither that which is the very true Church of Rome indeed doth her self so think, neither taketh that by and by to be Catholick, whatsoever is known to proceed from the Church of Rome. For as I said, there is no Book which shall be called Catholick hereafter; as neither it hath been heretofore, besides only the holy Scripture. For the Church of Rome, it may suffice to glory her self to be a little parcel or piece of the Universal Church; and so let her vex her self only with her own Decrees.

Neither let any man think this to be the Bull of the Catholick Church, but rather to proceed out of the Court of Rome. For such wisdom and Religion may well beseem that Seat of Satan, which seeketh to be counted for the whole Universal Church, and obtrudeth her foolish and wicked Bulls most arrogantly and vainly to the whole World, in the stead of sincere Catholick Doctrine. Whose pride and presumption hath grown so far, that she trusting upon her own power, without all learning and holiness of life, proudly taketh upon her to prescribe Laws to all men, of all their doings and sayings, as though for dominion only and loftiness of spirit she were to be counted the House and Church of Christ; whereas by this means Satan also, the Prince of the World, or the Turk, might be counted the Church of Christ. Again, neither can the Monarchies of the Gentiles abide mighty Princes to reign over them without wisdom and goodness. Furthermore, in the Church the Spiritual man only judgeth all things, and is judged of no man, and not the Pope alone, or the Court of Rome, unless they be Spiritual.

The pride and presumption of the Church of Rome.

Dominion and Power maketh not the Church. 1 Cor. 2.

But against all this their rash presumption I boldly set the invincible Champion of the Church, S. Paul, who, 1 Cor. 14. saith; If any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first man hold his peace. Here have ye plainly, that the Pope, or any other Elder whatsoever he be, ought to keep silence, if any thing be revealed to other in the Church that is inferiour. I therefore upon his Authority, contemning the presumptuous proceeding of this swelling Bull, do confidently take upon me to defend the Articles, caring nothing for the bare condemnation of any person, yea of the Pope himself, with his whole Church, unless he shall inform me by the Scriptures. Whereof the first Article is this. 1 Cor. 14.

The first Article.

It is an heretical Sentence, and also common, to say, That Sacraments of the new Law do give grace to them which have no obstacle in themselves to the contrary. 1. Article.

The Answer.

Answer of M. Luther to the first Sentence.

I acknowledge this Article to be mine, and I ask of you, good Masters Respectivists, which make these Articles respectively, some to be Heretical, some erroneous, some slanderous, &c. whither respected this Article I pray you? To heresie, to error, to slander and offence? Or else whither respected you in condemning the same? To the holy Scripture? To the holy Fathers? To Faith? To the Church? To which of these I beseech you tell me? Neither do I here put you to the labor of proving, but only require you to shew your judgment what you think, that I may know wherein I say amiss. Will you that I should tell you (you babish Infants and Noddies) whether this Article respecteth? I will. This Article hath two respects. Whereof the one respecteth the Papists, the condemners hereof, amongst whom it respecteth some to be Mules, some to be Horses, which have no understanding, and to be void of all sense, and yet notwithstanding they will needs condemn all things. Another respect it hath to the holy Scriptures, which saith, Romans cap. fourteen, Whatsoever is not of Faith, is Sin. Whereupon consequently it followeth, that the Sacraments of the new Law can give no grace to the unbelievers (forsomuch as the Sin of Infidelity is the greatest obstacle) but only to the believers. For only Faith putteth no obstacle; all other things be obstacles, although they put not the same obstacles which the Sophisters understand, meaning only of the actual purpose of eternal Sin. I confess therefore this Article not only to be mine, but also to be the Article of the Catholick and Christian verity; and the Bull which condemneth the same, to be twice Heretical, Impious and Blasphemous, with all them which follow the same. Who, little regarding the Sin of Incredulity, foolishly and madly do hold that the obstacle is taken away, if a man cease from Sinning, although the unbeliever can think no good thing. But these things I have discussed more at large in my Books, and will more discuss, if those prating Romanists dare at any time prove their opinion and confute mine.

Two respects noted in this Article. Rom. 14.

The obstacle letting Sacraments to give grace, is the actual purpose of Sinning, say the Papists. The only obstacle letting Sacraments to give Grace, is unbelief, saith Luther, speaking after this time. But the truth is that Sacraments neither with obstacle, nor without obstacle, do give Grace to the Believers or Unbelievers, but only do signifie Grace given by Christ.

The second Article.

To deny that Sin remaineth in a Child after his Baptism, is as much as to tread down Christ and Paul together under foot.

The Answer.

Answer of M. Luther to the 2. Article.

I would require of them to shew the cause why this Article is condemned, if they were not so blinded in their fantastical respects, that they are not able to perceive why they would have this Article condemned. And yet I cannot tell whether it be Heretical or Erroneous. And no marvel when as the condemners themselves cannot tell me: I hold therefore this Article by the Apostle, Rom. 7. I my self in my mind do serve the Law of God, and in my Flesh the Law of Sin. Here the Apostle confesseth plainly of himself, that in his Flesh he serveth Sin. And also 1 Cor. 1. Christ is made to us of God our righteousness, our wisdom, sanctification and redemption. And how then doth he sanctifie them that be sanctified already? unless it be as the Apoc. saith, He that is holy let him be holy still, To be sanctified, is as much as to be purged from Sin. But what have these our respectivists to do with the Apostle Paul, seeing they are the whole Universal Church, by whose Authority Paul either standeth or falleth, being but a member only, and a part of the Church? The Lord rebuke thee, Satan, and these thy Satanical Papists.

Rom 7. 1 Cor. 1. Apoc 21.

The third Article.

The original root of Sin, although no actual Sin do follow, stoppeth the Soul departing out of the Body from entrance into Heaven.

The Answer.

The answer of M. Luther to the 3. Article.

As touching this matter, I never defined any thing hitherto, but largely and probably I have disputed hereof, neither yet to this day am I fully certain what is done with such a Soul. But our Papists, more blind than Buzzards, when they are nothing able to perceive what cause this Article hath worthy to be condemned, yet dare they take upon them to pronounce that which the whole Universal Church is ignorant of: I yet notwithstanding, contemning this foolish and fond condemnation aforesaid, do hold this Article probably to be true. For seeing this original root, which I spake of, is truely Sin, as I have proved, Rom. 7. and Gal. 5. and seeing that Sin letteth a man from entring into Heaven; as it is written, No polluted thing shall enter; I suppose therefore that Original Sin withholdeth a man from entring into Heaven. Neither do I any thing at all esteem the fantastical dreams of them, whereby they extenuating Original Sin do call it openly the pain of Sin, and imperfections, plain against the manifest Scriptures, which call it Sin, and teach the same to be cured by Grace, which is the medicine of true and of fained Sin.

Sap. 7.

The fourth Article.

The imperfect charity of a man departing necessarily carrieth with it great fear, which of it self is enough to make the pain of Purgatory, and letteth the entrance into the Kingdom of Heaven.

The Answer.

The answer of M. Luther to the 4. Article.

This followeth of the other going before; which in like manner I did not determinately affirm, although very probably I do yet hold the same, asking before a dispensation after mine own arbitrement, even in defiance of the Bull, which is not able to bring forth any other probation but this? We are the highest powers in the Church, yea we are the Church it self, Ergo, we are the best learned, most holiest, full of the Holy Ghost, which cannot err, although we stink like a filthy puddle to the whole World, polluted with all kind of Sins, and drowned in ignorance. But all these reasons prevail nothing with me; peradventure they may with them, which fear lest if my Sentence should prevail, then Purgatory should be taken out of the Popes hands, and then Priests and Religious men, having lost their gainful Offices of vexing (of releasing I would have said) of the dead, should be pinched by the Bellies and brought to penury. It was time therefore for their greedy avarice here to awake and look about, and not to suffer their frivolous opinions, but yet very gainful, to be overcome with truth, and so to be overthrown.

The Popes Doctrine gainful to the purse.

The fifth Article.

Where they say penance standeth of three parts, to wit contrition, confession, and satisfaction, it is not founded in holy Scripture, nor in ancient, holy, and Christian Doctors.

The Answer.

The answer of M. Luther to the 5. Article.

This Article, in what respect it is condemned, I do right well perceive. For the respect thereof is to greedy covetousness, and therefore I know that the probation thereof hath the like respect, which is this; If this Article were true, then men would give nothing for satisfaction and indulgences, neither should we have any more wherewith to vex them with confessions, cases reserved, restricted or amplaited for our gain, and so should we become beggers, and Gods Service should be minished, in Vigils and Masses. But it is wicked that Gods Service should be minished; therefore Luther is an Heretick. This consequence holds a respectu Bullæ ad Papistas, Id est, From the Bull to the Papists and contrariwise.

I beseech thee by the Lord Jesus, whatsoever grave and learned Reader shalt read these things, that thou wilt pardon this my lenity, and, as it may seem, my childishness. For thou seest how I have to do with such men as be twise Children, and yet do brag, themselves to be peers and principal pillars of all men. I assure you I know it most certainly to be true, that there be many and great Governors of the people, which this so ridiculous and foolish reason above recited hath moved to the condemnation of my Books. Unless I perceived (with tears I speak it) the anger of God sharp and fierce against us in bringing us under subjection of such effeminate Children, and such dregs of the Earth, and vile refuse of all other people of the whole World, it would make me to burst for very grief and sorrow.

My Sentence is and hath been this, that satisfaction, which the Keyes are able to dispense withal standeth not by the Law of God. For if it did, then could it not be dispensed withal by the Keyes. If these Bullfounders do charge me with any other thing besides in this Article, they do nothing else but as they are wont to do. For what matter or marvel is it if Antichrist do lye?

The

The sixth Article.

Contrition which is gotten by examining, remembring and detesting our Sins, whereby a man calleth to mind his years past in the bitterness of his Soul, in pondering the greatness, the multitude and filthiness of his Sins, the losing of eternal bliss, and purchasing of eternal Damnation; this contrition maketh an Hypocrite, yea rather a man to be more a Sinner.

The Answer.

The answer of M. Luther to the 6. Article.

O the incredible blindness and bruitishness of these Romish Bulls. This Article is truly mine, and very Christian, which I will not suffer to be wrested from me, for all the Popes and Papists in the World. For this I meant by that Doctrine, that repentance is of no force, unless it be done in Faith and Charity, which thing they also teach themselves, but that they do neither know nor teach, neither what Faith nor Charity is. And therefore in condemning my Doctrine, they condemn also their own; foolishly repugning against themselves in their own contradiction. I say therefore that he which teacheth repentance in such wise and manner, that he hath not a greater regard to the promised mercy of God and Faith in the same, than to this afflicting and vexing of the mind, he teacheth the repentance of Judas Iscariot, he is pestilent, a Devil to mens Souls, and Tormentor of Consciences. Read the Books of these Sophisters, where they write of Repentance, and thou shalt see there no mention made either of promise or Faith. For these lively parts of repentance they clean omit, and only do vex men with these dead contritions. But hereof we have, and will hereafter intreat more at large.

But what should I here stand upon every Article, seeing my Books be abroad, wherein I have given a reason of all sufficiently, and more would have done, if mine Adversaries also had brought to light theirs? For what foolishness is this, that they think to answer me with this one saying, that they count all my sayings as damned, whereas I did write to this end only, that they should acknowledge their errors, wherewith they have so long bewitched the people of God. Neither did I look that I should be condemned, which understanding and knowing the same right well, have justified those things, which they have condemned, before with sufficient Authority both of Scripture, and Reason. Neither looked I that they should tell me what they thought (for I knew all that well enough) but that which I sought of them, was, to know whether they thought right therein or not. Here looked I to be taught, and behold, none of them all durst once put forth his head. Wherefore I see these Asses nothing to understand either in things that I say, or yet themselves. But they be such blind Buzzards, that they perceive not what it is that I seek in my Books: for they dream that I have such an opinion of them, as though they had the truth of their side, when there is nothing that I less think to be true. For I, foreseeing that they had condemned all these things before, came forth and shewed my self as one not to be condemned, but as already condemned of them, to accuse their condemnation to be wicked, heretical, and blasphemous, and so openly to denounce them as Hereticks and Erroneous, unless they shewed some better reason and ground of their doings and Doctrine; whereas they on the other side, like foolish Minstrels harping all on one string, have nothing else in their mouths, but we condemn that we have condemned, proving, after a new kind of Logick, the same thing by it self. O most idiot huddipeaks, and blockish condemners, where is the saying of Peter? Be always ready to render an account of that Faith and hope which is in you.

The purpose of Luther in setting forth his Articles.

Wherefore seeing these ignorant Papists, being thus confounded, do so flie away from the face of the manifest verity, that they dare not once open their mouths in defence of themselves, or of their cause, and have blasted out with much ado this timorous Bull of theirs; I being comforted with the flight of these mine adversaries, do account this their dastardly damnation instead of full allowing and justifying of my cause, and so rebound again their own damnation upon their own heads: for how could they more condemn themselves, than while they (fearing to be found themselves culpable of Heresie, if they should be driven to give account of their Doctrine) do flie to this miserable and desperate refuge, willingly to shut their eyes, and stop their ears, and to say I will not, I damn thee, I hear thee not, I allow thee not? If I should have played any such mad part, how would they (I pray you) have triumphed against me? This dastardly fear declareth what cowards they are.

Wherefore not to burthen the Reader with any tedious prolixity of matter in prosecuting every Article, I here protest by these presents, that I * confess all these things here condemned by this miserable Bull, for pure, clear, and Catholick Doctrine; whereof I have sufficiently given account in my Books which be extant abroad.

Furthermore, I will also that the said my Books being extant abroad shall be taken as a publick accusation against these wicked Sophisters and seducers of the people of God; so that unless they shall give an account of their Doctrine, and shall convict me with good ground of Scripture, I do here, as much as in me lyeth denounce them as guilty of Errours, Heresie, and Sacriledge, admonishing, desiring, and in the Lord exhorting all them which truly confess Christ, that they will beware and take heed of their pestiferous Doctrine, and not to doubt, but that the true Antichrist reigneth by them in the World amongst us.

And if any shall contemn this my brotherly admonition, let him know that I am pure and clean from his Blood, and excused from the last judgment of Christ. For I have left nothing undone, which Christian Charity did bind me to do.

Finally, if there be no other way whereby I may resist these babling and trifling condemners, the uttermost and last which I have I will give and bestow in the quarrel, that is, this Life and Blood of mine. For better it were for me a thousand times to be slain, than to revoke one syllable of these Articles, which they have condemned. And now as they do curse and excommunicate me for their damnable Heresie, so I again likewise do curse and excommunicate them for the holy verity of God. Christ, which is only the judge of all, judge and determine this matter beteen us, whether of these two excommunications, his or mine, shall stand and prevail before him. Amen.

* Note here good Reader that amongst these Articles certain there be which because they seemed somwhat to bear with the Pope and his Pardons, Luther coming after to a more knowledge that the Pope was Antichrist, confesseth himself in his assertions, that he utterly calleth back the same, not revoking them as the Pope would have had him, but rather aggravating them against the Pope.

In storying the life of Luther, before, it was declared how the said Luther in the beginning, first being rejected of the Cardinal Cajetanus, appealed from the Cardinal unto the Pope. When that would not serve, neither could any tolerable submission of Luther to the Pope be received, but that the Pope with his Cardinals, contrary to all Equity and Conscience, would needs proceed against him, and against the expres truth of Gods Word, thinking by meer Authority to bear down the verity as he had used before to do; Luther, following the justness of his cause was then compelled to appeal from the Pope to the next general Councel, and so did, as before you may read: Which was two years before the Popes Bull against Luther came out. The tenour of which appellation, before omitted. I thought here to exhibit; whereby the Reader, considering the great change of Religion, and state of the Church which since hath ensued, may also perceive the true original cause and occasion how it first began, by what order and degrees it after increased, what humility and submission first on Luthers part was shewed, and again, what insolency, wrong and violence of the Popes part was declared. And further where Pope Leo, in his Bull above prefixed, seemeth to pretend certain conditions of favour, charity, and money offered to Luther in the beginning, how false and vain that is, by this present appeal may appear. The copy whereof, as it was drawn by the publick notary, and exhibited, is this as in form here followeth.

The effect of the ſaid Appeal of Luther, in Engliſh.

Luthers Appeal from the Pope in Engliſh.

THe effect of the Appeal aforeſaid is this, That forſomuch as the liberty of appealing is provided for a remedy to relieve the oppreſſed from injury and violence of the Superiour, it was therefore lawful for Martin Luther ſo to do, eſpecially being manifold ways injured and moleſted be the See of Rome, and other the Popes Confederates, as he in the ſaid Appeal declareth. For at firſt whereas he modeſtly diſputing of the errours and abuſes of the Popes Pardons, did ſomewhat withſtand the impudent ravine and blaſphemies of them that came about with the Popes Pardons to poll and rob the people, he was therefore openly railed upon and defamed by them in their publick Sermons to be an Heretick, and conſequently upon the ſame accuſed to Pope Leo for an Heretick, by Marius the Popes Proctor and others.

Then was obtained of the Pope a Commiſſion to cite up the ſaid Luther to appear at Rome before the Cardinals, by Hieronymus, and Sylveſter Trieras, his mortal enemies, whereas he could by no way appear without manifeſt danger of his life, both by the way, and alſo in the City of Rome.

For the conſideration whereof, Duke John Fredrick, Prince Elector, and the Lantgrave intreated for him to have his cauſe indifferently to be heard, and to be committed to two parties that were equal, and not partial: yet notwithſtanding the earneſt ſute of theſe Princes, the contrary labours of the Cardinals, which were his capital Adverſaries, ſo prevailed at Rome, that the cauſe of Luther was ſtill detained in their own hands, and contrary to all indifferency, was committed to the hearing of the Popes Legate then in Germany, called Cardinalis Sancti Sixti. Who being no leſs Enemy againſt Luther than the other, and notwithſtanding that Luther obediently appeared at his call, and with humble proteſtation ſubmitted himſelf to be anſwered by the Scriptures, and referred himſelf to the judgment of the See of Rome, and of our Univerſities, to wit, Baſil, Friburge, Lovaine, and Paris, yet contrary to all equity, ſhewing forth no Scripture nor Reaſon, rejecting his gentle proteſtation, ſubmiſſion, and honeſt offer, with all other his Requeſts and Suits, he would needs forthwith have him to revoke his errours, threatning and menacing him moſt cruelly, and commanded him no more to come in his ſight.

Cardinalis Sancti Sixti, Enemy to Luther.

Luther appealeth from the Cardinal to the Pope.

Whereupon Luther, being thus proudly rejected of the Cardinal, made his Appeal from the ſaid Cardinal to Pope Leo, being better informed.

This Appellation alſo being contemned of the Pope, who would neither come to any agreement, nor take any reaſonable condition, nor ſhew Luther his Errors by the Scripture, nor yet refer the matter by learning to be decided, but would needs perforce proceed againſt him by meer Authority and Oppreſſion at Rome; Luther then ſeeing there was no other refuge or remedy for his own defence, and ſeeing moreover the truth of Gods Word to lye under foot, by Might and Authority oppreſſed, ſo that none durſt almoſt confeſs the ſame, and that the poor flock was ſo nouſled in errors and vain opinions, to the ſeduction of their Souls; for theſe and other ſuch cauſes, he being neceſſarily thereunto compelled, commenced this Appeal from the Pope miſinformed, to the next General Councel that ſhould be, calling for the help of the publick Notary, and teſtimony alſo of ſufficient witneſſes, requiſite in that behalf accordingly.

M. Luther appealeth from the Pope, to the next General Councel.

The death of King Henry the eighth, with the manner thereof.

The order and manner of the Kings death.

ANd thus cloſing up this eighth Book with the death of King Henry the eighth, I will now (the Lord Chriſt aſſiſting me with his Grace) proceed next to the time and Reign of King Edward his Son, after that firſt I ſhall interpoſe a few words touching the death of the ſaid King Henry his Father, and the manner of the ſame; Who after long languiſhing, infirmity growing more and more upon him, lay from S. Stevens day (as is above mentioned) to the latter end of January. His Phyſicians at length perceiving that he would away, and yet not daring to diſcourage him with death, for fear of the Act paſt before in Parliament, that none ſhould ſpeak any thing of the Kings death (the Act being made only for Soothſayers, and talkers of Prophecies) moved them that were about the King to put him in remembrance of his mortal ſtate and fatal infirmity. Which when the reſt were in dread to do, M. Denny, who was ſpecially attendant upon him, boldly coming to the King, told him what caſe he was in, to mans judgment not like to live, and therefore exhorted him to prepare himſelf to death, calling himſelf to remembrance of his former life, and to call upon God in Chriſt betime for Grace and Mercy, as becometh every good Chriſtian man to do.

Of the Act that none ſhould ſpeak of thy. K. death, Vide Statut. An. Hen. 8.

Although the King was loth to hear any mention of death, yet perceiving the ſame to riſe upon the judgment of his Phyſicians, and feeling his own weakneſs, he diſpoſed himſelf more quietly to hearken to the words of his exhortation, and to conſider his life paſt. Which although he much accuſed; yet (ſaid he) is the mercy of Chriſt able to pardon me all my Sins, though they were greater than they be. Maſter Denny being glad to hear him thus to ſpeak, required to know his pleaſure, whether he would have any learned man ſent for to confer withal, and to open his mind unto. To whom the King anſwered again, that if he had any, he would have Doctor Cranmer, who was then lying at Croydon. And therefore Maſter Denny asking the King whether he would have him ſent for, I will firſt, ſaid the King, take a little ſleep, and then as I feel my ſelf I will adviſe upon the matter.

The King at his death chuſeth to talk with Cranmer.

After an hour or two, the King awaking, and feeling feebleneſs to increaſe upon him, commanded Doctor Cranmer to be ſent for; but before he could come, the King was ſpeechleſs, and almoſt ſenſeleſs. Notwithſtanding, perceiving Doctor Cranmer to be come, he reaching his hand to Doctor Cranmer, did hold him faſt, but could utter no words unto him, and ſcarce was able to make any ſign. Then the Archbiſhop exhorting him to put his truſt in Chriſt, and to call upon his mercy, deſired him, though he could not ſpeak, yet to give ſome token with his eyes or with his hand, as he truſted in the Lord. Then the King, holding him with his hand, did wring his hand in his as hard as he could, and ſo ſhortly after departed, after he had reigned in this land the term of thirty ſeven years and nine months, leaving behind him three Children, Edward, Mary, and Elizabeth.

D. Cranmer cometh to the King.

The Kings Children.

Moreover, forſomuch as mention is inſerted in this place of the good inclination of King Henry in his latter days to the reformation of Religion, by the occaſion hereof it cometh alſo to mind, ſomewhat likewiſe to add by way of appendix touching the talk between the Archbiſhop of Canterbury Thomas Cranmer, and the Duke of Suffolk Charles Brandon, as concerning the Kings purpoſe and intent conceived againſt the Biſhop of Wincheſter Steven Gardiner, in that he could never allow any reformation in Religion in this Realm, and namely, being offended with this, that men ſhould uſe in their talk, The Lord, as well as our Lord; the ſaid Duke ſaid unto the ſaid Archb. We of the Counſel had him once at a good lift, and ſhould well have diſpatched him from his Authority, if the Kings Majeſty our Maſter had ſtayed himſelf from admitting him to his preſence, as then his Highneſs was content that we ſhould thorowly have ſifted and tryed him. It was, my Lord (quoth the Duke to the Archbiſhop) at that time when Gardiner his Secretary was attached, and ſuffered for defending the Popes Authority. For then I and certain of the Councel having conference with the Kings Majeſty for that matter, his Highneſs was fully perſwaded, that the Biſhops Secretary, being in ſuch ſpecial favour with his Maſter, would never ſtand ſo ſtiff in defence of the Biſhop of Romes uſurped Power and Authority, without his ſaid Maſters both advice, knowledge, and perſwaſion. For already (quoth the King) he played but an homely part with me, when he was Embaſſadour to the Pope concerning my cauſe of divorce. And therefore (quoth the King to me) ſend for him, my Lord, incontinently, and by aſſiſtance of two or three more of the Councel, whom whom you think good, let him be committed to the Tower, to anſwer to ſuch things as may be objected againſt him. This communication was in the evening, ſo that we purpoſed to have executed the Kings pleaſure and commandment the next morning. Howbeit our talk was not ſo ſecret, but that ſome of his friends of the Privy Chamber (where he had many friends then) ſuſpecting the matter, ſent him word thereof. Who incontinently repaired to the Kings Preſence, and finding ſome matter to miniſter unto the King, his Highneſs ſaid to the Biſhop, We do marvel that your Secretary hath thus notoriouſly offended againſt us and our Laws. It is ſurely thought that you are not all clear in this offence, but that you are of the ſame opinion with him, and therefore my Lord be plain with me, and let me know if you be that way infected or no. If you will tell me the truth, I will rather pardon the fault; but if you halt or diſſemble with me, look for no favour at my hand.

St. Gardiner appointed by the King to be had to the Tower.

St. Gardiner privily cometh to the King.

K. Henry layeth to Winchesters charge.

With this monition Wincheſter fell down upon his knees, and beſought his Majeſty of Mercy and Pardon, manifeſtly confeſſing that he had long time been of that opinion with his ſaid Secretary; and there bewailing himſelf promiſed from that day forward to reform his opinion and become a new man. Well, quoth the King, this way you have of me that which otherwiſe you ſhould never have obtained. I am content to remit all things paſt, and pardon you upon your amendment.

Winch. confeſſeth his popery to the King.

The next morning I had word how the matter was handled, whereupon I came to his Highneſs and ſaid; your Majeſty hath prevented our Commiſſion, which I and other had from your Grace concerning my Lord of Wincheſters committing to the Tower. Wot you what, quoth the King? He hath confeſſed himſelf as guilty in this matter as his man, and hath with much ſorrow and penſiveneſs ſued for my Pardon; and you know what my nature and cuſtom hath been in ſuch matters, ever more to Pardon them that will not diſſemble but confeſs their fault.

K. Henries nature to pardon them that come to him, and confeſs their fault.

Thus wilily and politickly he got himſelf out of our hands. But if I had ſuſpected this, I would have had him in the Tower over night, and ſtopped his journey to the Court. Well, ſaid my Lord of Canterbury, he was evermore too good for you all.

Moreover as touching this foreſaid Biſhop of Wincheſter, forſomuch as he in King Edwards time bragged ſo much of his old Maſter of famous memory King Henry the eighth, to the intent that the glorious vanity of this Biſhop, and of all other like unto him, may appear more notoriouſly to all men, here is to be noted by the teſtification as well of Maſter Denny, as alſo of Sir Henry Nevil, who were there preſent witneſſes of the matter, whoſe record was this, that King Henry before the time of his ſickneſs, taking his Horſe upon the Tarras at Windſor to ride out on hawking, ſaw ſtanding before him the Lord Wriothſley Lord Chancellour, with divers other Counſellors, and amongſt them the Biſhop of Wincheſter. Whereupon he called the Lord Chancellor, and ſaid, Did not I command you he ſhould come no more amongſt you (meaning the Biſhop?) Whereupon the Lord Chancellor anſwered, That his coming was to bring his Majeſty word of a benevolence given unto him by the Clergy, Whereat the King ſaid, Ah, let him come hither, and ſo he did his meſſage, and the King went ſtraight away.

Winch. commanded no more to come in the Kings ſight.

Item, another time the King immediately after his repair to London fell ſick, and cauſed divers times his whole Councel to come unto him about his Will, and other his grave affairs. At what time the Biſhop alſo would come up with them into the utter Privy Chamber, and there remain until the Councel came from the King, and then go down with them again, to the end (as then was thought) to blind the World withal.

Winch. though he were excluded, yet would ſeem ſtill to be of the Kings Councel.

Furthermore, as the King grew more in ſickneſs, he conſidering upon his Will and Teſtament made before, at his going over to Bullein, willed the ſame to be drawn out again, with leaving out and excluding the Biſhop of Wincheſter by Name from amongſt his Executors. Which being to him no ſmall corſey, and a cutting off of all their purpoſes, a way was found, that Sir Anthony Brown a principal Pillar of Wincheſters ſide, pretending unto the King, as though by the negligence of the writer the Winch. excluded out of the Kings Will.

Sir Anthony Brown a great friend to Winch.

Biſhops Name had been left out of the Kings Will, kneeled down to the Kings Majeſty lying in his Bed, and ſaid, My Lord of Wincheſter I think by negligence is left out of your Majeſties Will, who had done your Highneſs painful, long and notable ſervice, and one without whom the reſt ſhall not be able to overcome your great and weighty affairs committed unto them.

Hold your peace, quoth the King, I remembred him well enough, and of good purpoſe have left him out. For ſurely if he were in my Teſtament, and one of you, he would cumber you all, and you ſhould never rule him, he is of ſo troubleſom a nature. Mary, quoth the King, I my ſelf could uſe him, and rule him to all manner of purpoſes, as ſeemed good unto me, but ſo ſhall you never do, and therefore talk no more of him to me in this behalf. Sir Anthony Brown, perceiving the King ſomewhat ſtiff herein, gave place to the Kings words at that time. Howbeit, ſeeking further occaſion upon more perſwaſions put into his head, he took in hand once again to move the King to have the Biſhop one of his Executors. When the King perceived that this inſtant ſute would not ceaſe; have you not yet done, quoth the King, to moleſt me in this matter? If you will not yet ceaſe to trouble me, by the Faith I owe unto God, I will ſurely diſpatch thee out of my Will alſo, and therefore let us hear no more of this matter. All this Sir Anthony Denny was heard to report to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury Thomas Cranmer, of the ſaid Archbiſhops Secretary who is yet alive, and witneſs unto the ſame.

K. Henries opinion of the Biſh. of Winch.

Witneſs.

And thus much touching the end of King Henry, who if he had continued a few months longer (all thoſe obites and Maſſes, which appear in his Will made before he went to Bullein notwithſtanding) moſt certain it is, and to be ſignified to all poſterity, that his full purpoſe was to have repurged the eſtate of the Church, and to have gone through with the ſame, ſo that he would not have left one Maſs in all England. For the more certain intelligence whereof, two things I have to lead me. The one is, the aſſured Report and Teſtimony of Thomas Cranmer, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, hearing the King declare the ſame out of his own mouth, both to himſelf, and to Mounſieur de Annebault Lord Admiral of the French Embaſſadour, in the Month of Auguſt a little before his death, as above may appear more at large. The other cauſe which leadeth me thereunto is alſo of equal credit, grounded upon the Declaration of the Kings own Mouth after that time, more near unto his death unto Bruno Embaſſador of John Frederick, Duke of Saxony: Unto the which Embaſſadour of Saxony the King gave this anſwer openly, that if the quarrel of the Duke of Saxony were nothing elſe againſt the Emperour, but for Religion, he ſhould ſtand to it ſtrongly, and he would take his part, willing him not to doubt nor fear; and ſo with this anſwer he diſmiſſed the Embaſſadour unto the Duke, openly in the hearing of theſe four ſufficient witneſſes, as the Lord Seymer Earl of Harford, Lord Leſley then Admiral, the Earl of Bedford Lord Privy Seal, the Lord Paget. But the ſecret working of Gods holy providence, which diſpoſeth all things after his own wiſdom and purpoſe, thought it good rather by taking the King away to reſerve the accompliſhment of this reformation of his Church to the peaceable time of his Son Edward and Elizabeth his Daughter, whoſe hands were yet undefiled with any Blood, and life unſpotted with any violence or cruelty.

The purpoſe of the King if he had lived, was to make a perfect reformation of Religion.

Credit of this narration that it is true.

The Kings Anſwer to the D. of Saxonies Embaſſadour, a little before his death.

And thus to finiſh this Book, I thought here to cloſe up King Henries Reign. But becauſe a little vacant ſpace of empty Paper remaineth behind needful to be filled up, to imploy therefore and to repleniſh the ſame with ſome matter or other, I thought to annex hereunto one ſtory which happened in this King Henries Reign. Which albeit it ſerveth not to the purpoſe of this our matter now in hand; yet nevertheleſs to ſupply the room it may ſtand in ſome place, either to refreſh the travelled mind of the Reader wearied with other Stories or elſe to diſcloſe the deteſtable impiety of theſe Counterfeit Sects of Monks and Friers, who, under the Hypocritical viſour of pretenſed Religion, have ſo long ſeduced and deceived the World. Although the deceitful parts and practiſes of theſe fantaſtical Orders be ſo many and in all places ſo notorious, that they are not able to be expreſſed; yet amongſt many, one you ſhall hear that chanced in this Kings days in the City of Orleance in France, by the Gray Friers, about the year of our Lord, 1534. The Story is this.

A Tragical Hiſtory of certain Friers in France, in the City of Orleance, Anno 1534.

Ex Comment. Joan. Sleid. A Story of certain Friers in Orleance.

THe Majors Wife of the City of Orleance provided in her Will, to be buried without any pomp or ſolemnity. For when any departeth there, in ſome places the Belmen are hired to go about the City, and in places moſt frequented to aſſemble the people with the ſound of the Bell, and there to declare the Names and the Titles of thoſe parties deceaſed, alſo where and when they ſhall be buried, exhorting the people to pray for them. And when the Coarſe is carried forth, the moſt part of the begging Friers go withal to the Church, with many Torches and Tapers carried before them, and the more pomp and ſolemnity is uſed, the more is the concourſe of people. But this Woman (as I ſaid) would have none of all this gear done for her. Wherefore her Husband, which loved her well, followed her mind herein, and gave unto theſe greedy Cormorants the Friers which waited for their prey (in whoſe Church ſhe was buried beſides her Father and her Grandfather) ſix Crowns for a reward; whereas they gaped for a great deal more. And afterward when he cut down a Wood and ſold it, the Friers craving to have part thereof freely and without money, he denyed them: this took they wonderful grievouſly, and whereas they loved him not before, they deviſed now a way to be revenged, ſaying, that his Wife was damned everlaſtingly.

The workers of this Tragedy were Colyman and Steven of Arras, both Doctors of Divinity; and the firſt indeed was a Conjurer, and had all his Trinkets and his Furniture concerning ſuch matters in readineſs, and they uſed the matter thus.

They ſet a young man which was a novice, above over the Vault of the Church, and when they came to mumble up their Mattins at Midnight, after their accuſtomed manner, he made a wonderful noiſe and ſhriking aloft. Then went this Colyman to croſſing and conjuring, but the other above would not ſpeak. Being charged to make a ſign to declare if he were a dumb Spirit, he ruffeled and made a noiſe again, and that was the ſign and token.

When they had laid this foundation, they went to certain of the chiefeſt in all the City, and ſuch as favoured them moſt, and told them what an heavy caſe was chanced, yet did they not utter what it was, but intreated them to take the pains to come to their Service at night. When they were come, and the Service was begun, he that was aloft made a great noiſe: Being demanded what he would, and what he was, he ſignified that he might not ſpeak, then was he commanded to anſwer to their Interrogatories by Signs and Tokens. Now, there was a hole made for the purpoſe, whereby, laying to his ear, he might hear and underſtand what the Conjurer ſaid unto them. There was alſo a Table at hand, and when any queſtion was asked, he ſtrook and beat upon the Table, ſo that he might be heard beneath. Then firſt the Conjurer demanded whether he were any of them that had been buried there. After that, reckoning up many of their Names in order, whoſe bodies had been buried there, at the laſt he named the Majors Wife. Here he made a ſign that he was the Spirit of that Woman. Then he asked whether ſhe were damned, and for what deſert or offence? Whether it were for covetouſneſs, pride, or lechery, or not doing the works of charity, or elſe for this new ſprung up Hereſie and Lutheraniſm? Moreover, what was the cauſe that he made ſuch a noiſe, and was ſo unquiet? Whether it were that the Body being buried within holy ground ſhould be digged up again, and carried to ſome other place? To all theſe things he anſwered by ſigns in like caſe as he was commanded; whereby he affirmed, or denied every thing, ſtriking twice or thrice upon the Table.

The conjurer what he demanded of the Spirit.

Luthers Hereſie a great bug among the Friers.

When he had thus ſignified that Luthers Hereſie was the cauſe of her damnation, and that her Body muſt be taken up, the Friers deſired the Citizens that were there preſent, to bear witneſs of ſuch things as they had ſeen and heard, and ſet their hands to it in writing. But they taking adviſement leſt they ſhould both offend the Maior, and bring themſelves in trouble, refuſed to ſubſcribe. Notwithſtanding, the Friers took the Pixe with the Hoſt and the Lords Body (as they call it) and all their Saints Reliques, and carried them to another place, and there they ſaid their Maſs; which they are wont to do by the Popes Law, when a Church is ſuſpended and muſt be hallowed again: and when the Biſhops Official heard of this, he came thither to underſtand the matter better, and aſſociating to him certain honeſt men, he commanded the Frier to conjure in his preſence, and would have appointed certain to go up to the Vault, to ſee if any Spirit did there appear. But Steven of Arras was ſore againſt it, and exhorted them earneſtly that they ſhould not ſo do, ſaying, that the Spirit ought not to be moleſted. And albeit the Official did earneſtly urge them to conjure before him, yet could he not bring them to it. In the mean time the Maior, making his friends privy what he would do, went to the King, and informed him of the whole matter. And becauſe the Friers, truſting to their immunities and priviledges, refuſed to come in judgment, the King choſe certain out of the Court of Parliament at Paris, to examine the matter, and gave them full Authority ſo to do. Whereupon they were carried to Paris, and conſtrained to make anſwer, but they would confeſs nothing.

The Maior complaines to the King of the Friers.

Then they were ſent again to Priſon, and kept apart, one from another; and the Novice was kept in Fumeus Houſe a Senatour, and being oftentimes examined, he would confeſs nothing, fearing leſt he ſhould after be murthered of them for ſlandering their Order. But when the Judges promiſed him that he ſhould have no harm, and ſhould come no more in the Friers hands, he declared to them the whole matter in order, and being brought before the others, he avouched the ſame. But they, albeit they were convicted, and in manner taken with the deed, yet refuſed they their Judges, and bragged of their priviledges: but it was altogether in vain, for they were condemned in open judgment, that they ſhould be carried again to Orleance, and committed to Priſon, and afterwards brought openly to the Cathedral Church, and ſo to the place of puniſhment where malefactors are executed, and there ſhould make open confeſſion of their wickedneſs.

The Frier condemned to Priſon and to puniſhment.

But even at the ſame time chanced a perſecution againſt the Lutherans, which was the cauſe that this Sentence, albeit it was too gentle for ſo great offence, was not put in execution. For becauſe the Name of the Lutherans was moſt odious, they feared leſt the puniſhment of theſe men ſhould not have been ſo much thought to be due for their offence, as done in reproach of the Order: and many thought that whatſoever ſhould be done to them, it would be to the Lutherans a pleaſant ſpectacle, and cauſe them much to rejoyce.

The Priſoners eſcaped, the Lutherans puniſhed.

This Order of the Franciſcans were eſteemed of the common people very holy; ſo that what time they were carried out of Paris, certain Women moved with pitty followed them unto the Gate of the Univerſity, with many tears and ſighs.

After they came to Orleance, and were beſtowed in ſeveral Priſons, they began to boaſt again of their liberties and priviledges: and at length, after long Impriſonment, they were diſcharged and ſet at liberty without any further puniſhment. Had not theſe perſecutions before mentioned letted the matter, the King had determined, as it was certainly reported, to pluck down their Houſe, and make it even with the ground. Ex Joan. Sleid. lib. 9.

But to leave the memory of this Idolatrous Generation, not worthy any further to be named, let us occupy the time with ſome better matter, in remembring the Story of a good and conſtant Martyr of the Lord before overpaſt, which ſuffered in Kent for the Word of God before Luthers time, as here in Story followeth.

Perſecution for the goſpel before M. Luthers time.

John Brown a Bleſſed Martyr of Chriſt Jeſus burned at Aſhford by Archbiſhop Warham, and Doctor Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter, about the ſecond year of King Henry the eighth. Anno 1511.

Brown was amongſt diſers other paſſengers more) and diſdaining that he ſo ſaucily ſhould ſit ſo near unto him in the Barge (who belike ſeemed not much to paſs upon the Prieſt) began to ſwell in ſtomack againſt him. At length burſting forth in his Prieſtly voyce and diſdainful Countenanco, he asked him in this manner, Doeſt thou know, ſaid he, whom I am? Thou fitteſt too near me, and fitteſt on my Clothes. No Sir, ſaid the other, I know not what you are. I tell thee, quoth he, I am a Prieſt. What Sir, are you a Parſon or Vicar, or ſome Ladies Chaplain? No (quoth he again) I am a Soul Prieſt, I ſing for a Soul. Do you ſo Sir, ſaid the other, that is well done. I pray you Sir, ſaid he, where find you the Soul when you go to Maſs? I cannot tell thee, ſaid the Prieſt. I pray you, where do you leave it, Sir, when the Maſs is done? I cannot tell thee, ſaid the Prieſt. Neither can you tell where to find it when you go to Maſs, nor where you leave it when the Maſs is done, how can you then ſave the Soul, ſaid he? Go thy ways, ſaid the Prieſt, I perceive thou art an Heretick, and I will be even with thee.

Walter More, Wil. More, Chilten and Bear, perſecuters.

So at the landing, the Prieſt taking with him Walter More and William More two Gentlemen and Brethren, rode ſtraightways to the Archbiſhop, who at that time was William Warham. Whereupon the ſaid John Brown, within three days after, was ſent for by the Archbiſhop. His bringers up were Chilten of Wye Baily Errant, and one Bear of Wiſeborough, with two of the Biſhops Servants. Who, with certain other being appointed for the ſame, came ſuddenly into his Houſe upon him, the ſame day when his Wife was Churched, as he was bringing in a Meſs of Pottage to the boord ſerving his gueſt: and ſo laying hands upon him, they ſet him upon his own Horſe, and binding his feet under the Horſes Belly, carried him away to Canterbury, neither he nor his Wife nor any of his friends knowing whether he went, nor whither he ſhould: and there continuing the ſpace of fourty days, from Low-Sunday till the Friday before Whitſunday, through the cruel handling of the ſaid Archbiſhop and the Biſhop of Rocheſter Doctor Fiſher, he was ſo pitiouſly intreated, that his bare feet were ſet upon the hot burning Coals, to make him deny his Faith; which notwithſtanding he would not do, but patiently abiding the pain, continued in the Lords quarrel unremouable. At length after all this cruelty ſuſtained, his Wife yet not knowing where he was become, on Friday before Whitſunday he was ſent to Aſhford where he dwelt, the next day there to be burned.

John Brown ſuddenly taken and carried away.

His bare feet ſet upon the hot Coals to make him deny the truth.

Brown brought to Aſhford to be burned.

In the mean time, as he was brought to the Town over night, there to be ſet in the Stocks, it happened as God would, that a young Maid of his Houſe coming by, and ſeeing her Maſter, ran home and told her Miſtreſs.

Brown ſet in the Stocks at Aſhford.

Then ſhe coming to him, and finding him in the Stocks appointed to be burned the next morning, ſat by him all the night long. To whom he then declared the whole Story or rather Tragedy how he was handled, and how his feet were burned to the Bones, by the two Biſhops aforeſaid, that he could not ſet them upon the ground, (he thanked God therefore) and all to make me, ſaid he, to deny my Lord, which I will never do, for if I ſhould deny him, ſaid he, in this World, he would deny me hereafter. And therefore I pray thee, ſaid he, good Elizabeth, continue as thou haſt begun, and bring up thy Children vertuouſly in the fear of God.

And ſo the next day, which was on Whitſon-Even, this Godly Martyr was burned, where he ſtanding at the Stake ſaid this Prayer which followeth, holding up his hands.

The Prayer of John Brown at his death.

The Prayer of Jo. Brown at his death.

O Lord I yield me to thy Grace.
Grant me mercy for my treſpaſs,
Let never the Fiend my Soul chaſe.
Lord I will bow, and thou ſhalt beat:
Let never my Soul come in Hell heat.
Into thy hand I commend my Spirit, thou haſt redeemed me O Lord of thy truth.

And ſo this bleſſed Martyr ended his life in peace, Ann. 1511.

Witneſs to this Story.

This Story the ſaid Elizabeth Brown his Wife did oft times repeat to Alice her Daughter, who dwelling yet in the Pariſh of S. Pulchers, teſtified the narration hereof unto me and certain other, upon whoſe credible information I have recorded the ſame.

Furthermore, it is to be noted, that the ſaid John Brown bare a fagot ſeven years before this, in the days of King Henry the ſeventh. Whoſe Son alſo Named Richard Brown, for the like cauſe of Religion, was impriſoned at Canterbury likewiſe, in the latter time of Queen Mary, and ſhould have been burned with two more beſides himſelf the next day after the death of Queen Mary, but that by the proclaiming of Queen Elizabeth they eſcaped.

Ric. Brown eſcaped burning by the coming in of Queen Elizabeth.

Amongſt other Injunctions and Letters of King Henry the eighth, written and ſet forth for reformation of Religion, he wrote one Letter to Edmund Boner, for aboliſhing of Images, Pilgrimages, Shrines, and other Monuments of Idolatry. Which letter being before expreſſed, we ſhould alſo have annexed to the ſame the Letter or Mandate of Boner, directed in Latin to Richard Cloney his Sumner, appertaining to the due execution thereof. Which Letter becauſe we have omitted before, the defect thereof I thought here in this vacant ſpace to ſupply. The Letter written to Cloney in Latin thus beginneth.

Boners Letter to Cloney Keeper of the Cole-Houſe, for the aboliſhing of Images.

This Cloney could neither underſtand the Latin, nor yet ſcarce read in Engliſh, and yet here he is called literatus.

FOrſomuch as the thirteenth day of this preſent, we have received the Letters of our Soveraign Lord, by the Grace of God King of England, &c. to us directed, and containing in them the commandment of his Majeſty, by us to be executed in tenour of words which here I ſend unto you: We therefore willing and deſiring, according as our duty bindeth us, to put the ſame in Execution with all diligence poſſible, according to the effect and tenour hereof, in the Kings behalf, and for the fidelity which we have in you aſſuredly approved, that you incontinent upon the receit hereof, do effectually warn all and ſingular Parſons and Vicars of this City of London, and of all our Dioceſs, that they immediately upon the ſight and intimation of theſe preſent Articles, and interrogatories here under written, do cauſe diligent and effectual inquiſition thereof to be made, to wit:

Had Boner none to do theſe weighty things but Cloney, keeper of the Cole-Houſe?

Whether there be uſed and continued any Superſtition, Hypocriſie, or Abuſe within any their Pariſhes or Cures, contrary to any Ordinance, Injunction, or Commandment given and ſet forth by the Kings Majeſty, or by his Authority.

Item, Whether they have in their Churches, or within their Pariſhes, any ſhrines, coverings of ſhrines, tables of feigned miracles, pilgrimages, images, and bones reforted and offered unto, and other monuments and things wherewith the people have been illuded, or any offering or ſetting up of lights or candles, other than be permitted by the Kings Majeſties Injunctions; or whether the ſaid Injunctions be duely obſerved and kept in their Pariſhes or Cures, or elſe tranſgreſſed and broken, and in what part.

And further, after the ſaid Inquiſition thus by them and every of them reſpectively being made, that you do certifie us, or our Vicar General, what is done in the premiſſes, upon the Even of Simon and Jude, or thereabout, under the peril thereof following.

THE NINTH BOOK,

CONTAINING

The Acts and things done in the Reign of King EDWARD the Sixth.

Ed. delivering the Bible to the Prelates.

{Anno 1547.}

The Reign and time of King Edward.

NExt after the death of King Henry ſucceeded King Edward his Son, being of the age of nine years. He began his reign the eight and twentieth day of January, and reigned ſix years and eight months, and eight days, and deceaſed, Anno 1553, the ſixth day of July.

Of whoſe excellent vertues and ſingular graces wrough in him by the gift of God, although nothing can be ſaid enough to his commendation, yet becauſe the renowned fame of ſuch a worthy Prince, ſhall not utterly paſs our Story without ſome grateful remembrance, I thought in few words to touch ſome little portion of his praiſe taken out of the great heaps of matter, which might be inferred. For to ſtand upon all that might be ſaid of him, it would be too long: and yet to ſay nothing, it were too much unkind. If Kings and Princes, which have wiſely and vertuouſly governed, have found in all ages Writers to ſolemnize and celebrate their Acts and memory, ſuch as never knew them, nor were ſubject unto them, how much then are we Engliſh men bound not to forget our duty to King Edward? a Prince although but tender in years, yet for his ſage and mature ripeneſs in wit and all princely Ornaments, as I ſee but few to whom he may not be equal, ſo again I ſee not many to whom he may not juſtly be preferred. Comm tion o King ward.

And here to uſe the example of Plutarch in comparing Kings and Rulers, the Latins with the Greeks together, if I ſhould ſeek with whom to match this noble Anno 1547. Comparison between King Josias and King Edward.

King Edward, I find not with whom to make my match more aptly, than with good Josias. For as the one began his Reign at eight years of his age, so the other began at nine. Neither were their acts and zealous proceedings in Gods cause much discrepant. For as mild Josias pluckt down the high Altars, cut down the Groves, and destroyed all Monuments of Idolatry in the Temple; the like corruptions, dross and deformities of Popish Idolatry, crept into the Church of Christ of long time, this Evangelical Josias King Edward removed, and purged the true Temple of the Lord: Josias restored the true worship and service of God in Jerusalem, and destroyed the Idolatrous Priests; King Edward in England, likewise abolishing Idolatrous Masses and false invocation, reduced again Religion to a right sincerity, and more would have brought to perfection if life and time had answered to his godly purpose. And though he killed not, as Josias did, the Idolatrous Sacrificers, yet he put them to silence, and removed them out of their places.

Moreover, in King Josias days the holy Scripture and Book of Gods Word was utterly neglected and cast aside, which he most graciously repaired and restored again. And did not King Edward the like with the self same Book of Gods blessed Word, and with other wholesome Books of Christian Doctrine, which before were decayed and extinguished in his Fathers days by sharp Laws and severe Punishments here in England? Briefly in all points and respects, between him and this our godly King no odds is to be found, but only in length of time and reign. Who if he might have reached (by the sufferance of God) to the continuance of Josias Reign; proceeding in those beginnings which in his youth appeared, no doubt but of his acts and doings some great perfection would have insued to this Church and Realm. But the manifold iniquities of English-men deserved another Plague as after fell amongst us; as in sequel of the Story hereafter (God willing) shall be declared.

K. Josias and K. Edward only differ in continuance of reign.

In the mean time, to proceed in the excellent vertues of this Christian young Josias (as we have begun) although neither do we know, nor will leisure serve us to stand upon a full description of all his acts; yet will we (God willing) give a little taste of the Noble nature and Princely qualities of this King; whereby the Reader may esteem with himself what is to be thought of the rest of his doings, though they be not here all expressed.

K. Edward beloved of his Subjects.

And first to begin with that which is the chiefest property of all other extern things in a Prince to be considered, that is, to be loved of his Subjects; such were the hearts of all English people toward this King inclined, and so toward him still continued, as never came Prince in this Realm more highly esteemed, more amply magnified, or more dearly and tenderly beloved of all his Subjects; but especially of the good and learned sort, and yet not so much beloved, as also admirable by reason of his rare towardness and hope both of vertue and learning, which in him appeared above the capacity of his years. And as he was intirely of his Subjects beloved, so with no less good will he loved them again; of nature and disposition meek, and much inclined to clemency.

The meek nature of K. Edward.

He always spared and favoured the life of Man; as once appeared in a certain dissertation of his had with Master Cheek in favouring the life of Hereticks; in so much that when Joan Butcher should be burned, all the Council could not move him to put to his hand, but were fain to get Doctor Cranmer to perswade with him, and yet neither could he with much labour induce the King so to do, saying; What my Lord? Will ye have me to send her quick to the Divel in her error? So that Doctor Cranmer himself confessed, that he had never so much to do in all his life, as to cause the King to put to his hand, saying, that he would lay all the charge thereof upon Cranmer before God. There wanted in him no promptness of wit, gravity of sentence, ripeness of judgment. Favour and love of Religion was in him from his Childhood; Such an Organ given of God to the Church of England he was, as England had never better. Over and besides these notable excellencies, and other great vertues in him, add moreover skill and knowledge of tongues and other sciences, whereunto he seemed rather born than brought up.

K. Edward well skilled in the Tongues.

Moreover, there wanted not in him to this felicity of wit and dexterity of nature, like happiness of institution of good Instructors. Neither did there lack again in him any diligence to receive that which they would teach him: insomuch that in the middst of all his play and recreation, he would always observe and keep his hour appointed to his study; using the same with much intention, till time called him again from his Book to pastime. In this his study and keeping of his hours he did so profit, that Doctor Cranmer, the Archbishop then of Canterbury, beholding his towardness, his readiness in both Tongues in translating from Greek to Latin, form Latin to Greek again, in declaiming with his School-fellows without help of his Teachers, and that ex tempore, would weep for joy, declaring to Doctor Cox his School master, that he would never have thought that to have been in him, except he had seen it himself.

KING Edw. 6

The readiness of King Edward to his Book.

Doctor Cox K. Edwards School-master.

To recite here his witty sentences, his grave reasons, which many times did proceed from him, and how he would sometimes, in a matter discoursed by his Council, add thereunto of his own moe reasons and causes touching the said matter, than they themselves had or could devise, it was almost incredible in that age to see, and tedious here to prosecute.

This in him may seem notorious and admirable, that he in these immature years could tell and recite all the Ports, Havens, and Creeks, not within his own Realm only, but also in Scotland, and likewise in France, what coming in there was, how the Tide served in every Haven or Creek; moreover, what burthen and what wind served the coming into the Haven.

K. Edward knew the names and religion of all his Magistrates.

Also of all his Justices, Magistrates, Gentlemen that bare any authority within his Realm, he knew their names, their housekeeping, their religion, and conversation what it was. Few Sermons or none in his Court, especially in the Lord Protectors time, but he would be at them. Again, never was he present at any commonly, but he would excerp them, or note them with his own hand.

Besides and above all other notes and examples of his commendation, as touching the chiefest point which ought most to touch all Men, for the maintaining, promoting, preferring, embracing, zealing, and defending the true cause and quarrel of Christs holy Gospel, what was his study, his zealous fervency, his admirable constancy therein, by this one example following, amongst many other, may notably appear.

The singular constancy of King Edward in maintaining true religion.

In the days of this King Edward the Sixth, Carolus the Emperor made request to the said King and his Council, to permit Lady Mary (who after succeeded in the Crown) to have Mass in her House without prejudice of the Law. And the Council on a time, sitting upon matters of policy, having that in question, sent Cranmer then Archbishop of Canterbury, and Ridley then Bishop of London, to entreat the King for the same. Who coming to his Grace, alledged their reasons and perswasions for the accomplishing thereof. So the King hearing what they could say, replied his answer again out of the Scriptures, so groundedly, gravely, and full, that they were enforced to give place to his replication, and grant the same to be true. Then they, after long debating in this manner with his Majesty, laboured politickly in another sort, and alledged what dangers the denying thereof might bring to his Grace, what breach of amity of the Emperors part, what troubles, what unkindness, and what occasions sundry ways it would enforce, &c. Unto whom the King answered, willing them to content themselves, for he would (he said) spend his life and all he had, rather than to agree and grant to that he knew certainly to be against the Truth. The which when the Bishops heard, notwithstanding they urged him still to grant, and would by no means have his Nay: Then the good King seeing their importunate suits that needs they would have his Majesty to consent thereto, in the end his tender heart bursting out into bitter weeping and sobbing, he desired them to be content. Whereat the Bishops themselves, seeing the Kings zeal and constancy, wept as fast as he, and took their leave of his Grace; and coming from him, the Archbishop took Master Cheek his Schoolmaster by the hand, and said, Ah, Master Cheek, you may be glad glad all the days of our life that you have ſuch a Scholar, for he hath more Divinity in his little Finger, than all we have in all our Bodies. Thus the Lady Maries Maſs for that time was ſtayed.

The zealous heart of K. Edward.

{KING Edw.6}

The Lady Maries maſs ſtayed by the tears of K. Edward.

Over and beſides theſe Heavenly graces and vertues, moſt chiefly to be required in all faithful and Chriſtian Magiſtrates which have governance of Chriſts Flock, neither was he alſo unprovided of ſuch outward gifts and knowledge as appertain to the governance of his Realm politick. Inſomuch that neither he was unexpert or ignorant of the Exchange, and all the circumſtances of the ſame touching doings beyond the Sea, but was as skilful in the practiſes thereof, and could ſay as much therein, as chiefeſt Doers in his affairs. Likewiſe in the entertaining of Embaſſadors, to whom he would give anſwer, and that to every part of their Oration, to the great wonder of them that heard him, doing that in his tender years by himſelf, which many Princes at their mature age ſeldom are wont to do but by other. And as he was a great noter of things that pertained to Princely affairs, ſo had he a Cheſt ſeverally to himſelf for every year, for the keeping of ſuch records and matters as paſt and were concluded by the Council. Of whom alſo he would require a reaſon and cauſe of every thing that ſhould paſs their judgments. And of this Cheſt he would evermore keep the Key about him. His notes alſo he cyphered in Greek Letters, to the end that thoſe that waited upon him ſhould not read nor know what he had written.

K. Edward skilful in the Exchange.

K. Edwards cheſt for keeping of acts and doing of the Council.

He had moreover great reſpect to Juſtice, and to the diſpatch of poor mens Sutes, and would appoint hours and times with Maſter Cox, then Maſter of his Requeſts, how and by what order they might be ſped in their cauſes without long delay and attendance, and ſo alſo debate with him, that their matters might be heard and judged with equity accordingly.

What Hieronymus Cardanus ſaith of him, concerning his knowledge in liberal Sciences, I thought here to expreſs in his own words, both in Latin and Engliſh, ſo much the rather, becauſe he ſpeaketh of his own experiment, and upon the preſent talk which he had with the King himſelf. The words of Cardanus firſt in Latin be theſe.

Hier. Card. de Genituris.

In Hieron. Cardan. in l. de Genituris.

ADerant enim illi gratiæ. Linguas enim multas adhuc puer callebat, Anglicam natalem, Latinam, Gallicam, non expers (ut audio) Græcæ, Italicæ, & Hiſpanicæ, & forſan aliarum. Propriam, Gallicam & Latinam exacte tenebat, & ad omnia docilis erat. Non illi dialectica deerat, non naturalis Philoſophiæ principia, non muſica. Humanitas mortalitatis noſtræ imago, gravitas Regiæ majeſtatis, indoles tanto principe digna. In univerſum magno miraculo humanarum rerum, tanti ingenii, & tantæ expectationis puer educabatur. Non hæc Rhetorice exornata veritatem excedunt, ſed ſunt minora.

Decimum quintum adhuc agebat annum. Interrogabat (Latine non minus quam ego polite & prompte loquebatur) quid continent libri tui de rerum veritate? hos enim nomini Majeſtatis ſuæ dedicaveram. Tum ego Cometarum primum cauſam diu fruſtra quæſitam in primo capite oſtendo. Quænam, inquit ille? Concurſus, ego aio, luminis erraticorum ſyderum. At Rex, Quomodo, cum diverſis motibus aſtra moveantur, non ſtatim diſſipatur aut movetur eorum motu. At ego, movetur equidem, ſed longe celerius illis ob diverſitatem aſpectus, velut in Chryſtallo & Sole cum iris in pariete relucet. Parva enim mutatio magnam facit loci differentiam. At Rex, & quonam pacto abſque ſubjecto illud fieri poteſt, iridi enim paries ſubjectum eſt? Tum ego, velut in lactea via, & luminum reflectione, cum plures candelæ prope accenſæ medium quoddam lucidum & candidum efficiunt. Itaque ex ungue Leonem, ut dici ſolet. Fuit hic in maxima omnium aut bonorum aut eruditorum expectatione ob ingenuitatem atque ſuavitatem morum. Prius cæperat favere artibus quam noſceret, & noſcere antequam uti poſſet. Conatus quidam humanæ conditionis, quem non ſolum Anglia, ſed orbis ereptum immature deflere debet. O quam bene dixerat ille, Immodicis brevis eſt ætas & rara ſenectus.

Specimen virtutis exhibere potuit, non exemplum. Ubi gravitas Regia requirebatur, ſenem vidiſſes; ut blandus erat, & comis, ætatem referebat. Cheli pulſabat, publicis negotiis admovebatur, liberalis animo, atque in his patrem æmulabatur, &c.

Hæc Cardanus.

The ſame in Engliſh.

The words of Cardanus in the commendation of King Edward.

THere was in him a towardly diſpoſition and pregnancy apt to all human literature; as who being yet a Child, had the knowledge of divers Tongues, firſt of the Engliſh his own natural Tongue, of the Latin alſo and of the French; neither was he ignorant (as I hear) of the Greek, Italian, and Spaniſh Tongues, and of other Languages peradventure moe. In his own, in the French, and in the Latin Tongue ſingularly perfect, and with the like facility apt to receive all other. Neither was he ignorant in Logick, in the principles of natural Philoſophy, or in Muſick. There was in him lacking neither humanity, the Image of our mortality, a Princely gravity and majeſty, nor any kind of towardneſs beſeeming a noble King. Briefly, it may ſeem a miracle of nature, to behold the excellent wit and forwardneſs that appeared in him being yet but a Child. This I ſpeak not rhetorically, to amplifie things, or to make them more than truth is, yea the truth is more than I do utter.

Being yet but fifteen year of age, he asked of me in Latin (in which Tongue he uttered his mind no leſs readily and eloquently than I could do my ſelf) what my Books which I had dedicated unto him, De varietate rerum, do contain; I ſaid that in the firſt Chapter was ſhewed the cauſe of Comets, or blazing Stars, which hath been long ſought for, and yet hitherto ſcarce fully found. What cauſe, ſaid he, is that? The concourſe or meeting, ſaid I, of the Light and wandring Planets and Stars. To this the King thus replied again: Forſomuch, ſaid he, as the motion of the Stars keepeth not one courſe, but is divers and variable by continual alteration, how is it then that the cauſe of theſe Comets either doth not quickly vade and vaniſh, or that the Comet doth not keep one certain and uniform courſe and motion with the ſaid Stars and Planets? Whereunto I anſwered, that the Comet hath his courſe and moving, but much more ſwifter than they, becauſe of the diverſity of aſpect, as we ſee in Chryſtal, and in the Sun when the form of the Rainbow reboundeth on the Wall. For a little mutation maketh a great difference of place. Then ſaid the King, and how can that be, having no ſubject: for of the Rainbow the Wall is the ſubject? Like, ſaid I, as in Lactea via, or in reflection of lights, as where many Candles be lighted and ſet near together, in the middle they cauſe a certain bright and white lightſomneſs to appear, &c.

The cauſe of Comets.

Lactea via is a white and bright part of the Firmament, like a long white cauſway or way appearing in the night among the thick Stars.

And ſo by this little trial a great gueſs may be given what was in this King. In whom no doubt was a great hope and expectation amongſt all good and Learned Men, both for the ingenious forwardneſs and amiable ſweetneſs which in his conditions appeared. Firſt he began to love and favour liberal Arts and Sciences, before he knew them, and to know them before he could uſe them, whoſe mortal condition and ſudden deceaſe and decay in thoſe tender and unripe years, not only England, but all the world hath cauſe to lament. O how truly is it ſaid of the Poet,

Things that be exceeding excellent,
Be not commonly long permanent.

A ſhew or ſight only of excellency he could give us; example he could not give. Where a Kingly Majeſty required gravity, there you ſhould have ſeen him a ſage and an old man, and yet gentle and pleaſant alſo, according as the condition of his age then required. He played well upon the Lute, he had alſo to do in handling of weighty affairs of the Realm. He was liberal and bountiful in heart, and therein he imitated his Father, &c.

Ex Hier. Cardano.

Thus after the godly diſpoſition and properties of this King briefly in this wiſe declared, now, God willing, we will intermeddle ſomething to deſcribe the order and proceedings which he followed in his adminiſtration and government of both the States, as well Politick as eſpecially Eccleſiaſtick. Who after the deceaſe of his Father coming unto the Crown, becauſe he was of young and tender age, he was committed to ſixteen Governours. Amongſt whom, eſpecially the Lord Edward Semer Duke of Somerſet his Uncle was aſſigned and joyned to him as Protector and Overſeer of him and of the Commonwealth, a Man not ſo highly advanced for his conſanguinity, as alſo for his noble vertues, and eſpecially for his favour to Gods Word, worthy of his vocation and calling. Through the indeavour and induſtry of which Man, firſt that monſtrous Hydra with ſix Heads, the ſix Articles I mean (which devoured up ſo many Men before) was aboliſhed and taken away: By reaſon whereof the Councils and proceedings of Winchester began to decay, who, ſtorming at the ſame matter, wrote to the Lord Protector in the cauſe thereof, as by the Letters is to be ſeen.

The Lord Edward Semer made Lord Protector.

Commendation of the Lord Protector.

Reformation by King Edward.

The holy Scriptures he reſtored to the mother Tongue, Maſſes he extinguiſhed and aboliſhed. Furthermore, after ſofter beginnings, by little and little, greater things followed in the reformation of the Churches. Then ſuch, as before were in baniſhment for the danger of the truth, were again received to their Country. To be ſhort, a new face of things began now to appear, as it were in a Stage new players coming in, the old being thruſt out. For the moſt part the Biſhops of Churches and Dioceſſes were changed. Such as had been dumb Prelates before, were compelled to give place to other then, that would preach and take pains.

Anno 1547. Peter Martyr, Martin Bucer, Paulus Phagius.

Beſides other alſo, out of foreign Countries men of learning and notable knowledge were ſent for and received, among whom was Peter Martyr, Martin Bucer, and Paulus Phagius. Of whom the firſt taught at Oxford; the other two profeſſed at Cambridge, and that with no ſmall commendation of the whole Univerſity. Of the old Biſhops ſome were committed to one ward, ſome to another. Bonner Biſhop of London was committed to the Marſhalſey, and eftſoons for his contempt and miſdemeanour depoſed from his Biſhoprick, as in further proceſs followeth to be ſeen. Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, with Tonſtal Biſhop of Dureſme, was caſt into the Tower for his diſobedience, where he kept his Chriſtmas three years together, more worthy of ſome other place without the Tower, if it had pleaſed God otherwiſe not to have meant a further Plague to this Realm by that man.

Edm. Bonet Biſhop of London committed to the Marſhalſey.

Gardiner and Tonſtal committed to the Tower.

But theſe meek and gentle times of King Edward, under the government of this Noble Protector, have this one commendation proper unto them, that amongſt the whole number of the Popiſh ſort, of whom ſome privily did ſteal out of the Realm, many were crafty diſſemblers, ſome were open and manifeſt adverſaries, yet of all that multitude there was not one man that loſt his life. In ſum, during the whole time of the ſix years of this King, much tranquillity, and as it were a breathing time was granted to the whole Church of England: ſo that the rage of perſecution ceaſing, and the ſword taken out of the adverſaries hand, there was now no danger to the godly, unleſs it were only by wealth and proſperity, which many times bringeth more damage in corrupting mens minds, than any time of perſecuting or affliction.

Briefly, during all this time, neither in Smithfield nor any other quarter of this Realm, any was heard to ſuffer for any matter of Religion, either Papiſt or Proteſtant, either for one opinion or other, except only two, one an Engliſhwoman, called Joan of Kent, and the other a Dutchman, named George, who died for certain Articles not much neceſſary here to be rehearſed.

KING Edward.

Beſides theſe two, there was none elſe in all King Edwards Reign, that died in any cauſe of Religion, but one Thomas Dobbe, who in the beginning of this Kings Reign was apprehended and impriſoned for ſpeaking againſt the Idolatry of the Maſs, and in the ſame priſon died; as in the Story here inſueth to be ſeen.

The Dobbe Impriſoned, and in priſon died.

This Thomas Dobbe, being a Student and a Maſter of Art in Cambridge, was brought up in the College called Saint Johns College, and Fellow of the ſame, where he increaſed in the ſtudy of good Letters, among his equals very forward, of nature and diſpoſition ſimple and modeſt, of zeal toward God fervent, patient in injuries, injurious to no man, of much like ſort and condition as in Doves, which without all bitterneſs of Gall are more apt to receive injury than to work wrong at any. At length this godly Man, intending with himſelf and addicting his mind to the Chriſtian ſtate of Matrimony, reſorted to a certain Maiden not far off where he dwelt. For the which cauſe he was greatly moleſted, and wickedly abuſed by three of that College, whoſe names were Hutchinſon, Pindare, and Tayler, who with their malicious handling, ſcornful dealing, opprobries, rebukes, and contumelies, ſo much vexed the vertuous ſimplicity of the man, that they never left him, till at length they wearied him out of the College. Who there having no reſt nor quietneſs, by reaſon of the unreaſonable and virulent handling of his adverſaries, was compelled to ſeek ſome other place wherein to ſettle himſelf. Upon the occaſion whereof coming up unto London, it chanced him to paſs through Pauls Church, where it happened that at the South ſide of the Church at the ſame time there was a Prieſt at Maſs, more buſie than well occupied, being at the elevation as he paſſed by. The young Man replete with godly zeal, pitying the ignorance and idolatry of the people, in honouring that ſo devoutly which the Prieſt lifted up, was not able to forbear, but opening his mouth and turning to the people, he exhorted them not to honour the viſible Bread as God, which neither was God, nor yet ordained of God to be honoured, &c. with ſuch other words moe of Chriſtian information. For which cauſe ſtraightway he was apprehended by the Maior, and afterward accuſed to the Biſhop of Canterbury, and committed to the Counter then in Breadſtreet, where he not long continued, but falling into a ſickneſs, how or whereupon I cannot tell, ſhortly upon the ſame changed this mortal life. Whoſe Pardon notwithſtanding was obtained of the Lord Protector, and ſhould have been brought him, if he had continued. And thus much concerning Thomas Dobbe and other.

Doves as Philoſophers do write, naturally have no Gall.

Over and beſides, I find, that in the firſt year of the Reign of King Edward, which was Anno 1547, there was one John Hume, Servant to Maſter Lewnax of Wreſel apprehended, accuſed, and ſent up to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, by the ſaid Maſter Lewnax his Maſter and Margaret Lewnax his Miſtreſs, for theſe Articles.

1. Firſt, for denying the Sacrament (as it was then called of the Altar) to be the real fleſh and blood of Chriſt.

2. For ſaying that he would never vail his Bonet unto it, to be burned therefore.

3. For ſaying that if he ſhould hear Maſs, he ſhould be burned.

For this was he ſent up by his Maſter and Miſtreſs aforeſaid, with ſpecial Letters unto the Archbiſhop, requiring him ſeverely to be puniſhed by the Law for the ſame. But becauſe I find no execution following thereupon, I therefore paſs over this ſtory of him.

Theſe things premiſed, when this vertuous and godly young Prince (indued as you have heard with ſpecial graces from God) was now peaceably ſtabliſhed in his Kingdom, and had a Council about him, grave, wiſe, and zealous in Gods cauſe, eſpecially his Uncle the Duke of Somerſet, he then moſt earneſtly likewiſe deſired, as well the advancement of the true honour of Almighty God, and the planting of his ſincere Religion, as alſo the utter ſup-

{KING Edw.6} ſuppreſſion and extirpation of all Idolatry, ſuperſtition, hypocriſie, and other enormities and abuſes, throughout his Realms and Dominions: and therefore following, as is before expreſſed, the good example of King Joſias, he determined forthwith to enter into ſome reformation of Religion in the Church of England.

And forſomuch as at his firſt entry (notwithſtanding his Fathers good beginning in aboliſhing the uſurped power of Antichriſt) he yet found moſt of his Laws greatly repugning againſt this his zealous enterpriſe, he therefore purpoſed by the adviſe of his ſaid wiſe and honourable Council, and of his own regal power and authority, ſomewhat to proſecute his godly purpoſe, until ſuch time as by the conſent of the whole eſtate of Parliament he might eſtabliſh a more free, perfect, and uniform order therein.

Order taken by K. Edward for reforming of Religion.

Whereupon intending firſt a general Viſitation over all the Biſhopricks within his Realm, (thereby as well to underſtand, as alſo to addreſs the abuſes in the ſame) he choſe out certain wiſe, learned, diſcreet and worſhipful Perſonages to be his Commiſſioners in that behalf, and ſo dividing them into ſeveral Companies, aſſigned unto them ſeveral Dioceſſes to be viſited; appointing likewiſe unto every Company one or two godly learned Preachers, which at every Seſſion ſhould in their preaching both inſtruct the people in the true Doctrine of the Goſpel of Chriſt, and in all love and obedience to the ſame, and alſo earneſtly dehort them from their old ſuperſtition and wonted Idolatry. And that they might be more orderly directed in this their Commiſſion, there were delivered unto them certain Injunctions and Eccleſiaſtical Orders drawn out by the Kings learned Council, the which they ſhould both inquire of, and alſo command in his Majeſties behalf to be thenceforth obſerved of every perſon, to whom they did ſeverally appertain within their ſundry Circuits.

Learned preachers appointed by King Edward.

Eccleſiaſtical perſons muſt preach againſt the Popes uſurped power.

In the which amongſt other things, it was firſt injoyned, that all Eccleſiaſtical perſons ſhould themſelves obſerve, and cauſe to be obſerved of other, all ſuch Statutes as were made for the aboliſhing of the Biſhop of Romes uſurped power, and eſtabliſhing of the Kings ſupreme Authority, and that they ſhould every one, four times in the year at the leaſt, in their publick Sermons declare unto the people, that the one, being moſt arrogantly uſurped againſt the Word of God, was now juſtly taken away, and the other (according to the very true meaning of the ſame word) was of moſt loyal duty only to be obeyed of all his Graces ſubjects.

Sermons quarterly to be made.

And again, that every the foreſaid Eccleſiaſtical perſon, having Cure, ſhould preach, or cauſe to be preached within their ſeveral Cures, one Sermon every quarter of the year. In the which they ſhould ſincerely ſet forth the Word of God, and exhort the people unto the works of Faith and mercy preſcribed in the ſame word, and not unto works deviſed by mans fantaſie, as going on Pilgrimages and otherlike Idolatrous Superſtitions; the which they ſhould alſo to the uttermoſt of their powers reprove and ſpeak againſt, declaring that all grace and goodneſs ought only to be ſought for at Gods hand (as the alone giver thereof) and not at any other creature: And that they ſhould not only forthwith take down and deſtroy all ſuch Images as had been heretofore abuſed by Pilgrimage or offerings, within their ſaid Cures; but alſo ſhould not thenceforth ſuffer any Lights or other Idolatrous oblation to be made or ſet up before any other Image than was yet ſuffered in the Church.

Difference between works commanded of God, and works deviſed of men.

Images abuſed with pilgrimage to be deſtroyed.

{Anno 1547.}

Alſo that every Holy-day (having no Sermon in their Church) they ſhould immediately after the Goſpel diſtinctly read in the Pulpit the Lords Prayer, the Belief and the Ten Commandments of Almighty God in the Engliſh Tongue; exhorting the people not only to learn them their ſelves, but alſo to teach them to their Children and Families, and alſo ſhould charge all Parents and Governors of Houſholds, to bring up their youth in ſome good exerciſe or occupation, whereby they might afterwards ſerve the Commonwealth, and not run about like Vagabonds and idle Loyterers, and thereby incur the danger of the Laws.

The Ten Commandments and the Lords Prayer in Engliſh, to be read.

Parents and Maſters charged in training up of their Children.

Sacraments to be reverently miniſtred.

And furthermore, that the ſaid perſons, having Cure, ſhould ſee the holy Sacraments of Chriſt reverently miniſtred within their Cures, and that if any of them (by ſpecial licence or other caſes expreſſed in the Statutes of this Realm) ſhould be at any time abſent from their Benefices, that then they ſhould leave in their rooms ſome godly, learned, and diſcreet Curate, that were able to inſtruct the people in all truth and godlineſs, not ſeeking themſelves, but rather the profit of their Flock.

The Bible in Engliſh of the largeſt Volume to be ſet up in every Church with the Paraphraſes of Eraſmus.

And likewiſe, that they ſhould ſee provided and ſet up in ſome moſt convenient and open place of every their ſeveral Churches, one great Bible in Engliſh, and one Book of the Paraphraſes of Eraſmus upon the Goſpels, both in Engliſh, that the people might reverently, without any argument or contention, read and hear the ſame at ſuch times as they liſted, and not to be inhibited therefrom by the Parſon and Curate, but rather to be the more encouraged and provoked thereto, Eccleſiaſtical perſons not to haunt Taverns, or play at unlawful game.

And that the ſaid Parſons and Curates ſhould not at any time (but for neceſſary cauſes) haunt any Tavern or Alehouſe, neither ſhould ſpend their time idlely in unlawful Games, but at all their convenient leiſures ſhould give themſelves to the reading or hearing of the holy Scriptures.

Moreover, that in the time of Confeſſion every Lent they ſhould examine their Pariſhioners, whether they could ſay the Lords Prayer, the Ten Commandments, and the Articles of the Chriſtian Faith: and that if they could not, they ſhould then reprove them, declaring further unto them, that they ought not to preſume to come unto the Lords Table, without the true knowledge thereof, and earneſt deſire to fulfil the ſame.

None to preach but ſufficiently licenced.

Alſo that they ſhould not admit any Man to preach within their Cures, but ſuch as were lawfully licenſed thereunto; and that they having at any time before extolled and praiſed any Idolatrous Pilgrimage, or other ſuperſtition, ſhould now openly recant the ſame before the people.

That all hinderers of Gods word, and favourers of the contrary proceedings ſhould be detected.

And if there were any open hinderer or diſturber of the reading or preaching of the Word of God within their Pariſhes, that then they ſhould forthwith detect the ſame unto the Kings Council, or unto ſome Juſtice of Peace to them next inhabiting.

Eccleſiaſtical and beneficed perſons, what they muſt give to the poor.

Every Benefice of 100 pound, to find a ſcholar at the Univerſity.

And further, that learning and knowledge might be the better maintained, it was alſo ordained herein, that every Beneficed perſon that might yearly diſpend twenty pounds or upward, and not reſident upon their Cures, ſhould pay, towards the relief of the Poor within their Pariſh every year, the fortieth part of their Fruits and profits: and likewiſe that every ſuch as might diſpend one hundred pounds yearly, or more, ſhould for every hundred pound give a competent exhibition to ſome poor Scholar within one of the Univerſities of Oxford or Cambridge, or elſe in ſome other Grammar ſchool of the Realm.

Certain things to be provided for of the Churchmen

And alſo that every Prieſt, being under the degree of a Bachelor of Divinity, ſhould have of his own one New Teſtament in Engliſh and Latin, with the Paraphraſes of Eraſmus upon the ſame, and ſhould diligently read and ſtudy thereupon, and ſhould collect and keep in memory all ſuch comfortable places of the Scripture, as do ſet forth the mercy, benefits, and goodneſs of Almighty God towards all penitent and believing perſons, that they might thereby comfort their Flock in all danger of death, deſpair, or trouble of conſcience: and that therefore every Biſhop in their Viſitations ſhould from time to time try and examine them how they had profited in theſe their ſtudies.

The Goſpe and Epiſtle to be read in the hearing of the people.

And although the Maſs was then ſtill by the Law retained, yet was it enjoyned, that at every high Maſs the ſayer or ſinger thereof ſhould openly and diſtinctly read the Goſpel and the Epiſtle in Engliſh, in the Pulpit, or in ſome other convenient place that the people might hear the ſame. And in like place and manner ſhould read every Holyday and Sunday at Mattins one Chapter of the New Teſtament in Engliſh, omitting therefore three of their nine Latin Leſſons, with there Reſponds; and at Evenſong likewiſe, immediately after Magnificat, one Chapter of the Old Teſtament inſtead of their wonted Reſponds and memories.

Proceſſions laid down.

Furthermore, becauſe of the vain contentions that often fall among the people for going on Proceſſion, it was ordained, that thenceforth the Prieſts and Clerks ſhould kneel in the middſt of the Church, and there diſtinctly ſing or read the Letany in Engliſh ſet forth by the authority of King Henry the Eighth, and that no perſon ſhould depart the Church in the time of reading the Scripture or the Letany, or during the time of any Sermon, without juſt and urgent cauſe.

Likewiſe that the people ſhould ſpend the Holydays in hearing the Word of God, in private and publick Prayers, in knowledging their offences unto God and amendment of the ſame, in reconciling themſelves charitably to their Neighbours where diſpleaſure hath been, in often receiving the Communion of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, in viſiting the poor and ſick, and in all ſober and godly converſation; and not in vanity, Idleneſs, or drunkenneſs, neither yet in any bodily labour, otherwiſe than in the time of Harveſt, to ſave the Fruits of the Earth, if neceſſity ſo require; and that no Curate ſhould admit unto the receiving of the holy Communion any perſon who had maliciouſly and openly contended with his Neighbours, unleſs the ſame did firſt alſo openly reconcile himſelf again, and remit all rancor and malice whatſoever.

The true uſing of the holydays. Diligent preparation to be had before the coming to the Communion.

Moreover it was ordained that every Dean, Archdeacon, Maſter of Collegiate Churches or Hoſpitals, and Prebendaries (being Prieſts) ſhould himſelf perſonally preach twice every year at leaſt, in ſome ſuch place where he had juriſdiction and living; and that they and all other Curates ſhould teach the people, that no man of any private affection ought maliciouſly to violate any Ceremony in the Church, then not abrogated by the Kings authority; ſo likewiſe they ought not on the other ſide to uſe them ſuperſtitiouſly or idolatrouſly, in attributing to them remiſſion of ſins, driving away of evil Spirits, and other ſuch like dreams and fantaſies of Men, or elſe in putting any confidence of ſalvation or health in them. And further that they ſhould utterly take away and deſtroy all Shrines and Monuments of fained Miracles, Pilgrimages, and other Idolatrous ſuperſtition, as well in their Churches, as within their private Houſes.

A godly charge given to every beneficed Miniſter to preach perſonally twice at leaſt in the year, and what to preach.

All Monuments of Idolatry to be taken away out of Churches, Houſes, and Windows.

Alſo that they ſhould ſee provided within their Churches a ſtrong and fit Cheſt for the ſafe keeping of the peoples benevolence given towards the relief of the poor, and that the ſaid Curates ſhould earneſtly exhort and move their Pariſhioners (eſpecially at the making of their Teſtaments) that as they had been theretofore willing to beſtow much of their ſubſtance upon vain, ſuperſtitious and blind devotions contrary to Gods Word, ſo now they would be much more ready to give ſome Portion thereof unto their poor and needy Brethren, knowing the ſame to be not only commanded in the Word of God, but alſo promiſed to be rewarded. And for the better relief of the Poor, it was alſo appointed that all money and profits riſing upon Fraternities, Guids, Stocks, of Churches, or given to the finding of Idolatrous Lights, ſhould be converted for that preſent unto the ſame uſe. Laſt of all, for the want of Learned Curates and other good Preachers, it was enjoyned that the Curates (having no Sermon) ſhould every Sunday read unto the people in their Churches one of the Homilies which ſhould be ſhortly ſet forth for the ſame purpoſe by the Kings authority; and that when any Homily or Sermon ſhould be preached or read, then the Prime and Hours ſhould be omitted.

A Cheſt to be provided upon publick charge to receive the alms of the poor, and the Curates to call upon their Pariſhioners to give to the ſame Cheſt.

Homilies to be read every Sunday when there is no Sermon.

There were alſo divers other Articles in the ſame Injunctions appointed for Comlineſs and due order in the Churches; as for repaing of Chancels, and Prieſts Houſes; for keeping of a Regiſter Book of Weddings, Chriſtnings and Burials, for reading of theſe Injunctions every quarter, for due paying of Tithes, for forbidding of any other alteration of Service in the Church, or Faſting days, for making of comly Pulpits for the Preachers, for avoiding of Symony in buying and ſelling of Benefices, for the charitable uſing of Prieſts, for praying only upon the Engliſh and Latin Primers ſet forth by King Henry the Eighth, for the teaching of his Grammar in the common Schools. And laſtly, that the Chantry Prieſts ſhould teach young Children either to Write and Read, or elſe ſome other good and profitable exerciſes; as it doth more fully and amply appear in the ſame Injunctions at large ſet forth in the 684th Page of the firſt Book of the Acts and Monuments of the Church heretofore Imprinted.

Read the former Edition of the Book of Acts and Monuments, Pag. 684.

Beſides theſe general Injunctions for the whole Eſtate of the Realm, there were alſo certain others particularly appointed for the Biſhops only, which being delivered unto the Commiſſioners were likewiſe at their Viſitations committed unto the ſaid Biſhops with charge to be inviolably obſerved and kept upon pain of the Kings Majeſties diſpleaſure; the effect whereof is as in manner followeth.

{KING Edw.6}

{Anno 1547. Injunctions given to the Biſhops.}

Firſt that they ſhould, to the uttermoſt of their wit and underſtanding, ſee and cauſe all and every ſingular the Kings Injunctions theretofore given, or after to be given from time to time, in and through their Dioceſs, duly, faithfully, and truly to be kept, obſerved, and accompliſhed, and that they ſhould perſonally Preach within their Dioceſs, every quarter of a year once at the leaſt, that is to ſay, once in their Cathedral Churches, and thrice in other ſeveral places of their Dioceſſes, whereas they ſhould ſee it moſt convenient and neceſſary, except they had a reaſonable excuſe to the contrary. Likewiſe, that they ſhould not retain in their ſervice or houſhold any Chaplain, but ſuch as were Learned, or able to Preach the Word of God, and thoſe they ſhould alſo cauſe to exerciſe the ſame.

Moreover, that they ſhould not give Orders to any perſon, but ſuch as were learned in holy Scripture; neither ſhould deny them that were learned in the ſame, being of honeſt converſation and living. And laſtly, that they ſhould not at any time or place Preach or ſet forth unto the people any Doctrine contrary or repugnant to the effect and intent contained and ſet forth in the Kings Highneſs Homilies, neither yet ſhould admit or give licence to any to Preach within their Dioceſs, but to ſuch as they ſhould know (or at leaſt aſſuredly truſt) would do the ſame. And if at any time by hearing, or by report proved, they ſhould perceive the contrary, they ſhould then incontinent not only inhibit that perſon ſo offending, but alſo puniſh him and revoke their licence.

Now during the time that the Commiſſioners were occupied abroad in their Circuits about the ſpeedy and diligent execution of theſe godly and zealous Orders and Decrees of the King and his Council, his Majeſty (with the adviſe of the ſame) yet ſtill deſiring a further reformation as well in this caſe of Religion, as alſo in ſome others of his civil Government, appointed a Parliament of the three Eſtates of his Realm to be ſummoned againſt the fourth day of November, in the firſt year of his Reign, and the year of our Lord one thouſand five hundred forty and ſeven, which continued unto the twenty fourth day of December then next following. In the which Seſſion, foraſmuch as his Highneſs minded the governance and order of his people to be in perfect unity and concord in all things, and eſpecially in the true Faith and Religion of God, and therewithal alſo duly weighed the great danger that his loving Subjects were in for confeſſing the Goſpel of Chriſt, through many and divers cruel Statutes made by ſundry his Predeceſſors againſt the ſame, (which being ſtill left in force might both cauſe the obſtinate to contemn his Graces godly proceedings, and alſo the weak to be fearful of their Chriſtianlike Profeſſion) he therefore cauſed it among other things by the authority of the ſame Parliament to be Inacted, That all Acts of Parliament and Statutes, touching, mentioning, or in any wiſe concerning Religion or opinions, that is to ſay, as well the Statute made in the firſt year of the Reign of King Richard the Second, and the Statute made in the ſecond year of the Reign of King Henry the Fifth, and the Statute made in the five and twentieth year of the Reign of King Henry the Eighth, concerning puniſhment and reformation of Hereticks and Lollards, and every proviſion therein contained, and the Statutes made for the aboliſhment of diverſity of opinions in certain Articles concerning Chriſtian Religion, commonly called the ſix Articles, made in the one and thirtieth year of the Reign of King Henry the Eighth, and alſo the Statute made in the Parliament begun the ſixteenth day of January in the three and thirtieth year of the Reign of the ſaid King Henry the Eighth, and after Prorogued unto the one and twentieth day of January in the four and thirtieth year of his ſaid Reign, touching, mentioning, or in any wiſe concerning Books of the Old and New Teſtament in Engliſh, and the printing, uttering, ſelling, giving, or delivering of Books or writings, and retaining of Engliſh books or writings, and reading, preaching, teaching, or expounding the Stat. An 1. Reg. Edw. 6. cap. 12. The Statute made An. 1. Reg. Rich. 2. an. Reg. Hen. 5. An. 2. Reg. Hen. 8. Item an. 31. Hen. 8. an. 34 Hen. 8. an. 35 Hen. 8. repealed. Item, note for the Statute, an. 1. Reg. Hen. 4. cap. 15. becauſe that Statute was repealed by a Statute made 25. an. H. 8. therefore the ſame is here omitted. The bloody Statute of the 6 Articles repealed.

{KING Edw.6} the Scriptures, or in any wiſe touching, mentioning or concerning any of the ſaid matters; and alſo one other Statute made in the five and thirtieth year of the Reign of the ſaid King Henry the Eighth, concerning the qualification of the Statute of the ſix Articles, and all and every other Act or Acts of Parliament, concerning Doctrine or matters of Religion, and all and every Branch, Article, Sentence, Matter, Pains, or Forfeitures contained, mentioned, or in any wiſe declared in any of the ſame Acts and Statutes, ſhould from thenceforth be utterly repealed, made void, and of none effect.

By occaſion whereof, as well all ſuch his godly Subjects, as were then ſtill abiding within the Realm, had free liberty publickly to profeſs the Goſpel; as alſo many learned and zealous Preachers, before baniſhed, were now both licenſed freely to return home again, and alſo incouraged boldly and faithfully to travel in their Function and Calling, ſo that God was much glorified, and the people in many places greatly edified.

Moreover, in the ſame Seſſion his Majeſty with the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons in the ſame Parliament aſſembled, throughly underſtanding by the judgment of the beſt Learned, that it was more agreeable unto the firſt Inſtitution of the Sacrament of the moſt precious Body and Blood of our Saviour Chriſt, and alſo more conformable to the common uſe and practiſe both of the Apoſtles, and of the Primitive Church, by the ſpace of five hundred years and more after Chriſts Aſcenſion, that the ſaid holy Sacrament ſhould be miniſtred unto all Chriſtian people under both the kinds of Bread and Wine, than under the form of Bread only; and alſo that it was more agreeable unto the ſaid firſt Inſtitution of Chriſt, and the uſage of the Apoſtles and Primitive Church, that the people being preſent ſhould receive the ſame with the Prieſt, than that the Prieſt ſhould receive it alone; did by their Authority moreover enact, that the ſaid holy Sacrament ſhould be from thenceforth commonly delivered and miniſtred unto the people, throughout the Churches of England and Ireland, and other the Kings Dominions, under both the kinds of Bread and of Wine, except neceſſity otherwiſe required: and alſo that the Prieſt, that ſhould miniſter the ſame, ſhould at the leaſt one day before exhort all perſons which ſhould be preſent, likewiſe to reſort and prepare themſelves to receive the ſame. And at the day prefixed, after ſome godly Exhortation made by the Miniſter, wherein ſhould be further expreſſed the benefit and comfort promiſed to them which worthily receive this holy Sacrament, and the danger and indignation of God threatned to them which preſume to receive the ſame unworthily, to the end that every man might try and examine his own conſcience before he ſhould come thereunto; the ſaid Miniſter ſhould not without a lawful cauſe deny the ſame to any perſon that would devoutly and humbly deſire it; any Law, Statute, Ordinance, or Cuſtom contrary thereunto in any wiſe notwithſtanding.

The Communion under both kinds.

The aſſembly of Biſhops and others at Windſor.

After which moſt godly conſent of the Parliament, the King being no leſs deſirous to have the form of Adminiſtration of the Sacrament truly reduced to the right Rule of the Scriptures and firſt uſe of the Primitive Church, than he was to eſtabliſh the ſame by the Authority of his own Regal Laws, appointed certain of the moſt grave and beſt learned Biſhops, and other of his Realm, to aſſemble together at his Caſtle of Windſor, there to argue and intreat upon this matter, and conclude upon and ſet forth one perfect and uniform Order according to the rule and uſe aforeſaid.

And in the mean time while that the Learned were thus occupied about their Conferences, the Lord Protector and the reſt of the Kings Council, further remembring that that time of the year did then approach, wherein were practiſed many ſuperſtitious Abuſes and blaſphemous Ceremonies againſt the Glory of God, and truth of his Word (determining the utter aboliſhing thereof) directed their Letters unto the godly and reverend Father Thomas Cranmer, then Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Metropolitan of England, requiring him that upon the receit thereof he ſhould will every Biſhop within his Province, forthwith to give in charge unto all the Curates of their Dioceſſes, That neither Candles ſhould be any more born upon Candlemas-day, neither yet Aſhes uſed in Lent, nor Palms upon Palm-Sunday.

Candles not to be born on Candlemas-day.

Aſhes forbidden on Aſh-Wedneſday.

Whereupon the Archbiſhop, zealouſly favouring the good and Chriſtian-like purpoſe of the King and his Council, did immediately in that behalf write unto all the reſt of the Biſhops of that Province, and amongſt them unto Edmund Bonner then Biſhop of London. Of whoſe rebellious and obſtinate contumacy for that we have hereafter more to ſay, I thought not to ſtand now long thereupon, but only by the way ſomewhat to note his former diſſimulation and cloked hypocriſie, in that he outwardly at the firſt conſented as well unto this, as alſo unto all other the Kings proceedings, but whether for fear or for any other ſubtil fetch I know not, howbeit moſt like it is, rather for one of them or both, than for any true love. And therefore receiving the Archbiſhops Letters, as one of them ſeeming to allow the contents thereof, he did preſently write unto the Biſhop of Weſtminſter, and to others to whom he was appointed, requiring them to give ſuch knowledge thereof in their Dioceſſes, as thereunto appertained; as more plainly appeareth by theſe his own Letters here inſerted, which here do follow. Ed. Bonner.

A Letter miſſive of Edmund Bonner, ſent to the Biſhop of Weſtminſter, with the tenor of the Archbiſhops Letter for aboliſhing of Candles, Aſhes, Palms, and other Ceremonies.

Bonners Letter for the aboliſhing of aſhes, palms, &c. {Ann. 1548}

My very good Lord, after moſt hearty Commendations, theſe be to advertiſe your good Lordſhip, That my Lord of Canterburies Grace this preſent 28th day of January ſent unto me his Letters miſſive, containing this in effect, That my Lord Protectors Grace, with the adviſe of other the Kings Majeſties moſt honourable Council, for certain Conſiderations them moving, are fully reſolved that no Candles ſhall be born upon Candlemas-day, nor alſo from henceforth Aſhes or Palms uſed any longer: requiring me thereupon by his ſaid Letters, to cauſe admonition and knowledge thereof to be given unto your Lordſhip and other Biſhops with cerelity accordingly. In conſideration whereof I do ſend at this preſent theſe Letters unto your ſaid Lordſhip, that you thereupon may give knowledge and advertiſement thereof within your Dioceſs as appertaineth. Thus I commit your good Lordſhip to Almighty God, as well to fare as your good heart can beſt deſire.

Edmund Bonner.

Contention amongſt the people for Images.

Now about that preſent time credible and certain Report was made unto the Lords of the Council, that great contention and ſtrife did daily ariſe among the common people in divers parts of this Realm, for the pulling down and taking away of ſuch Images out of the Churches, as had been Idolatrouſly abuſed by Pilgrimages, Offerings, or otherwiſe (according to the tenor of one of the Injunctions given by the King in his late Viſitation) ſome affirming that that Image was abuſed, others that this, and moſt that neither of them both; ſo that if ſpeedy remedy were not had therein, it might turn to further inconvenience. Wherefore they, by one adviſe thinking it beſt (of good experience) for avoiding of all diſcord and tumult, that all manner of Images ſhould be clean taken out of all Churches, and none ſuffered to remain, did thereupon again write their Letters unto the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, requiring his ready Aid therein, in manner following.

Another Letter of the Council ſent to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, for the aboliſhing of Images.

Letters from the Council to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, for aboliſhing of Images.

After our right hearty Commendations to your good Lordſhip: Where now of late in the Kings Majeſties Viſitations, among other godly Injunctions commanded to be generally obſerved through all parts of this his Highneſs Realm, Realm, one was ſet forth for the taking down of all ſuch Images as had at any time been abuſed with Pilgrimages, Offerings, or Cenſings, albeit that this ſaid Injunction hath in many parts of this Realm been quietly obeyed and executed, yet in many other places much ſtrife and contention hath riſen and daily riſeth, and more and more encreaſeth about the execution of the ſame; ſome men being ſo ſuperſtitious, or rather wilful, as they would by their good will retain all ſuch Images ſtill, although they have been moſt manifeſtly abuſed. And in ſome places alſo the Images, which by the ſaid Injunctions were taken down, be now reſtored and ſet up again; And almoſt in every place is contention for Images, whether they have been abuſed or not. And while theſe men go on both ſides contentiouſly to obtain their minds, contending whether this or that Image hath been offered unto, kiſſed, cenſed, or otherwiſe abuſed, parts have in ſome places been taken in ſuch ſort, as further inconveniences be like to enſue, if remedy be not found in time. Conſidering therefore, that almoſt in no place of this Realm is any ſure quietneſs, but where all Images be clean taken away and pulled down already, to the intent that all contention in every part of the Realm for this matter, may be clearly taken, and that the lively Image of Chriſt ſhould not contend for the dead Images, which be things not neceſſary, and without the which the Churches of Chriſt continued moſt godly many years; we have thought good to ſignifie unto you, that his Highneſs pleaſure, with the advice and conſent of us the Lord Protector and the reſt of the Council, is, that immediately upon the ſight hereof, with as convenient diligence as you may, you ſhall not only give order that all the Images remaining in any Church or Chappel within your Dioceſs, be removed and taken away, but alſo by your Letters ſignifie unto the reſt of the Biſhops within your Province, that his Highneſs pleaſure, for the like Order to be given by them and every of them within their ſeveral Dioceſſes. And in the execution hereof, we require both you and the reſt of the ſaid Biſhops to uſe ſuch foreſight as the ſame may be quietly done, with as good ſatisfaction of the people as may be. Thus fare your good Lordſhip heartily well.

The Archbiſhop writeth to Bonner.

When the Archbiſhop had received theſe Letters, he forthwith directed his Precept unto Bonner Biſhop of London, requiring, and in the Kings Majeſties Name commanding him, That with all ſpeed he ſhould as well give in charge unto the reſt of the Biſhops within the Province of Canterbury, to look immediately without delay unto the diligent and careful execution of the contents of the ſaid Letter through all places of their Dioceſs; as alſo that he himſelf ſhould do the like within his own City and Dioceſs of London. Whereupon he ſeeming then, with like outward conſent as before, to allow theſe doings, preſently (by vertue of the ſaid Precept) did ſend out his Mandatum as well unto the reſt of the Biſhops, as alſo again unto the Biſhop of Weſtminſter, in form following.

Datum in ædibus noſtris London: viceſimo die Febr. Anno Dom. 1548. Et Regni dicti illuſtriſſimi Domini noſtri Regis, Anno ſecundo.

Now by the time that theſe things were thus determined, the learned men which the King had appointed (as ye have heard before) to aſſemble together for the true and right manner of adminiſtring the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt according to the rule of the Scriptures of God, and firſt uſage of the Primitive Church, after their long, learned, wiſe, and deliberate adviſes, did finally conclude and agree upon one godly and uniform Order of receiving the ſame, not much differing from the manner at this preſent uſed and authoriſed within this Realm and Church of England, commonly called The Communion. Which agreement being by them exhibited unto the King, and of him moſt gladly accepted, was thereupon publickly imprinted, and by his Majeſties Counſel particularly divided and ſent unto every Biſhop of the Realm, requiring and commanding them by their Letters on the Kings Majeſties behalf, that both they in their own perſons ſhould forthwith have diligent and careful reſpect to the due execution thereof, and alſo ſhould with all diligence cauſe the Books which they then ſent them, to be delivered unto every Parſon, Vicar, and Curate within their Dioceſs, that they likewiſe might well and ſufficiently adviſe themſelves for the better diſtribution of the ſame Communion (according to the tenor of the ſaid Book) againſt the Feaſt of Eaſter then next inſuing, as more fully appeareth by theſe their Letters here following.

An uniform Order of the Communion.

{Ann. 1548}

A*Fter our moſt hearty Commendations unto your Lordſhip, where in the Parliament late holden at* Weſtminſter, it was amongſt other things moſt godly eſtabliſhed, that according to the firſt inſtitution and uſe of the Primitive Church, the moſt holy Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt ſhould be diſtributed to the people under the kinds of Bread and Wine, according to the effect whereof the Kings Majeſty minding, with the advice and conſent of the Lord Protectors Grace, and the reſt of the Counſel, to have the ſaid Statute well executed in ſuch ſort, or like as is agreeable with the Word of God (ſo the ſame may be alſo faithfully and reverently received of his moſt loving Subjects, to their comforts and wealth) hath cauſed ſundry of his Majeſties moſt grave and well-learned Prelates, and other learned men in the Scriptures, to aſſemble themſelves for this matter: who, after long conference together, have with deliberate adviſe finally agreed upon ſuch an Order to be uſed in all places of the Kings Majeſties Dominions in the diſtribution of the ſaid moſt holy Sacrament, as may appear to you by the Book thereof, which we ſend herewith unto you. Albeit knowing your Lordſhips knowledge in the Scriptures, and earneſt

The Communion in both kinds to be miniſtred.

KING Edw. 6 earneſt good will and zeal to the ſetting forth of all things, acording to the truth thereof, we be well aſſured, you will of your own good will, and upon reſpect to your duty, diligently ſet forth this moſt godly Order here agreed upon, and commanded to be uſed by the Authority of the Kings Majeſty: yet remembring the crafty practice of the Devil, who ceaſes not by his Members, to work by all ways and means, the hinderance of all godlineſs; and conſidering furthermore, that a great number of the Curates of the Realm, either for lack of knowledge cannot, or for want of good mind will not be ſo ready to ſet forth the ſame, as we would wiſh, and as the importance of the matter and their own bounden duties requires, we have thought good to pray and require your Lordſhip, and neverthelefs, in the Kings Majeſties our moſt dread Lords Name, to command you to have an earneſt diligence and careful reſpect both in your own Perſon, and by all your Officers and Miniſters alſo, to cauſe theſe Books to be delivered to every Parſon, Vicar, and Curate within your Dioceſs, with ſuch diligence as they may have ſufficient time well to inſtruct and adviſe themſelves, for the diſtribution of the moſt holy Communion, according to the Order of this Book, before this Eaſter *time, and that they may by your good means, be well directed to uſe ſuch good, gentle and charitable inſtruction of their ſimple and unlearned Pariſhioners, as may be to all their good ſatisfactions as much as may be, praying you to conſider, that this Order is ſet forth, to the intent there ſhould be in all parts of the Realm, and among all men one uniform manner quietly uſed. The execution whereof, like as it ſhall ſtand very much in the diligence of you and others of your Vocation; ſo do we eftſoons require you to have a diligent reſpect thereunto, as ye tender the Kings Majeſties pleaſure, and will anſwer for the contrary. By means as well of this Letter, and the godly Order of the Learned, as alſo of the Statute and Act of Parliament before mentioned, made for the ſtabliſhing thereof, all private blaſphemous Maſſes were now by juſt Authority fully aboliſhed throughout this Realm of England, and the right uſe of the Sacrament of the moſt precious Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt truly reſtored in ſtead of the ſame. But neverthelefs, as at no time any thing can be ſo well done of the godly, but that the wicked will find ſome means ſubtilly to deface the ſame: ſo likewiſe at this preſent, through the perverſe obſtinacy and diſſembling frowardneſs of many the inferior Prieſts and Miniſters of the Cathedral, and other Churches of this Realm, there did ariſe a marvelous Schiſm and variety of faſhions in celebrating the Common Service and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church. For ſome, zealouſly allowing the Kings proceedings, did gladly follow the Order thereof; and others, though not ſo willingly admitting them, did yet diſſemblingly and patchingly uſe ſome part of them; but many, careleſly contemning all, would ſtill exerciſe their old wonted Popery.

Diviſion amongſt the Prieſts about the Kings proceedings.

Whereof the King and his Council having good Intelligence, and fearing the great inconveniences and dangers that might happen through this diviſion, and being therewithall loth at the firſt to uſe any great ſeverity towards his Subjects, but rather deſirous by ſome quiet and godly Order to bring them to ſome Conformity, did by their prudent advices again appoint the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, with certain of the beſt learned and diſcreet Biſhops and other learned men, diligently to conſider and ponder the premiſſes: and thereupon, having as well an eye and reſpect unto the moſt ſincere and pure Chriſtian Religion taught by the holy Scriptures, as alſo to the Uſages of the Primitive Church, to draw and make one convenient and meet Order, Rite, and faſhion of Common Prayer, and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, to be had and uſed within this his Realm of England, and the Dominions of the ſame. Who after moſt godly and learned Conferences, through the aid of the Holy Ghoſt, with one uniform agreement did conclude, ſet forth, and deliver unto the Kings Highneſs, a Book in Engliſh, intituled, A Book of the Common-Prayer and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, after the uſe of the Church of England. The which his Highneſs receiving, with great comfort and quietneſs of mind, did forthwith exhibit unto the Lords and Commons of the Parliament then aſſembled at Weſtminſter, about the fourth of November, in the ſecond year of his Reign, and in the year of our Lord, 1548. and continuing unto the fourteenth day of March, then next enſuing.

One uniform Order of Common-Prayer.

A Parliament aſſembled the ſecond year of King Edward. { Ann. 1548 }

Whereupon the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons of the ſaid Parliament aſſembled, well and throughly conſidering, as well the moſt godly travel of the Kings Highneſs, of the Lord Protector, and other of his Majeſties Council, in gathering together the ſaid Archbiſhop, Biſhops, and other learned men, as the godly Prayers, Orders, Rites, and Ceremonies in the ſaid Book mentioned, with the conſideration of altering thoſe things which were altered, and retaining thoſe things which were retained in the ſame Book; as alſo the Honour of God, and great quietneſs, which by the Grace of God ſhould enſue upon that one and uniform Rite and Order in ſuch Common Prayer, Rites, and extern Ceremonies to be uſed throughout England, Wales, Calice, and the Marches of the ſame, did firſt give unto his Highneſs moſt lowly and hearty thanks for the ſame, and then moſt humbly prayed him that it might be ordained and enacted by his Majeſty with the aſſent of the Lords and Commons in that Parliament aſſembled, and by the Authority of the ſame, That not only all and ſingular perſon and perſons that had hitherto offended concerning the premiſſes others than ſuch as were then remaining in Ward in the Tower of London, or in the Fleet) might be pardoned thereof, but alſo that all and ſingular Miniſters in any Cathedral or Pariſh-Churches or other places within the Realm of England, Wales, Calice, and the Marches of the ſame, or other the Kings Dominions, ſhould from and after the Feaſt of Penteceſt next coming, be bound and uſe the Mattins, Evenſong, Celebration of each of the to ſay Lords Supper, and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, and all other common and open Prayer, in ſuch order and form as was mentioned in the ſaid Book, and none other or otherwiſe. And albeit that they were ſo godly and good, that they gave occaſion unto every honeſt and comformable man moſt willingly to imbrace them; yet leſt any obſtinate perſons, who willingly would diſturb ſo godly an order and quiet in this Realm, ſhould go unpuniſhed; they further requeſted, That it might be ordained and enacted by the Authority aforeſaid, that if any manner of Parſon, Vicar, or whatſoever other Miniſter that ought or ſhould ſay or ſing Common-Prayer, mentioned in the ſaid Book, or miniſter the Sacraments, ſhould after the ſaid Feaſt of Penteceſt, then next coming, refuſe to uſe the ſaid Common-Prayer, or to miniſter the Sacraments in ſuch Cathedral or Pariſh-Churches, or other places, as he ſhould uſe or miniſter the ſame, in ſuch order and form as they were mentioned, and ſet forth in the ſaid Book; or ſhould uſe wilfully, and obſtinately ſtanding in the ſame, any other Rite, Ceremony, Order, form or manner of Maſs, openly or privily, or Mattins, Evenſong, Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, or other open Prayer than was mentioned, and ſet forth in the ſaid Book; or ſhould preach, declare, or ſpeak any thing in the derogation or depraving of the ſaid Book, or any thing therein contained, or of any part thereof, and ſhould be thereof lawfully convicted according to the Laws of this Realm by Verdict of twelve men, or by his own confeſſion, or by the notorious evidence of the fact, ſhould loſe and forfeit, unto the Kings Highneſs his Heirs and Succeſſors, for his firſt offence one whole years profit of ſuch one of his Benefices or Spiritual Promotions, as it ſhould pleaſe the Kings Highneſs to aſſign and appoint; appoint; and alſo for the ſame offence ſhould ſuffer impriſonment by the ſpace of ſix months without Bail or Mainprize. But if any ſuch perſon, after his firſt conviction, ſhould eft-ſoons offend again, and be thereof in form aforeſaid lawfully convicted, then he ſhould for his ſecond offence ſuffer impriſonment by the ſpace of one whole year, and ſhould alſo be deprived, Ipſo facto, of all his Spiritual Promotions for ever, ſo that it ſhould be lawful for the Patrons and Donors thereof to give the ſame again unto any other learned man, in like manner as if the ſaid party ſo offending were dead. And if any the ſaid perſon or perſons ſhould again the third time offend, and be thereof in form aforeſaid lawfully convicted, then he ſhould for the ſame third offence ſuffer impriſonment during his life. If any ſuch perſon or perſons aforeſaid, ſo offending, had not any Benefice or Spiritual Promotion, that then he ſhould for his firſt offence ſuffer impriſonment by the ſpace of ſix months without Bail or Mainprize, and for his ſecond offence, impriſonment during his life. Which requeſt, or rather actual agreement of the Lords and Commons of the Parliament, being once underſtood of the King, was alſo ſoon ratified and confirmed by his regal conſent and Authority, and thereupon the ſaid Book of Common-Prayer was preſently imprinted, and commanded to be exerciſed throughout the whole Realm and Dominions thereof, according to the tenor and effect of the ſaid Statute.

{Anno 1548.} Penalty.

Moreover in the ſame Seſſion of the ſaid Parliament it was enacted and eſtabliſhed by the Authority thereof, That for as much as great, horrible, and not to be rehearſed inconveniences had from time to time riſen amongſt the Prieſts, Miniſters, and other Officers of the Clergy, through their compelled Chaſtity, and by ſuch Laws as prohibited them the godly and lawful uſe of Marriage, that therefore all and every Law and Laws poſitive, Canons, Conſtitutions, and Ordinances theretofore made by the Authority of Man only, which did prohibit or forbid Marriage to any Eccleſiaſtical or Spiritual Perſon or Perſons, of what eſtate, condition or degree ſoever they were, or by what name or names they were called, which by Gods Law may lawfully marry, in all and every Article, Branch and Sentence concerning only the prohibition of the marriage of the Perſons aforeſaid, ſhould be utterly void and of none effect. And that all manner of Forfeitures, Pains, Penalties, Crimes or Actions which were in the ſaid Laws contained, and of the ſame did follow, concerning the prohibition of the Marriage of the ſaid Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, ſhould be thenceforth alſo clearly and utterly void, fruſtrate and of none effect. By occaſion whereof, it was thence after right lawful for any Eccleſiaſtical Perſon, not having the gift of Chaſtity, moſt godly to live in the pure and holy eſtate of Matrimony according to the Laws and Word of God.

Laws and Conſtitutions againſt Prieſts Marriage debarred.

Marriage of Prieſts ſet free.

But if the firſt Injunctions, Statutes, and Decrees of the Prince were of many but ſlenderly regarded, with much leſs good affection were theſe (eſpecially the Book of Common-Prayer) of divers now received; yea, and that of ſome of them, which had always before in outward ſhew willingly allowed the former doings, as appeareth moſt plainly (amongſt others) by Bonner the Biſhop of London. Who although, by his former Letters, and other Mandates, he ſeemed hitherto to favour all the Kings proceedings; yet did he at that preſent notwithſtanding both the firſt Statute for the ſtabliſhing of the Communion, and the aboliſhing of all private Maſſes, and alſo this Statute of the ratifying and confirming of the Book of Common-Prayer) ſtill ſuffer ſundry Idolatrous private Maſſes of peculiar names (as the Apoſtles Maſs, the Lady Maſs, and ſuch like) to be daily ſolemnly ſung within certain peculiar Chappels of the Cathedral Church of Pauls, cloking them with the names of the Apoſtles Communion, and our Ladies Communion, not once finding any fault therewith, until ſuch time as the Lords of the Council, having intelligence thereof, were fain by their Letters to command and charge him to look better thereunto. And then being therewith ſomewhat pricked forwards (perhaps by fear) he was content to direct his Letters unto the Dean and Chapter of his Cathedral Church of Pauls, thereby requeſting them forthwith to take ſuch order therein, as in the tenor of the Councils ſaid Letters therewithall ſent unto them, did import. Both which Letters I have, for the more credit, here following inſerted.

Ed. Bonner Biſhop of London.

{KING Edw. 6}

A Letter directed from the Kings Council to Edmund Bonner Biſhop of London, for abrogating of private Maſſes; namely, the Apoſtles Maſs, within the Church of Saint Paul, uſed under the Name of the Apoſtles Communion.

Another Letter to Bonner for abrogating private Maſſes. The Apoſtles Maſs put down in Pauls.

After hearty Commendations: having very credible notice that within that your Cathedral Church there be as yet the Apoſtles Maſs, and our Ladies Maſs, and other Maſſes of ſuch peculiar Names, under the defence and comination of our Ladies Communion, and the Apoſtles Communion, uſed in private Chappels and other remote places of the ſame, and not in the Chancel, contrary unto the Kings Majeſties proceedings, the ſame being for the miſuſe diſpleaſing to God; for the place Pauls, in example not tolerable; for the fondneſs of the name, a ſcorn to the reverence of the Communion of the Lords Body and Blood: we for the augmentation of Gods Honour and Glory, and the Conſonance of his Majeſties Laws, and the avoiding of murmur, have thought good to will and command you, that from henceforth no ſuch Maſſes in this manner be in your Church any longer uſed, but that the holy bleſſed Communion, according to the Act of Parliament, be miniſtred at the high Altar of the Church, and in no other places of the ſame, and only at ſuch time as your high Maſſes were wont to be uſed, except ſome number of people deſire for their neceſſary buſineſs to have a Communion in the morning, and yet the ſame to be executed in the Chancel at the high Altar, as is is appointed in the Book of the publick Service, without cautele or digreſſion from the common Order. And herein you ſhall not only ſatisfie our expectation of your Conformity in all lawful things, but alſo avoid the murmur of ſundry that be therewith juſtly offended. And ſo we bid your Lordſhip heartily farewel. From Richmond the 24th of June, Anno 1549.

An Exhortation or Admonition unto the Juſtices of Peace.

Over and beſides all this, the Lord Protector, with the reſidue of the Kings Privy and Learned Council aſſembling together in the Star-Chamber about the ſame matter; that is, for the advancement and ſetting forward of the Kings ſo godly proceedings, called before them all the Juſtices of Peace, where was uttered unto them by the Lord Rich, then Lord Chancellor, an eloquent and learned Admonition, the tenour whereof enſueth.

It

KING Edw.6

IT hath been used and accustomed before this time, to call at certain times the Justices of Peace before the Kings Majesties Council, to give unto them admonition or warning, diligently (as is their duty) to look to the observing of such things as be committed to their charges, according to the trust which the Kings Majesty hath in them. Howbeit, now at this time we call you before us, not only of custom, but rather of necessity. For hearing daily, and perceiving of necessity, as we do, the great negligence, and the little heed which is taken and given to the observing of the good and wholsome Laws and Orders in this Realm, whereupon much disorder doth daily ensue, and the Kings Majesties Proclamations and Orders taken by the Council (as we are advertised) not executed, the people are brought to Disobedience, and in a manner all his Majesties study and ours, in setting a good and most godly stay, to the honour of God and the quiet of the Realm, is spent in vain, and come to nothing: The which as we have great hope and trust not to be altogether so, yet so much as it is, and so much as it lacketh of the keeping of the Realm in a most godly order and stay, we must needs impute and lay the fault thereof in you which are the Justices of Peace in every Shire, to whom we are wont to direct our Writings, and to whose trust and charge the Kings Majesty hath committed the execution of all his Proclamations, of his Acts of Parliament, and of his Laws.

Justices in slack in furthering of Religion.

We are informed that many of you are so negligent and so slack herein, that it doth appear you do look rather, as it were, through your Fingers, than diligently see to the execution of the said Laws and Proclamations. For if you would, according to your duties, to your Oath, to the trust which the Kings Majesty hath in you, give your diligence and care toward the execution of the same most godly Statutes and Injunctions, there should no disobedience, nor disorder, nor evil rule be begun or rise in any part of the Realm, but it should by and by be repressed, kept down and reformed. But it is feared, and the thing it self giveth occasion thereto, that divers of you do not only not set forth, but rather hinder, so much as lieth in you, the Kings Majesties proceedings, and are content that there should arise some disobedience, and that men should repine against godly Orders set forth by his Majesty, you do so slackly look to the execution of the same, so that in some Shires, which be further off, it may appear that the people have never heard of divers of his Majesties Proclamations, or if they have heard, you are content to wink at it, and to neglect it, so that it is all one as though it were never commanded. But if you do consider and remember your duties first to Almighty God, and then to the Kings Majesty, the wealth of the whole Realm, and the safeguard of your own selves, you must needs see, that except such Orders as the Kings Majesty hath set, and hereafter shall appoint, be kept, neither can the Realm be defended, if the Enemy should invade, nor can it in peace stand, but upon the contempt of good and wholsome Laws all disorder and inconveniences will come, the people will be wild and savage, and no man sure of his own.

The fruit of obedience in a Realm.

If at any time there was occasion and cause to be circumspect and diligent about the same, there was never more time than now. How we stand in Scotland you know, and that there foreign Power maketh great preparation to aid them, and indeed doth come to their Aid; whereof we are surely informed and certified. Wherefore if there should not be good Order and Obedience kept in the Realm, the Realm were like utterly to be destroyed. Never foreign Power could yet hurt, or in any part prevail in this Realm, but by disobedience and misorder within our selves. That is the way wherewith God will plague us, if he mind to punish us. And so long as we do agree among our selves, and be obedient to our Prince, and to his godly Orders and Laws, we may be sure that God is with us, and that foreign Powers shall not prevail against us, nor hurt us.

Wherefore once again, and still we must and do lay this Charge upon you that are the better of the Shire, and Justices of Peace, that with so convenient speed as you can, you do repair down into your Countries, and you shall give warning to the Gentlemen of the Shire, which have not necessary business here, that they repair down each man to his Country, and there both you and they, who be reckoned the stay of every Shire, to see good Order and Rule kept: You, that your Sessions of Goal-delivery and Quarter-Sessions be well kept, and therein your meetings be such, that Justice may be well and truly ministred, the Offenders and Malefactors punished according to the Laws of this Realm without any fear of any man, or that for favour you should suffer those to escape, which with their evil example might bring other to the like mishap, and that all Vagabonds and lewd and light Tale-tellers, and seditious Hearers of false News of the Kings Majesty, or of his Council, or such as will Preach without Licence, be immediately by you repress and punished.

Orders taken for Justices.

And if there should chance any lewd or light Fellows to make any Routs or Riots, or unlawful Assemblies, any Seditious Meetings, Uproars, or Uprisings in any place by the seditious and devilish motion of some private Traytors, that you and they appease them at the first, and apprehend the first Author and Causer thereof, and certifie us with speed. The lightness of the rude and ignorant people must be suppress and ordered by your gravity and wisdom. And here you may not (if any such thing chance) dissemble with those such lewd men, and hide your selves, for it shall be required of you if such misorder be; and surely without your aid and help, or your dissembling, such misorder cannot be. Nor do we say that we fear any such thing, or that there is any such thing likely to chance; but we give you warning before, lest it should chance.

Provision against privy Conspiracy and Rebellion.

We have too much experience in this Realm, what inconvenience cometh of such matters. And though some light persons in their rage do not consider, yet we do not doubt but you welgh it and know it well enough. And if it should chance our Enemies (who are maintained by other foreign Power, and the Bishop of Rome) should suddenly arrive in some place in England, either driven by tempest, or of purpose to do hurt, ye should see such Order kept by firing of the Beacons, as hath already been written unto you by our Letters, to repulse the same in so good Array as you can, as we do not doubt but you will for the safeguard of your Country, so that the Enemy shall have little joy of his coming: and for that purpose you shall see diligently that men have Horse, Harness, and other furniture of Weapon ready, according to the Statutes and good Orders of the Realm, and the Kings Majesties Commandments. And so for this time ye may depart.

Provision against foreign Power

What zealous care was in this young King, and in the Lord Protector his Uncle, concerning Reformation of Christs Church, and sincere Religion, by these Injunctions, Letters, Precepts, and Exhortations, as well to the Bishops, as to the Justices of the Realm above premised, it may right well appear. Whereby we have to note, not so much the careful diligence of the King and his learned Council; as the lingring slackness and drawing back, on the other side, of divers the said Justices and Lawyers, but especially of Bishops, and old Popish Curates, by whose cloked contempt, wilful winking, and stubborn disobedience, the Book of the Common-Prayer was, long after the publishing thereof, either not known at all, or else very irreverently used through many places of the Realm. Which when the King by complaint of divers perfectly understood, being not a little agrieved to see the godly agreement of the Learned, the willing consent of the Parliament, and his Graces own zealous desire to take so small effect among his Subjects; he decreed presently, with the advice of his whole Council, again to write unto all the Bishops of his Realm, for speedy and diligent redress therein; willing and commanding them thereby, that as well they themselves should thenceforth have a more special regard to the due execution of the premisses, as also that all others, within their several Precincts and Jurisdictions, should by their good Instructions and willing Example be the more ofter, and with better devotion, moved to use and frequent the same. As further appeareth by the Contents of this Letter here insuing.

The singular zeal of King Edward and his Uncle, in reforming Religion.

The slackness of Popish Curates in furthering the Kings proceedings.

Another

Another Letter directed by the King, and his Council, to Bonner Bishop of London, partly rebuking him of negligence, partly charging him to see to the better setting out of the Service-Book within his Dioces.

Another Letter to Bonner Bishop of London.

RIght Reverend Father in God, Right trusty and welbeloved, We greet you well: and whereas after great and serious debating and long Conference of the Bishops and other grave and well learned men in the holy Scriptures, one uniform order for Common-Prayers and Administration of the Sacraments hath been, and is most godly set forth, not only by the common agreement and full assent of the Nobility and Commons of the late Session of our late Parliament, but also by the like assent of the Bishops in the same Parliament, and of all other the learned men of this our Realm in their Synods and Convocations Provincial: like as it was much to our comfort, to understand the godly travel then diligently and willingly taken for the true opening of things mentioned in the said Book, whereby the true Service and Honour of Almighty God, and the right ministration of the Sacraments, being well and sincerely set forth, according to the Scriptures and use of the Primitive Church, much Idolatry, vain Superstition, and great and slanderous Abuses be taken away: so it is no small occasion of sorrow unto us, to understand by the complaints of many, that our said Book so much travelled for, and also sincerely set forth (as is aforesaid) remaineth in many places of this our Realm, either not known at all, or not used, or at the least if it be used, very seldom, and that in such light and irreverent sort, as the people in many places either have heard nothing, or if they hear, they neither understand, nor have that spiritual delectation in the same, that to good Christians appertaineth. The fault whereof, like as we must of reason impute to you and other of your Vocation, called by God, through our appointment, to due respect to this and such like matters; so considering that, by these and such like occasions, our loving Subjects remain yet still in their blindness, and superstitious Errors, and in some places in as irreligious forgetfulness of God, whereby his wrath may be provoked upon us and them; and remembring withall, that amongst other Cures committed to our Princely Charge, we think this the greatest, to see the Glory and true Service of Him maintained and extolled, by whose Clemency we acknowledge our selves to have all that we have, we could not but by advice and consent of our dearest Uncle, Edward Duke of Somerset, Governour of our Person, and Protector of our Realm, Dominions and Subjects, and the rest of our Privy-Council, admonish you of the premisses. Wherein, as it had been your Office to have used an earnest diligence, and to have preferred the same in all places within your Dioces, as the case required; so have we thought good to pray and require you, and nevertheless straightly to charge and command you, that from henceforth ye have an earnest and special regard to the reduce of these things, so as the Curates may do their duties more often and in more reverent sort, and the people be occasioned by the good advices and examples of your self, your Chancellor, Archdeacons, and other inferior Ministers, to come with oftner and more devotion to their said Common Prayers, to give thanks to God, and to be Partakers of the most holy Communion. Wherein shewing your self diligent, and giving good example in your own Person, you shall both discharge your duty to the great Pastor, to whom we all have to account, and also do us good Service: and on the other side, if we shall hereafter (these our Letters and Commandment notwithstanding) hear eft-soons complaint, and find the like fault in your Dioces, we shall have just cause to impute the fault thereof, and of all that insueth thereof, unto you, and consequently be occasioned thereby to see otherwise to the redress of these things; whereof we would be sorry. And therefore we do eft-soons charge and command you, upon your Allegiance, to look well upon your duty herein, as ye tender our Pleasure.

The Kings Book neglected.

{Ann. 1549} Boners negligence noted.

Given under our Signet at our Manor of Richmond, the three and twentieth day July, the third year of our Reign, 1549.

The Bishop of London, amongst the rest of the Bishops, receiving these Letters, did (as always before) in outward shew willingly accept the same; and therefore immediately with the said Letters directed this his Precept unto the Dean and Chapter of his Cathedral-Church of Pauls, commanding them to look to the due accomplishing thereof accordingly. {KING Edw. 6.}

A Letter of Bonner, to the Dean and Chapter of Pauls.

A Letter of Bonner to the Dean of Pauls.

EDmund by the Grace of God, &c. To my welbeloved Brethren the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral-Church of St. Paul in London, and to the other Ministers there and every of them do send greeting. And where it is so, that of late I have received the said Sovereign Lord the Kings Majesties Letters, of such tenor as is hereunto annexed, and according to my most bounden duty am right well willing, and desiring that the said Letters should be in all Points duly executed and observed according to the tenour and purport of the same, as appertaineth: These therefore are to require, and also straightly to charge you and every of you on his Majesties behalf, &c. that you do admonish and command, or cause to be admonished or commanded, all and singular Parsons, Vicars, and Curates of your Jurisdiction, to observe and accomplish the same from time to time accordingly; furthermore requiring and likewise charging you, and every of you to make Certificate herein to me, my Chancellor or other my Officers in this behalf, with such convenient Celerity as appertaineth, both of your proceedings in the execution hereof, and also the Persons and Names of all such, as from Henceforth shall be found negligent in doing their duties in the premisses, or any of them.

Given at my House at Fulham, the 26*th* of July, in the year of our Lord, 1549. and in the third year of our said Sovereign Lord the Kings Majesties Reign.

Slackness of Bonner in furthering good proceedings.

Moreover, forsomuch as the King at that instant hearing the muttering of certain Rebellion then stirring, (whereof more shall be said the Lord willing hereafter) and also being credibly informed by divers, that through the evil example, slackness of preaching and administring the Sacraments, and careless contempt of Bonner Bishop of London, not only many of the people within the City of London, and other places of his Dioces, were very negligent and forgetful of their duties to God, in frequenting the Divine-Service then stablished and set forth by the Authority of Parliament, but also that divers other, utterly despising the same, did in secret places of his Dioces often frequent the Popish Mass, and other foreign Rites not allowed by the Laws of this Realm, he thought it therefore good (having thereby just cause to suspect his former dissembling doubleness) to appoint the Lord Protector and the rest of his Privy-Council to call the said Bishop before them, and according to their wise and discreet Judgments to deal with him for the same.

Popish Mass privily frequented in places against the Law.

Whereupon the eleventh day of August, Anno 1549. they sent a Messenger for him, and upon his appearance made first Declaration of such Informations and Complaints as had been heretofore made against him. And then, after sharp Admonitions and Reproofs for his evil Demeanors in the premisses, they delivered unto him from the King (for his better Reformation and Amendment) certain private Injunctions to be necessarily followed and observed of himself. And whereas, in the first branch of the said Injunctions, he was personally assigned to preach at Pauls Cross the Sunday three weeks then next ensuing (because both the dangerous and fickle estate of the time, and also partly his own suspicious behaviour so required) they further delivered unto him in writing such Articles to intreat upon in his Sermon, as they thought then most meet and necessary for the time and causes aforesaid. All which Injunctions and Articles, for the further manifestation thereof, I have here inserted as followeth.

{Anno 1494.} Bonner called before the Council.

Certain private Injunctions given to Bonner by the Council. Bonner assigned by the Council to preach at Pauls Cross.

Certain

{KING Edw.6}

Certain private Injunctions and Articles given to Bonner by the Council.

Admonition given to Bonner by the Council.

FOr*asmuch as we are advertised, that amongst other disorders of our Subjects at this present, there be divers of our City of* London, and other places within your Diocess, which being very negligent and forgetful of their duty to Almighty God, of whom all good things are to be looked for, do assemble themselves very seldom, and fewer times than they were heretofore accustomed, unto common Prayer, and to the holy Communion, being now a time when it were more needful with heart and mind to pray to our heavenly Father for his aid and succour; whereof as we be right sorry, so we do understand that through your evil example, and the slackness of your preaching and instructing of our said people to do their duties, this offence to God is most generally committed. For where heretofore upon all principal Feasts, and such as were called Majus duplex, you your self were wont to execute in person, now since the time that we by the advice of our whole Parliament have set a most godly and devout order in our Church of England and Ireland, ye have very seldom or never executed upon such or other days, to the contempt of our proceedings and evil example of thers. And forsomuch as it is also brought to our knowledge, that divers as well in London, as in other places of your Diocess, do frequent and haunt foreign Rites of Masses, and such as be not allowed by the orders of our Realm, and do contemn and forbear to praise and laud God, and pray unto his Majesty after such Rites and Ceremonies, as in this Realm are approved and set out by our authority; and further, that adultery and fornication is maintained and kept openly and commonly in the said City of London and other places of your Diocess, whereby the wrath of God is provoked against our people; of the which things you being heretofore admonished, yet hitherto have made no redress, as to the pastoral office, authority and cure of a Bishop doth appertain: We therefore, to whom the supream cure and charge of this Church doth appertain, to avoid from us the high indignation of Almighty God, by the advice of our most entirely beloved Uncle the Lord Protector, and the rest of our Privy Council, have thought it no less than our most bounden duty, now at this present, and eftsoons peremptorily to admonish, charge, and warn you, that you do most straightly look upon the premisses, and see them so reformed that there may appear no negligence on your behalf, upon such pain as by our laws Ecclesiastical and Temporal we may inflict upon you, unto deprivation or otherwise, as shall seem to us for quality of the offense reasonable. And to the intent you should the better see to the reformation of the said abuses, we have thought good to give you these Injunctions following:

Bonner refrained to execute all principal feasts contrary to his wonted manner.

Bonner noted of slackness in his duty, and of contempt of publick lawes.

Certain private Articles enjoyned to Bonner by the Council.

Bonner admonished to preach every Quarter at Pauls Cross.

1. First ye shall preach at Pauls Cross in London, in proper person, the Sunday after the date hereof three Weeks, and in the same Sermon declare and set forth the Articles hereunto annexed; and ye shall preach hereafter once every quarter of the year there, exhorting in your Sermon the people to obedience, prayer and godly living; and ye shall be present at every Sermon hereafter made at Pauls Cross, if sickness or some other reasonable cause do not let you.

2. Secondly, You your self in person shall from henceforth every day which heretofore was accounted in this Church of England a principal Feast, or Majus duplex, and at all such times as the Bishops of London your predecessors were wont to celebrate and sing high Mass, now celebrate and execute the Communion at the high Altar in Pauls, for the better example of all other, except sickness do let.

3. Thirdly, Ye shall your self, according to your duty and the office of a Bishop, call before you all such as do not come unto and frequent the Common Prayer and Service in the Church, or do not come unto Gods boord, and receive the Communion at the least once a year, or whosoever do frequent or go unto any other Right or Service than is appointed by our Book, either of Mattins, Evensong, or Mass in any Church, Chappel, or other private places within your Dioceſs, and ye shall see all such offenders convented before you and punished, according unto the Ecclesiastical laws, with severe and strait punishment therefore. Likewise ye shall see one only order used in your Dioceſs, according to our said Book, and none other.

4. Fourthly, Ye shall both by your self and all your Officers under you, search out and convent before you more diligently than heretofore ye have done, (as appertaineth to your office) all adulterers, and see the same punished according to the Ecclesiastical Laws, and the authority given you in that behalf.

5. We have heard also complaints, that the Church of Pauls and other Churches of London are of late more neglected, as well in reparation of the Glass, as other buildings and ornaments of the same, than they were heretofore wont, and that divers and many persons in the City of malice deny the payment of their due Tithe to their Curats, whereby the Curats are both injured and made not so well able, and in manner discouraged to do their dutys. The which thing also our will and commandment is, ye shall diligently look unto, and see redressed as appertaineth.

Bonner Bishop of London commanded to keep his own house.

6. And forsomuch as all these complaints be made, as most done and committed in London, to the intent you may look more earnestly, better, and more diligently to the reformation of them, our pleasure is that you shall abide and keep residence in your house there, as in the City, See and principal place of your Dioceſs, and none other where, for a certain time, until you shall be otherwise licensed by us.

The Rebels in Cornwal and Devonshire.

And thus having brought Bishop Bonner home to his own house, there to leave him a while to take his ease in his own lodging, till we return to him again, we will in the mean time make a little intercourse into Cornwal and Devonshire, to discourse some part of the disordered and disloyal doings of those men against their so meek and excellent a Prince, having no cause ministred thereunto; yea, having cause rather to yield praise and thanks to the Lord for such a quiet and peaceable Prince in his mercy given to them. But such is the condition of unquiet natures, that they cannot skill of peace. And where due discretion lacketh, there lewd disposed persons cannot tell when they be well: again some be so crooked and so perversly given, that the more courteously they be intreated, the worse they are; and when by honest diligence they list not to get their living, by publick disturbance of Common-wealths they think to thrive. And so seemed it to fare with this seditious people of Cornwal and Devonshire, who having so good and vertuous a King, that if they should have sought him as Diogenes, they say, did seek for a man with a Candle, a meeker and better Sovereign they could not have found, a crueller they well deserved; yet were they not with him contented, but contrary to all order, reason, nature and loyalty, advanced themselves in a rebellious Conspiracy against him, and against his proceedings through the pernicious instigation, first (as it seemeth) of certain Popish Priests, who grudging and disdaining against the Injunctions and godly order of Reformation set forward by the King, and specially mourning to see their old Popish Church of Rome to decay, ceased not by all sinister and subtil means, first under Gods name and the Kings, and under colour of Religion to perswade the people, then to gather sides, and to assemble in companies, to gather Captains, and at last to burst out in rank rebellion. Neither lacked there among the lay sort some as seditiously disposed as they to mischief and madness, as well Gentlemen as other.

Popish Priests first stirrers of this Rebellion.

All wickedness first beginneth under fair pretences.

Of whom the chief Gentlemen Captains were, Humfry Arundel Esquire, Governor of the Mount, James Rosogan, John Rosogan, John Pain, Thomas Underhil, John Soleman, William Segar. Of Priests which were principal stirrers, and some of them Governors of the Camps, and after executed, there were to the number of eight, whose names were Robert Bochim, John Tompson, Roger Baret, John Wolcock, William Asa, James Mourton, John Barow, Richard Benet, besides a multitude of other Popish Priests, which to the same faction was adjoyned. The number of the whole Rebellion, speaking with the least, mounted to little less than ten thousand stout Traitors.

Priests Rebels and Traitors against the King.

Diverſ commotions in K. Edward's time ſuppreſſed.

Theſe hearing firſt of the commotions which began about the ſame time in other parts to broil, as in Oxfordſhire, Yorkſhire, and eſpecially in Northfolk and Suffolk, began to take therein ſome courage, hoping that they ſhould have well fortified the ſame with quarrel. But afterward perceiving how the miſchievous mutterings and enterpriſes of their conſpiracy did ſuddenly fail; either being prevented by time, or redreſſed by power, or that their cauſe being but only about plucking down of encloſures, and enlarging of Commons divided from theirs, ſo that either they would not or could not joyn their aid together, then began they again to quail, and their courage to abate. Notwithſtanding, for ſo much as they had gone ſo far, that they thought there was no ſhrinking back, they fell to new devices and inventions, for the beſt furtherance of their deſperate purpoſes.

The City of Exeter invaded by the Rebels.

Their firſt intent was, after they had ſpoiled their own Country moſt miſerably, to invade the City of Exeter, and ſo conſequently all other parts of the Realm. But firſt for Exeter they gaped, the Gates whereof twice they burned, but gained nothing ſaving only Gunſhot, whereof they lacked no plenty. Being put from Exeter, they fell on ſpoiling and robbing, where or whatſoever they might catch.

Diverſity of Wits amongſt the Rebels.

At length laying their Traiterous heads together, they conſulted upon certain Articles to be ſent up. But herein ſuch diverſity of heads and wits was amongſt them, that for every kind of Brain there was one manner of Article; ſo that there neither appeared any conſent in their diverſity, nor yet any conſtancy in their agreement. Some ſeemed more tolerable. Other altogether unreaſonable. Some would have no juſtice. Some would have no ſtate of Gentlemen. The Prieſts ever harped upon one ſtring, to ring in the Biſhop of Rome into England again, and to hallow home Cardinal Pool their Countryman.

After much ado, and little to the purpoſe, at laſt a few ſorry Articles were agreed upon, to be directed unto the King, with the names of certain ſet thereunto, the Copy whereof here inſueth.

The Articles of the Commons of Devonſhire and Cornwal, ſent to the King; with Anſwer afterward following unto the ſame.

The Articles of Devonſhire men, to the K. and his Council.

1. Sacrament of Baptiſm.

FIrſt, Foraſmuch as man, except he be born of Water and the Holy Ghoſt, cannot enter into the Kingdom of God, and foraſmuch as the Gates of Heaven be not opened without his bleſſed Sacrament of Baptiſm, therefore we will that our Curats ſhall miniſter this Sacrament at all times of need, as well in the Week-days, as on the Holy-days.

2. Confirmation.

Item, We will have our children confirmed of the Biſhop, whenſoever we ſhall within the Dioceſs reſort unto him.

3. Conſecration of the Lords body.

Item, Forſomuch as we conſtantly believe, that after the Prieſt hath ſpoken the words of conſecration being at Maſs, there celebrating and conſecrating the ſame, there is very really the Body and Bloud of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt God and Man, and that no ſubſtance of Bread and Wine remaineth after, but the very ſelf ſame body that was born of the Virgin Mary, and was given upon the Croſs for our redemption; therefore we will have Maſs celebrated as it hath been in times paſt, without any man communicating with the Prieſts, forſomuch as many, rudely preſuming unworthily to receive the ſame, put no difference between the Lords body and other kind of meat, ſome ſaying that it is bread before and after, ſome ſaying, that it is profitable to no man except he receive it, with many other abuſed terms.

4. Reſervation of the Lords body conſecrated.

Item, We will have in our Churches reſervation.

Item, We will have holy Bread and holy Water in remembrance of Chriſt his precious Body and Bloud.

5. Holy bread, and holy water.

Item, We will that our Prieſts ſhall ſing, or ſay with an audible voice Gods Service in the Quire of the Pariſh Churches, and not Gods Service to be ſet forth like a Chriſtmas play.

6. The ſingle life of Prieſts

Item, Forſomuch as Prieſts be men dedicated to God, for miniſtring and celebrating the bleſſed Sacraments and preaching Gods Word, we will that they ſhall live chaſt without Marriage, as St. Paul did, being the elect and choſen Veſſel of God, ſaying unto all honeſt Prieſts, Be ye followers of me.

Item, We will that the ſix Articles which our Sovereign Lord King Henry the eighth ſet forth in his later days ſhall be uſed and ſo taken as they were at that time.

Item, We pray God ſave King Edward, for we be his, both body and Goods.

A Meſſage ſent by the Kings Majeſty, to certain of his People aſſembled in Devonſhire.

The Anſwer of the K. to the Articles of the Rebels in Devonſhire. {Anno 1549.}

ALthough knowledge hath been given to us and our deareſt Uncle Edward Duke of Somerſet, Governor of our Perſon, and Protector of all our Realms, Dominions and Subjects, and to the reſt of our Privy Council, of divers aſſemblies made by you, which ought of duty to be our loving Subjects, againſt all order, law, and otherwiſe than ever any loving and kind Subjects have attempted againſt their natural and Liege Sovereign Lord; yet we have thought it meet at this very firſt time, not to condemn or reject you, as we might juſtly do, but to uſe you as our Subjects, thinking that the Devil hath not that power in you, to make you of natural born Engliſhmen, ſo ſuddenly become enemies to your own native Country; or, of our Subjects to make you Traitors; or under pretence to relieve your ſelves, to deſtroy your ſelvess, your Wives, Children, Lands, Houſes, and all other commodities of this your life. This we ſay, we truſt that although ye be by ignorance ſeduced, ye will not be upon knowledge obſtinate. And though ſome amongſt you (as ever there is ſome Cockle amongſt good Corn) forget God, neglect their Prince, eſteem not the ſtate of the Realm, but as careleſs, deſperate men delight in Sedition, Tumult and Wars; yet nevertheleſs the greater part of you will hear the voice of us your natural Prince, and will by wiſdom and counſel be warned, and ceaſe your evils in the beginning, whoſe ends will be, even by Almighty Gods order, your own deſtruction. Wherefore, as to you our Subjects by ignorance ſeduced, we ſpeak, and be content to uſe our Princely authority like a Father to his Children for this time, to admoniſh you of your faults, not to puniſh them, to put you in remembrance of your duties, not to avenge your forgetfulneſs.

Unlawful Aſſemblies.

Firſt, Your diſorder to riſe in multitudes, to aſſemble your ſelves againſt other our loving Subjects, to array your ſelves to the War, who amongſt you all can anſwer the ſame to Almighty God, charging you to obey us in all things? Or how can any Engliſh good heart anſwer us, our laws, and the reſt of our very loving and faithful Subjects, who indeed by their obedience make our Honour, Eſtate and Degree?

The Kings name abuſed.

Ye uſe our name in your writings, and abuſe the ſame againſt our ſelf. What injury herein do you us, to call thoſe which love us, to your evil purpoſes by the authority of our name? God hath made us your King by his Ordinance and Providence, by our Bloud and Inheritance, by lawful Succeſſion and our Coronation; but not to this end, as you uſe our name. We are your moſt natural Sovereign Lord and King, Edward the Sixth, to rule you, to preſerve you, to ſave you from all your outward enemies, to ſee our laws well miniſtred, every man to have his own, to ſuppreſs diſordered people, to correct Traitors, Thieves, Pirats, Robbers, and ſuch like, yea, to keep our Realms from foreign Princes, from the malice of the Scots, of Frenchmen, of the Biſhop of Rome. Thus, good Subjects, our name is written, thus it is honoured and obeyed, this Majeſty it hath by Gods Ordinance, not by Mans. So that of this your offence we cannot write too much; and yet doubt not but this is enough from a Prince to all reaſonable people, from a King to all kind hearted and loving Subjects, from a puiſſant K. of England, to every natural Engliſhman.

Their falſe cauſes.

Your pretences which you ſay move you to do this, and wherewith you ſeek to excuſe this diſorder, we aſſure you, be either all falſe, or ſo vain, that we doubt not but, after ye ſhall hereby underſtand the truth thereof, ye will all with one noiſe knowledge your ſelves ignorantly led, and by error ſeduced; and if there be any that will not, aſſure you the ſame, be rank Traitors, enemies of our Crown, ſeditious people, Hereticks, Papiſts, or ſuch as care not how they ſeek to provoke an Inſurrection ſo they may do it, nor indeed can wax ſo rich with their own labours, and with Peace, as they can do with Spoils, with {KING Ed. 6.} with Wars, with Robberies, and ſuch like, yea, with the ſpoil of your own goods, with the living of your labours, the ſweat of your bodies, the food of your own Houſholds, Wives and Children. Such they be, as for a time uſe pleaſant perſwaſions to you, and in the end will cut your Throats for your own Goods.

You be borne in hand, that your Children, though neceſſity chance, ſhall not be chriſtened but upon the Holy-days. How falſe this is, learn you of us. Our Book which we have ſet forth by the free conſent of our Parliament, in the Engliſh Tongue, teaching you the contrary, even in the firſt leaf, yea, the firſt ſide of the leaf of that part which intreateth of Baptiſm. Good Subjects (for to others we ſpeak not) look and be not deceived. They which have put this falſe Opinion into your ears, they mean not the Chriſtening of Children, but the deſtruction of you our Chriſtened Subjects. Be this known unto you, our honour is ſo much, that we may not be found faulty of our word. Prove it, if by our Laws ye may not Chriſten your Children upon neceſſity, every day or hour in the Week, then might you be offended; but ſeeing you may do it, how can you believe them which teach you the contrary? What think you they mean in the reſt, which move you to break your obedience againſt us your King and Sovereign, upon theſe ſo falſe tales and perſwaſions in ſo evident a matter? Therefore you all which will knowledge us your Sovereign Lord, and which will hear the voice of us your natural King, may eaſily perceive how ye be deceived, and how ſubtilly Traitors and Papiſts with their falſhood, ſeek to atchieve, and bring their purpoſe to paſs with your help. Every Traitor will be glad to diſſemble his Treaſon, and feed it ſecretly, every Papiſt his Popery, and nouriſh it inwardly; and in the end, make you our Subjects partakers of Treaſon and Popery, which in the beginning was pretended a Commonwealth and holineſs.

The falſe ſurmiſe of the Rebels touching Baptiſm refuted.

2. Sacrament. And how are you ſeduced by them, which put in your heads, That the bleſſed Sacrament of Chriſts body ſhould not differ from other common bread? If our Laws, Proclamations and Statutes, be all to the contrary, why ſhall any private man perſwade you againſt them? We do our ſelves in our own heart, our Council in all their profeſſion, our Laws and Statutes in all purpoſes, our good Subjects in all their doings, moſt highly eſteem that Sacrament, and uſe the communion thereof to our moſt comfort. We make ſo much difference thereof from other common Bread, that we think no profit of other Bread, but to maintain our bodies; But of this bleſſed Bread we take the very food of our ſouls to everlaſting life. How think you good Subjects, ſhall not we being your Prince, your Lord, your King by Gods appointment, with truth more prevail, than certain evil perſons with open falſhood? Shall any ſeditious perſon perſwade you, that the Sacrament is deſpiſed, which is by our Laws, by our Self, by our Council, by all our good Subjects eſteemed, uſed, participated, and daily received? If ever ye were ſeduced, if ever deceived, if ever Traitors were believed, if ever Papiſts poiſoned good Subjects, it is now. It is not the Chriſtening of Children, not the reverence of the Sacrament, not the health of your ſouls that they ſhoot at, good Subjects. It is Sedition, it is High Treaſon, it is your deſtruction they ſeek, how craftily, how piteouſly, how cunningly ſoever they do it. With one rule judge ye the end, which of force muſt come of your purpoſes. Almighty God forbiddeth, upon pain of everlaſting damnation, diſobedience to us your King; and in his place we rule in earth. If we ſhould be ſlow, would God err? If your offence be towards God, think you it pardoned without repentance? Is Gods judgment mutable? Your pain is damnation, your Judge is incorruptible, your fault is moſt evident.

The falſe ſurmiſe of the Rebels touching the Sacrament of the Lords Supper reſolved.

Likewiſe are ye evil informed in divers other Articles, as for Confirmation of your Children, for the Maſs, for the manner of your ſervice of Mattens and Evenſong. Whatſoever is therein ordered, hath been long debated and conſulted by many learned Biſhops, Doctors, and other men of great learning in this Realm concluded; in nothing was ſo much labour and time ſpent of late time, nothing ſo fully ended.

3. Mattens and Service in Engliſh. As for the Service in the Engliſh Tongue, it hath manifeſt reaſons for it. And yet perchance it ſeemeth to you a new Service, and indeed is none other but the old. The ſelf ſame words in Engliſh which were in Latine, ſaving a few things taken out, which were ſo fond, that it had been a ſhame to have heard them in Engliſh, as all they can judge which liſt to report the truth. The difference is, we meant godly, that you our Subjects ſhould underſtand in Engliſh, being our natural Country Tongue, that which was heretofore ſpoken in Latin, then ſerving only for them which underſtood Latin, and now for all you which be born Engliſh. How can this with reaſon offend any reaſonable man, that he ſhall underſtand what any other ſaith, and ſo conſent with the ſpeaker? If the Service in the Church was good in Latin, it remaineth good in Engliſh: for nothing is altered, but to ſpeak with knowledge that which was ſpoken with ignorance, and to let you underſtand what is ſaid for you, to the intent you may further it with your own devotion. An alteration to the better, except knowledge be worſe than ignorance. So that whoſoever hath moved you to diſlike this order, can give you no reaſon, nor anſwer yours, if ye underſtood it.

Alteration of Service from an unknown Tongue to a known Tongue.

Wherefore you our Subjects remember, we ſpeak to you, being ordained your Prince and King by Almighty God; If any wiſe we could advance Gods honour more than we do, we would do it: And ſee that ye become ſubject to Gods Ordinances, obeying us your Prince, and learn of them which have authority to teach you, which have power to rule you, and will execute our juſtice if we be provoked. Learn not of them whoſe fruits be nothing but wilfulneſs, diſobedience, obſtinacy, diſſimulation and deſtruction of the Realm.

4 The

For the Maſs, we aſſure you, no ſmall ſtudy nor travel hath been ſpent by all the learned Clergy therein, and to avoid all contention, it is brought even to the very uſe as Chriſt left it, as the Apoſtles uſed it, as holy Fathers delivered it; indeed ſomewhat altered from that the Popes of Rome, for their lucre brought to it. And although ye may hear the contrary of ſome Popiſh evil men, yet our Majeſty which for our honour may not be blemiſhed, nor ſtained, aſſureth you, that they deceive you, abuſe you, and blow theſe opinions into your heads, to finiſh their own purpoſes.

5. Confirmation. Baptiſm ſaveth without any Biſhopping.

And ſo likewiſe judge you of Confirmation of Children; and let them anſwer you this one queſtion: Think they, that a Child Chriſtened is damned, becauſe it dieth before Biſhopping? They be confirmed at the time of diſcretion, to learn that which they profeſſed, in the lack thereof, by Baptiſm; taught in age, that which they received in infancy; and yet no doubt but they be ſaved by Baptiſm, not by Confirmation; and made Chriſts by Chriſtening, and taught how to continue by Confirmation. Wherefore in the whole, mark good Subjects, how our Doctrine is founded upon true learning, and theirs upon ſhameleſs Errors. {Ann. 1549}

To conclude, beſide our gentle manner of information to you, whatſoever is contained in our Book, either for Baptiſm, Sacrament, Maſs, Confirmation and Service in the Church, is by our Parliament eſtabliſhed, by the whole Clergy agreed, yea, by the Biſhops of the Realm deviſed, and further, by Gods word confirmed. And how dare ye truſt, yea, how dare ye give ear, without trembling to any ſingular perſon, to diſallow a Parliament, a Subject to perſwade againſt our Majeſty, a man of his ſingular arrogancy againſt the determination of the Biſhops, and all the Clergy, any invented argument againſt the Word of God?

But now you our Subjects, we reſort to a greater matter of your blindneſs, of your unkindneſs and great unnaturalneſs, and ſuch an evil, that if we thought it had not begun of ignorance, and continued by perſwaſion of certain Traitors amongſt you, which we think few in number, but in their doings buſie; we could not be perſwaded but to uſe our ſword, and do juſtice, and, as we be ordained by God, to redreſs your errors by avengement. But love and zeal yet overcometh our juſt anger, but how long that will be, God knoweth, in whoſe hand our heart is; or rather for your own cauſes, being our Chriſtened Subjects, we would ye were perſwaded than vanquiſhed, informed than forced, taught than overthrown, quietly pacified than rigorouſly perſecuted.

Ye require to have the Statute of the Six Articles revived, and know ye what ye require? or know ye what eaſe ye have with the loſs of them? They were laws made, but quickly repented, too bloudy they were to be born of our people, and yet at the firſt indeed made of ſome neceſſity. Oh Subjects, how are ye trapped by ſubtil perſons? We of pity, becauſe they were bloudy, took them away, and you now of ignorance will ask them again. You know full well, that they helped us to extend rigour, and gave us cauſe to draw our Sword very often, they were as a Whetſtone to our Sword, and for your cauſes we left to uſe them. And ſince our mercy moved us to write our laws with milk and equity, how be ye blinded to ask them in bloud?

The Rebels require the ſix Articles. The 6 Articles taken away by a Parliament.

But leaving this manner of reaſoning, and reſorting to the truth of our authority, we let you wit, the ſame hath been adnulled by our Parliament, with great rejoycing of our Subjects, and not now to be called by Subjects in queſtion. Dare then any of you with the name of a Subject ſtand againſt an Act of Parliament, a Law of the whole Realm? What is our power, if laws ſhould be thus neglected? yea, what is your ſurety, if laws be not kept? Aſſure your ſelves moſt ſurely, that we of no earthly thing under the Heaven make ſuch a reputation, as we do of this one thing, to have our Law obeyed, and this cauſe of God, which we have taken in hand, to be throughly maintained, from the which we will never remove a hairs breadth, nor give place to any creature living, much leſs to any Subject, but therein will ſpend our own Royal Perſon, our Crown, Treaſure, Realm, and all our ſtate; whereof we aſſure you of our high Honour. For herein indeed reſteth our Honour, herein ſtandeth our Kingdom, herein do all Kings knowledge us a King. And ſhall any of you dare breath or think againſt our Honour, our Kingdom or Crown?

A notable zeal and a Princely word of a King.

The Kings age.

In the end of this your requeſt (as we be given to underſtand) ye would have them ſtand in force until our full age. To this we think, if ye knew what ye ſpake, ye would never have uttered that motion, nor ever given breath to ſuch a thought. For what think you of our Kingdom? Be we of leſs authority for our age? Be we not your King now, as we ſhall be? Or ſhall ye be Subjects hereafter, and now are ye not? Have not we the right we ſhall have? If we would ſuſpend and hang our doings in doubt until our full age, ye muſt firſt know, as a King, we have no difference of years nor time, but as a natural man and creature of God, we have youth, and by his ſufferance ſhall have age: We are your rightful King, your liege Lord, your King anointed, your King crowned, the Sovereign King of England, not by our age, but by Gods Ordinance, not only when we ſhall be of 21 years, but when we are of ten years. We poſſeſs our Crown, not by years, but by the Bloud and Deſcent from our Father King Henry the Eighth. You are our Subjects, becauſe we be your King; and rule we will, becauſe God hath willed. It is as great a fault in us not to rule, as in a Subject not to obey.

A King poſſeſſeth his Crown, not by years, but by Gods ordinance.

If it be conſidered, they which move this matter, if they durſt utter themſelves, would deny our Kingdom. But our good Subjects know their Prince, and will increaſe, not diminiſh his honour, inlarge, not abate his power, knowledge, not defer his Kingdom to certain years: All is one, to ſpeak againſt our Crown, and to deny our Kingdom, as to require that our laws may be broken unto 21 years. Be we not your crowned, anointed and eſtabliſhed King? Wherein then be we of leſs Majeſty, of leſs authority, or leſs ſtate, than were our Progenitors Kings of this Realm, except your unkindneſs, your unnaturalneſs, will diminiſh our eſtimation? We have hitherto, ſince the death of our Father, by the good advice and counſel of our dear and entirely beloved Uncle, kept our State, maintained our Realm, preſerved our Honour, defended our People from our enemies; we have hitherto bin feared and dreaded of our enemies; yea, of Princes, Kings and Nations; yea, herein we be nothing inferiour to any our Progenitors (which grace we acknowledge to be given us from God) and how elſe, but by good obedience of our people, good counſel of our Magiſtrates, due execution of our Laws? By authority of our Kingdom, England hitherto hath gained honour; during our Reign, it hath won of the enemy, and not loſt.

It hath been marvelled, that we of ſo young years, { KING } { Ed. 6. } have reigned ſo nobly, ſo royally, ſo quietly. And how chanceth it, that you our Subjects of that our Country of Devonſhire, will give the firſt occaſion to ſlander this our Realm of England, to give courage to the enemy, to note our Realm of the evil of Rebellion, to make it a prey to our old enemies, to diminiſh our honour, which God hath given, our Father left, our good Uncle and Council preſerved unto us? What greater evil could ye commit, than even now, when our foreign enemy in Scotland, and upon the Sea, ſeeketh to invade us, to riſe in this manner againſt our Law, to provoke ſo juſtly our wrath, to ask our vengeance, and to give us occaſion to ſpend that force upon you, which we meant to beſtow upon our enemies, to begin to ſlay you with that Sword which we drew againſt the Scots and other enemies, to make a Conqueſt of our own people, which otherwiſe ſhould have been of the whole Realm of Scotland?

Young years hinder not the Royal Government of a Realm.

Thus far ye ſee we have deſcended from our high Majeſty for love, to conſider you in your baſe and ſimple ignorance, and have been content to ſend you an inſtruction like a fatherly Prince, who of juſtice might have ſent you your deſtruction like a King to Rebels; and now let you know, that as ye ſee our mercy abundant, ſo if ye provoke us farther, we ſwear to you by the living God, by whom we Reign, ye ſhall feel the power of the ſame God in our Sword; which how mighty it is, no Subject knoweth; how puiſſant it is, no private man can judge; how mortal it is, no Engliſh heart dare think. But ſurely, ſurely, as your Lord and Prince, your only King and Maſter, we ſay to you, repent your ſelves, and take our mercy without delay, or elſe we will forthwith extend our Princely power, and execute our ſharp Sword againſt you, as againſt very Infidels and Turks, and rather adventure our own Royal Perſon, State and Power than the ſame ſhall not be executed.

And if ye will prove the example of our mercy, learn of certain which lately did ariſe, pretending ſome griefs; and yet, acknowledging their offences, have not only received moſt humbly their pardon, but feel alſo by our order, to whom all publick order only pertaineth, redreſs deviſed for their griefs. In the end we admoniſh you of your duties to God, whom ye ſhall anſwer in the day of the Lord, and of your duties towards us, whom ye ſhall anſwer by our order, and take our mercy whilſt God ſo inclineth us, leſt when ye ſhall be conſtrained to ask, we ſhall be too much hardened in our heart to grant it you; and where ye ſhall now hear of Mercy, Mercy and Life, ye ſhall then hear of Juſtice, Juſtice, and Death.

Given at Richmond, the 8th day of July, the third year of our Reign.

A ſupplication of the Rebels to the King, with the Kings anſwer to the ſame.

Beſides the Articles of theſe Devonſhire men above mentioned, the ſaid Rebels ſent up alſo, not long after, a Supplication to the King, whereunto anſwer again was made by the Kings learned Council, which here, to make ſhort, leiſure ſerveth not to rehearſe.

Falſe bruits and rumors by Popiſh Prieſts ſtirred up againſt the King.

Over and beſides, to behold the malicious working of thoſe Popiſh Prieſts, to kindle more the ſpark of ſedition in the peoples hearts, what bruits and rumors did they raiſe up againſt the King and his Council, making the vulgar multitude to believe, that they ſhould be made to pay, firſt for their Sheep, then for their Geeſe and Piggs alſo, and ſuch other things like; and whatſoever they had in ſtore, or ſhould put in their mouths, they muſt fine therefore to the King? Of all which matter never a word was either thought or meant. But this ſeemed matter fit for ſuch Prieſts whereby to ſet the Prince and his Subjects together by the ears.

Sir J. Ruſſel Lord Privy Seal, Lieutenant General of the Kings Army in the Weſt.

Againſt this ſeditious company of Rebels, was appointed and ſent by the King and his Council, Sir John Ruſſel, Knight, Lord Privy Seal, as Lieutenant General of the Kings Army, of whom chiefly depended the charge and atchievance of that Voyage in the Weſt parts. To him alſo were adjoined, as in part of ordinary Counſel in thoſe affairs under him, Sir William Harbert, Sir Jo. Pawlet, Sir Hugh Pawlet, Sir Tho. Speck, with the Lord Gray, and other beſide.

Thus

KING Ed. 6.

The Rebels of Devonſhire diſcomfited.

Thus the ſaid Lord Privy Seal, accompanied with the Lord Gray, advancing his power againſt the Rebels, although in number of Soldiers not equally furniſhed like to the other, yet through the gracious aſſiſtance of the Lords help, fighting in his cauſe, and giving the adventure againſt the enemy, about the later end of July, Anno 1549. gave them the repulſe; who notwithſtanding, recovering themſelves again with ſuch ſtomachs as they had, incountred the ſecond time with the foreſaid Lord Privy Seal, about the beginning of Auguſt following, of whom, through the Lords mighty power, they with their whole cauſe of falſe Religion, were utterly vanquiſhed and quite overthrown.

The great goodneſs of God in the Victory againſt the Rebels.

In the which Victory a great work of Gods mighty power undoubtedly did appear. For although the number of the Rebels did ſurmount in great quantity, the power and ſtrength of the Lord Privy Seal, and their ſtomachs were ſo fiercely ſet upon all deſperate adventures; and though the power of Sir William Herbert (being the ſame time at Briſtow) was not yet preſently come, which ſhould have joyned with the Lord Privy Seal; yet all this notwithſtanding, the goodneſs of the Lord ſo wrought on the Kings behalf, more than any induſtry of man (which in all reſpects in handling that matter was very raw, and far behind) that the Victory fell to the Kings part, under the valiant guiding of the foreſaid Lord Privy Seal, ſo that the Popiſh Rebels not only loſt the field, but a great part of them alſo loſt their lives; lying there ſlain miſerably in the Chaſe, to the compaſs of two Miles ſpace. Where alſo were taken and apprehended the Chieftains and Ringleaders of that miſchievous dance, whereof the Principal were Humfry Arundel, Berry, Thomas Underhil, John Soleman, William Segar, Tempſon and Barret two Prieſts, Henry Bray, and Henry Lee, two Mayors, with divers other more above ſpecified, all which accordingly afterward were executed.

The laudable ſervice of the Lord Privy Seal.

False truſt of the Devonſhire men in their Popiſh Idols diſappointed.

The Sacrament in the Pix brought to the Battel in a Cart.

Theſe Rebels, to make their part more ſure by the help and preſence of their conſecrated God and maker, brought with them into the Battel, the Pix under his Canopy, and inſtead of an Altar, where he was hanging before, ſet him now riding in a Cart. Neither was there lacking Maſſes, Croſſes, Banners, Candleſticks, with holy Bread alſo, and holy Water plenty, to defend them from Devils, and all adverſary power; which in the end neither could help their friends, nor yet could ſave themſelves from the hands of their enemies, but eftſoons both the conſecrated God, and all the trumpery about him, was taken in the Cart, and there lay all in the duſt, leaving to them a notable Leſſon of better experience, how to put their confidence hereafter in no ſuch vain Idols, but only in the true living God, and immortal Maker, to be ſerved according to his preſcribed Word, and that only in the faith of his Son, and not after their own dreaming fantaſies.

Muſcleborough field in Scotland.

The ſtory whereof putteth me alſo in remembrance of another like Popiſh Field, (called Muſcleborough field) fought in Scotland the year before this, where the Scots likewiſe incamping themſelves againſt the Lord Protector, and the Kings power ſent into Scotland, did in ſemblable wiſe, bring with them to the Battel, the conſecrated Gods of their Altars, with Maſſes, Croſſes, Banners, and all their Popiſh ſtuff of Idolatry, having great affiance by vertue thereof, to have a great day againſt the Engliſh Army, as indeed in mans judgment it might ſeem not unlike. For the number of the Scots Army ſo far exceeded ours, and they were ſo appointed with their Pikes in the firſt front againſt our Horſemen (which gave the firſt onſet) that our men were fain to recule, not without the loſs of divers Gentlemen. Notwithſtanding, the mighty Arm of the Lord ſo turned the Victory, that the Scots in the end, with all their Maſſes, Pixes and idolatrous Trinkets, were put to the worſe. Of whom in that field were ſlain between thirteen and fourteen thouſand, and not paſſing an hundred Engliſh men. The cauſe of this was the promiſe of the ſaid Scots, made before to King Henry, for the Marriage of the young Scottiſh Queen to King Edward, which promiſe the ſaid Scots afterward brake, and payed thereafter.

Gods mighty Arm fighting with K. Edward in Scotland.

The vain truſt of the Scots in their Maſſes and Sacrament of the Altar.

A notable Victory, through the Lords power of K. Edward in Scotland.

In which Victory this is alſo to be noted, that the ſame day and hour when the Images were burned openly in London, the Scots were put to flight in Muſcleborough, as is credibly noted in Records.

During this Hurly-burly amongſt the Popiſh Rebels in Cornwal and Devonſhire, the like commotion at the ſame time, by ſuch like Popiſh Prieſts as Homes and his fellows, began to gender in the parts of Oxford and Buckingham; but that was ſoon appeaſed by the Lord Gray, who coming down that way into Devonſhire, chaſed the Rebels to their houſes. Of whom two hundred were taken, and a dozen of the Ringleaders delivered unto him, whereof certain were after executed.

A ſtir in Oxfordſhire and Buckinghamſhire.

In Northfolk and parts thereabout, albeit the original of their tumultuous ſtirring was not for the like cauſe, yet the obſtinate hearts of that unruly multitude, ſeemed no leſs bent upon miſchief, to diſturb publick peace, which was alſo in the Month of July, the year aboveſaid. For repreſſion of which Rebellion, firſt was ſent the Lord Marqueſs of Northampton, with ſpecial inſtruction to avoid the fight, and ſo by order was appointed with a number of Horſe to keep the field and paſſages, whereby they beinſt ſtopped from Victual, might the ſooner be brought to acknowledge their folly, and to ſeek their pardon. Who then following other policy than by order was given, came and pinned himſelf within the City of Norwich, which afterward they were fain to abandon, the Rebels preſſing upon the City ſo on every ſide, that at length they obtained the ſame. Nevertheleſs in all that conflict there was but an hundred on both ſides ſlain, and otherwiſe no great loſs, but only the loſs of the Lord Sheffield.

Rebellion in Norfolk.

Inſtructions given to the L. Marqueſs.

The L. Sheffield ſlain at Norwich.

Then was ſent down againſt them the Earl of Warwick, with ſufficient force and number of Soldier, beſides the convoy of two thouſand Almains, by whom the rude and confuſed Rabble was there overthrown and ſlain, to the number, as is ſuppoſed, at the leaſt of four thouſand. And in fine, both the Kets, chief ſtirrers and authors of that commotion, were taken and put to execution, and one of them hanged up in Chains.

The Rebels of Norfolk ſuppreſſed.

Another Rebellion or Tumult began in Yorkſhire.

The chief ſtirrers of this Rebellion in the North.

Moreover, beſides theſe inordinate Uprores and Inſurrections above mentioned, about the later end of the ſaid Month of July the ſame year, which was 1549, another like ſtir or commotion began at Semer, in the Northriding of Yorkſhire, and continued in the Eaſtriding of the ſame, and there ended. The principal doers and raiſers up whereof were one William Ombler of Eaſthellerton Yeoman, and Thomas Dale Pariſh Clerk of Semer, with one Stevenſon of Semer, Neighbour to Dale, and Nephew to Ombler. Which Stevenſon was a mean or meſſenger between the ſaid Ombler and Dale, being afore not acquainted together, and dwelling ſeven Miles one from the other. Who at laſt, by the travel of the ſaid Stevenſon, and their own evil diſpoſition, inclined to ungraciouſneſs and miſchief, knowing before, one the others mind by ſecret conference, were brought to talk together on S. James his day, Anno 1549.

The cauſes moving the Yorkſhire men to Rebellion.

The cauſes moving them to raiſe this Rebellion, were theſe: Firſt and principally, their traiterous hearts, grudging at the Kings moſt honourable proceedings, in advancing and reforming the true honour of God, and his Religion. Another cauſe alſo was, for truſting to a blind and a fantaſtical Prophecy, wherewith they were ſeduced, thinking the ſame Prophecy ſhould ſhortly come to paſs, by hearing the Rebellions of Northfolk, of Devonſhire, and other places.

A blind Prophecy amongſt the Northern men.

The tenor of which Prophecy, and purpoſe together of the Traitors was, That there ſhould no King reign in England, that the Noblemen and Gentlemen ſhould be deſtroyed, and the Realm ſhould be ruled by four Governors, to be elected and appointed by the Commons holding a Parliament in commotion, to begin at the South and North Seas of England, &c. Suppoſing that this their Rebellion in the North, and the other of the Devonſhire men in the Weſt, meeting (as they intended) at one place, ſhould be the mean how to compaſs this their traiterous deviliſh device.

The device of the Rebels how to compaſs their purpoſe.

And therefore laying their ſtudies together, how they might find out more company to joyn with them in that deteſtable purpoſe, and ſo ſet forward to ſtir, this device they framed, to ſtir in two places, the one diſtant 7 Miles from the other, and at the firſt ruſh to kill and deſtroy ſuch Gentlemen and men of ſubſtance about them, as were favourers of the Kings proceedings, or which would reſiſt them.

{Ann. 1549} But first of all, for the more speedy raising of men, they devised to burn Beacons, and thereby to bring the people together, as though it were to defend the Sea Coasts, and having the ignorant people assembled, then to pour out their poyson; first beginning with the rudest and poorest sort, such as they thought were pricked with poverty, and were unwilling to labour, and therefore the more ready to follow the spoil of rich mens goods, blowing into their heads, that Gods service was laid aside, and new inventions neither good nor godly, put in place, and so feeding them with fair promises to reduce into the Church again their old ignorance and idolatry, thought by that means sooneſt to allure them to rage, and run with them in this commotion. And furthermore, to the intent they might give the more terror to the Gentlemen at their first rising, lest they should be resisted, they devised that some should be murthered in Churches, some in their Houses, some in serving the King in Commission, and others as they could be caught, and to pick quarrels with them for alteration of Service on the Holy-days. And thus was the Plat-form cast of their device, according as afterward by their confession at their examinations, it was testified, and remaineth in true record.

False lies forged of Gods true Religion.

Thus they being together agreed, Ombler and Dale, and other by their secret appointment, so laboured the matter in the Parish of Semer, Wintringham, and the Towns about, that they were infected with the poyson of this confederacy, in such sort that it was easie to understand whereunto they would incline if a commotion were begun. The accomplishment whereof did shortly follow; for although by the words of one drunken fellow of that Conspiracy, named Calvered, at the Alehouse in Wintringham, some suspicion of that Rebellion began to be smelled before by the Lord President and Gentlemen in those parts, and so prevented in that place where the Rebels thought to begin; yet they gave not over so, but drew to another place at Semer by the Sea-Coast, and there by night rode to the Beacon at Saxton, and set it on fire; and so gathering together a rude rout of Rascals out of the Towns near about being in a stir, Ombler, Thomas Dale, Barton, and Robert Dale, hasted forthwith with the Rebels to Master Whites house, to take him, who notwithstanding being on Horseback, minding to have escaped their hands, Dale, Ombler, and the rest of the Rebels took him, and Clopton his Wives Brother, one Savage a Merchant of York, and one Bury servant to Sir Walter Mildmay, which four, without cause or quarrel, saving to fulfil their seditious Prophecy in some part, and to give a terrour to other Gentlemen, they cruelly murthered, after they had carried them one Mile from Semer towards the Wolde, and there after they had stripped them of their Clothes and Purses, left them naked behind them in the plain field for Crows to feed on, until Whites Wife and Savages Wife, then at Semer, caused them to be buried.

The conspiracy of the Rebels uttered in drunkenness.

Four men cruelly murthered by the Rebels in the North.

Long it were and tedious to recite what revel these Rebels kept in their raging madness, who ranging about the Country from Town to Town, to enlarge their ungracious and rebellious band, taking those with force which were not willing to go, and leaving in no Town where they came any man above the age of sixteen years, so increased this number, that in short time they had gathered three thousand to favour their wicked attempts, and had like to have gathered more, had not the Lords goodness, through prudent circumspection, interrupted the course of their furious beginning.

The Rebels in Yorkshire gathered to 3000 persons.

For first came the Kings gracious and free Pardon, discharging and pardoning them and the rest of the Rebels of all Treasons, Murthers, Felonies and other offences done to His Majesty, before the one and twentieth of August, Anno 1549. Which Pardon, although Ombler contemptuously refused, persisting still in his wilful obstinacy, disswading also the rest from the humble accepting the Kings so loving and liberal Pardon, yet notwithstanding, with some it did good.

The Kings free Pardon sent to the Rebels.

Ombler refused the Kings pardon.

To make short, it was not long after this, but Ombler as he was riding from Town to Town, twelve Miles from Hummanby, to charge all the Constables and Inhabitants where he came, in the Kings name, to resort to Hummanby, by the way he was espied, and by the circumspect diligence of John Wood the younger, James Aslabe, Ralph Twinge, and Thomas Constable Gentleman, he was had in chase, and at last by them apprehended, and brought in the night in sure custody unto the City of York, to answer to his demerits.

{KING Ed. 6.}

After whom within short time, Thomas Dale, Henry Barton, the first Chieftains and Ringleaders of the former commotion, with John Dale, Robert Wright, William Pecock, Wetherel and Edmund Buttry, busie stirrers in this Sedition, as they travelled from place to place to draw people to their Faction, were likewise apprehended, committed to ward, lawfully convicted, and lastly executed at York the one and twentieth of September, Anno 1549. Ex actis Judicii publici registro receptis & notatis.

The names of the Rebels taken and executed at York.

Exacta judiciis regiſtro exceptis & notatis.

To these pestiferous commotions raised up against King Edward, by his own Subjects in this year aforesaid, within the Realm, I might also adjoyn the busie stirring and raging of the French King, against our young and innocent Prince, without the Realm. Who hearing of these Tumults and violent Insurrections of the Kings Subjects, in divers and sundry quarters of the Realm, supposing to take the time for his most advantage, thought likewise for his part, not to be unoccupied. Who after he had by his Embassador made open breach with the King, immediately after the revocation of the said Embassador from hence, intending to annoy the King, and make his first Invasion against the Isles of Jersey and Gernsey, thought to have surprised our Ships and the said Isles with a certain number of his Ships and Gallies. In the which his assault he was so hotly saluted by the Kings Ships and the Island, that by the confession of them that saw it, and by the report written unto the Lord Protector, the Frenchmen lost at least a thousand men, their Ships and Gallies were so spoiled, as being forced to return home, they were not able then to set out again.

The stirring and rising of the French K. against K. Edward.

Furthermore, out of France credible word was brought to the Lord Protector (which yet in Letters appeareth) that into one Town in one Vessel, were brought, at least, threescore Gentlemen to be buried; and also an inhibition specially given out by the King, not to speak of the success in that journey. This was about the beginning of August, 1549.

Ex literis Protectoris.

The like also might be noted of the losses of the said French King at Bullenburgh, the eighth day of August, the same year, as by the Lord Clinton's Letters may well appear; but for spending of time I pass it over. What the meaning of the French King was in these Voyages, or how he intended further to proceed, I have not herein to deal. This is certain and evident, that the mighty Arm of God mercifully fought for King Edward his servant, to defend and deliver him from so many hard dangers, so dangerous and sundry commotions, stirred up in so many Quarters within this Realm, and also without the Realm, and all within the compass of one year, and yet the Lord above fighting for his true servant, dispatched them all, as in story here ye have heard declared, and is no less worthy of all posterity to be noted.

Ex literis D. Clintonii.

The wonderful protection of the Lord in defending K. Edward.

Matter concerning Edmund Bonner, Bishop of London, with declaration of the acts and proces entred against him in King Edward's time.

AND thus much hitherto having discoursed touching the manifold troubles and tumults raised up on every side against King Edward, by his unkind and unnatural Subjects, and yet notwithstanding, the gracious goodness of the Lord ever giving him the Victory; now let us return again to Bonner Bishop of London, where we left him before, that is, in his own house, where he was by the Council commanded to remain, as is above signified.

And now forsomuch as we have to enter into the story of the said Bonner, for the better understanding of the whole order thereof, it shall be requisite to rip up and declare the matter with the circumstances and occasions thereof from the first beginning of King Edward's time. Where is to be understood, that King Edward, in the first year of his Reign, Anno 1547. the first day of September, for the order of his Visitation, directed out certain Commissioners, as Sir Anthony Cook, Sir John Godsaul, Knights, Mr. John Godsaul, Christopher Nevinson, Doctors of the Law, and John Sitting the Kings Commissioners in Pauls Church.

{KING Ed. 6.} John Madew Doctor of Divinity. Who sitting in Pauls Church upon their Commission, the day and year aforesaid, there being present at the same time, Edmund Bishop of London, John Royston, Polydore Virgil, Peter Van, and others of the said Cathedral Church, after the Sermon made and the Commission being read, ministred an Oath unto the said Bishop of London, to renounce and deny the Bishop of Rome, with his usurped authority, and to swear obedience unto the King, according to the effect and form of the Statute made in the thirty first year of King Henry the Eighth: also that he should present and redress all and singular such things as were needful within the said Church to be reformed.

An Oath ministred to Bonner to forswear the Pope.

Whereupon the said Bishop humbly and instantly desired them that he might see their Commission, only for this purpose and intent (as he said) that he might the better fulfil and put in execution the things wherein he was charged by them or their Commission. Unto whom the Commissioners answering, said, they would deliberate more upon the matter, and so they called the other Ministers of the said Church before them, and ministred the like Oath unto them, as they did to the Bishop before. To whom moreover, there and then certain Interrogatories and Articles of Inquisition were read by Peter Lilly the publick Notary. Which done, after their Oaths taken, the said Commissioners delivered unto the Bishop aforesaid, certain Injunctions, as well in Print as written, and Homilies set forth by the King. All which things the said Bishop received, under the words of this Protestation, as followeth:

Bonner requireth to see their commission.

{Anno 1547.} Peter Lilly the publick Notary.

Bonners protestation before the Commissioners receiving the Kings Injunctions.

I Do receive these Injunctions and Homilies with this Protestation, that I will observe them, if they be not contrary and repugnant to Gods law, and the Statutes and Ordinances of the Church. And immediately he added, with an Oath, that he never read the said Homilies and Injunctions.

The which Protestation being made in manner and form aforesaid, the said Edmund Bonner Bishop of London instantly desired and required Peter Lilly, the Register aforesaid, there and then to register and enact the same. And so the said Commissioners delivering the Injunctions and Homilies to Master Bellassere Archdeacon of Colchester, and Gilbert Bourn Archdeacon of London, Essex and Middlesex, and injoyning them in most effectuous manner, under pains therein contained, to put the same in speedy execution, and also reserving other new Injunctions to be ministred afterward, as well to the Bishop, as to the Archdeacons aforesaid, according as they should see cause, &c. did so continue the said visitation till three of the clock the same day in the afternoon.

Note the corrupt life of these unmarried Priests and Popish Votaries.

At the which hour and place assigned, the Commissioners being set, and the Canons and Priests of the said Church appearing before them, and being examined upon vertue of their Oath, for their Doctrine and Conversation of life; first one John Painter, one of the Canons of the said Cathedral Church, there and then openly confessed, that he vitiously and carnally had often the company of a certain married mans Wife, whose name he denied to declare. In the which crime divers other Canons and Priests of the foresaid Church, confessed in like manner, and could not deny themselves to be culpable.

And after the Commissioners aforesaid, had delivered to Maister Roiston Prebendary, and to the Proctor of the Dean and of the Chapter of the said Cathedral Church of Saint Paul, the Kings Injunctions, and the Book of Homilies, injoyning them to see the execution thereof, under pain therein specified, they prorogued their said Visitation until seven of the clock the next day following.

Things in this Visitation to be noted.

By this Visitation, above specified, it appears, gentle Reader, first how Bonner made his Protestation after the receiving of the Kings Injunctions, and also how he required the same to be put in publick record. Furthermore, thou hast to note the unchaste life and conversation of these Popish Votaries and Priests of Pauls. Now what followed after this Protestation of the Bishop made, remaineth further in the sequel of the story to be declared; wherein first thou shalt understand that the said Bishop shortly after his Protestation, whether for fear, or for conscience, repenting himself, went unto the King, where he submitted himself, and recanting his former Protestation, craved pardon of the King for his inordinate demeanour toward his Graces Commissioners, in the former Visitation. Which pardon, notwithstanding it was granted unto him by the King, for the acknowledging of his fault, yet for the evil example of the fact, it was thought good that he should be committed to the Fleet, as by the tenor of the Councils Letter sent to the Commissioners, may appear, which together with the form also of the Bishops Protestation and of his Recantation, here under followeth.

Bonner repenteth his evil demeanor in his Protestation.

Bonner sent to the Fleet.

To our very loving friends, Sir Anthony Cook Knight, and the rest of the Commissioners for the Visitation at London, in hast.

The Kings Letter to the Commissioners concerning the recantation and pardoning of Bonner.

After our hearty commendation: This shall be to signifie unto you, that we have received your Letters, and in the same inclosed the Copy of the Protestation made by the Bishop of London in the time of your Visitation at Pauls: your wise proceedings wherein, and advertisements from you, we take in very thankful part towards us. And because the said Bishop, which being here before us hath acknowledged his indiscreet demeanour, did at that time at Pauls require the Register of your Visitation, to make record and enter of his Protestation, and now upon better consideration of his duty, maketh means to have the same revoked, as shall appear unto you by the true Copy of his writing enclosed, the original whereof remaining with us he hath subscribed; we pray you to cause the Register to make enter of this his revocation, according to the tenor of this his said Writing: Further signifying unto you, that in respect of his offence, and the evil ensample that might thereupon ensue, we have thought meet to send him to the prison of the Fleet, whither he hath been conveyed by Master Vicechamberlain. And whereas sundry things for the Kings Majesties service do now occur here, which require the present attendance of you Sir John Godsall, as well for your office of the Signet, as of the Protonotariship, we pray you that leaving the execution of the Visitation to the rest of your Collegues, you make your repair hither with convenient diligence. Thus fare you right heartily well. From Hampton Court the twelfth of September, 1547.

Bonner recanteth his Protestation.

W*Hereas I* Edmund Bishop of London, at such time as I received the Kings Majesties Injunctions and Homilies of my most dread Sovereign Lord, at the hands of his Highness Visitors, did unadvisedly make such Protestation, as now upon better consideration of my duty of obedience, and of the evil ensample that might ensue unto others thereof, appeareth to me neither reasonable, nor such as might well stand with the duty of an humble Subject: forsomuch as the same Protestation at my request was then by the Register of that Visitation, enacted and put in Record, I have thought it my duty not only to declare before your Lordships, that I do now upon better consideration of my duty, renounce and revoke my said Protestation, but also most humbly beseech your Lordships, that this my Revocation of the same may be likewise put in the same Records, for a perpetual memory of the truth, most humbly beseeching your good Lordships, both to take order that it may take effect, and also that my former and unadvised doings, may be by your good mediations pardoned by the Kings Majesty.

The order of Bonners doings in the beginning of K. Edward.

Thus far thou haſt heard, loving Reader, firſt the Popiſh proteſtation of Bonner; then how he calling himſelf home again ſolemnly recanted the ſame, requiring further the ſaid his revocation to be committed to publick record, for a perpetual remembrance. Alſo how he upon his humble ſubmiſſion received his pardon of the King, and yet for example ſake was commanded to the Fleet. Where he nevertheleſs did not long continue, but according to the effect of the Kings pardon afore granted was reſtored both to houſe and living again, which was in the firſt year of the King, Anno 1549.

After this ye have heard alſo in the ſtory above, in the ſecond year, and a great part of the third year of the King, how he demeaned himſelf, although not moſt forward in advancing the Kings proceedings; yet in ſuch ſort as no great advantage by any Law could be taken againſt him, both in ſwearing his obedience to the King, and in receiving his Injunctions; alſo in confeſſing his aſſent and conſent touching the ſtate of Religion then; and furthermore in directing out his Letters, according to the Archbiſhop of Canterburies precepts, to Cloney his Sumner, to the Biſhop of Weſtminſter and other Biſhops, for aboliſhing of Images, for abrogation of the Maſs, for Bibles to be ſet up, and for miniſtring in both kinds, with ſuch other like matters of reformation; till at length he hearing of the death of the Lord Admiral the Lord Protectors Brother, and after that of the ſtirring and riſing of the Kings ſubjects in ſundry tumults againſt the King, began ſomewhat as he durſt to draw back and ſlack his Paſtoral diligence, ſo that in many places of his Dioceſs, and in London, the people not only were negligent in reſorting to Divine Service, but alſo did frequent and haunt foreign Rites of Maſſes, and other orders then in this Realm appointed, and he alſo himſelf, contrary to his wonted manner, upon principal Feaſts refuſed in his own perſon to execute. Whereupon he being ſuſpected and complained of, and convented before the Kings Council (as ye heard before) after ſharp admonitions and reproofs, had certain private Injunctions to him enjoyned.

Bonner beginneth to lack in his diligence.

{Anno 1549}

1. Firſt, That he ſhould perſonally preach within three weeks after at Pauls-Croſs.

Matters put to Bonner to redreſs.

2. That according as his Predeceſſors were wont to celebrate Maſs, he at ſuch wonted times ſhould execute and adminiſter the Communion.

3. That he ſhould call before him and correct more diligently ſuch tranſgreſſors as abſented themſelves from the order of Service, and miniſtration of the Lords Board, appointed then in Churches by the Kings Ordinance.

Bonner enjoyned to preach at Pauls Croſs.

4. That he ſhould ſee more carefully and vigilantly to the puniſhment of Adulterers and Fornicators.

5. That he in the mean while ſhould be reſident within his own Houſe during the time, whiles he ſhould make his Sermon at Pauls above mentioned, which was Anno 1549. In the which Sermon certain ſpecial points were prefixed unto him, whereupon he ſhould entreat. Which here in order follow, and are theſe.

Special Points and Articles to be entreated of by Bonner Biſhop of London in his Sermon.

1. THAT all ſuch as rebell againſt their Prince, get unto them damnation, and thoſe that reſiſt the higher power, reſiſt the Ordinances of God, and he that dieth therefore in rebellion, by the Word of God is utterly damned, and ſo loſeth both body and ſoul. And therefore thoſe Rebels in Devonſhire and Cornwall, in Norfolk, or elſwhere, who take upon them to aſſemble a power and force againſt their King and Prince, againſt the Laws and Statutes of the Realm, and go about to ſubvert the ſtate and order of the Commonwealth, not only do deſerve therefore death as Traytors and Rebels, but do accumulate to themſelves eternal damnation, even to be in the burning fire of Hell with Lucifer, the father and firſt author of pride, diſobedience and rebellion, what pretences ſoever they have, and what Maſſes or holy water ſoever they pretend, or go about to make among themſelves, as Chore, Dathan, and Abiram, for rebellion againſt Moſes, were ſwallowed down alive into Hell, although they pretended to ſacrifice unto God.

{KING Ed. 6.}

2. Likewiſe in the order of the Church, and extern Rites and Ceremonies of Divine Service, forſomuch as God requireth humility of heart, innocency of living, knowledg of him, charity and love toward our neighbours, and obedience to his word, and to his Miniſters and ſuperior powers, theſe we muſt bring to all our prayers, to all our ſervice, and this is that ſacrifice which Chriſt requireth, and theſe be thoſe that make all things pleaſant unto God. The extern Rites and Ceremonies be but exerciſes of our Religion, and appointable by ſuperior powers; in chuſing whereof we muſt obey the Magiſtrates; The which things alſo we do ſee ever have been and ſhall be (as the time and place is) divers, and yet all hath pleaſed God, ſo long as theſe before ſpoken inward things be there. If any man ſhall uſe the old Rites, and thereby diſobey the ſuperior power, the devotion of his Ceremonies is made naught by his diſobedience: ſo that which elſe (ſo long as the Law did ſo ſtand) might be good, by pride and diſobedience now is made naught; as Sauls ſacrifice, Chore, Dathan, and Abiram, and Aarons two Children were. But whoſo joyneth to devotion obedience, he winneth the garland. For elſe it is a zeal, ſed non ſecundum ſcientiam; a will, deſire, zeal, and devotion, but not after wiſdom; that is, a fooliſh devotion, which can require no thanks or praiſe. And yet again, where ye obey, ye muſt have devotion, for God requireth the heart more than the outward doings, and therefore he that taketh the Communion, or ſaith or heareth the Service appointed by the Kings Majeſty, muſt bring devotion and inward prayers with him, or elſe his prayers are but vain, lacking that which God requireth, that is, the heart and mind to pray to him.

What things be neceſſary to be joyned in all Gods ſervice.

Extern Rites and Ceremonies how far they ſerve.

Ceremonies made naught by diſobedience.

Fooliſh devotion.

The heart maketh true devotion.

3. Further, ye ſhall for example on Sunday come ſeventh night after the foreſaid date celebrate the Communion at Pauls Church.

4. Ye ſhall alſo ſet forth in your Sermon, That our Authority of Royal power is (as of truth it is) of no leſs authority and force in this our young age, than is or was of any our Predeceſſors, though the ſame were much elder, as may appear by example of Joſias and other young Kings in Scripture; and therefore all our ſubjects to be no leſs bound to the obedience of our Precepts, Laws, and Statutes, than if we were of thirty or forty years of age.

The delivery of theſe Injunctions and Articles unto the Biſhop (with the time of his appointed preaching) was ſoon after known abroad among the Citizens, and other the Commons within the City of London, ſo that every man expected the time thereof, wiſhing to hear the ſame. Which time being once come, the Biſhop, according to the tenor of the Injunctions, publickly preached at the Croſs of Pauls the firſt day of September. Howbeit as hypocriſie never lurketh ſo ſecretly in the hearts of the wicked, but that at one time or other God in his moſt righteous judgment maketh it open unto the world: ſo at this preſent was that long coloured perverſe obſtinacy, and the infeſtred hatred of this double faced diſſembler againſt the Kings godly proceedings, moſt plainly manifeſted by his diſobedient demeanor in this his Sermon.

Bonners Preaching much looked for of the people.

For whereas he was commanded to entreat only upon ſuch ſpecial points as were mentioned in his Articles; he yet both beſides the Councils commandment, to the withdrawing of the minds of the common people, in as much as in him lay, from the right and true underſtanding of the holy Sacrament miniſtred in the holy Communion then ſet forth by the authority of the Kings Majeſty (according to the true ſenſe of the holy Scripture) did ſpend moſt part of his Sermon about the groſs, carnal, and Papiſtical preſence of Chriſts body and blood in the Sacrament of the Altar, and alſo contrary thereunto did not only ſlenderly touch the reſt of his Articles, but of a rebellious and wilful careleſneſs did utterly leave out unſpoken the whole laſt Article, concerning the as effectual and as lawful authority of the Kings Highneſs during his young age, as if he were thirty or forty years old; notwithſtanding the ſame (becauſe it was the trayterous opinion of the Popiſh Rebels) was by ſpecial commandment chiefly appointed him to entreat upon.

The diſobedient ſtubbornneſs of Bonner in his Sermon at Pauls-Croſs

This

{KING Ed. 6.}

W. Latimer, and John Hooper againſt Bonner.

This contemptuous and diſobedient dealing as it greatly offended moſt of the Kings faithful and loving ſubjects there preſent, ſo did it much miſlike the minds, and was far from the good expectation, as well of that faithful and godly Preacher Maſter John Hooper, afterwards Biſhop of Worceſter and Gloceſter, and laſtly a moſt conſtant Martyr for the Goſpel of Chriſt, and alſo of Mr. Will. Latimer, Bachelor of Divinity: and therefore they well weighing the foulneſs of the fact, and their bounden Allegiances unto their Prince, did thereupon exhibit unto the Kings Highneſs, under both their names, a Bill of complaint or denunciation againſt the ſaid Biſhop in form following.

The Denunciation of John Hooper, and William Latimer, againſt Bonner, to the Kings Majeſty, for leaving undone the points aforementioned, which he was charged to preach upon.

The Denunciation of W. Latimer, and John Hooper, denounced againſt Bonner.

IN moſt humble wiſe ſheweth unto your Majeſty William Latimer and John Hooper, that where of late, as we be certainly informed from your Majeſty, by the hand of the right high and noble Prince Edward Duke of Somerſet, Governour of your Royal perſon, and Protector of all your Highneſs Realms, Dominions and Subjects, and the reſt of your Privy Council, there were certain Injunctions given to the Biſhop of London that now is, with Articles to be inſinuated and preached unto your Subjects at a certain day limited, the which Injunctions and Articles did only tend to the honour of God, and the better inſtructions of your Highneſs people to obedience and hatred of rebellion and mutinie, wherewith of late this your Majeſties Realm hath been marvellouſly vexed, to the danger of your Highneſs perſon, and the ſtate of the whole Realm, and therefore a thing at this time moſt neceſſary to be taught unto the people, that they might know their duty unto your Majeſty, and unto Almighty God, and eſpecially to acknowledg your Majeſty in theſe years and age to be a perfect High and Soverign Lord and King, and ſupreme Head, whoſe Laws, Proclamations, and Commandments we are bound to obey, as well as any Princes ſubjects are bound to obey the Laws, Proclamations, and Commandments of their natural and Sovereign Lord, notwithſtanding that nature hath not yet given unto your perſon ſuch age as I truſt ſhe ſhall, nor ſo many years, which we wiſh to be ſo many as any Prince ever had, the which years do not make you King or Prince, but the right of your birth, and lawful ſucceſſion whatſoever it be, ſo that we all muſt as well acknowledg your Majeſty to be our King and Prince, at theſe years, as if you were at the age of thirty or forty years, and your Laws and Statutes no leſs to be feared and obeyed, than if your Highneſs were fifty or an hundred years old, (the which thing not only is moſt certainly true, but alſo at this time moſt neceſſarily to be taught, eſpecially when divers Rebels have openly declared, that they would not obey your Highneſs Laws, nor acknowledg the Statutes made by your Majeſty to be available till you come to the age of twenty years) and this not only being ſo, but the ſame thing being commanded by your ſaid Majeſty, amongſt other Injunctions and Articles given in writing to the ſaid Edmund Bonner, to be preached in his laſt Sermon, as by the ſame Injunctions may appear, of the which the true Copy we have when need is to be ſhewed: yet all this notwithſtanding, the ſaid Bonner, of what zeal or mind we cannot tell, whether favouring the opinion of the ſaid Rebels, or contemning your Highneſs Commandment declared unto him, hath not only left out to declare the ſaid Article, which we moſt and chiefly expected and looked for, but alſo in all the reſt of his Sermon did not ſo fully and apertly declare the ſaid Injunctions and Articles, as to our judgment did appear they ought to have been declared, and was of no light ground looked for, intreating of other far diſtant and divers from the Articles upon the which he was commanded to intreat; and ſuch as moſt ſhould move and ſtir up the people to diſorder and diſſenſion, willingly leaving out thoſe things which ſhould have made quiet and obedience. Wherefore not moved of any malice, grudg, envy, or evil will to the perſon of the Biſhop, but conſtrained by the love and zeal which we bear towards your Highneſs, and of our duty and allegiance to your Majeſty, whoſe honour and ſafety with tranquillity, quietneſs, and good governance of this your Realm, we do moſt deſire, and for the diſcharge of our moſt bounden duties, to avoid all the dangers that might enſue of the concealment thereof, we moſt humbly do denounce and declare the ſame to your Highneſs, to the intent that your Majeſty, by the adviſe aforeſaid, may, if it pleaſe your Highneſs, at this our humble denunciation, call the ſaid Biſhop to anſwer to the premiſſes, the which we are ready to avow and prove, and then your Highneſs may take further order herein, as to your Princely wiſdom ſhall ſeem moſt convenient, whoſe long life and moſt proſperous Government God Almighty long continue, for the which we ſhall pray during our lives.

Years and age do not make a King, but the right of ſucceſſion.

Bonner left out of his Sermon the Article of the Kings authority.

The Kings Majeſty having thus, by the information of theſe two credible perſons, perfect intelligence of the contemptuous and perverſe negligence of this Biſhop, in not accompliſhing his Highneſs Commandment given him by Injunction, thought it moſt neceſſary with all convenient ſpeed (for the avoiding of further inconveniences) to look more ſeverely unto the due puniſhment of ſuch dangerous rebellious obſtinacy; and therefore by the adviſe of the Lord Protector, and the reſt of his Honourable Council, immediately he directed forth his Commiſſion under his Broad Seal unto the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and to other grave and truſty Perſonages and Counſellors, appointing and authoriſing all them, or certain of them, by vertue of the ſame, to call before them, as well the Biſhop of London, as alſo the foreſaid denouncers, and upon due examination and proof of the premiſſes, or any other matter otherwiſe to be objected, further to proceed againſt him ſummarily & de plano, according to Law and juſtice, either to ſuſpenſion, excommunication, committing to priſon, or deprivation, (if the quality of the offence ſo required) or otherwiſe to uſe any other cenſure Eccleſiaſtical, which for the better hearing and determining of that cauſe, might to their wiſdoms ſeem more pertinent, as appeareth more amply by the tenour of the Commiſſion here inſuing.

EDward the Sixth, &c. To the moſt reverend Father in God Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Metropolitan and Primate of England, the right reverend Father in God Nicolas Biſhop of Rocheſter, our truſty and right well beloved Counſellors, Sir William Peter, and Sir Thomas Smith, Knights, our two principal Secretaries, and William May, Doctor of the Law Civil, and Dean of Pauls, greeting. It is come to our knowledg, that where we by the advice of our moſt entirely beloved Uncle Edward Duke of Somerſet, Governour of our Perſon, and Protector of all our Realms, Dominions, and Subjects, and the reſt of our Privy Council, did give to the right reverend Father in God Edmund Biſhop of London, upon certain complaints before made unto us, and other great conſiderations, certain Injunctions to be followed, done, and executed, and in a Sermon appointed to him to preach by us with certain Articles, and for the more ſure knowledg, keeping, and obſerving, did exhibit the ſame in writing unto him by the hands of our ſaid Uncle, in the fulfilling of our counſel: all this notwithſtanding the ſaid Biſhop hath in contempt of us (as it may appear) overſlipped and not obſerved certain of the ſaid things ſo by us enjoyned, and other ſo perverſly and negligently done, that the things minded of us to reformation, and for a good quiet of our ſubjects and our whole Realm, be converted by the wilful negligence or perverſity of him to a great occaſion of ſlander, tumult, and grudg amongſt our people, as it hath been denounced to us in writing by certain honeſt and diſcreet perſons, and otherwiſe called. The which things if they be ſo, we tendering the health, quietneſs, good order, and government of our people, have not thought convenient to be let paſt unpuniſhed and unreformed, and therefore by the advice aforeſaid, have appointed you five, four, or three, upon whoſe fidelities, wiſdoms, dexterities, and circumſpections, we have full confidence, to call before you as well the denouncers of the ſaid faults, as alſo the ſaid Biſhop, and with due examinations and proceſs, according to the Law and Juſtice, to hear the ſaid matter, and all other matters, of what kind, nature, or condition ſoever they ſhall be, objected againſt the ſaid Biſhop, ſummarily (& de plano) or otherwiſe as to your diſcretions ſhall be thought moſt meet, with full power and authority to ſuſpend, excommunicate, commit to priſon, or deprive the ſaid Biſhop, if the offence ſhall ſo appear to merit, or to uſe any other cenſure Eccleſiaſtical, which for the better hearing and determining of the cauſe ſhall be requiſite and appertain, any Law, Statute, or Act to the contrary notwithſtanding. In witneſs whereof we have cauſed theſe our Letters to be made Patents.

Witneſs our ſelf at Weſtminſter the eighth of September, in the third year of our Reign.

The Commiſſion delivered.

The Commiſſion being ſealed with the Kings Broad Seal, was by his Highneſs Council forthwith delivered at the Court unto Thomas Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the reſt of the Commiſſioners mentioned in the ſame, being there all together preſent. Who upon the receipt thereof, determined by vertue of the ſame to ſit at the Archbiſhops houſe at Lambeth the Wedneſday then next enſuing, which was the tenth day of that preſent month of September, and therefore appointed the Biſhop of London to be ſummoned to appear before them, as at that time and place. The manner of whoſe behaviour at his appearance, becauſe it both declareth the froward nature and ſtubborn condition of the perſon, and alſo what eſtimation and authority he thought the Commiſſioners to be of, I thought it not unmeet firſt, before I enter into the Proceſs, ſomewhat to note and deſcribe unto you.

At his firſt entry into the place within the Archbiſhops Houſe at Lambeth, where the Archbiſhop and other of the Commiſſioners ſat, he paſſed forth directly by them with his Cap upon his head (making as though he ſaw them not) until one plucked him by the ſleeve, willing him to do reverence unto the Commiſſioners. Whereat he laughingly turned himſelf, and ſpake unto the Archbiſhop on this wiſe: What, my Lord, are you here? by my troth I ſaw you not. No, ſaid the Archbiſhop, you would not ſee. Well (quoth he) you ſent for me, have you any thing to ſay to me? Yea, ſaid the Commiſſioners, we have here authority from the Kings Highneſs to call you to account for your Sermon you made lately at Pauls-Croſs, for that you did not there publiſh to the people the Article which you were commanded then to preach upon. At which words the Biſhop, either for that he did not greatly delight to hear of this matter, or elſe becauſe he would make his friends believe that he was called to account only for his opinion in Religion (as afterward in the ſequel of this Proceſs it more plainly appeareth) began to turn his talk unto other matters, and ſaid unto the Archbiſhop, In good faith my Lord, I would one thing were had in more reverence than it is. What is it, ſaid the Archbiſhop? The bleſſed Maſs, quoth he. You have written very well of the Sacrament: I marvel you do no more honour it. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury therewith perceiving his ſubtilty, and ſeeing his groſs blindneſs, to commend that which was utterly contrary to his opinion, ſaid unto him again: If you think it well, it is becauſe you underſtand it not. The other then adding unto his former groſs ignorance an obſtinate impudency, anſwered, I think I underſtand it better than you that wrote it. Unto which words the Archbiſhop replied, Truly I will eaſily make a child that is but ten years old to underſtand therein as much as you. But what is this to the matter?

The ſtubborn behaviour of Bonner before the Commiſſioners.

Bonner ſpeaketh for the Maſs.

{Anno 1549.} Bonner falleth to ſcorning and taunting of his denouncers.

Moreover, at what time as they began to enter the Judicial proſecuting of their Commiſſion, and had called forth the denouncers to propound ſuch matter as they had to object againſt him, he hearing them ſpeak, fell to ſcorning and taunting of them, ſaying to the one, that he ſpake like a Gooſe; and to the other, that he ſpake like a Woodcock, utterly denying their accuſations to be true. Whereupon the Archbiſhop ſeeing his peeviſh malice againſt the denouncers, asked him, if he would not believe them, whether he would credit the people there preſent? and there withal (becauſe many of them were alſo at the Biſhops Sermon at Pauls) he ſtood up and read the Article of the Kings authority during his young age; ſaying unto them, How ſay you my Maſters, did my Lord of London preach this Article? Whereunto they anſwered, No, no. At which words the Biſhop turning himſelf about, deriding ſaid, Will you believe this fond people? {KING Ed. 6.}

Bonners judgment of the people.

Beſides this, at all his appearings he uſed many irreverent, uncomely, obſtinate, and froward words and behaviours towards the Commiſſiones and others (in defacing their authority with the terms of pretenſed Commiſſioners, pretenſed Witneſſes, and unjuſt, unlawful, and pretenſed proceedings, with recuſation of ſome, and terming others Daws, Woodcocks, Fools, and ſuch like) which I will here omit, for they do more manifeſtly appear in the ſequel of the ſtory in the time and place as they happened; adding yet this much by the way, that although ſuch ſtoutneſs of heart and will, if it had been in a cauſe true and rightful, might have perchance ſeemed in ſome mens judgment to be ſomewhat ſufferable; yet to ſay the truth, in what caſe ſoever it be, being immoderate, as this ſhall appear, it beſeemed no wiſe man, and therefore much leſs one of his calling. For if his cauſe had been good, why did he not take the wrong patiently and meekly, as the true Canon-Law of the Goſpel doth teach him? If it were (as it was indeed) naught and wrong, whereto ſerved ſo bold ſturdy ſtoutneſs, but to ſhew the impudency of the perſon, and to make the caſe worſe which was bad enough before? But belike he was diſpoſed to declare, if need were, what he was able to do in the Law, in ſhifting off the matter by ſubtil Dilatories, and frivolous cavilling about the Law. And if that would not help, yet with facing and bracing, and railing upon the Denouncers with furious words, and irreverent behaviour toward the Kings Commiſſioners, he thought to countenance out the matter before the people, that ſomething might ſeem yet to be in him, whatſoever was in the cauſe. For to conclude, for all his crafty cautels and tergiverſations alledged out of the Law, yet neither his Cauſe could be ſo defended, nor his behaviour ſo excuſed, but that he was therefore both juſtly impriſoned, and alſo in the end moſt lawfully deprived; as by the ſequel of this Proceſs may well appear, the manner whereof is as followeth.

The firſt Action or Seſſion againſt Bonner.

The firſt appearance of Bonner before the Kings Commiſſioners the tenth day of September.

UPON Wedneſday the tenth day of September, in the year of our Lord 1549, and in the third year of the Reign of King Edward the Sixth, Thomas Cranmer, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Metropolitan and Primate of all England, aſſociate with Nicholas Ridley then Biſhop of Rocheſter, Sir William Peter Knight, one of the Kings two Principal Secretaries, and Maſter William May, Doctor of the Civil Law and Dean of Pauls, by vertue of the Kings Commiſſion, ſat Judicially, upon the Examination of Edmund Bonner Biſhop of London, within the Archbiſhops Chamber of Preſence, at his Houſe in Lambeth, before whom there then alſo perſonally appeared the ſaid Biſhop. At which time the Commiſſioners, firſt ſhewing forth their Commiſſion, requeſted Sir William Peter that he would openly publiſh and read the ſame. Which done, the Archbiſhop in the name of the reſt declared unto the Biſhop, that a grievous complaint had been heretofore made and exhibited againſt him in writing, unto the Kings Majeſty and his moſt Honourable Council, and that therefore his Highneſs, with their advice, had committed the Examination thereof unto him and other his Colleagues there preſent, as alſo unto Sir Thomas Smith Knight, the other of his Majeſties two Principal Secretaries, though then abſent, and there withal ſhewed alſo forth a Bill of complaint exhibited unto the King by William Latimer, and John Hooper Miniſters, which they likewiſe requeſted Sir William Peter to read.

The Judges Delegate, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhop of Rocheſter, Sir W. Peter, Dr. May Dean of Pauls.

Sir Thomas Smith then abſent.

Theſe things ended, the Biſhop like a ſubtil Lawyer, having moſt like ſome ſecret intelligence before of theſe matters (whatſoever he pretended to the contrary) pulled out of his boſom a ſolemn Proteſtation ready written, which he then exhibited unto the Commiſſioners, requeſting that the ſame might be there openly read; the Copy whereof is this in tenor and form as followeth.

The

KING Edw.6

The tenor and form of Edmund Bonner Biſhop of London his Proteſtation, exhibited to the Kings Commiſſioners at his firſt appearing.

The form of a Copy of Anners Proteſtation.

EDmundus Lond. Epiſcopus primo & ante omnia proteſtor quod per hanc meam comparitionem ſeu per aliqua per me hic dicta ſeu dicenda, allegata ſeu alleganda, propoſita ſeu proponenda, exhibita ſeu exhibenda, geſta ſeu gerenda, objecta ſeu objicienda, exercita ſeu exercenda, facta ſeu fienda, petita ſeu petenda, non intendo in vos dominos Judices præſentes tanquam in judices mihi in hac parte competentes & idoneos aliquo modo conſentire, veſtram juriſdictionem preſentem in hac parte aliquatenus prorogare, niſi prout ac quatenus de jure ad hoc tenear & aſtringar rationique conſonum videatur: & ſub proteſtatione prædicta & ea ſemper mihi ſalva (a qua recedere non intendo, ſed eandem in omnibus & ſingulis deinceps in hoc negotio prætenſo per me agendis, pro repetita haberi volo) dico & allego quod literæ commiſſionales prætenſæ vobis (ut dicitur) in hac parte directæ, ſeu earum vera & legitima copia nunquam antehac mihi oſtenſæ aut monſtr. fuerunt, nec a me aliquo modo viſæ, lectæ aut cognitæ, vel mihi traditæ. This Proteſtation being read, he requeſted the Commiſſioners that he might have the Bill of complaint delivered him. Which when he had well peruſed, he ſaid, that the ſame was very general, and ſo general, as that he could not directly anſwer thereunto. Whereunto the Archbiſhop anſwered, that the ſpecial cauſe of the complaint againſt him was, for that he had tranſgreſſed the Kings Commandment, given unto him by his Council, in that he in his late Sermon made at Pauls-Croſs did not ſet forth unto the people the Kings Highneſs Royal power in his Minority, according to the tenor of the Article delivered unto him by them for that purpoſe; and for proof thereof called forth William Latimer and John Hooper Preachers, who before that time had put up the Bill of complaint unto the King againſt him.

Bonner inveyeth againſt his denouncers.

Upon whom when the Biſhop had earneſtly looked, and well beheld them, he ſaid, As for this Merchant Latimer, I know him very well, and have born with him, and winked at his doings a great while, but I have more to ſay to him hereafter. But as touching this other Merchant Hooper, I have not ſeen him before, howbeit I have heard much of his naughty preaching. And then turning himſelf again unto the Archbiſhop (of purpoſe moſt like to make his friends think that he was not called thither to anſwer for his contemptuous diſobedience, but for matters of Religion) ſaid unto him, Ah my Lord, now I ſee that the cauſe of my trouble is not for the matter that you pretend againſt me, but it is for that I did preach and ſet forth in my late Sermon the true Preſence of the moſt bleſſed Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt to be in the Sacrament of the Altar. For as for theſe my Accuſers, as they be evil, infamed, notorious, and criminous perſons, ſo are they manifeſt and notable Hereticks and ſeducers of the People, eſpecially touching the Sacrament of the Altar: and moſt of all this Hooper. For where in my late Sermon at Pauls-Croſs I preached, That in the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Conſecration, there is the true Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, the ſelf ſame in ſubſtance that was hanged and ſhed upon the Croſs; he the ſame day at afternoon, having a great rablement with him of his damnable ſect, openly in the Pulpit within my Dioceſs, did preach erroneouſly to the people againſt it; and maliciouſly inveying a gainſt my Sermon, denied the verity and preſence of Chriſts true Body and Blood to be in the ſame Sacrament, and alſo falſly and untruly interpreted and expounded my words. And eſpecially, where I preached and affirmed the very true Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt to be in the ſaid Sacrament, the ſelf ſame in ſubſtance that was hanged and ſhed upon the Croſs, he like an Aſs (as he is an Aſs indeed) falſely changed and turned the word that into as, like an Aſs, ſaying, that I had ſaid as it hanged, and as it was ſhed upon the Croſs.

Bonner tranſlateth his cauſe to the matter of the Sacrament.

Bonner maketh exception of his accuſers.

Bonners groſs opinion of the Sacrament of the Altar Anno 1549

Bonner raileth againſt Mr. Hooper.

The Archbiſhop hereupon perceiving the Biſhops drift, and hearing him talk ſo much of the Preſence of Chriſts Body and Blood in the Sacrament, ſaid unto him, My Lord of London, ye ſpeak much of a Preſence in the Sacrament; what Preſence is there, and of what Preſence do you mean? Wherewith the Biſhop being ſomewhat ſtirred and moved in mind (as appeared by his cholerick countenance) ſpake again to the Archbiſhop very earneſtly, and ſaid, What Preſence my Lord? I ſay and believe that there is the very true Preſence of the Body and Blood of Chriſt. What believe you, and how do you believe my Lord? Upon which words the Archbiſhop, becauſe he ſaw his anſwer dark and ſubtil, and minding ſomewhat to nip the groſs abſurdities of the Papiſts, asked him further, whether he were there, face, noſe, mouth, eyes, arms and lips, with other lineaments of his body? Whereat the Biſhop ſhaking his head, ſaid, Oh, I am right ſorry to hear your Grace ſpeak theſe words, and therewith boldly urged the Archbiſhop to ſhew his mind therein. Who wiſely weighing the fond preſumption of the party, with the place and occaſion of their aſſembly, refuſed then ſo to do, ſaying, that their being there at that time was not to diſpute of thoſe matters, but to proſecute their Commiſſion committed to them by their Prince, and therefore willed him to anſwer them unto ſuch things as were objected againſt him.

Talk between the Archbiſhop and Bonner about the Sacrament.

A Queſtion to Bonner.

Whereupon under his Proteſtation, he required to have a Copy both of the Commiſſion, and alſo of the Denunciation given unto him, with time to anſwer thereto. Which the Commiſſioners willingly granted, aſſigning him there to appear again before them upon Friday then next following, at eight of the Clock before Noon, and then to anſwer the tenor of the Denunciation. And ſo for that day (he complaining ſomewhat of the ſhortneſs of his time to anſwer) they all together departed.

Days given to Bonner to anſwer for himſelf.

The ſecond appearance of Bonner in the Chappel of Lambeth, before the Archbiſhop and other four Commiſſioners, the Biſhop of Rocheſter, Secretary Peter, Secretary Smith, and the Dean of Pauls.

The ſecond appearance of Bonner before the Kings Commiſſioners.

UPON Friday the thirteenth of September aforenamed, four Commiſſioners, aſſociated then alſo with Sir Thomas Smith Knight, the other of the Kings two Principal Secretaries, and joynt Commiſſioner with them, ſat judicially in the Archbiſhops Chappel within his houſe at Lambeth. Before whom (according to their former aſſignment) there and then appeared the Biſhop of London. To whom the Archbiſhop in the name of the reſt, firſt ſaid, My Lord of London, the laſt time you were before us, we laid certain Articles and matter to your charge touching your diſobedience to the Kings Majeſty, and you have this day to make your anſwer thereunto, wherefore now ſhew us what you have to ſay for your defence.

Whereto

Bonners anſwer to the Archbiſh. of Canterbury. Where the Biſhop firſt asking the Archbiſhop if he had all ſaid and done, and he again saying, Yea, made this anſwer: My Lord, the laſt day that I appeared before you, I remember there ſat in the Kings Majeſties Commiſſion, your Grace, you my Lord of Rocheſter, you Maſter Secretary Peter, and you Maſter Dean of Pauls, but now I perceive there ſitteth alſo Maſter Secretary Smith. Who becauſe he ſat not at the beginning, nor took there the Commiſſion upon him, ought not ſo to do: for by the Law, they which begin muſt continue the Commiſſion. Whereupon the Archbiſhop firſt anſwered, that he was no Lawyer, and therefore could not certainly ſhew what the Law willeth in that caſe, but, ſaith he, if the Law be ſo indeed, ſurely I take it to be an unreaſonable Law.

A preciſe point of the Lavv, vvhether a nevv Commiſſioner may ſit aftervvard, vvhich ſat not at the beginning.

Well, ſaid the Biſhop, there be here that know the Law, and yet I ſay not this to the intent to ſtand or ſtick much in this point with you, but to tell it you as it were by the way; for I have here mine anſwer ready.

The vvords of Secretary Peter to Bonner. Then ſaid Maſter Secretary Peter to the Biſhop, My Lord, in good ſooth I muſt ſay unto you, that although I have profeſſed the Law, yet by diſcontinuance and diſuſe thereof, and having been occupied a long time in other matters from ſtudy of the Law, I have perhaps forgotten what the Law will do preciſely in this point: but admit the Law were ſo as you ſay, yet your ſelf knoweth, my Lord, that this is our certain rule in Law, Quod Conſuetudo eſt juris interpres optimus, and I am ſure you will not, nor cannot deny, but that the cuſtom is commonly in this Realm in all Judgments and Commiſſions uſed to the contrary; and in very deed we all together at the Court, having the Commiſſion preſented unto us, took it upon us; and therefore for you to ſtick in ſuch trifling matters you ſhall rather in my judgment hurt your ſelf and your matter, than otherwiſe.

The anſvver of Bonner to Secretary Peter. Truly Maſter Secretary, ſaid the Biſhop, I have alſo of long while been diſuſed in the ſtudy of Law, but having occaſion, partly by reaſon of this matter to turn my Books, I find the Law to be as I ſay, and yet, as I ſaid, I tell you hereof by the way, not minding to ſtick much with you in that point.

The vvords of Secretary Smith to Bonner. At which words, Maſter Secretary Smith ſaid alſo unto the Biſhop, Well my Lord of London, as cunning as you make your ſelf in the Law, there be here that know the Law as well as you: and for my part I have ſtudied the Law too, and I promiſe you theſe be but quiddities and quirks invented to delay matters, but our Commiſſion is to proceed ſummarily, & de pleno, and to cut off ſuch frivolous Allegations.

The anſvver of Bonner to Secretary Smith. Well (ſaid the Biſhop again) look well on your Commiſſion, and you ſhall find therein theſe words, To proceed according to the Law and Juſtice: and I ask both Law and Juſtice at your hands.

The words of Secretarie Peter. Then Maſter Secretary Peter willed him to ſtand no more thereupon, but to proceed unto his anſwer. Whereupon he took forth a writing, wherein was contained his anſwer to the Denunciation exhibited the day before by Latimer and Hooper, and delivering it unto the Archbiſhop, ſaid, that it was of his own hand-writing, and for lack of ſufficient time written ſo haſtily and curſorily, that it could ſcarcely be read of any other, and therefore he deſired to read it himſelf; and ſo taking it again, read it openly, the Copy whereof here followeth.

The Anſwer of the ſaid Biſhop, made to the Denunciation aforeſaid.

I Edmund Biſhop of London, concerning William Latimer, and John Hooper, the pretenſed Denunciators of this matter here now before you, and for anſwer unto the unlawful, untrue, and uncharitable pretenſed Denunciation of them, lately in deed contrary to Juſtice and good reaſon, exhibited here and read before you, under proteſtation heretofore made by me, and read unto you, remaining in the Acts of this Court, unto which I refer me, and have the ſame here again for repeated and rehearſed to all purpoſes agreeable to the Law, do for my neceſſary defence and help alledg and ſay as followeth.

Allegations or rather cavillations of Bonner againſt his Denunciators. 1. Firſt, I do alledg and ſay, That the ſaid William Latimer, and John Hooper, or either of them, were not, nor now are to be admitted in any wiſe, by vertue of this or any other Commiſſion, as Denunciators againſt me their Biſhop; ſpecially, for that they and either of them have as well before the time of their pretenſed Denunciation, and alſo then and ſince been and be vile and infamed, notorious criminous perſons, and alſo open and manifeſt notable Hereticks, eſpecially concerning the Sacrament of the Catholick Church, and namely concerning the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, by reaſon of which their Hereſies, they were and be by the order of the ſaid Catholick Church, here in this Realm of England, juſtly and duly Excommunicated and accurſed, and have divided themſelves thereby from the unity and integrity of Chriſts Catholick Church, and for ſuch perſons they have been and are named, reputed, and taken openly, notoriouſly and commonly amongſt the Catholick people of this Realm of England, and eſpecially of this City of London, familiarly haunting and converſant with Sacramentaries, and openly known condemned Hereticks, and favourers and abettors of the ſame, and their deteſtable and peſtilent Doctrine and Hereſie.

Hovv fain vvould this man find a fault if he vvould tell hovv.

2. Item, That the ſaid John Hooper, amongſt other his poyſoned and venomous Doctrine, and amongſt other his erroneous, deteſtable, and abominable Errors and Hereſies taught and ſpread abroad here within this Realm, infecting and poyſoning the Kings ſubjects therewith, hath before the time of the ſaid pretenſed denunciation, damnably and deteſtably made divers Erroneous and Heretical Books, eſpecially one, Intituled, A Declaration of Chriſt, and of his Office, Printed (as he falſly ſurmiſeth) in Zurich, by Auguſtine Friers, where he in many places Heretically and damnably denieth the true Preſence of Chriſts Body in the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, and alſo in effect denieth the verity of Chriſts bleſſed Body upon the Croſs, calling it Mathematical, and excluding thereby the true and very ſubſtance thereof.

This term Mathematical is referred of Hooper not to the ſubſtance of the Body upon the Croſs, but to Papiſtical accidents vvithout ſubſtance upon the Altar.

3. Item, That the ſaid Jo. Hooper doth perſevere and continueth ſtill in his ſaid poyſoned and wicked venomous Doctrine, in all points maintaining and defending the ſame and every part thereof all the ways he can, ſpecially againſt the Preſence of Chriſts bleſſed Body in the Sacrament of the Altar; and his ſaid Books, eſpecially the ſaid Declaration of Chriſt and of his Office, he doth yet allow and maintain as good and Catholick, where indeed it is Heretical, wicked and damnable: the Contents of which Doctrine and Book ſo Intituled, the ſaid Latimer, eſpecially touching the Hereſie againſt the verity of Chriſts Body, and his true Preſence in the Sacrament of the Altar, hath heard, taught, read, preached, believed, holden, maintained and kept, and ſo at this preſent doth yet believe, hold, maintain, and keep, contrary to the Faith of Chriſts Catholick Church, and the unity of the ſame obſerved amongſt all true Chriſtian people, incurring thereby Hereſie, Excommunication, and Schiſm, to the loſs both of their ſouls, and of their believers.

If all truth vvere avvay he had ſpoken more truly.

4. Item, That the ſaid Latimer and Hooper, and either of them, being of theſe vile and deteſtable qualities, and conſequently by the Ordinance of the Catholick Church of Chriſt, as well of this Realm, as alſo throughout all Chriſtendom, being ſo excommunicate and caſt out thereby from the ſaid Church, are not to this pretenſed denunciation againſt me their Biſhop, nor to any judicial act, to be admitted, ne yet to be accompanied withal, or anſwered unto, but are by Scripture, and the order of Chriſts Catholick Church here in this Realm, utterly and truly to be excluded, avoided, deteſted, eſchewed, and abhorred, in all manner of wiſe, of all faithful and true Chriſtian people, fearing God, and deſiring the advancement of the Truth.

5. Item, That where the ſaid Latimer and Hooper, in their ſaid pretenſed Denunciation, amongſt other things, do untruly deduce that they have made their ſaid pretenſed Denunciation, not moved of any malice or evil will, but for the good tranquillity and governance of this Realm, which as they pretend in their gay and glorious proheme, they would ſeem to have a great care and ſolicitude of, where in very deed they and ſuch as they are by ſundry ways, and ſpecially by their corrupt Doctrine, and Heretical naughty preaching, and infecting of the Kings Majeſties people, have diſturbed and greatly inquieted the good tranquillity and governance of this Realm, as evidently and notoriouſly it is well known; the truth is, that this their ſaying is evident and plain falſe; for notorious it is, and lawfully ſhall be proved, that {KING Edw.6} that the ſaid Hooper, conſpiring with the ſaid Latimer and other Hereticks of their factious Sect and damnable Opinion, did the firſt day of September laſt paſt, after that I the ſaid Biſhop of London had made the Sermon at Pauls Croſs, aſſemble maliciouſly, uncharitably, and unlawfully, a great rabblement of ſuch as himſelf is, within my Dioceſs and juriſdiction, and under the colour of reading, did openly and manifeſtly rail and inveigh againſt me the ſaid Biſhop, for my ſaid Sermon, not for any ſuch matter, pretence, or cauſe, as is falſly and untruly ſurmiſed in the ſaid pretenſed denunciation, but only and cheifly for that I the ſaid Biſhop, as became a Chriſtian man, and eſpecially him that had and hath cure and charge of his flock, faithfully and truly to teach them, did, taking occaſion of the Communion not frequented nor reverenced, but neglected and contemned, confeſs and declare my faith and belief openly before my audience, touching the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar miniſtred in the ſame Communion, affirming as the Catholick Church affirmeth and teacheth, That in the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar there is the very true body of our Saviour Chriſt, the ſelf ſame in ſubſtance that hanged upon the Croſs, and the very true blood of our Saviour Chriſt, the ſelf ſame in ſubſtance that was ſhed upon the Croſs. Againſt which affirmation and aſſertion, being Catholick and true, the ſaid John Hooper (albeit now colourably and falſly, and fooliſhly he pretendeth another matter more plauſible in his opinion and judgment in ſundry places of the City and Suburbs of London) hath ſince that time maliciouſly inveighed and taught, learning and teaching his audience heretically (being many in number, and aſſembling in great routs) to reprove, contemn and deſpiſe the ſaid bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, and not to have a true and faithful belief of it, as hitherto always the Catholick Church hath * ever had, the ſaid William Latimer, and the rabblement of his complices, conſpiring and agreeing in points therein, and inducing other to do the ſame, not making any ſuch pretence at all (as they in their ſaid pretenſed denunciation do falſly ſurmiſe and deduce) but only and chiefly offended for my ſaid aſſertion, and affirmation of the verity of Chriſts body and blood in the Sacrament of the Altar.

But what and vvhere vvere your proofs?

As though he could not both confute your errour then, and alſo ſay the truth novv, vvithout all malice or affection.

* Ever, that is ſince Pope Innocentius the third, his time, 400 yeats ago.

Item, That where the ſaid William Latimer and John Hooper in their ſaid pretenſed denunciation do further reduce and falſly ſurmiſe that I the ſaid Biſhop of London had delivered to me from the Kings Majeſty, by the hands of the Lord Protectors Grace, and the reſt of the Kings Majeſties Council, certain Injunctions with Articles to be inſinuated and preached to the Kings Majeſties Subjects at a certain day limited, and after ſuch ſort, form, and manner, as is in the ſaid pretenſed denunciation ſurmiſed untruly, and deduced; It is notorious and evident, as well by the tenour and continue of that writing which was to me the ſaid Biſhop of London delivered by the hands of Sir Thomas Smith Knight, one of the two principal Secretaries to the Kings Majeſty, as otherwiſe, that the ſaid ſurmiſe, in ſuch ſort and faſhion as it is deduced and made, is not true in this behalf, referring me to the tenour of the ſaid writing, which neither was ſigned with the Kings Majeſties hand, nor ſealed with any his Majeſties Seal or Signet, nor yet ſubſcribed by any of the ſaid Council, or delivered after ſuch ſort as is alledged and pretended, as more evidently hereafter ſhall appear, and ſufficiently be proved for my lawful neceſſary defence in this behalf.

Though the Bill of Articles bear no Seal or Signet; yet you be but a Caviler, knowing that you vvere ſent for, in the preſence of the Lord Protector, in the Council Chamber received the Copy of the Injunctions, vvith the Articles promiſed to be ſent to you in vvriting, as they vvere indeed; neither are ye able to deny the ſame, though ye liſt to ſhift out the matter vvith vain terms of uncertainty and obſcurity, vvhen the purpoſe of the thing maketh clean againſt you, according as it appeareth in the Articles hereafter miniſtred againſt you the ſecond time.

6. Item, That in caſe any ſuch Injunctions with Articles, after ſuch form and faſhion, had ſo been delivered unto me, as is ſurmiſed and pretended, yet falſe and untrue it is that I the ſaid Biſhop either left out, or refuſed to declare the ſame for any ſuch cauſe or cauſes, falſly and untruly ſurmiſed in the ſaid pretenſed denunciation, or elſe ſo perverſly and negligently did, as likewiſe in the ſaid pretenſed denunciation is deduced, which thing may well appear in the diſcourſe of my ſaid Sermon, where in ſubſtance and effect I declared faithfully and truly theſe points ſpecially following; that is to wit, that all ſuch as Rebell againſt their Prince, get unto them damnation, and thoſe that refuſe the higher power reſiſt the ordinance of God, and he that died therefore in rebellion, is by the word of God utterly damned, and ſo loſeth both body and ſoul, alledging for this purpoſe the thirteenth Chapter of S. Paul to the Romans, and it at large declaring unto the audience: Furthermore ſpeaking of the Rebels in Devonſhire, Cornwal, Norfolk, and elſewhere within this Realm, ſtanding in doubt whether I might put them in the place of thoſe that put truſt in themſelves and deſpiſed all other, or in the place of both, doing as they did, forgetting God, not duly conſidering the Kings Majeſty their ſupreme, head next and immediately under God, forgetting their Wives, their Children, their Kinsfolk, their Alliance, Acquaintance, and Friends, yea themſelves, and their native Country; and moſt unnaturally rebelling againſt their Sovereign Lord and King, whom by Gods Law they were bound to love, ſerve, and faithfully obey; I did to the beſt of my power diſſwade Rebellion, and exhort the audience unto true obedience being thus commanded; and all Rebellion being in like manner forbidden under pain of eternal damnation, all theſe Rebels in Cornwal, Devonſhire, Norfolk, or elſewhere, who take upon them to aſſemble a power and force againſt their King and Prince, againſt the Laws and Statutes of the Realm, and went about to ſubvert the order of the Commonwealth, did not only deſerve therefore death, as Rebels and Traitours, but alſo did accumulate unto themſelves eternal damnation, even to be in the burning fire of Hell, with Lucifer the Father and firſt author of pride, diſobedience and rebellion. And here I did ask who had induced the ſaid Rebels thus to do? To which I anſwered by another queſtion, demanding who moved and induced Eve to take the Apple and break her obedience againſt Gods commendment? Who moved alſo and induced Cain to kill his Brother Abel? Yea, who moved Judas the Apoſtle to betray his Maſter Chriſt? Was it not the Devil? Yes truly, and he it is, ſaid I, that of his great malice and hatred to men and good order hath moved and induced theſe Rebels to this unnatural rebellion againſt their Prince and Sovereign Lord. Whereupon I asked what pretences they had, and anſwering thereto, ſaid; that amongſt other they had Maſſes and Holy Water, upon which I exclaiming againſt them, ſaid good Lord; is not this a marvellous thing, to palliate, colour, excuſe, and maintain Rebellion and inobedience, to pretend Maſs or Holy Water, as who ſaith, that theſe things had been inſtituted and ordaind to defend, maintain, and excuſe Rebellion, Treaſon, and inobedience, which I told the audience they could not do. And thereupon I brought four Texts of Scripture to prove this thing that I ſaid, alledging the ſixteenth Chapter of the Book of Numbers, the fifteenth Chapter of the firſt Book of Kings, the tenth Chapter of Leviticus, and the fourth that my ſelf added alſo, the thirteenth of S. Luke, and joyned with the fifth of the Acts, ſetting them forth the beſt I could, as one not much exerciſed in preaching, but reſtrained therefrom. And here I concluded, that whatſoever pretences theſe Rebels had of Maſſes, Holy Water, or ſuch other; it could not in any wiſe excuſe or defend their Rebellion and Inobedience, referring my ſelf herein to the indifferent hearers in the ſaid audience. And here pulling out a writing, ſent from the Kings Majeſties Privy Council unto me, touching the victory againſt the ſaid Rebels, which for brevity of time my memory would not ſerve to declare without Book, I did rehearſe it in writing word by word. In doing whereof it well appeared, that I did not favour the opinion of the ſaid Rebels, nor maintain their enterpriſe, but contrariwiſe did deteſt them and all their doings, declaring obedience to be better than ſacrifice; And that in diſobedience and rebellion nothing could or did pleaſe Almighty God. Further, taking occaſion of the proud Phariſee and the humble Publican aſcending into the Temple to pray, and noting the outward and extern doing of them both, with the ſucceſs thereof, I declared to the audience touching the order of the Church and the extern rites and ceremonies of the divine ſervice, that for as much as God requireth humility of heart, innocency of living, knowledge of him, Charity and love to our neighbour, and obedience to his Word, to his Miniſters, and to the ſuperior powers, we muſt bring all theſe things to to all our prayers, to all our ſervice, and that this is the ſacrifice that Chriſt requireth, and that theſe be the things that make all other things pleaſant to Almighty God; further ſaying, that the extern rites are but exerciſes of Religion, and appointed by ſuperiour powers, and that in the chooſing thereof we muſt obey the Magiſtrates, and that we alſo do ſee that thoſe things ever have been and ſhall be divers, as the time and place is, and yet all hath pleaſed God, ſo long as humility of heart, innocency of living, knowing of God, charity and love our neighbour, with obebience to Gods word, Gods miniſters, and ſuperiour powers, are concurrent and preſent therewith.

7. Moreover, I then ſaid, that if any man ſhould uſe rites and diſobey thereby the ſuperiour powers, the devotion of his ceremony was made evil by his diſobedience. Inſomuch that that which, ſtanding the Law, might be good, was by pride, diſobedience, and rebellion, made evil and unprofitable, putting example in the fact of Saul, reſerving the fat Sheep for ſacrifice, and in Chore, Dathan, and Abyram, and alſo in Nadab and Abihu, Aarons two children, and in the Galileans, whoſe blood Pilate did mire with their ſacrifices. And thereupon I told the audience that they muſt do herein eſpecially two things: The firſt, they muſt joyn to and with their devotion faithful obedience, and then they ſhall win the Garland, and otherwiſe have but a zeal, Sed non ſecundum ſcientiam, deſerving no thank or praiſe of God; and alſo they muſt, with and to their obedience, joyn devotion, knowing that God more doth require and conſider the heart, than the outward doing. And thereupon I exhorted the audience, that when they came to take the Communion, or to hear or ſay the Service, appointed by the Kings Majeſty, they muſt, bring devotion and inward prayer with them, or elſe their prayers ſhall be but vain, as wanting and lacking that thing which God requireth, that is, the heart and mind to pray to him. And here in becauſe I marvelled that the Communion was no more frequented now adaies, and lamenting the unreverent coming to it and uſing of it, fearing that it proceeded of an evil opinion and belief touching the Sacrament of the Altar, miniſtred and diſtributed at the ſame Communion, and to the intent to make the people have better opinion of it than they ſeemed to have, I did faithfully, truly and plainly declare my belief of the ſaid Sacrament, wherewith the ſaid Latimer and Hooper, with their complices, were ſo much offended and agrieved.

But where was any mention made of the Kings power in his minority, as it was injoyned you to treat of?

8. Item, That where the ſaid William Latimer and John Hooper do further in the ſaid pretenſed denunciation untruly, and uncharitably deduce and alledge, that I in my ſaid Sermon did treat of ſuch things, as moſt ſhould move and ſtir up the people to diſorder and diſſention, it doth hereby evidently and clearly appear, that either the ſaid pretenſed denunciatours do take and eſteem a declaration faithfully made of the loyal obedience of Subjects to the Kings Majeſty, the ſupreme and Sovereign Lord, and the great peril and danger of Rebellion committed by Subjects againſt their King and Prince and Sovereign Lord, to be a moving, provoking and ſtirring up of people to diſcord and diſſention, or elſe that the affirmation and aſſertion Catholick of the verity of Chriſts body and blood in the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, ſet forth by me as afore, doth effect and work ſuch diſorder and diſſention: For evident it is to all thoſe which indifferently heard my ſaid Sermon, that I (grounding my ſelf upon Scripture, and taking occaſion of the Sunday then occurrent) did ſpeak ſpecially and earneſtly of theſe two things, without taxing of any man ſpecially by name, or other circumſtance, to ſlander them thereby, and I did both ſet forth the obedience and duty of all Subjects, generally to their King, and ſpecially of Subjects of this Realm to the Kings Majeſty that now is, whoſe minority to all people of this Realm is more than manifeſt, and is alſo apparent, or evidently known to all the whole world beſide: And alſo, I did then declare and lay open the imminent danger and great peril of rebellion in Subjects againſt the high powers and authority, and alſo ſpecially of the rebellion late committed by them of Devonſhire, Cornwal, Norfolk, and elſewhere, againſt the Kings Majeſty that now is, which I would not have done, except I both had believed that all the Kings Subjects without exception were bound to obey the Kings Majeſty even as he now is, was, and ſhall be, during his life, which our Lord long preſerve to all our comforts and wealth, and alſo that the Rebellion of late ſo committed againſt his Majeſty was damnable, and utterly deteſtable and condemned by Gods Law; and herein I refer me to the indifferent hearers of this my Sermon, wiſhing that this Latimer, and Hooper, with all the reſt of theſe new Preachers, did mean as faithfully, truly, obediently and Catholickly, as I alwaies have done toward the Kings Majeſty, his honour, authority, Royal power, and ſurety of his perſon and Realm, and did not more move, incourage, and ſtir the Kings Majeſties Subjects to ſedition, tumult, and inobedience, by their erroneous doctrine and teaching, than I did at any time incourage, move or ſtir any of them in any wiſe, or give occaſion to any of the ſame. {KING Edw.6}

If ye did believe it, why did ye not fully approve and declare the ſame to the people?

9. Item, Where the ſaid William Latimer and John Hooper do falſly furmiſe in their pretenſed denunciation, that it was of no light ground looked for, that I the ſaid Biſhop of London ſhould more apertly have declared the Injunctions and Articles aforeſaid, and that it did ſo appear unto their judgments; I do ſay that their judgments are corrupted and only ſet to ſlander and picking of quarrels in this behalf, being well aſſured and ſo credibly informed that all the worſhipful and honeſt Catholick perſons of my ſaid audience were fully ſatisfied both as touching obedience to the Kings Majeſty in his tender age and minority, and alſo touching the penalty and great peril of puniſhments of the Rebellion ſo lately committed againſt the ſaid Majeſty by the foreſaid Rebels. And moreover I do ſay, that before my Lord Protectors Grace, and the reſt of the Kings Majeſties moſt honourable Counſel then preſent, I made my excuſe, and alledged many impediments for my not preaching at the Croſs, and did not further promiſe but to do the beſt I could, which of my fidelity and conſcience I did, not omitting any thing of purpoſe or evil will, that might be to the ſatisfaction of all people both good and bad in every condition and point, ſpecially in this behalf, collecting and gathering together, with all diligent ſtudy, all that might make, in my judgment and opinion, for the better ſetting forth of the ſame.

Ergo, by your own confeſſion it appeareth that theſe injunctions were given you by my Lord Protectors own mouth, though not with his own hands which Article you will not grant.

Thus have you Bonners anſwer to the denunciation aforeſaid: Wherein firſt he alledged (or rather ſhamelelly and ſlanderouſly cavilled) that thoſe his denouncers were vile, infamed and notorious criminous perſons, and alſo open and manifeſt Hereticks, as well againſt the reſt of the Sacraments of the Church, as chiefly againſt the Sacrament of the Altar; and were for the ſame by the orders of the Church excommunicated and accurſed, and were ſo taken of all the Catholicks of this Realm, and eſpecially Hooper; who, beſides other his poyſoned doctrine and Hereſie amongſt the people, had alſo before the time of the denunciation made divers erroneous and Heretical Books againſt the true preſence of Chriſts body in the Sacrament of the Altar, and did alſo continue in the ſame, allowing and maintaing it as good and Catholick. Which Books and Doctrine (chiefly againſt the Sacrament of the Altar) William Latimer had, and then likewiſe did allow, believe, and teach, to the loſs of both their own ſouls, and alſo their believers, and therefore were not now nor ought at any time to be admitted either in this their denunciation againſt him, or in any other judicial act; and that the rather alſo, becauſe that although they pretend in their denunciation, that they made not the ſame of any malice or evil will towards him, but for the good tranquillity and quiet governance of this Realm, yet was it notoriouſly known, that as well the ſame day at afternoon in which he the ſaid Biſhop preached at the Croſs of Pauls, as alſo at ſundry other times, they two, conſpiring with other of their faction, did maliciouſly and unlawfully within his Dioceſs aſſemble together a great rabblement of ſuch as themſelves were, and there under the colour of reading did openly rail and inveigh againſt him, not for any the cauſes pretended in their denunciation, but becauſe he had in his Sermon declared (as the Catholick Church taught) that in the Sacrament of the Altar there was the very true body and blood of Chriſt, the ſame in ſubſtance that was hanged and ſhed upon the Croſs.

Exceptions laid by Bonner againſt Maſter Hooper his denouncer.

The frivolous quarrelling of Bonner againſt his denouncer.

Then after theſe vain and frivolous allegations againſt the denouncers, he cometh and anſwereth to the ſubſtance of their denunciation, and ſaith, that where they in the ſame do falſly furmiſe that there were delivered unto him from Bonner put to a bare ſhift.

Bonners writing exhibited to the Commiſſioners, anſwering to the denuntiation

{KING Edw.6} from the Kings Majeſty, by the hands of the Lord Protector and the reſt of his Highneſs Council, certain Injunctions and Articles to be publiſhed and declared unto the people, at a day limited in the ſame, their Information, in ſuch ſort as it was deduced, was moſt falſe and untrue, for that the Articles delivered unto him by Sir Thomas Smith, one of the Kings Secretaries, were neither ſigned with the Kings own hand, neither ſealed with his Highneſſes Seal or Siguet, nor yet ſubſcribed by any of his Council, &c.

Bonners vain cavillation to no purpoſe.

Where mark, I beſeech you, the ſubtilty of a diſloyal Papiſt, who, becauſe the Articles were not ſealed by the King and his Council, would make them therefore not to be of any ſuch force, as that the breach thereof ſhould cauſe him to incur the danger of contemptuous diſobedience. But admit they were not Signed nor Sealed (of which thing by the way in the denunciation there is no mention yea or nay) yet it is manifeſt by the ſecond Bill {Anno 1549.} of Articles miniſtred unto him by the Commiſſioners, in the fourth Act of his Proceſs, that at ſuch time as he was before the Council, thoſe Articles were by the commandment of the Lord Protector, openly there read unto him by one of the Secretaries, and after addition of the Article concerning the Kings lawful power and authority during his young years, were alſo delivered unto him by the hands of the Lord Protector, in the preſence of the reſt of the Council; who thus receiving them, promiſed there faithfully to accompliſh all the contents thereof. After which, they were again delivered unto Secretary Smith, to amend ſuch things therein as the Lord Protector and the reſt of the Council had there appointed. Which being accordingly done (as the Biſhop himſelf at the laſt receipt thereof confeſſed) were finally delivered unto him by the Secretary; and therefore was this but a poor ſhift.

Bonners ſuppoſition.

Now after this, he maketh a ſuppoſition, that in caſe it were true, that the Injunctions were delivered him according to their information: Yet was it untrue that he did omit or refuſe to declare the ſame for any ſuch cauſes as they had alledged againſt him, and that did well appear in the diſcourſe of his Sermon, which tended principally (as he ſaid) to the diſallowing and condemnation of all Rebels, and chiefly of the Rebels in Norfolk, Suffolk, Devonſhire, and Cornwal, or elſewhere within this Realm of England: Who forgetting their Allegiance and Duty unto their Prince, aſſigned to them by Gods word as their ſupreme Head, their natural love and care for their Countrey, Wives, Children, and Kinsfolk, did both deſerve death bodily as Traitors, and alſo accumulate unto themſelves damnation of body and ſoul eternally with Satan the Father and firſt mover of all Rebellion and Diſobedience; and herewithal further exclaiming againſt the pretences of thoſe Rebels, who amongſt other things pretended the Maſs and Holy Water, with ſuch like, which were never ordained for the purpoſe to colour and maintain Rebellion (as he ſaid he then proved out of the 16. of Numbers 1. Reg. 15. Levit. 10. and 4. Luke 13. and Acts 5. in the beſt manner that he could, as one not exerciſed greatly in preaching, but reſtrained therefrom) but having humility of heart, innocency of living, knowledge of God, love to our Neighbours, with obedience to Gods word, Miniſters, and ſuperior powers concurrent with them, they being external Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, were exerciſes of Religion, and appointable by ſuperior powers; and yet that, which (ſtanding the Law) might be good, was by pride and diſobedience made evil and unprofitable.

Bonner againſt the Rebels.

External rites and ceremonies.

As juſtly they might, the ſame being heretical & blaſphemous againſt the humanity of Chriſt.

And here he further ſaid becauſe he ſaw the people ſlack in coming to the Communion and Divine Service, ſet forth by the Kings Majeſty, and to the intent he would make them have a better opinion in the Sacrament than he thought they had, he then faithfully did declare his belief therein. Wherewith his denouncers being offended, they uncharitably and untruly deduced in their pretenſed denunciation, that in his Sermon he did intreat of ſuch things as moſt ſhould ſtir up unto diſſention and tumult; whereby it appeared unto him, that his Denouncers either took his Catholick aſſertion of the verity of Chriſts Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar, or elſe his faithful declaration made of the obedience of Subjects unto the Kings Majeſty their ſupreme and Sovereign Lord, with the peril and danger of Rebellion committed againſt him, to be the cauſe of diſorder and diſſenſion; for that, ſaith he, of theſe two points he chiefly ſpake, and eſpecially of obedience to the King, whoſe minority was more than manifeſtly known, as well amongſt the people of this Realm, as elſewhere throughout the world beſides; which he would not have done except he had believed, that both all his Subjects were bounden to obey him, even as he then was and ſhould be during his life, and alſo that the Rebellion of late committed againſt him was deteſtable and condemned by Gods Word: And therefore he wiſhed that his two Denouncers, with all the reſt of the new Preaches, did mean as faithfully, obediently, and Catholickly towards the Kings honour, Royal power, and ſurety of perſon, as he did, and had not more moved the people to tumults and diſobedience by their erroneous Doctrine and teaching, than he had at any time given any occaſion thereunto.

Bonners purgation of himſelf for his Sermon.

Then finally he concluded and ſaid, That whereas his aforeſaid Denouncers ſurmiſe, That it was of no light ground looked for, as it appeared in their judgements, that he ſhould more apertly have declared the contents of the Injunctions and Articles than he did, that their judgments were in that behalf corrupted and ſet to ſlander and picking of quarrels; for he was well aſſured, and credibly enformed, that all his honeſt and Catholick Audience were fully ſatisfied, both touching their obedience to the Kings Majeſty in his tender age, and alſo concerning the great penalty and peril that the late Rebels incurred by their diſobedience. And beſides that, when he was before the Lord Protector and the reſt of the Council, after he had made his excuſe, and alledged many impediments for his not preaching at the Croſs, he did not then further promiſe but to do the beſt he could, which he hath of his Fidelity and Conſcience accompliſhed, not omitting any thing of purpoſe or evil will, that might ſatisfie the people in any point concerning the Premiſes.

Whilſt he was thus reading theſe Anſwers, objecting againſt his denouncers ſuch cauſes and quarrels as he before alledged, for which he would have earneſtly had the denouncers to be repelled of the Commiſſioners; the Archbiſhop of Canterbury replyed, That if there were any ſuch Law, he thought it not to be a good or godly Law, but a Law of the Biſhop of Rome. For, ſaid he, if my matter and cauſe be good, what ſhould I care who accuſe me, yea although he were the Devil of Hell.

The Archbiſhop replieth againſt Bonner.

The Law of the Biſhop of Rome reproved.

No Sir, ſaid the Biſhop of London, it is the Kings Law uſed in the Realm.

The Popes Law fathered upon the King.

Well, My Lord (ſaid the Archbiſhop) ye be too full of your Law: I would wiſh you had leſs knowledge in that Law, and more knowledge in Gods Law, and of your duty.

Archbiſhops

Well, anſwered the Biſhop again, ſeeing your Grace falleth to wiſhing, I can alſo wiſh many things to be in your perſon.

Bonners

Then ſpake Secretary Peter to the Biſhop as touching theſe denouncers; we are not ſo ſtraited in this matter, but that we may proceed againſt you, either at their promotion, or without them at our pleaſure.

A Gods name then (ſaid Bonner) put them by, and then do as your pleaſure ſhall be, ſo you do me right, for I ask but right.

Secretary Smiths

Nay ſaid Secretary Smith, you ask you wot not what: You would have us follow your mind in theſe Quiddities and Quirks; and all is nothing elſe but to delay juſtice. And you do herein as Thieves, Murtherers, and Traitors, not to have the truth known.

Bonners

Say you ſo to me, quoth the Biſhop? I thank you. Well, I could ſay ſomewhat to you alſo, were ye not in the place ye be, but let it paſs. As for my matter, I fear it not, it is not ſo evil as you make it; for I have your own hand-writing for my diſcharge, which when I ſhall ſee time, I ſhall ſhew forth.

Secretary Smith. Bonners

My hand, quoth the Secretary. Let me ſee it, and let it be read openly. So it ſhall, ſaid the Biſhop, when I ſhall ſee time.

Secretary Smith. Bonner.

Then ſaid Mr. Smith, you do uſe us thus to be ſeen a cunning Lawyer.

Well cracked Mr. Bonner.

Indeed, quoth the Biſhop, I knew the Law, ere you could read it.

Bonner flieth ſtill to the Sacrament of the Altar.

Articles delivered up againſt Bonner.

With that, Secretary Peter willed the Biſhop to proceed in reading of his anſwers; who ſo did, and when he had finiſhed, Latimer delivered up a writing in Paper unto the Archbiſhop and the reſt of the Commiſſioners; who then ſaid unto the Biſhop of London, here be certain Articles which we intend to miniſter unto you.

The Biſhop therewith ſaid, do you miniſter them of your office, or at the promotion of theſe men? (pointing to Latimer and Hooper) for I perceive they gave them unto you.

Secretary Peter.

Nay ſaid Secretary Peter, we will miniſter them unto you, Ex officio mero, and thereupon took an Oath of the Biſhop de fideliter reſpondendo. Who, deſiring a Copy of the Articles, required alſo a competent time to be given unto him to make anſwer thereunto.

Bonner requireth reſpite to anſwer.

Secretary Peter.

To whom Secretary Peter replied, ſaying, My Lord, here be certain of the Articles touching your own fact, which you may anſwer unto forthwith; as whether you wrote your Sermon or not before you preached it.

Bonner.

Whereunto the Biſhop anſwered, that he wrote it not, but he drew certain notes of it.

Secretery Peter. Bonner.

Then whoſe Counſel, ſaid he, and adviſe uſed you in making your Sermon?

To which he alſo anſwered, that he had therein uſed his own Counſel and Books, and yet my Chaplains, quoth he, be much ſuſpected for my doings in many things, and ſometimes I for theirs, when there is no cauſe why.

Theſe words ended, the Commiſſioners aſſigned him Monday the ſixteenth of September then next following, to appear before them, and to make his full anſwers unto all the Articles miniſtred unto him by them this day; the Contents whereof are as followeth.

The form and tenour of the Articles miniſtred unto the Biſhop of London, by the Kings Commiſſioners.

The third Sellion or appearance of Bonner. {Ann. 1549}

MOnday the ſixteenth of September, the Archbiſhop aſſociated with the Biſhop of Rocheſter, Secretary Smith, and Dr. May Dean of Pauls, ſate judicially within his Chapel at Lambeth: Before whom there and then appeared the Biſhop of London, according as he was aſſigned in the laſt Seſſion: At which time he exhibited unto the Commiſſioners in writing his anſwers unto the laſt former Articles.

The form of the Articles miniſtred againſt Bonner.

But before the ſame were there read, the Archbiſhop ſaid unto him, that his late anſwer, made the thirteenth of September unto the denunciation, were very obſcure, and therewith alſo contained much matter of ſlander againſt Latimer and Hooper, and much untruth, and therefore they deſired there to purge themſelves.

Bonners anſwer to the Articles in writing.

Whereupon Latimer, firſt obtaining leave to ſpeak, ſaid, that the Biſhop of London had moſt falſly, untruly, and uncharitably accuſed him, laying to his charge many fained and untrue matters in his former anſwers to the denunciation, and ſuch as he ſhould never be able to prove. For where in his ſaid anſwer he alledged, that Hugh Latimer and John Hooper, with other Hereticks conſpiring againſt him, did the firſt day of September after the Biſhops Sermon aſſemble themſelves together unlawfully againſt the ſaid Biſhop, that ſaying of his was moſt untrue. For neither that day, nor yet before that day, nor until certain days after, he ever knew or ſpake with Hooper. And as touching his own preaching there, openly accuſed by the Biſhop, he ſaid he never held, taught, or preached any thing concerning the bleſſed Sacrament, otherwiſe than he ought to do, nor otherwiſe than according to the Scriptures, and true Catholick Faith of Chriſts Church; and therefore offered himſelf to be tried by the Archbiſhop, or other ſuch learned men as it ſhould pleaſe the Kings Majeſty, or the ſaid Commiſſioners to appoint; and further to ſuffer, to be hanged, drawn and quartered, if the Biſhop could juſtly prove true the things that he had there ſhamefully laid to his charge. Then Maſter Hooper, upon like Licence obtained, ſaid to this effect.

Hooper and Latimer deſire to purge themſelves againſt Bonners ſlander.

Purgation of Latimer.

Bonner reproved of untruth.

M. Latimer purgeth himſelf againſt Bonner.

This ungodly man (pointing to the Biſhop) hath moſt uncharitably and ungodly accuſed me before your Grace and this audience, and hath laid to my charge that I am an Heretick. Whereas I take God to record, I never ſpake, read, taught, or preached any Hereſie, but only the moſt true and pure Word of God. And where he ſaith, I frequent the company of Hereticks, I do much marvel of his ſo ſaying: For it hath pleaſed my Lord Protectors Grace, my ſingular good Lord and Mr. and my Ladies Grace, to have me with them, and I have preached before them, and much uſed their company, with divers other worſhipful perſons, and therefore I ſuppoſe this man meaneth them. And further, whereas he ſaith that I have made heretical Books againſt the bleſſed Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt, calling it Mathematical, I perceive that this man knoweth not what this word Mathematical there meaneth, and therefore underſtandeth not my Book: Which, I take God to be my judge, I have made truly and ſincerely, and according to his holy word: And by the ſame his holy word and Scriptures I am always and ſhall be ready to ſubmit my ſelf to your Graces judgment and the ſuperior powers to be tryed; with many ſuch more words of like importance. Which ended, the Archbiſhop, to ſhorten this matter, asked the Biſhop how he could prove that Hooper and Latimer aſſembled together againſt him the firſt of September, as he had alledged, ſeeing they now denied it, and therefore willed him to anſwer forthwith thereunto.

{KING Edw.6}

This term Mathematical, is referred of Mr. Hooper not to the ſubſtance of Chriſts body u on the Croſs, but to the Papiſtical accidents, without ſubſtance upon the Altar. The Archbiſhop.

Bonner.

The Biſhop then anſwered that he would duly prove it, ſo that he might be admitted to do it according to Law, and with that he pulled out of his ſleeve certain Books, ſaying, I have this Varlets Books which he made againſt the Bleſſed Sacrament which you ſhall hear. Then as he was turning certain leaves thereof, Hooper began again to ſpeak: But the Biſhop, turning himſelf towards him, tauntingly ſaid, Put up your Pipes, you have ſpoken for your part, I will meddle no more with you, and therewith read a certain ſentence upon the Book. Which done, he ſaid, Lo here you may ſee his opinion, and what it is. At which words the people ſtanding behind, and ſeeing his unreverent and unſeemly demeanour and rayling, fell ſuddenly into great laughing. Whereat the Biſhop being moved, and perceiving not the cauſe wherefore they did laugh, turned him towards them in a great rage, ſaying, Ah Woodcocks, Woodcocks.

Bonner chargeth Mr. Hooper of Hereſie.

The people laugh Bonner to ſcorn.

Bonner calleth the people woodcocks.

Then ſaid one of the Commiſſioners, why ſay you ſo My Lord? Marry, quoth he, I may well call them Woodcocks, that thus will laugh, and know not whereat, nor yet heard what I ſaid or read.

Well my Lord of London, ſaid the Archbiſhop, then I perceive you would perſwade this audience, that you were called hither for preaching of your belief in the Sacrament of the Altar, and therefore you lay to theſe mens charge (meaning Hooper and Latimer) that they have accuſed you of that. Howbeit, there was no ſuch thing laid to your charge, and therefore this audience ſhall hear openly read the denunciation that is put up againſt you, to the intent they may the better perceive your dealing herein. And therewithal he ſaid unto the people, My Lord of London would make you believe, that he is called hither for declaring and preaching his opinion touching the Sacrament of the Altar: But to the intent you may percieve how he goeth about to deceive you, you ſhall hear the denunciation that is laid in againſt him read unto you, and thereupon he delivered the denunciation unto Sir John Maſon Knight, who there read it openly. Which done, the Archbiſhop ſaid again unto the Audience, Lo, here you hear how the Biſhop of London is called for no ſuch matter as he would perſwade you.

The Archbiſhop.

The words of the Archbiſhop to the people.

Sir John Maſon readeth the denunciation to the people.

With this the Biſhop being in a raging heat, as one clean void of all humanity, turned himſelf about unto the people, ſaying, Well, now hear what the Biſhop of London ſaith for his part. But the Commiſſioners, ſeeing his inordinate contumacy, denyed him to ſpeak any more, ſaying, that he uſed himſelf very diſobediently, with more like words.

Bonner in a rage.

Bonner for his contumacy not ſuffered to ſpeak to the people.

Notwithſtanding, he ſtill perſiſting in his unreverent manner of dealing with the Commiſſioners, pulled out of his ſleeve another Book, and then ſaid unto the Archbiſhop, My Lord of Canterbury, I have here a note out of your Books that you made touching the Bleſſed Sacrament, wherein you do affirm the verity of the Body and Blood of Chriſt to be in the Sacrament, and I have another Book alſo of yours of the contrary opinion; which is a marvelous matter.

Bonner chargeth the Biſhop with contrariety in his own Books.

M. Hooper cleareth himſelf againſt the falſe ſlander of Bonner.

To

KING Edw.6

The Archbishop purgeth himself and his Books.

To the which the Archbishop answered, that he made no Books contrary one to another, and that he would defend his Books, howbeit he thought the Bishop understood them not: For I promise you, quoth he, I will find a Boy of ten years old, that shall be more apt to understand that matter than you my Lord of London be.

Bonner commanded to answer to the Articles.

Thus after much multiplying of like words, the Commissioners, thinking not good to spend any more wast time with him, willed him to shew forth his answers unto the Articles objected the last day against him. Whereupon, he having them ready did read the same openly to them. Wherein, after many words of his former protestation recited, with a marvellous lamentation to see that one of his vocation, at the malicious denunciation of vile Hereticks, should be used after such strange sort, having nevertheless done the best he could to declare his obedience unto the Kings Majesty for the repressing and discouraging of Rebellion and Rebels, and also for the advancement of the veriety of Christs true body and his presence in the Sacrament of the Altar, for which only the malicious denouncers with their complicies had studied to molest and trouble him, he then cometh to answering the Articles and saith, that to the First, Second, and Fourth, he hath already in the former answers to the denunciation sufficiently answered, and therefore was not bound by Law to answer any further.

Bonner answereth to the Articles.

As to the third, and fifth, he said, he began to write his Sermon, but being soon weary, he did only make certain notes thereof, without help of any other, saving that he shewed them to his Chaplains, requiring them to put him in remembrance thereof. Amongst the which, for the better setting forth of the Kings Majesties power and authority in his minority, he had collected as well out of Histories, as also out of the Scriptures; the names of divers young Kings, who notwithstanding the minority were faithfully and obediently honoured, and reputed for very true and lawful Kings; As Henry the Third, being but Nine years old, Edward the Third, being but thirteen years, Richard the Scond, being but eleven years, Henry the Sixth, being not fully one year, Edward the Fifth being but eleven years, Henry the Eighth being but eighteen years of age. And out of the Old Testament, Osias and Achas who were but sixteen years old, Solomon and Manasses being but twelve years, Josias, Joachim, and Joas, being but eight years of age when they entred their Reigns. All which notes with many other he had purposed to declare, if they had come into his memory, as indeed they did not, because the same was disturbed, partly for lack of use of preaching, and partly by reason of a Bill that was delivered to him from the Kings Council, to declare the Victory then had against the Rebels in Norfolk and Devonshire, which being of some good length confounded his memory; and partly also for that his Book in his Sermon time fell away from him, wherein were divers of of his notes which he had collected for that purpose: So that he could not remember what he would, but yet in generality he perswaded the people to obedience to the Kings Majesty, whose minority was manifestly known to them and to all other.

Examples of Kings that were young, and yet sufficient Kings.

Bonner excuseth his Oblivion. A good Prelate, that had lost his memory for lack of preaching.

Bonners Book of notes, fell from him at his Sermon, as he excuseth.

Then as to the sixth he said he knew not the Rebels opinion, and therefore could not answer thereunto. And as for answer to the seventh, eighth, ninth, and eleventh Articles which touched his Pastoral Office, he said that notwithstanding his manifold and great troubles, as well by his own business and his Families sickness, as also by uncharitable informations made against him, yet he hath not failed to give order unto his Officers straitghtly to look unto such matters, and such as he hath known, which were very few or none, he caused to be punished according to the Laws. All which answers, with other written with his own hand hereunder follow.

Bonner knew not the Rebels opinion if you will believe him.

The answers of Bonner unto the Articles objected to him by the Kings Commissioners the first time.

I Edmund Bishop of London, under protestation heretofore by me made, exhibited and repeated before you, which in all my sayings and doings I intend to have for repeated and rehearsed again to all lawfull effects and purposes for my honest and necessary defence, with protestation also of the nullity and iniquity of your process I had made in this behalf, and likewise of the Generality, Incertainty, Obscurity, Contrariety, Repugnancy, Variety, Insufficiency, and Invalidity of the things alledged and deduced before you against me, as well in the Commission and denunciation in divers parts, as also touching the Articles and Interrogatories so ministred unto me; Lamenting not a little, that one of my vocation, at the malicious denunciation of vile heretical and detestable persons; should be used after this strange sort, having done the best I could to declare mine obedience unto the Kings Most excellent Majesty, for the repressing and discouraging of Rebellion and rebellious persons, and for the advancement of the verity of Christs true body and his presence in the most blessed Sacrament of the Altar. For which only the malicious denunciators with their complicies have studied to molest and trouble me; although colourably they would be seen to pretend other causes, especially the good and tranquility of this Realm, which our Lord God knoweth they care nothing for, but contrariwise do let and impeach the same, corrupting and infecting with thier poysoned and false Doctrine, and teaching the Kings Subjects in this Realm, to the great peril and danger thereof many ways; do answer unto certain pretensed Articles and Interrogatories ministred by you indeed unto me the said Bishop the thirteenth day of September, 1549, as followeth.

He meaneth the Sacrament.

After his long period well blown up with much waste wind of words, at length he beginneth to answer to the Articles before objected.

TO the first Article objected against me, beginning thus; First it is reported, &c. and ending thus, to observe and follow the same; I do say and for answer do refer me unto my former answers heretofore, that is to wit, the thirteenth of September made and exhibited by me before you unto the said pretensed denunciation, touching this matter; alledging withal, that a report of things doth not absolutely prove, nor necessarily inter things to be in very deed true after such a sort, fashion, manner, and form, as sometimes they be reported and rehearsed.

Answer to the 2. Article.

To the second, beginning thus; Item, Whether that you, &c. and ending thus; as they were put unto you; I do answer and say, That this Article doth depend on the first Article next before, which after such sort, fashion, manner, and form as it is deduced, was justly by me, in my answer made unto the same, denied, and I therefore now not bounden by the Law eftsoones to make other answer thereunto.

Answer to the 3. Article.

To the third, being an Interrogatory, and beginning thus; Item, Whether, &c. And ending thus ye did preach; I do answer and say, That I began to write a piece of my Sermon, and being soon weary thereof, I did leave off, and did make only certain notes of my said Sermon, and put the same notes in wrting of mine one hand, without help or Council of any other, and the same notes did shew unto my Chaplains Master Gilbert Bourn and Master Jo. Harpsfield, both before and also since my said Sermon, only desiring them to put me in remembrance of my said notes, and process to be made thereupon, and also to search out for me the names of such Kings as were in their minority when they began to Reign.

To the 4 Article.

To the fourth Article beginning thus; Item, That ye have not declared, &c. and ending thus, as it is in your Article; I do answer and say, That this Article doth depend upon the first and second Articles here before denied, deduced in such sort, manner, and form, as is expressed in the same, and moreover I say, that already answer is made hereunto by me, in my former answers made to the said pretensed Denunciation.

To the 5 Article.

To the fifth Article beginning thus; Item, That ye have not, &c. and ending thus, declared it; I do answer and say, That this Article also doth depend upon the first and second Articles, and that answer is made thereunto by me already in my former answers made unto the said pretensed denunciation. And moreover I do say, That for the better advancement and setting forth of the Kings Majesties Royal Power and authority even in his minority, and for the due obedience of his Majesties Subjects unto his Highness, even during the said minority, I had collected together as well out of Histories as also out of the Scripture of the old Testament, the names of divers Kings being in minority, who not withstanding their said minority were faithfully, duly, and reverently obeyed, honoured, ſerved, taken and reputed for very true and lawful Kings, as Henry the Third, being but nine years old when he entred to reign and govern as King. Edward the Third, being but thirteen years of age. Richard the Second, being but eleven years old. Henry the Sixth, being not fully one year of age. Edward the Fifth, being but eleven years old. Henry the Eighth, being about eighteen years old; and ſo all theſe Kings beings in their minority as the Kings Majeſty that now is, and yet having Authority and power Regal, as appertaineth; and in the old Teſtament, Oſias and Achaz were very true Kings in their minority, being but ſixteen years of age; Solomon and Manaſſes being but twelve years of age; Joſias and Joachim being but eight years of age, and Joas being but eight years old: All which things I ſay I had collected in notes, communicating the ſame with my ſaid two Chaplains, and praying them to put me in remembrance, if in numbring of them, or in ſetting forth in my other notes at the time of my Sermon, I did fail, or have default of memory in any wiſe. And all theſe things I would have ſpecially ſet forth in my ſaid Sermon if they had come to my memory, as indeed they did not, partly for diſturbance of my memory not accuſtomed to preach in that place, partly alſo by reaſon of a certain writing that was ſent to me from the Kings Majeſties Privy Council, being of good length, to declare unto the people touching the victory againſt the Rebels, ſpecially in Norfolk, Devonſhire, and Cornwall, confounding my memory in things which before I had ſet in good order, and partly alſo for the falling away of my Book in the time of my ſaid Sermon, in which were contained divers of my ſaid notes touching the Kings Majeſties minority, as is aforeſaid, having yet nevertheleſs otherwiſe, in generality and ſpeciality, perſwaded the people to obedience, unto the Kings ſaid Majeſty, whoſe minority to them and all other is notoriouſly and manifeſtly known, and his Majeſty, ſaving of theſe late Rebels, faithfully, truly, and reverently obeyed of all the reſt of his Subjects.

Bonner pleadeth Oblivion.

To the 6 f Article. To the ſixth, which beginneth, Whether ye will, &c. And ending thus, The opinion or no; I do anſwer and ſay, that not knowing certainly of which Rebels the Article meaneth, nor yet what their opinion is indeed, I ought not to be driven to make anſwer hereunto, nor yet can make good and perfect anſwer therein though I would.

To the 7 Article. To the ſeventh Article, beginning thus; Item, That ye know, &c. And ending thus, The Kings Majeſties Book; I do anſwer and ſay, that albeit I have by the ſpace of theſe five weeks laſt paſt and more, been in manner continually in buſineſs and trouble, aſwell in providing for my ſaid Sermon, as otherwiſe, ſpecially by reaſon of my Family, much vexed with ſickneſs, to my great diſquietneſs and charge, and alſo by reaſon that I have been ſo much troubled and cumbred by informations and complaints unjuſtly and uncharitably made againſt me, over and beſides the having of divers and ſundry perſons, which daily reſort and come unto me for their ſuits and buſineſs, both in matters of juſtice and otherwiſe, yet I have not omitted to ſend forth to my Archdeachons and other my Officers, to inquire and ſearch diligently in this behalf, and to certifie me accordingly, and yet I cannot hear certainly of any that have heard, been at, or celebrated Maſſes or Evenſongs in the Latine tongue, after the old rite and manner, except it be in the houſe of my Lady Maries Grace, or in the houſes of the Embaſſadors, nor yet there nor in any of them, but by flying and not aſſured report, and without knowing the names and perſons that ſo have heard, been at, or celebrate the ſame, and in this behalf how far I can and ought to proceed and after what ſort, I do refer me unto the Statute late made in that behalf.

To the 8 Article. The eighth Article beginning thus, Item, That ye have, &c. And ending thus, Puniſhment unto them; I do anſwer and ſay, that this Article doth depend of the next Article going before, and ſo conſequently anſwer is already thereunto made.

To the 9 Article. To the ninth Article beginning thus, Item, that ye know, &c. And ending thus, Nor ſee them puniſhed; I do anſwer and ſay, that touching ſuch as either have been denounced or detected for ſuch criminous and culpable perſons to me or my Officers, there hath been proceſs already made before my ſaid Officers, as it appeareth in my Regiſter, and the Acts of my Court: And moreover I have given expreſs commandment to my ſaid Officers, to inquire and ſearch for more ſuch offenders, and to certifie me thereof, that I may proceed againſt them accordingly. {KING Edw. 6}

To the 10 Article. To the tenth Article beginning thus, Item, Ye were, &c. And ending thus, The Kings Majeſties authority in his minority; I do anſwer and ſay, That as touching the time mentioned in the Article, and the Declaration to be made by Doctor Cox, I do not well remember either the ſame time, or yet the ſpecial points and ſubſtance of the ſaid Doctor Coxes Declaration: Truth it is, I was at a Sermon made at Pauls Croſs by the ſaid Doctor Cox, wherein he inveighed againſt my Lord of Wincheſter, and as far as I can now call to my remembrance, it was touching diſobedience, wherewith my Lord of Wincheſter by the ſaid Doctor Cox ſeemed to be charged, and for a Sermon alſo that my Lord of Wincheſter was ſeeming to have made before the Kings Majeſty in the Court of Wincheſter.

To the 11 Article. To the eleventh Article being by it ſelf delivered unto me the fourteenth of this preſent September, 1549, in the Night at my Houſe of London beginning thus, Item, That the rites, &c. And ending thus, The miſuſes thereof: I do anſwer and ſay, that I have already given commandment to my Officers to make diligent ſearch and inquire herein, and to certifie accordingly, to the intent I may proceed therein as appertaineth, and would before this time my ſelf have alſo inquired and proceeded, had I not ſo been of all ſides oppreſt and peſtered with multitude of other neceſſary buſineſs, as I have been, to my great diſquietneſs and trouble.

The 5. Article inſufficiently anſwered of Bonner. When he had ended the reading of theſe anſwers, the Commiſſioners ſaid unto him that he had in the ſame very obſcurely anſwered unto the fifth Article miniſtered the thirteenth of September; wherefore they willed him there expreſly to anſwer by mouth, whether he had according to the Injunctions delivered unto him, declared the Article beginning thus, You ſhall alſo ſet forth in your Sermon that our authority, &c. Whereunto he again anſwered, that he had already made as full and ſufficient an anſwer in writing, as he was bound to make by Law.

Bonners obſcure and indirect anſwer. The Judges then replyed, that the anſwers already made in that part were obſcure and inſufficient, ſo that it appeared not certainly whether he had preached indeed according to the ſame Injunction or not; and therefore they eftſoons willed him, as before, directly to anſwer whether he had ſo accordingly preached or no, the Biſhop ſtill anſwering as before.

Bonners froward contumacy noted. The Judges again demanded of him, whether he would otherwiſe anſwer or no? To the which he ſaid, no, unleſs the Law did compel him. Then they asked him whether he thought the Law did compel him to anſwer more fully or no? He anſwered, no; adding further that he was not bound to make anſwer to ſuch poſitions.

The Commiſſioners, then ſeeing his froward contumacy, told him plainly, that if he perſiſted thus in his frowardneſs, and would not otherwiſe anſwer, they would according to Law take him pro confeſſo, and ex abundanti receive witneſs againſt him, and therewithal did recite again to him ſix of the firſt and principal Articles, demanding his final anſwer thereunto. Who ſaid, as before, that he had already fully anſwered them by writing; but where they requeſted to have his notes, which he ſaid he had made of his Sermon, they ſhould have them if they would ſend for them. And whereas in his anſwer to the ſixth Article he doubted what the opinion of the Rebels was, the Judges declared unto him that there opinion was, That the Kings Majeſty, before his Grace came to the age of one and twenty years, had not ſo full authority to make Laws and Statutes, as when he came ſo further years; and that his Subjects were not bound to obey the Laws and Statutes made in his young age. Whereunto the Biſhop anſwered, that he was not of the opinion of the Rebels mentioned in that Article, as did well appear by his anſwers, as well unto the denunciation, as alſo unto the fifth Article objected againſt him.

The Rebels traiterous opinions touching the Kings power in his [illegible] age.

Which

{KING Edw.6} Witneſſes againſt Bonner.

Which ended, they, perceiving his ſcornful careleſneſs, preſently did admit for witneſs, upon the Articles objected againſt him, Maſter John Cheke, Henry Markham, John Joſeph, John Dowglas, and Richard Chambers, whom alſo they onerated with a corporal Oath upon the Holy Evangeliſts, truly to Anſwer and Depoſe upon the ſame Articles in the preſence of the Biſhop, who under his former proteſtation, like a wily Lawyer, proteſted of the nullity of the receiving, admitting, and ſwearing of thoſe witneſſes, with proteſtation alſo to object againſt the perſons and ſayings of the witneſſes in time and place convenient; demanding alſo a competent and lawful time to miniſter Interrogatories againſt them, with a Copy of all the Acts of that day. Wherewith the Delegates were well pleaſed, and aſſigned him to Miniſter his Interrogatories againſt Maſter Cheke on that preſent day, and againſt the reſt of the next day before noon.

Bonner again proteſteth againſt the witneſſes.

After this the Judges Delegate aſſigned the Biſhop to appear again before them upon Wedneſday then next enſuing, between the hours of ſeven and eight of the Clock before Noon, in the Hall of the Archbiſhops Manner of Lambeth, there to ſhew the cauſe why he ſhould not be declared, pro confeſſo, upon all the Articles whereunto he had not then fully anſwered, and to ſee further proceſs done in the matter; and ſo (he ſtill proteſting of the nullity and invalidity of all their proceedings) they did for that preſent depart.

The Commiſſioners certifie the King of Bonners demeanour.

In this mean while the Commiſſioners certified the Kings Majeſty and his Council, of the Biſhops demeanor towards them, and what objections he had made againſt their proceedings, making doubts and ambiguities, whether by the tenor of his Majeſties Commiſſion, the Commiſſioners might proceed not only at the denunciation, but alſo at their meer Office; and alſo whether they might as well determine or hear the cauſe. Whereupon his Majeſty by advice aforeſaid, for the better underſtanding thereof, did the ſeventeenth of September ſend unto the Commiſſioners a full and perfect declaration and interpretation of his Will and Pleaſure in the foreſaid Commiſſion, giving them hereby full Authority to proceed at their own diſcretions, as appeareth more at large by the tenor thereof enſuing:

{KING Edw. 6}

A certain Declaration or Interpretation of the King, touching certain points and doubts in his former Commiſſion, with Licenſe given to the Commiſſioners, as well to determine as to hear, in the Caſe of Bonner.

Leave given by the King to the Commiſſioners to determin againſt Bonner.

EDward the Sixth by the Grace of God, King of England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, and of the Church of England, and alſo of Ireland, in Earth the Supreme head; To the moſt reverend Father in God, Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Metropolitan and Primate of England, the right reverend Father in God Nicholas Biſhop of Rocheſter our truſty and right well-beloved Counſellors, Sir William Peter, and Sir Thomas Smith, Knights, our two principal Secretaries, and William May Doctor of Law Civil and Dean of Pauls, greeting: Where we of late, by the advice of our moſt entirely beloved Uncle Edward Duke of Somerſet, Governor of our Perſon, and Protector of our Realms, Dominions, and Subjects, and the reſt of our Privy Council, have addreſſed unto you, five four, or three of you, our Letters Patents of Commiſſion, bearing Date at Weſtminſter the Eighth day of September, in the Third year of our Reign, willing you by force thereof to hear the matters and cauſe of contempt therein expreſſed, and calling before you as well the denouncers thereof, as alſo the right reverend Father in God Edmund Biſhop of London, againſt whom ſuch Denunciation is made, as in our ſaid Letters of Commiſſion more at large doth appear, we be now credibly informed, that upon the ſaid Commiſſion divers doubts and ambiguities have and may riſe.

As whether you by the tenor of the ſaid Commiſſion may proceed not only at the denunciation, but alſo of meer office.

And alſo whether ye may as well determin as hear the ſaid cauſe.

{Anno 1549.}

For further declaration whereof we do now interpret and declare, That our full Mind and Pleaſure, by the advice aforeſaid, was by our Commiſſion, and now is, that you ſhould proceed as well by meer Office, as alſo by the way of Denunciation, and either of them, or by any other ways or means at your diſcretions, whereby the truth and merits of the cauſe may be moſt ſpeedily and beſt known, and that ye might and may as well finally determine as hear the ſaid matters; in all your orders and doings, cutting away all vain and ſuperfluous delays, and having reſpect to the only truth of the matter. And this our Declaration we ſend unto you of our ſure knowledge and meer motion, by the advice aforeſaid, ſupplying all default, ceremony, and point of the Law, which hath, ſhall, or may ariſe of your doings by reaſon of any default of words in our ſaid former Commiſſion or any part thereof, any Law, Statute, or Act to the contrary notwithſtanding. And therefore we Will and Command you to proceed in the ſaid matters accordingly, as well to our foreſaid Commiſſion as this our Declaration, and ſo fail ye not. In Witneſs whereof we have made theſe our Letters Patents.

At Hampton-Court the ſeventeenth day of September.

The Fourth Seſſion againſt Bonner, Biſhop of London, before the Kings Commiſſioners, in the great Hall at Lambeth, the Eighth of September.

The Fourth appearing of Bonner before the Kings Commiſſioners. Bonner exhibiteth more matter in writing, why he ought not to be declared pro confeſſo.

AFter this Declaration being ſent down and received from the King, the Biſhop of London, (according to the Commiſſioners Aſſignment the Monday before) appeared again before them upon Wedneſday the Eighth of September, in the great Hall at Lambeth. Where under his wonted proteſtation, firſt he declared, That although he had already ſufficiently anſwered all things, yet further to ſatisfie the term Aſſigned unto him, to ſhew cauſe why he ought not to be declared, pro confeſſo, upon the

KING Edw. 6.

the Articles theretofore miniſtred againſt him, and to the which he had not fully anſwered, he had then a matter in writing to exhibit unto them, why he ought not ſo to be declared, which he read there openly. Wherein firſt under his accuſtomed unreverent terms of pretenſed, unjuſt, and unlawful Proceſs and Aſſignation, he ſaid he was not bound by the Law (for good and reaſonable cauſes) to obey the ſame, eſpecially their Aſſignation.

Cauſes alledged of Bonner, vvhy he ought not to obey the Commiſſioners Aſſignation.

And firſt, for that the ſame was openly pronounced by Sir Thomas Smith, one of the pretenſed Commiſſioners, without the conſent of his pretenſed Collegues; or at the leaſt he as a Commiſſioner did preſcribe the Actuary what to write, which he ought not to have done, becauſe by Law he ought not to have intermedled therein, for that his Collegues did the firſt day begin to ſit as Judges againſt him the Biſhop, without the preſence of the ſaid Sir Thomas Smith.

The Second Cauſe.

And Secondly, becauſe his anſwers, as well unto the pretenſed Denunciation, as alſo to all the Articles theretofore objected againſt him, were as full and ſufficient, as the Law required (or at leaſtwiſe there was nothing good in Law apparent to the contrary) and therefore he was not inforced by Law further to anſwer thereunto without further allegation.

The Third Cauſe.

The Popes Lavv.

And becauſe alſo that all their proceedings thereto were ſo extraordinarily done, that they had confounded all manner of Lawful Proceſs, ſometimes proceeding ad denunciandum, ſometimes ex officio mero, and ſometimes ex officio mixto, contrary unto the Kings Eccleſiaſtical Laws, and contrary alſo unto their Commiſſion in that behalf.

The Fourth Cauſe.

The Popes Lavv.

And likewiſe becauſe divers of the Articles pretenſed were ſuperfluous and impertinent, not revealing, though they were proved, containing in them untruth and falſity, ſome obſcure and uncertain, ſome depending upon other Articles, either denied or at the leaſt qualified, ſome captious and deceitful to bring the anſwerer into a ſnare, and ſome alſo being Articles of the Law, in ſuch ſort as by the Eccleſiaſtical Laws of this Realm the Kings Subjects were not bound to make anſwer thereunto.

The Fifth Cauſe.

And laſtly, becauſe that Sir Thomas Smith Secretary to the Kings Majeſty, when that the Biſhop was laſt with the Council in the Council Chamber at White-Hall, after the departure of the Lord Protector and the reſt of the Council, did himſelf alone (without any other) write certain Articles, or Injunctions (amongſt the which was that of the Kings Authority in his minority) and afterward did Copy the ſame at the Table within the ſaid Council Chamber, and ſo himſelf did deliver them unto him. By reaſon whereof that is not true, which in the Commiſſion, Denunciation and Articles was deduced and objected againſt him.

The intolerable contempt and unreverent behaviour of Bonner noted and openly reproved.

When theſe fond and frivolous objections were thus read, the Archbiſhop ſeeing his inordinate and intolerable contempt towards them, charged him very ſharply, ſaying, My Lord of London, if I had ſitten here only as Archbiſhop of Canterbury, it had been your part to have uſed your ſelf more lowly, obediently and reverently towards me than you have; but ſeeing that I with my Collegues ſit here now as Delegates from the Kings Majeſty, I muſt tell you plain, you have behaved your ſelf too too much inordinately. For at every time that we have ſitten in Commiſſion, you have uſed ſuch unſeemly faſhions, without all reverence and obedience, giving taunts and checks as well unto us, with divers of the Servants and Chaplains, as alſo unto certain of the ancienteſt that be here, calling them Fools and Daws, with ſuch like, as that you have given to the multitude an intolerable example of diſobedience. And I inſure you my Lord, there is you and one other Biſhop whom I could name, that have uſed your ſelves ſo contemptuouſly and diſobediently, as the like I think hath not before been heard of or ſeen; whereby ye have done much harm.

The vvords of the Archbiſhop to Bonner.

Bonner's vnruful anſwer to the Archbiſhop.

At which words the groſs Biſhop (a Beaſt, a Man might juſtly term him) ſaid ſcornfully to the Archbiſhop, You ſhew your ſelf to be a meet Judge.

The Archbiſhop.

The Archbiſhop then proceeding, laid to his charge how indiſcreetly the laſt day in the Chappel he had called all the people Woodcocks.

Whereunto he anſwered, That the laſt Seſſion William Latimer, one of the denounc[illegible], being there preſent, had practiſed with the Audience, that when he lifted up his hand to them, they ſhould (and did as it were by a token given them) ſay as he ſaid, and do as he did; as one time upon the lifting up of his hand, they cried, Nay, nay; and at another time, Yea, yea, and laughed they could not tell whereat, with ſuch like faſhions.

Bonner. The vain ſuſpition of Bonner.

Unto which words Latimer, ſeeing his vain ſuſpicion, replied ſaying, That he lifted not up his Hand at any time but only to cauſe them to hold their peace.

The vvords of Secretary Smith to Bonner.

Then Secretary Smith ſaid to the Biſhop, That in all his Writings and Anſwers that he had hitherto laid in, he would not once acknowledge them as the Kings Commiſſioners, but uſed always proteſtations with divers inkhorn and naughty terms, calling them pretenſed Commiſſioners, pretenſed Delegates, pretenſed Commiſſion, pretenſed Articles, pretenſed proceedings, ſo that all things were pretenſed with him. Indeed (ſaid he) ſuch terms the Proctors of Churches uſe, to delay matters for their Clients, when they will not have the truth known: But you my Lord to uſe us the Kings Majeſties Commiſſioners with ſuch terms, you do therein very lewdly and naughtily. And I pray you what other thing did the Rebels?

All things pretenſed vvith Bonner that made againſt him.

Bonner and the Rebels compared together.

For when Letters or Pardons were brought them from the King and his Council, they would not credit them, but ſaid they were none of the Kings or his Councils, but Gentlemens doings, and made under a Buſh, with ſuch like terms. But now my Lord, becauſe hitherto we cannot make you confeſs whether, in your Sermon that you Preached, ye omitted the Article touching the Kings Majeſties Authority in his tender age or not, but ſtill have ſaid that ye will not otherwiſe anſwer then ye have done, and that ye have already ſufficiently anſwered (with many ſuch delaies) ſo as we can by no means induce you to confeſs plainly what you did yea or nay; therefore I ſay, to the intent we may come to the truth, we have dilated the matter more at large, and have drawn out other Articles whereunto you ſhall be Sworn, and then I truſt you will dally with us no more as you have done. For although ye make your Anſwers in writing, yet you ſhall be examined by us and make your Anſwers by mouth to the ſame Articles, or elſe you ſhall do worſe. Indeed I do not (as I ſaid) diſcommend your proteſtations and terms of Law, if it were in a young Proctor that would help his Clients Cauſe; but in you it may not be ſuffered ſo to uſe the Kings Commiſſioners.

New Articles and Injunctions miniſtred to Bonner.

Then did the Delegates miniſter unto him certain new Articles and Injunctions, and did there onerate him with a corporal Oath in form of Law to make a full and true anſwer thereunto. The Biſhop notwithſtanding ſtill (according to his wonted manner) under his former proteſtation proteſted of the nullity and invalidity of theſe Articles, Injunctions, and Proceſs, deſiring alſo a Copy thereof, with a competent time to anſwer thereunto. To whom the Judges Decreed a Copy, commanding him to come to his Examination to the Archbiſhop the next day at Eight of the Clock before Noon.

Bonner again Aſſigned the next day to appear.

Then the Commiſſiones did receive, for witneſs, upon theſe new Articles now miniſtred unto the Biſhop, Sir John Maſon, Sir Thomas Chalenor, Knights, Maſter William Cicil, Armigel Wade, and William Hunnings, Clerks to the Kings Majeſties Council, whom they onerated with a corporal Oath in the preſence of the Biſhop, who ſtill proteſting of the nullity of their receiving and ſwearing, objected againſt them and their ſayings; and therewith, repeating his Interrogatories already miniſtred, ſaid he had more to miniſter by to morrow at Eight of the Clock.

Nevv vvitneſs againſt Bonner.

The ſame day and time likewiſe the Biſhop exhibited unto the Commiſſioners an Information, or rather Cavillation againſt William Latimer, for that he, notwithſtanding that he had in all his talk pretended the great tranquillity of this Realm, which was greatly impeached and hindered when that any the Kings Subjects ſhould think that his Majeſty hath not as full Power and Authority Royal in his minority, as when his Majeſty came to perfect age, or ſhould think that his Subjects were not bound bound to obey the ſame; yet hath of late there in open Audience reported, That he hath heard with his Ears divers perſons unreverently ſpeak of the Kings Majeſty, ſaying, Tuſh, the King is but a Babe or Child, what Laws can he make? Or what can he do in his minority? Let him have a Toſte and Butter, or Bread and Milk, and that is meeter for him than to make Laws and Statutes, or to bind us to obey them; we are not bound to obey till he be paſt his minority, and come to his full and perfect Age; with the hearing of which words the Biſhop alſo charged the Commiſſioners, and that becauſe Latimer, at the recital of the ſame in their preſence, was neither by them controlled, nor yet cauſed to bring forth the ſame perſons, but was let paſs in ſilence, ſaving that he the ſaid Biſhop did ſpeak againſt him in that behalf, ſaying, That he would detect him, becauſe that, as it appeared, he had of long time concealed the words and not opened the ſame in ſuch place and to ſuch perſons as he ought to have done, but had kept the perſons and ſayings of them ſecret, either not taking the matter to be of ſuch importance as he pretended, or elſe thereby unfaithfully behaving himſelf towards his Prince, and therefore was worthy with his aiders, favourers, and counſellors to be puniſhed.

William Latimer impeached of Bonner for concealing of Treaſon.

Theſe vain Cavillations ended, the Commiſſioners for that day finiſhed their Seſſion, aſſigning the Biſhop to appear in that ſame place again upon Monday then next following, between the hours of Six and Nine, in the Forenoon, then and there to ſhew a final cauſe why he ſhould not be declared pro confeſſo. And ſo delivering him a Copy of the Articles, they departed; the Contents whereof enſue:

A new term aſſigned to Bonner to appear.

Articles and Poſitions given by the Kings Commiſſioners to the Biſhop of London, to be Anſwered by him joyntly and ſeverally in every point the ſecond time.

Articles againſt Bonner miniſtred the ſecond time.

1. THat ye were ſent for to the Lord Protectors Grace, and the reſt of the Council, and came thither into the Court at Weſtminſter the tenth of Auguſt, or ſome other day of the ſame month.

2. Item, That at the ſame time the Lord Protector and divers other of the Kings Majeſties Privy Council ſiting in Council, ye were called in, and there the ſaid Lord Protector did on the Kings Majeſties behalf declare unto you divers faults and abuſes the which were found in you, and gave you ſtrait charge to amend them, adding threatning that elſe you ſhould be otherwiſe looked unto.

3. Item, That the ſaid Lord Protectors Grace did declare unto you, for better admonition and amendment of you, that you ſhould have from the Kings Majeſty, by his advice and the reſt of the Privy Council, certain Articles and Injunctions, to obſerve and follow, given you in writing.

4. Item, That there and then the ſaid Lord Protector commanded Sir Thomas Smith Knight, Secretary to the Kings Majeſty, to read a certain Paper Book of Injunctions and Articles unto you, the ſaid Secretary ſtanding at the Council-Tables-end, and you ſtanding by and hearing the ſame.

5. Item, That the ſaid Lord Protector there and then willed certain things in the ſaid Book of Injunctions to be reformed, as where ye were appointed to preach ſooner, at your requeſt it was appointed unto you to preach the Sunday three weeks after the Date of the ſaid writing.

6. Item, That in the ſaid Articles the Lord Protectors Grace found fault, becauſe an Article or Commandment unto you ſet forth and declared of the Kings Majeſties Authority now in his young age, and of his Laws and Statutes in the ſame time, was omitted, and therefore either immediately before you came into the Council-Chamber, or you being preſent and ſtanding by, commanded the ſaid Secretary Smith to put in writing and annex it to the reſt of the Articles.

7. Item, That the ſaid Secretary Smith, then and there did, immediately upon commandment, write into the ſaid Book or Paper, wherein the reſt of the Articles were written, the ſaid Article, videlicet, you ſhall alſo ſet forth in your Sermon, that the Authority of our Royal power is (as truth it is) of no leſs authority and force in this our young age, than was of any of our predeceſſors, though the ſame were much elder, as may appear by example of Joſias and other young Kings in the Scripture, and therefore all our Subjects to be no leſs bound to the obedience of our Precepts, Laws, and Statutes, than if we were of thirty or forty years of age. {KING Edw. 6}

8. Item, That the Lord Protector did ſo deliver you the Book or Paper, willing firſt the ſaid Secretary Smith to amend all things as he had appointed.

9. Item, That ye then and there did promiſe to the Lord Protectors Grace, that ye would obſerve and fulfil all in the ſaid Injunctions and Articles contained.

10. Item, That all things in the ſaid Book, put in and mentioned by the ſaid Secretary Smith, and the ſame ſo read to you by him, and you firſt agreeing that all that was by him ſo written was by the Lord Protectors appointment, the ſaid Book was ſo delivered unto you then and there by the ſaid Secretary Smith in the Council-Chamber.

11. Item, That you have the ſaid Book in your poſſeſſion, or elſe know where it is, the true Copy whereof in effect is annexed to theſe Articles.

12. Item, That ye were commanded in the ſame Injunctions to preach the Sunday three weeks after the delivery thereof at Pauls, and there to intreat upon certain Articles, as is ſpecified in the ſaid Book of Injunctions, and eſpecially the ſaid Article, beginning, Ye ſhall alſo ſet forth, and ending, Thirty or forty years of age.

13. Item, That for the accompliſhment of part of the ſaid Injunctions and Commandment, you did preach the firſt day of September laſt paſt at Paul's-Croſs.

14. Item, That at the ſaid Sermon, contrary to your Injunctions, ye omitted and left out the ſaid Article, beginning, Ye ſhall alſo ſet forth in your Sermon, &c. and ending, Thirty or forty years of age.

15. Ye ſhall alſo anſwer whether ye think and believe that the Kings Majeſties ſubjects be bound to obey as well the Laws, Statutes, Proclamations, and other Ordinances made now in this young age of the Kings Majeſty, as the Laws, Statutes, Proclamations, and Ordinances made by his Highneſs progenitors.

Theſe Articles being thus miniſtred to the ſaid Biſhop of London, the next day being Thurſday and the Nineteenth of September, the fore-named Commiſſioners ſate in the Archbiſhops Chamber of preſence at Lambeth, attending the coming of the Biſhop of London. Before whom there appear Robert Johnſon, the Biſhops Regiſter, and there did declare unto the Commiſſioners, that the Biſhop his Maſter could not at that time perſonally appear before them without great danger of his bodily health, becauſe that he feared to fall into a Fever by reaſon of a cold that he had taken by too much over-watching himſelf the laſt Night before, whereby he was compelled to keep his Bed: nevertheleſs, if he could without danger of his bodily health, he would appear before them the ſame day at Afternoon. This excuſe the Judges were content to take in good part. Yet ſaid Maſter Secretary Smith, That if he were ſick indeed, the excuſe was reaſonable, and to be allowed, but (quoth he) I promiſe you, my Lord hath ſo dallied with us, and uſed hitherto ſuch delaies, that we may miſtruſt that this is but a feigned excuſe: Howbeit upon your faithful Declaration we are content to tarry until one of the Clock at Afternoon, and ſo they did, willing Mr. Johnſon to ſignifie then unto them whether the Biſhop could appear or not.

Bonner for fear of a Fever either could not or durſt not appear.

At which hour Robert Johnſon and Rich Rogers, Gentlemen of the Biſhops Chamber appeared again before the Commiſſioners, declaring that (for the cauſes aforealledged) their Maſter could not appear at that time neither. Whereupon Maſter Secretary Smith ſaid unto them, My Lord of London your Maſter hath uſed us very homely, and ſought delaies hitherto, and now perhaps, perceiving theſe laſt Articles to touch the quick, and therefore loth to come to his Anſwer, he feigneth himſelf ſick. But becauſe he ſhall not ſo deceive us any more, we will ſend the Knight Marſhal unto him, willing him if he be ſick indeed to let him alone, for that is a reaſonable excuſe; but if he be not ſick, then to bring him forthwith Bonner pretendeth again his Fever.

Bonners excuſe of ſickneſs not well taken of the Commiſſioners.

{KING Edw.6} with to us; for I promiſe you he ſhall not uſe us as he hath done, we will not take it at his hands: and therefore Maſter Johnſon, ſaid he, you do the part of a truſty ſervant as becometh you, but it is alſo your part to ſhew my Lord his ſtubborn heart and diſobedience, which doth him more harm than he is aware of. What, thinketh he to ſtand with a King in his own Realm? Is this the part of a ſubject? Nay, I ween we ſhall have a new Thomas

A good admonition ſent to Bonner by Secretary Smith.

Let him take heed, for if he play theſe parts he ie to be made ſhorter by the head. He may e think good; but whether? To the Biſhop So he may holp himſelf forwards. I ſay he eal but to the ſame King who hath made us his d to the Bench of his Council, and how they his matter when they hear of it, I doubt not. make Men believe that he were called before ching his Opinion of the Sacrament, wherein {Anno 1549} I aſſure you he did both falſly and naughtily, yea and lewdly, and more than became him, and more than he had in commandment to do, for he was not willed to ſpeak of that matter, and perhaps he may hear more of that hereafter; but yet we will lay no ſuch thing to his charge, and therefore we will not have him to delay us as he doth. Which ended, the Delegates notwithſtanding Decreed to tarry again for him until two of the Clock at Afternoon the nex day, being Friday, and the twentieth of September.

The Fifth Action or Proceſs the twentieth of September, againſt Bonner Biſhop of London, before the Kings Commiſſioners.

The Fifth Seſſion or Court againſt Bonner Biſhop of London.

AT which day and time the Biſhop appeared himſelf perſonally before them in the ſame Chamber of Preſence; where firſt he did exhibit his Anſwers unto the laſt Articles miniſtred unto him the Eighteenth of September; the Contents whereof hereunder follow:

The Anſwer of the ſaid Biſhop of London made unto the Articles miniſtred unto him the Second time.

THE Anſwers of me Edmund Biſhop of London, under mine accuſtomed Proteſtation given unto the Articles of late miniſtred and exhibited againſt me here in this Court, with ſpecial proteſtation alſo, that I do not intend in any wiſe to make Anſwer to any of the ſaid Articles, otherwiſe than the Law of this Realm doth bind me to do, nor to ſpeak or ſay contrary to any thing that in my former Anſwers I have ſaid or done; and that if it ſo chance me to do, it is not nor ſhall not be with my good will or full conſent, and that ſo ſoon as I ſhall perceive it, I intend to revoke it, and ſo now as then, and then as now, do ſo in that caſe revoke, to all honeſt and lawful purpoſes.

Bonner anſwereth to the First Article.

To the Firſt Article I do anſwer and ſay, that there was a Meſſenger, whoſe name I know not, that came unto me to Fulham, as I now remember, but I do not remember the day thereof, and he ſaid that my Lord Protectors Grace required me to come by and by to ſpeak with him. And thereupon, having made the ſaid Meſſenger to break his faſt, I repaired to the Court at Weſtminſter, but not upon the Tenth day of Auguſt, but ſome other day of the ſaid month.

Anſwer to the Second Article.

To the Second Article I do ſay, That it is obſcure, incertain, and over general, eſpecially in thoſe words at the ſame time, which may be referred to the Tenth of Auguſt, and then anſwer already is made thereunto, and it may be referred to ſome other day of the ſaid month of Auguſt, either before the Tenth of Auguſt, or after. And becauſe it remaineth undeclared, I am not bound in Law to anſwer unto it, neither yet to theſe words and ſentences in the ſaid Article, to wit, Then, and There, for they without declaration are incertain, obſcure, and general, and I, before the ſpecification and declaration thereof, not bound herein to make an anſwer, ſpecially having already made full and ſufficient anſwer in this matter, according to the Commiſſion, as I do take it, and according unto the Law; which alſo willeth, That if a certain anſwer be looked for, the Poſition and Article muſt before be certain.

He anſwereth in a general.

To the Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth, and Fourteenth Articles, he anſwereth all after one manner and ſort, as thus, That it doth depend on the Articles, to which for cauſes aforeſaid, he ſaith, he is not bound in Law to make anſwer, eſpecially having already made.

Saving that in the Sixth he addeth thereunto, That he at no time heard the Lord Protector find fault, nor commanded, as is deduced in the ſaid Article, ſo far as he doth find.

Alſo ſaving the Seventh Article, where he addeth nevertheleſs confeſſing and acknowledging, with heart and mouth, the Kings Majeſties Authority and Regal Power and Minority, as well and full as in his Majority.

Alſo ſaving the Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh Articles, where he addeth, As they be deduced they are not true, as appeareth in conferring one with another.

Anſwer to the Fifteenth Article.

To the Twelfth and Fourteenth Articles, he addeth, As they be deduced they are not true; Confeſſing nevertheleſs the Kings Majeſties Authority and Power Regal, as before is expreſſed.

To the Fifteenth Article he anſwereth and ſaith, That it is a Poſition in Law, and that yet both now and heretofore he hath made anſwer thereunto in effect and ſubſtance, as appeareth in his former anſwers, and ſo ſhall do always according to the Law and his bounden duty, knowledging, as he hath already done, the Kings Majeſties Regal Power in his Minority to be no leſs than in his Majority, and the ſubjects bound to obey unto his Grace, his Laws, Statutes, and Ordinances, and his ſaid Authority, as well in his Minority as in his Majority, not allowing, but expreſly condemning the Opinion of all Rebels holding the contrary.

Bonner refuſeth Secretary Smith to be his Judge.

After this, perceiving that Maſter Secretary Smith was ſomewhat more quick with him than others of the Commiſſioners, and that he would not ſuffer him any longer to dally out the matter with his vain quiddities and ſubtilties in Law, but ever earneſtly urged him to go directly to his matter, and therewithal ſometimes ſharply rebuking him for his evil and ſtubborn behaviour towards them; he to deface his Authority (as he thought) did alſo then exhibit in writing a Recuſation of the Secretaries Judgment againſt him. The form and manner whereof, as he exhibited it unto the Judges, I thought here alſo to exhibit unto the Reader as hereunder followeth:

The Recuſation of the Judgment of Sir Thomas Smith, made by the Biſhop of London, the firſt time.

Cauſes alledged by Bonner why he refuſed Secretary Smith.

IN the Name of God, Amen. Foraſmuch as equity, natural reaſon, and all good Laws do require that Judges ſhall be of that Integrity, Wiſdom, Circumſpection, Learning, and Indifferency, that exerciſing the office and room of a Judge, they may and ſhall do it without hatred, malice, or grudge againſt any perſon convented or called before them, uprightly, ſincerely, and duly executing and doing their office unto them in any wiſe committed; and forſomuch alſo as all Judgments and Proceſs ought to have their due courſe, and proceed without ſuſpition or corruption in any wiſe, and finally foraſmuch as very dangerous it is to appear and make defence before an incompetent Judg, who commonly and accuſtomably of private and unlawful corrupt affection to the one ſide, and for malice, hatred and envy born againſt the other ſide, rather ſerveth his carnal, corrupt, and wilful appetite, than any thing elſe is moved to obedience and keeping of good Order, Law, or Reaſon, touching him that is convented and compelled to make anſwer againſt his will: I therefore Edmund Biſhop of London, having perceived and felt by all the ſayings, proceedings and doings of you Sir Thomas Smith, Knight, one of the two principal Secretaries to the Kings Majeſty, in this matter attempted and moved againſt me, that ye have been, and yet continually are a notorious and manifeſt enemy of me the ſaid Edmund, and much offended that I ſhould in any wiſe alledge and ſay, or uſe any ſuch things for my moſt defence, as the Law giveth me licence and liberty to do, yea, hearing moſt favourably and effectually my denouncers and enemies with both ears in any thing that they shall alledge, purpose, attempt, or do against me, though their persons in Law are not in any wise to be heard or admitted, ne yet their sayings true, and not hearing me so much as with one Ear in my Lawful sayings and doings in this behalf; but contrariwise opening your mouth at large, ye have sundry times against good Wisdom and Reason outraged in words and deeds against me the said Edmund, saying among other words, That I did as Thieves, Murtherers, and Traitors are wont to do, being my self as ye untruly did say, inward indeed culpable, and yet outward otherwise unable to defend the matter against me, but only by taking exceptions, and making frivolous allegations against my Judges and Commissioners, and that I have been and am as sturdy, wilful, and disobedient, as may be in your Judgment and Opinion, maintaining and upholding the Rebels and their Opinions, and that I shall answer by mouth, or else smart and do worse, or else ye will send me to the Tower, there to sit and be joyned with Ket and Humphry Arundel the Rebels; over and besides divers other threatnings and comminatory words by you pronounced and uttered unseemly, and far unmeet to proceed out of the mouth of you that are in such room and place as ye be in.

And moreover, increasing your malice, evil will and grudge born against me, ye have amongst other things untruly surmised, written, alledged, and said, That a certain Book of Articles and Injunctions by the Lord Protectors Grace in the full Council after a certain prescribed fashion and form in the Denunciation, Commission, and Articles, which (de facto) were induced, brought in and objected against me, was delivered unto me; and moreover of an evil will and ungodly intent and purpose, contrary to the truth, ye have withdrawn, added, altered, and qualified divers things in the same, otherwise than they were spoken and done, and yet ye are not ashamed to alledge, write, and say, that all is true, and one consonant and agreeable in all points with the other, where indeed it is not so: And yet have further (de facto) against the Law, and against the Commission to you directed, and against my just and lawful allegations and sayings, proceeded unlawfully and unjustly against me, attempting many things against me unlawfully and unjustly, as appeareth in the acts of this matter, to the which I do refer me so far forth as they make for me, and be expedient by me and for me to be alledged, and referred unto your self also unlawfully and unjustly (de facto) with your Collegues, the which without you had begun the said matters, proceeding where by the Law ye so ought not to have done indeed, but abstained therefrom, as heretofore sundry times I have alledged, appearing in the acts of this Court; do upon these just and reasonable causes, according to the order of the Kings Majesties Ecclesiastical Laws, refuse, decline, and recuse you the said Sir Thomas Smith, as an uncompetent, unmeet, and suspect Judge, against me in this behalf, and decline your pretensed Jurisdiction in this matter for causes aforesaid, desiring nothing but Justice, and offering my self prompt and ready to prove them as far as I am bound, and according to the order of the Kings Majesties Ecclesiastical Laws of this Realm in this behalf, as time, place, and otherwise shall require.

Here Bonner most proudly shameth not to bely the Kings Secretary, and one of his Majesties Council, charging him with altering and adding unto the Councils Injunctions.

{ Ann. } { 1550 }

The Popes Laws termed by the Name of the Kings Ecclesiastical Laws.

The reply of Secretary Smith to Bonners allegation.

This Recusation ended, the Secretary told him plain, That notwithstanding he would proceed in his Commission, and would be still his Judge until he were otherwise inhibited; and said unto him further, My Lord, whereas you say in your Recusation, that I said, That you did like Thieves, Murtherers, and Traitors, indeed I said it, and may and will so say again, since we perceive it by your doings.

Bonner.

Whereunto the Bishop in a great and stout rage replied, saying, Well Sir, because you sit here by vertue of the Kings Commission, and for that ye be Secretary to his Majesty, and also one of his Highness Council, I must and do honour and reverence you; but as you be but Sir Thomas Smith, and say as ye have said, That I do like Thieves, Murtherers, and Traitors, I say ye lie upon me, and in that case I defie you; and do what ye can to me, I fear you not, and therefore, quod facis, fac citius.

Bonner in a pelting chafe against Sir Thomas Smith.

The Archbishop.

Whereat the Archbishop with the other Commissioners said unto him, That for such his unreverent behaviour he was worthy Imprisonment.

Then the Bishop, in more mad fury than before, said again unto him, A Gods Name ye may do de facto, send me whether you will, and I must obey you, and so will, except ye send me to the Devil, for thither I will not go for you. Three things I have (to wit) a small portion of Goods, a poor Carkass, and mine own Soul: the two first ye may take (though unjustly) to you, but as for my Soul ye get not, Quia anima mea in manibus meis semper.

{ KING } { Edw. 6 } Bonner.

I pray God ye go not for your self.

Well, said the Secretary then, ye shall know that there is a King.

Secretary Smith.

Yea Sir, (saith the Bishop) but that is not you, neither, I am sure, will you take it upon you.

Bonner.

No Sir, said again the Secretary, but we will make you know who it is; and with that the Commissioners commanded the Bishop and all the rest to depart the Chamber, until they called for him again.

Secretary Smith.

Now in the mean while that the Commissioners were in consultation, the Bishop with Gilbert Bourn his Chaplain, Robert Warnington his Commissary, and Robert Johnson his Register, were tarrying in a quadrant void place before the Door of the same Chamber. Where the Bishop leaning on a Cupboard, and seeing his Chaplains very sad, said unto them in effect as followeth: Sirs, what mean you? Why shew you your selves to be sad and heavy in mind, as appeareth to me by your outward gestures and countenances? I would wish you, and I require you to be as merry as I am (laying therewith his hand upon his Breast) for afore God I am not sad nor heavy, but merry and of good comfort, and am right glad and joyful of this my trouble, which is for Gods cause, and it grieveth me nothing at all.

Bonners talk to his Chaplains in the quadrant place before the Chamber of presence at Lambeth.

But the great matter that grieveth me and pierceth my heart, is, for that this Hooper and such other vile Hereticks and Beasts be suffered and licensed to preach at Paul's-Cross, and in other places within my Dioces and Cure, most detestably preaching and railing at the Blessed Sacrament of the Altar, and denying the verity and presence of Christ his true Body and Blood to be there, and so infect and betray my Flock. But I say it is there in very deed, and in that Opinion I will live and die, and am ready to suffer death for the same. Wherefore, ye being Christian men, I do require you and also charge and command you in the Name of God, and on his behalf, as ye will answer him for the contrary, that ye go to the Mayor of London, and to his Brethren the Aldermen, praying and also requiring them earnestly in Gods Name and mine, and for mine own discharge on that behalf, that from henceforth, when any such detestable and abominable Preachers (and especially those which hold opinion against the Blessed Sacrament of the Altar) do come to preach unto them, they forthwith depart out of their presence, and do not hear them, lest that they tarrying with such Preachers, should not only hurt themselves in receiving their poisoned Doctrine, but also give a visage to the encouragement of others, which thereby might take an occasion to think and believe that their erroneous and damnable Doctrine is true and good: and this eftsoons I require and command you to do.

Here Bonners obedient heart bursteth out

Bonners Popish message and charge to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen.

And then turning himself about, and beholding two of the Archbishops Gentlemen, which in the same place kept the Chamber-door where the Commissioners were in consultation, and perceiving that they had heard all his talk, he spake unto them also and said, And Sirs, ye be my Lord of Canterburies Gentlemen, I know ye very well; and therefore I also require and charge you in Gods behalf, and in his Name, that ye do the like for your parts in places where you shall chance to see and hear such corrupt and erroneous Preachers, and also advertise my Lord your Master of the same, and of these my sayings that I have now spoken here before you, as ye are Christian men, and shall answer before God for the contrary.

Bonners trifling charge to two of the Archbishops Gentlemen.

With this the Commissioners called for the Bishop again, who did read unto them an Instrument, containing a Provocation to the King, which he made in manner and form here following:

{KING Edw.6}

The first Appellation intimated by Edmund Bonner Bishop of London.

Bonner appealeth to the King because he could not to the Pope.

IN the Name of God, Amen. It shall appear to all men by this publick instrument that An. Dom. 1549, the twentieth day of September, the third year of the reign of our Most high and renowned Prince Edward the Sixth, by the Grace of God King of England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, and in earth the supreme head of the Church of England and Ireland, in a Chamber within the Palace of the said Bishop, situated in London, and in the presence of me the publick Notary, and of the Witnesses hereafter named, the foresaid Bishop did personally appear, and there did shew forth in writing a certain protestation and appellation, the tenor whereof insueth.

IN the Name of God, Amen. I Edmund Bishop of London, say, alledge, and propound before you being a publick Notary, and these credible Witnesses here present, that although I the foresaid Edmund have attained the Bishoprick aforesaid by the benevolence of the famous Prince of memory King Henry the eighth, and was lawfully elected and translated to the same, with his rites and appurtenances, have of a long time possessed peaceably and quietly the same, and presently do possess, being taken as Bishop and lawful possessor of the said Bishoprick, and am lawfully called, taken, and reputed notoriously and publickly; and moreover do keep residence and hospitality on the same, according to the order, state, person, and dignity, and as the revenues of the same would permit, and have exercised and done all things appertaining to my pastoral Office, as the Laws do require, as hereafter I trust by Gods grace to do and observe, a man of good name and fame, neither suspended, excommunicate, nor enterdicted, neither convict of any notable crime or fact, always obeying readily the commandment of the Church, and other my superiours in all lawful causes, nevertheless fearing upon certain probable causes, likely conjectures, threatnings, and assertions of certain injurious men my enemies, or at the least, such as little favour me, that great dammage may come to me hereafter about the premisses or part of them; and lest any man by any authority, commandment, denunciation, inquisition, office, or at the request of any person or persons, may attempt prejudice or hurt to me or my said dignity, either by my excommunication, interdiction, sequestration, spoyling, vexing and perturbing by any manner of means; do appeal unto the most high and mighty Prince our Sovereign Lord Edward the sixth by the grace of God, King of England, France, &c. and in these my writings do provoke and appeal to his regal Majesty. I do also require the Apostles, so much as in this case they are to be required, the first, second, and third time, earnestly, more earnestly, and most earnestly of all, that there may be given to me the protection, tuition, and defence of my foresaid most dread Sovereign Lord, for the safeguard of me, my dignity and title, and possession in the premisses, and to all that will cleave to me in this behalf. I do also protest, that I will be contented to correct, reform, and amend this my present protestation, and to the same to add, to take away, and to bring the same into the best form and state that may be devised, by the Council of learned men, or as the case shall require, and the same to intimate according to time and place, and the order of the Law, and still shall require.

Apostles is a term of Canon Law, and signifieth as much as Letters reverential or dismissories.

{Anno 1549.}

Upon all the which things the foresaid Edmund Bishop of London did require the publick Notary hereunder written to make unto him, and the Witnesses hereafter named, one, two, or more copies of this protestation.

These things were done the year, day, and time above written, there being present Gilbert Bourn Bachelor of Divinity, John Harpsfield and Robert Colen, Masters of Art, John Wakeling and Richard Rogers learned men, being of the Dioceses of Worcester, Westminster, Coventry, Lichfield, and Glocester, and specially requested to be Witnesses of the same. And I France Harward of the Dioceses of Worcester and publick Notary by the Kings regal Authority, forsomuch as I was present when the foresaid protestation, appellation, and other the premisses were done, the year of our Lord, the year of the Reign of the King, the day of the month and place aforesaid, the witnesses above named being present, and forsomuch as I did inact the same, therefore to this present publick instrument, written faithfully with mine own hand, I have put to my mark, being specially requested unto the same.

Bonner requireth his appeal, recusation, and protestation to be entred in Register.

Which thing after he had read, he did under his protestation first intimate unto the Archbishop, the Bishop of Rochester, and Doctor May, and then protesting also not to recede from his recusation, did likewise intimate the same unto Master Secretary Smith, requiring the Register to make an Instrument as well thereupon, as also upon his recusation, with Witness to testifie the same.

The last answer of Bonner to the Articles examined, and found unperfect.

Then the Delegates did again proceed to the examination of the last answers, and finding the same imperfect, they demanded of him (according to the first Article) what special day of August he was sent for by the Lord Protector? To whom he obstinately answered, that he was not bound to make other answer than he had already made, unless they did put their Articles more certain: neither would he otherwise answer as long as Master Secretary Smith was there present, whom he had before recused, and therefore would not recede from his recusation.

The Secretary, seeing him so wilful and perverse, said sharply unto him, My Lord, come off and make a full and perfect answer unto these Articles, or else we will take other order with you to your pain.

In faith Sir, then said the Bishop again, I thought ye had been learned, but now before God I perceive well that either ye be not learned indeed, or else ye have forgotten it: for I have so often answered lawfully and sufficiently, and have so oft shewed causes sufficient and reasonable, why thereunto I ought not by law to be compelled (you shewing nothing to the contrary but sensuality and will) that I must needs judge that you are too to ignorant herein.

Well, said M. Secretary, ye will not then otherwise answer?

No, said the Bishop, except the Law do compel me.

Then said the Secretary, call for the Knight Marshal, that he may be had to Ward.

Bonner commanded to the Marshalseys.

With that all the rest of the Commissioners charged the Bishop, that he had at that time sundry ways very outragiously and irreverently behaved himself towards them sitting on the Kings Majesties Commission, and especially towards Sir Thomas Smith his Graces Secretary, and therefore, and for divers other contumelious words which he had spoken, they declared they would commit him to the Marshalsey.

By this time the Marshals Deputy came before them, whom M. Secretary commanded to take the Bishop as prisoner, and so to keep him that no man might come unto him, for if he did, he should sit by him himself.

When the Secretary had ended his talk, the Bishop said unto him, Well Sir, it might have becomed you right well that my Lords Grace here present, being first in Commission, and your better, should have done it.

Then the Commissioners assigning him to be brought before them on Monday next before Noon, between seven and nine of the clock in the Hall of that place, there to make full answer to these Articles, or else to shew cause why he should not be declared pro confesso, did for that present break up that Session.

Bonners great heart could not chuse, but he must needs utter his stomache.

Now as the Bishop was departing with the under Marshal, he in a great fury turned himself again toward the Commissioners, and said to Sir Thomas Smith; Sir, where ye have committed me to prison, ye shall understand, that I will require no favour at your hands, but shall willingly suffer what shall be put unto me, as Bolts on my heels, yea, and if ye will, Iron about my middle, or where ye will.

Then departing again, he yet returned once more, and so forming out his poison, said unto the Archbishop; Well, my Lord, I am sorry that I being a Bishop am thus handled at your Graces hand; but more sorry that ye suffer abominable Hereticks to practise as they do in London and elsewhere, infecting and disquieting the Kings liege people; and therefore I do require you, as you will will anſwer to God and the King, that ye will henceforth abſtain thus to do; for if you do not, I will accuſe you before God and the Kings Majeſty; anſwer to it as well as ye can. And ſo he departed, uſing many reproachful words againſt ſundry of the common people, which ſtood and ſpake to him by the way as he went.

The ſixth Action or Proceſs upon Monday the 23d of September, had againſt Bonner Biſhop of London, before the Commiſſioners, in the great Hall at Lambeth.

The 6. Seſſion or appearance of Bonner.

IT was aſſigned as ye have heard in the fourth Act proſecuted the eighteenth of September, that upon Monday then next following, being the three and twentieth of the ſame Month, the Biſhop ſhould again appear before the Commiſſioners, within the great Hall at Lambeth, then to ſhew a final cauſe why he ſhould not be declared pro confeſſo, upon all the Articles whereunto he had not fully anſwered.

According to which aſſignment, the ſame three and twentieth day of September, the Biſhop was brought before them by the Undermarſhal (to whom for his diſobedient and obſtinate behaviour he was before that time committed) and there did firſt declare unto them, that his appearance at that time and place was not voluntary, but coacted, for that he was againſt his will brought thither by the keeper of the Marſhalſey, and therewithal alſo under his former proteſtation, recuſation and appeal, did then again intimate a general recuſation of all the Commiſſioners, alledging in the ſame, that becauſe the Archbiſhop with all his Collegues had neither obſerved the order of their Commiſſion, neither yet proceeded againſt him after any laudable or good faſhion of judgment, but contrariwiſe had ſundry times as well in his abſence, as in his preſence, attempted many things unlawfully againſt his perſon, dignity and ſtate, eſpecially in committing him to ſtrait Priſon, and yet commanding him to make anſwer; and further, becauſe that he with the reſt had proceeded in Commiſſion with Sir Thomas Smith Knight, ſupporting and maintaining all his evil doings (notwithſtanding that he the ſaid Biſhop had before juſtly recuſed and declined from him) he therefore did alſo there refuſe and decline from the judgment of the ſaid Archbiſhop and his Collegues, and did except againſt their juriſdiction as ſuſpect, and they thereby unmeet perſons to proceed againſt him; therefore, according to his former Appeal, he intended to ſubmit himſelf under the tuition, protection, and defence of the Kings Majeſty; for whoſe honour and reverence ſake (he ſaid) they ought not to proceed any further againſt him, but quietly ſuffer him to uſe the benefit of all the recuſations, provocations, and other lawful remedies before alledged, with other ſuperfluous words, at large to be read and ſeen as followeth.

A general recuſation of Bonner againſt all the Commiſſioners.

Bonner ſtill ſticketh to his former proteſtation and provocations.

The ſecond recuſation made by Edmund Bonner Biſhop of London.

IN the Name of God, Amen. Foraſmuch as both natural reaſon and all good policies of Laws, eſpecially of this Realm of England, do admit and ſuffer him that is convented before an uncompetent and ſuſpect Judge, to refuſe him and to decline his juriſdiction, in as much as Law and reaſon on the one ſide willeth proceſs to run uprightly and juſtly, and that on the other ſide corruption and malice laboureth to the contrary, and needeth therefore to be bridled; and becauſe ye my Lord of Canterbury with your Collegues in this behalf (deputed as ye ſay Commiſſioners againſt me) neither have obſerved your ſaid Commiſſion, neither yet proceeded hitherto againſt me after any laudable, lawful, or any good faſhion of judgment, but contrariwiſe, contrary to your Commiſſion, and againſt the Law, good reaſon and order, have at ſundry times, and in ſundry acts attempted and done many things againſt me unlawfully, unſeemly, and unjuſtly, and ſuffer the like to be attempted and done by other, not reforming and amending the ſame, as appeareth in divers and ſundry things remaining in your Acts. {KING Edw. 6}

And moreover, becauſe you my ſaid Lord with your ſaid Collegues, have both in mine abſence, being let with juſt cauſes of impediment, which according to the Laws of this Realm I have fully alledged, and very ſufficiently and juſtly proved according to the order of the Kings Eccleſiaſtical Laws, injuriouſly, and much to the hinderance of my name, perſon, title, dignity, and ſtate, and alſo otherwiſe, ſpecially in my preſence, againſt all Laws, good order, and reaſon, without good cauſe or ground attempted and done many things againſt me, eſpecially touching mine impriſonment, ſending me to ſtraight Ward, and yet commanding me to make anſwer, as appeareth in your unlawful Acts {Ann. 1550}

I for theſe cauſes, and alſo for that ye my ſaid Lord and your ſaid Collegues proceeding with Sir Thomas Smith Knight (whom upon juſt and lawful cauſes I have refuſed, recuſed and declined) have favoured, yea maintained, ſupported and born him, in his unlawful and evil doings, do alſo refuſe, recuſe and decline you my ſaid Lord with the reſt of your ſaid Collegues agreeing and joyning with you, and do except againſt your proceedings, doings and juriſdiction as ſuſpect, and thereby unmeet perſons to proceed herein againſt me.

And further I do alledge, that having been provoked to the Kings moſt excellent Majeſty, as appeareth by the tenor of my provocation, remaining in your Acts, whereunto I do proteſt that I intend to adhere and cleave, ſubmitting my ſelf unto the tuition, protection, and defence of his ſaid Majeſty in this behalf, ye in any wiſe ought not (if ye regard the perſon and authority of his Graces royal power, as ye ought to do) proceed herein againſt me, eſpecially for the honour and reverence ye ought to have unto his Majeſty in this behalf. And becauſe it appeareth that ye do not duly and circumſpectly conſider the ſame, as ye ought to do, but more and more do grieve me; that conſidered, I both here to all purpoſes repeat my former recuſation, provocation, and all other remedies that heretofore I have uſed and mentioned in your ſaid Acts.

And alſo do by theſe preſents refuſe, recuſe, and decline you my ſaid Lord, and your ſaid Collegues, and your juriſdiction, upon cauſes aforeſaid, offering my ſelf prompt and ready to prove all the ſame, afore an arbiter and arbiters, according to the tenor and form of the Law herein to be choſen, requiring you all, for that honour and reverence ye ought to bear to our ſaid Sovereign Lord, and his Laws allowed and approved in this behalf, that ye do not attempt or do, ne yet ſuffer to be attempted or done, any thing in any wiſe againſt me, or unto my prejudice, but ſuffer me to uſe and injoy the benefit of my ſaid former and this recuſation, provocation, allegation, and other lawful remedies mentioned in your ſaid Acts. And in caſe ye do de facto, where ye ought not de jure, to attempt or ſuffer any thing to be attempted or done againſt me in any wiſe herein, I proteſt herewith, and hereby, of my great grief and hurt in that behalf, and that not only I do intend to appeal from you, but alſo, according to the Kings Eccleſiaſtical Laws, to accuſe and complain upon you, as juſtly and truly I both may and ought to do.

Notwithſtanding theſe recuſations, and former appellations, the Archbiſhop with the reſt told him plain that they would be ſtill his Judges, and proceed againſt him according to the Kings Commiſſion, until they did receive a Superſedeas, which if he did obtain, they would gladly obey.

Then the Biſhop, ſeeing that they would ſtill proceed againſt him, did there likewiſe intimate another appellation unto the Kings Majeſty, expreſſing therein in effect no other matter, but ſuch as is already alledged in the two former recuſations and appeals; ſaving that he requireth that Letters dimiſſories or appellatories might be given him according to the Law, and that for his better ſafeguard he did ſubmit himſelf under the protection of the King.

Another appellation of Bonner to the King.

The Commiſſioners for all this ſtuck ſtill unto their Commiſſion, and would not in any caſe defer, but urged him ſtraitly to make a more full anſwer to his Articles than he had done.

{KING Edw.6}

To whom the Biſhop ſaid, that he would ſtand unto his recuſations and appellations before made, and would not make other anſwer.

Bonner ſtanding upon his recuſations and appellations, denieth to make anſwer.

Then the Delegates demanded of him what cauſe he had to alledge, why he ought not to be declared pro confeſſo, upon the Articles whereunto he had not fully anſwered, the Biſhop ſtill anſwering (as before) that he would adhere unto his appellation and recuſation.

Bonner declared Contumax & pro confeſſo, that is, guilty.

Whereupon the Archbiſhop, with conſent of the reſt, ſeeing his pertinacy, pronounced him Contumax, and in pain thereof declared him pro confeſſo, upon all the Articles which he had not anſwered.

This done, Maſter Secretary Smith ſhewed forth a Letter which the Biſhop of London had before that time ſent unto the Lord Maior and the Aldermen of the City of London, the tenor whereof enſueth as followeth.

To the Right honourable and my very good Lord, The Lord Maior of London, with all his worſhipful Brethren, my very dear and worſhipful Friends, with ſpeed.

Bonners Letter to the Lord Maior and Aldermen of London.

RIght honourable, with my very humble recommendations: where I have perceived of late and heard with mine ears, what vile Beaſts and Hereticks have preached unto you, or rather like themſelves prated and railed againſt the moſt bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, denying the verity and preſence of Chriſts true Body and Blood to be there, giving you and the people liberty to believe what ye liſt, teaching you deteſtably, That Faith in this behalf muſt not be coacted, but that every Man may believe as he will; by reaſon whereof, leſt my preſence and ſilence might unto ſome have been ſeen to have allowed their heretical Doctrine, and given credit unto them, betraying my Flock of the Catholick ſort, ye know I departed Yeſterday from the heretick Praters uncharitable charity, and ſo could have wiſhed that you and all other that be Catholick ſhould have done, leaving thoſe there with him that be already caſt away, and will not be recovered. For you tarrying with him ſtill, ſhall not only hurt your ſelves in receiving his poyſoned Doctrine, but alſo ſhall give a viſage that their Doctrine is tolerable by reaſon that ye are content to hear it, and ſay nothing againſt it. And becauſe I cannot tell when I ſhall ſpeak with you to advertiſe you hereof, therefore I thought good for mine own diſcharge and yours, thus much to write unto you, requiring and praying you again and again in Gods behalf, and for mine own diſcharge, that ye ſuffer not your ſelves to be abuſed with ſuch naughty Preachers and Teachers, in hearing their evil Doctrine that ye ſhall perceive them go about to ſow. And thus our bleſſed Lord long and well preſerve you all with this noble City in all good reſt, godlineſs, and proſperity. Written in haſte, this Monday morning, the 16th of September 1549.

Bonner would not tarry M. Hoopers Sermon.

Your faithful Beads man and poor Biſhop, Edmund Bonner.

Bonner deferred till the next Friday and from that till Tueſday after.

This Letter being read, the Secretary demanded of him whether he wrote it not. To whom he would not otherwiſe anſwer, but that he would ſtill adhere and ſtand unto his former recuſations and appeals. Which the Commiſſioners, ſeeing, determined to continue this caſe in ſtate as it was until Friday then next following, between the hours of eight and nine of the clock before Noon, aſſigning the Biſhop to be there at the ſame time and place, then to hear a final Decree of this matter, he ſtill proteſting as before.

The ſeventh Seſſion or appearance of Bonner upon Tueſday the fourth of October, before the Kings Commiſſioners at Lambeth.

The 7. ſeſſion or appearance of Bonner.

UPon Friday the Commiſſioners, for divers urgent cauſes letting them, did not ſit in Commiſſion according to their appointment, but deferred it until Tueſday the firſt of October then next following. Upon which day the Biſhop appearing before them, the Archbiſhop declared unto him, that although as upon Friday laſt they had appointed to pronounce their final Decree and Sentence in this matter, yet forſomuch as they thought that that Sentence (although they had juſt cauſe to give it) ſhould have been very ſore againſt him, they had not only deferred the ſame until this day, but minding to be more friendly to him than he was to himſelf, and to uſe more eaſie, and gentle reformation towards him, had alſo made ſuch ſute and means for him, that although he had grievouſly offended the Kings Majeſty, and very diſobediently behaved himſelf, yet if he would in the mean while have acknowledged his fault, and have been contented to make ſome part of amends in ſubmitting himſelf according to his bounden duty, he ſhould have found much favour; So the Sentence ſhould not have been ſo ſore and extream againſt him, as it was like now to be, for which they were very ſorry, eſpecially to ſee the continuance of ſuch ſtubborn diſobedience, whereby they were then more enforced to give ſuch ſentence againſt him.

The friendly words of the Commiſſioners to Bonner.

The Biſhop nothing at all regarding this gentle and friendly admonition and favour, but perſiſting ſtill in his wonted contumacy, draw forth a Paper, whereon he read theſe words following.

{Anno 1549.}

A declaration of Bonner before the Commiſſioners.

I Edmund Biſhop of London brought in as a priſoner by his keeper, one of the Marſhalſey, here before you my Lord of Canterbury and your pretenſed Collegues, do under my former proteſtations heretofore by me made before you and remaining in your Act, declare that this my preſence here at this time is not voluntary, nor of mine own free will and conſent, but utterly coacted and againſt my will, and that being otherwiſe ſent for or brought before you than I am (that is as a priſoner) I would not, being at liberty, have come and appeared before you, but would have declined and refuſed to make any appearance at all, and would have abſented my ſelf from you, as lawfully and well I might have done, ſtanding to, uſing and enjoying all and ſingular my lawful remedies and defences heretofore uſed, exerciſed and enjoyed, eſpecially my provocation, and appellation heretofore interponed and made unto the the Kings moſt excellent Majeſty, to whom eſtſoons, Ex abundanti, I have both provoked and appealed, and alſo made ſupplication, as appeareth in theſe writings, which, under proteſtation aforeſaid, I do exhibit and leave here with the actuary of this cauſe, requiring him to make an Inſtrument thereupon, and the perſons here preſent to bear record in that behalf; eſpecially to the intent it may appear, I do better acknowledge the Kings Majeſties Authority even in his tender and young age, provoking and appealing to his Majeſty, as my moſt gracious Sovereign and Supreme head, with ſubmiſſion to his Highneſs (as appeareth in my appellation and other remedies) for my tuition and defence, than otherſome (I do mean you my Lord of Canterbury and your ſaid pretenſed Collegues) which by Law and good reaſon ought to have deferred and given place unto ſuch provocation, appellation, and ſupplication, as heretofore lawfully have been by me interponed, and made unto his Majeſties moſt Royal Perſon and Sovereign Authority in this behalf.

Bonner pretendeth ſubmiſſion to the King.

As ſoon as the Biſhop had read theſe words, he did deliver as well that Paper, as alſo two other, unto the Actuary, the one containing an appellation, and the other a ſupplication unto the Kings Majeſty; which appellation beginneth thus. In the Name of God, Amen.

Wherein firſt he ſhewed how naturall every Creature declineth gladly from that thing which goeth about to hurt it, and alſo ſeeketh help and remedy to withſtand ſuch hurts and injuries.

Further he ſhewed that it is found by experience to be hurtful and dangerous to truſt him that once hath hurt and beguiled, leſt he might add more, rather than to take ought from.

Moreover he ſhewed, that he had found heretofore at the hands of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and the reſt of the Collegues in this matter, much extremity and cruelty, injuries, loſſes, and griefs, contrary to Gods Law, and the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, and againſt Juſtice, Charity and good order, being well aſſured if they were not ſtayed but proceeded, they would add more evil to evil, loſs to loſs, diſpleaſure to diſpleaſure, as (ſaid he) their Servants have reported, and they agreeably do ſhew the ſame.

Again in the ſaid Appeal he ſhewed that the Biſhop of Canterbury and the other Commiſſioners ought to have conſidered and done better in that matter for honour and obedience to the Kings Majeſty, which hitherto they have not done (ſaid he) in that they have not given place to his provocations and appellations heretofore made unto his Grace, juſtly and lawfully, and upon good and juſt cauſes, namely, for the unjuſt griefs they did againſt him, which he ſaid do appear in the Acts of that matter; as in pronouncing him contumacem unreaſonably without good cauſe, and further in aſſigning the Term ad audiendum finale decretum, and in committing him to ſtraight priſon, as appeareth in their Acts. Therefore he did not only, Ex abundanti, ad omnem juris cautelam, decline and refuſe their pretenſed juriſdiction as before, but alſo by theſe preſents here ſhewed, he did appeal from the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the reſt, unto the Kings Majeſty, asking alſo thoſe Letters of appeal which the Law doth admit, ſaying he did not intend to go from his former provocations and appellations, but to joyn and cleave unto them in every part and parcel, ſubmitting himſelf to the protection and defence of the Kings Majeſty; and he therein made intimation to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and to his ſaid Collegues, to all intents and purpoſes that might come thereof.

Letters of appeal called Apoſtoli.

Furthermore, as touching the ſupplication above mentioned, which Bonner (as we ſaid) put up in Writing to the Commiſſioners, the Copy thereof hereunder likewiſe enſueth.

The ſupplication of Bonner to the Chancellor of England, with all the reſt of the Kings Majeſties moſt honourable privy Council.

The copy of Bonner's ſupplication.

PLeaſe it your moſt honourable good Lordſhips, with my moſt humble recommendations, to underſtand, that albeit I have according to the Laws, Statutes, and Ordinances of this Realm made ſupplication, provocation, and appellation unto the Kings moſt excellent Majeſty, from the unlawful and wicked proceſs of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhop of Rocheſter, Maſter Secretary Smith, and the Dean of Pauls, as alſo as well from their unjuſt interlocutory, as alſo their definitive ſentence, whereby in Law I ought to have liberty to come abroad and proſecute the ſame, yet ſuch is the malignity of the Judges againſt me, with bearing and maintenance of other which ſundry and many ways have ſought my ruine and deſtruction, that I am here penned and locked up, uſed very extreamly at their pleaſure, and for the contentation of the ſaid Maſter Smith, not ſuffered to find ſureties, or to go abroad to proſecute and ſue my ſaid appellation.

In conſideration whereof, it may pleaſe your ſaid good Lordſhip to take ſome order and redreſs herein, eſpecially for that it is now the time that the Kings Subſidy, now due, ought to be called upon, and Juſtice alſo miniſtred unto his Majeſties Subjects, which, being as I now am, I cannot be ſuffered to do. And thus without further extending my Letter therein, conſidering that your great wiſdoms, experience, and goodneſs can gather of a little, what is expedient and neceſſary for the whole, I do beſeech Almighty God to preſerve and keep well all your honourable good Lordſhips.

Written in haſte this ſeventh of October, 1549, in the Marſhalſey.

Your honourable Lordſhips poor Orator, and moſt bounden Beadſman,

Edmund London.

The Archbiſhop anſwered to the words of Bonner.

These things ended, the Archbiſhop ſaid unto him; My Lord, where you ſay that you come coacted, or elſe you would not have appeared, I do much marvel of you. For you would thereby make us and this audience here believe, that becauſe your are a priſoner, ye ought not therefore to anſwer. Which if it were true, it were enough to confound the whole State of this Realm. For I dare ſay, that of the greateſt Priſoners and Rebels that ever your Keeper there (meaning the under Marſhal) hath had under him, he cannot ſhew me one that hath uſed ſuch defence as you here have done. {KING Edw.6}

Bonner. Well (quoth the Biſhop) if my Keeper were learned in the Laws, I could ſhew him my mind therein.

The Archbiſhop. Well, ſaid the Archbiſhop, I have read over all the Laws as well as you, but to another end and purpoſe than you did, and yet I can find no ſuch priviledg in this matter.

Secretary Smith. Then Maſter Secretary Smith did very ſore burthen and charge him, how diſobediently and rebelliouſly he had always behaved himſelf towards the Kings Majeſty and his Authority.

Bonner. Whereupon, the Biſhop under his Proteſtation anſwered again, That he was the Kings Majeſties lawful and true Subject, and did acknowledge his Highneſs to be his gracious Sovereign Lord, or elſe he would not have appealed unto him as he did; yea, and would gladly lay his hands and his neck alſo under his Graces Feet, and therefore he deſired that his Highneſs Laws and Juſtice might be miniſtred unto him.

Secretary Smith. Bonner compared to the Rebels of Devonſhire. Yea (quoth Maſter Secretary) you ſay well my Lord, but I pray you what other hath all theſe Rebels both in Norfolk, Devonſhire, and Cornwal, and other places done? Have they not ſaid thus? We be the Kings true Subjects, we acknowledge him for our King, and we will obey his Laws, with ſuch like; and yet when either commandment, Letter, or Pardon was brought unto them from his Majeſty, they believed it not, but ſaid it was forged and made under a Hedge, and was Gentlemens doings, ſo that indeed they neither would nor did obey any thing.

Bonner. The people laughing at Bonner. Ah Sir, ſaid the Biſhop, I perceive your meaning; as who ſhould ſay that the Biſhop of London is a Rebel like them. Yea by my Troth, quoth the Secretary. Whereat the people laughed.

Doctor May. Then the Dean of Pauls ſaid unto him, That he marvelled much, and was very ſorry to ſee him ſo untractable, that he would not ſuffer the Judges to ſpeak.

Bonner with his taunts. To whom the Biſhop diſdainfully anſwered; Well, Maſter Dean, you muſt ſay ſomewhat. And likewiſe at another time as the Dean was ſpeaking, he interrupted him and ſaid, You may ſpeak when your turn cometh.

Secretary Smith. Then ſaid the Secretary Smith, I would you knew your duty.

Bonner. The contemptuous talk of Bonner. I would (quoth he again) you knew it was well as I: with an infinite deal more of other ſuch ſtubborn and contemptuous talk and behaviour towards them. Which the Commiſſioners weighing, and perceiving no likelihood of any tractable reaſon in him, determined that the Archbiſhop, with their whole conſent, ſhould at that preſent there openly read and publiſh their final Decree or Sentence definitive againſt him. Which he did, pronouncing him thereby to be clean deprived from the Biſhoprick of London, and further as in the ſame appeareth, in tenor as followeth.

Sententia deprivationis lata contra Edmundum London. Epiſcopum.

Which ended, the Biſhop immediately did therefrom appeal by word of mouth, alledging, that the ſame Sentence there given againſt him, was Lex nulla. The tenor of whoſe words I thought here to expreſs, according as they were by him uttered, in this wiſe as followeth.

The words of Bonner appealing from the ſentence finitive.

I Edmund Biſhop of London, brought in and kept here as a priſoner againſt my conſent and will, do under my former Proteſtation heretofore made, and to the intent it may alſo appear, that I have not, being ſo here in this place, conſented nor agreed to any thing done againſt me and in my prejudice, alledge and ſay that this ſentence given here againſt me, is Lex nulla; and ſo far forth as it ſhall appear to be Aliqua; I do ſay it is Iniqua & Injuſta, and that therefore I do from it, as Iniqua & Injuſta, appeal to the moſt excellent and noble King Edward the Sixth, by the Grace of God, King of England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, and of the Church of England and alſo Ireland, next and immediately under God here on Earth, Supreme head, and unto his Court of Chancery or Parliament, as the Laws, Statutes, and Ordinances of this Realm will ſuffer and bear in this behalf, deſiring inſtantly firſt, ſecond and third, according to the Laws, Letters, reverential or dimiſſories, to be given and delivered unto me in this behalf, with all things expedient, requiſite, or neceſſary in any wiſe; and thereupon alſo the ſaid Biſhop required the publick Notary or Actuary, William Say, to make an Inſtrument, and the witneſs aforeſaid and other preſent to record the ſame. To whom ſo appealing, and requiring as afore, the ſaid Judges delegate ſaid, that they will declare and ſignifie to the Kings Majeſty what is done in this matter, and thereupon will defer or not defer to his ſaid appellation, according as his Graces pleaſure and commandment ſhall be given to them in that behalf, and after all this, the ſaid Biſhop of London ſaid to them, Jam functi eſtis officio. What will your Grace do with me now, touching my impriſonment? Will ye keep me ſtill in priſon? Shall I not now be at liberty to proſecute mine appeal? To whom the Archbiſhop anſwering, ſaid, That they perceived now more in that matter than they did at the firſt, and that this matter is greater Rebellion than he is aware of, and therefore ſaid that as yet they would not diſcharge him, and thereupon they committed him again to his keeper in priſon.

Letters reverential or dimiſſories.

{Ann. 1549}

This talk finiſhed, the Archbiſhop conſidering that moſt of the audience there preſent did not underſtand the meaning of the Sentence being read in the Latin Tongue, ſaid to them, Becauſe there be many of you here that underſtand not the Latin Tongue, and ſo cannot tell what judgment hath been here given, I ſhall therefore ſhew you the effect thereof; and therewith did declare in Engliſh the cauſes expreſſed in the Sentence, adding thereunto theſe words,

The Archbiſhop declareth the effect of Bonner's ſentence in Engliſh.

Becauſe my Lord of London is found guilty in theſe matters, therefore we have here by our Sentence deprived him of our Biſhoprick of London; and this we ſhew unto you to the intent that from henceforth ye ſhall not eſteem him any more as Biſhop of London.

Bonner deprived and unbiſhoped.

Then Bonner deſired the Archbiſhop to declare likewiſe what he had done, and how he had appealed. But the other, ſeeing his froward contempt, refuſed it, ſaying, you may do it your ſelf. Whereupon very diſdainfully again he ſaid, Jam functi eſtis officio. What will your Grace do with me touching my impriſonment? Will you keep me ſtill in Priſon?

Bonners diſdainful words to the Commiſſioners.

To whom the Commiſſioners anſwered, That they perceived now more in the matter than they did before, and that his behaviour was greater Rebellion than he was aware of, and therefore they would not diſcharge him, but committed him again to his Keeper to be kept in priſon. Where he moſt juſtly remained until the death of that moſt worthy and godly Prince King Edward the Sixth. After which time he wrought moſt horrible miſchief and cruelties againſt the Saints of God, as appeareth hereafter throughout the whole Reign of Queen Mary. From the executing of the which like Tyranny the Lord of his great mercy keep all other ſuch, Amen.

Bonner again committed to his keeper.

Now, immediately after his deprivation, he writeth out of the Marſhalſey other Letters ſupplicatory unto the Lord Chancellor, and the reſt of the Kings Council. Wherein he thus complaineth, that by reaſon of the great enmity that the Duke of Somerſet and Sir Thomas Smith bare unto him, his often and earneſt Sutes unto the King and his Council could not be heard. He therefore moſt humbly deſired their Lordſhips, for the cauſes aforeſaid, to conſider him, and to let him have liberty to proſecute his matter before them, and he would daily pray for the good preſervation of their honours as appeareth by the words of his own ſupplication hereunder following.

Thus after the Commiſſioners had finiſhed with Boner, he being now Priſoner in the Marſhalſey, leaving no ſhift of the Law unſought how to work for himſelf as well as he might, drew out a certain Supplication, conceived and directed to the Kings Majeſty, out of the ſaid Priſon of the Marſhalſey.

To the right Honourable, my Lord Chancellor of England, with all the reſt of the moſt honourable Privy-Council.

PLeaſe it your moſt Honourable good Lordſhips with my moſt humble Commendations to underſtand, that albeit heretofore I have made ſuch Suit, and to ſuch perſons as I cannot deviſe to make more, or to more higher; that is to wit, to the Kings moſt excellent Majeſty, and his moſt gracious Perſon in divers ſorts, and alſo unto your moſt honourable good Lordſhips being of his Privy-Council, for redreſs of ſuch notable and manifeſt injuries and extremities as have been contrary to all Law, Honeſty, and good Reaſon inflicted upon me by my Lord of Canterbury, my Lord of Rocheſter, Doctor Smith, and Doctor May: yet becauſe the ſaid Doctor Smith being a Miniſter to the Duke of Somerſet, and they both my deadly Enemies, hath ſundry ways ſtudied and laboured my ruine and deſtruction, ſtaying and letting heretofore all my lawful Remedies and Suits, having therein help and furtherance of theſe two other aforeſaid perſons, being ready at foot and hand to accompliſh all their deſires and pleaſures, I ſhall at this preſent, having for a time forborn to trouble (for good reſpects) your moſt honourable good Lordſhips with any my Suits, and eſpecially for your other manifold great affairs in the Kings Majeſties buſineſs, my ſelf yet, the mean while, neither wanting good will, ne yet juſt cauſe (being where I am) to make ſuch Suit, renew my Suit, and moſt humbly beſeech your moſt honourable good Lordſhips to give me leave to make moſt humble Supplication again to your ſaid Lordſhips, for honeſt and lawful liberty to proſecute my Appellation and Supplication heretofore made to the Kings moſt excellent Majeſty, and according to the Law to make my ſuit for redreſs of the ſaid great and manifeſt injuries, extremities, and wrongs done againſt me by the ſaid perſons. And your ſaid Lordſhips, over and beſides the furtherance of Juſtice many ways herein to me and other, and the Collection of the Kings Majeſties Subſidy now to be levied of the Clergy in my Dioceſs, which hitherto hath been and is ſtaid by reaſon of the premiſſes, ſhall alſo bind me moſt greatly and intirely to pray daily for the good perſervation of your ſaid moſt honourable good Lordſhips in all honour, felicity, and joy, long to continue and indure unto Gods pleaſure. Written in the Marſhalſey the 26*th* of October, 1549.

Your Lordſhips moſt faithful and aſſured Beadſman Edmund London.

A Supplication made and directed by Edmund Bonner, late Biſhop of London, to the Kings Majeſty, out of the Priſon of the Marſhalſey.

Bonners Supplication to the King.

IN the which Supplication, firſt after the uſed form of ſtile, he prayed for the proſperous eſtate of the King long to Reign. Then he ſhewed that his faithful heart and ſervice to him hath, is, and ſhall be, as it was to his Father before.

Then he declared how he had been belied of evil men, and miſreported not to bear a true heart to his Grace, but a rebellious mind, in denying his Royal Power in his Minority, where indeed he ſaith, His Grace ſhould find him always during life both in heart, word and deed to do and acknowledge otherwiſe, and to be moſt willing to ſhew, &c. and to do all other things for his Grace, as willingly as any other Subject, or as thoſe that were his denouncers, who he thought were not ſent of his Grace, but pretenſed Commiſſioners, &c.

Further, he complained of his denunciation by certain Commiſſioners (who ſaid they were ſent by his Grace) alledging the ſame not to be lawful; and of his long and ſharp impriſonment, and that the Commiſſioners obſerved neither Law nor reaſonable Order, but extremity. And where he had made Appeal to his Grace, and he could not have it; he deſired to have Law to proſecute and ſue his Appeal for his remedy, and that he (conſidering his Vocation) might not be ſhut up and put from liberty, which his meaneſt Subjects have. {KING Edw. 6}

Then he deſired his Graces Letters of Superſedeas againſt the Commiſſioners, and that the matter might be heard before the Council, and then he doubted not but to be found a true faithful man, and herein to have wrong. So in the end he concluded, this (proſtrating himſelf even to the very ground, and humbly kiſſing his Graces Feet) to be the only thing which he humbly deſired, &c.

THis done, and the Supplication peruſed, the King eftſoons giveth in charge and commandment to certain men of Honour and Worſhip, and Perſons skilful in the Law, as to the Lord Rich, high Chancellor, the Lord Treaſurer, the Lord Marquiſs Dorſet, the Biſhop of Ely, Lord Wentworth, Sir Anthony Wingfield, Sir William Harbert Knights, Doctor Rich, Wooton, Ed. Montague, Lord Chief Juſtice, Sir John Baker Knight, with Judge Hales, John Goſnold, Doctor Oliver, and alſo Doctor Layſon, that they ſcanning and peruſing all ſuch Acts, Matters, and Minuments of the ſaid Bonner by him exhibited, produced, propounded, and alledged, with all and ſingular his Proteſtations, Recuſations, and Appellations, ſhould upon mature conſideration thereof give their direct anſwer upon the ſame, whether the Appellation of the ſaid Bonner were to be deferred unto, whether the Sentence defined againſt him ſtood by the Law ſufficient and effectual, or not. Who eftſoons after diligent diſcuſſion, and conſiderate adviſement had of all and ſingular the premiſſes, gave their reſolute anſwer, that the pretenſed Appellation of Edmund Bonner aforeſaid was naught and unreaſonable, and in no wiſe to be deferred unto, and that the Sentence by the Commiſſioners againſt him, was rightly and juſtly pronounced. And this was the concluſion of Bonners whole matter, and deprivation for that time.

Bonners Appellation to the King peruſed and tried, and found by the Law uneffectual and unreaſonable.

The Sentence of Bonners deprivation by the Peers and learned men of the Realm, found to be juſt and lawful.

Thus then leaving Doctor Bonner a while in the Marſhalſey with his Keeper, we will proceed (the Lord permitting) further in the courſe of our ſtory, as the order of years and time requireth. And although the trouble of the Lord Protector falleth here joyntly with the deprivation of Doctor Bonner, yet becauſe he was ſhortly again delivered out of the ſame through the Lords mighty working, I will therefore delay the tractation thereof, till the time of his ſecond trouble, which was two years after; and ſo in the mean time, returning again into our diſcourſe, intend by the Lords leave to collect and continue the matters begun, touching the Kings godly proceedings for reformation of Religion in the foreſaid year of our Lord, concurring, Anno 1549.

The firſt trouble of the Lord Protector was about the month of October, 1549.

And here firſt a note would be made of Peter Martyr and of his learned travels, and diſputation in the Univerſity of Oxford the ſaid preſent year with Doctor Chedſey, and other more about the matter of the Sacrament; which was, that the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine was not changed in the Sacrament, and that the Body and Blood of Chriſt was not carnally and bodily in the Bread and Wine, but united to the ſame Sacramentally.

Diſputation of Peter Martyr with Doctor Chedſey in Oxford.

In like manner, ſome touch or mention here alſo would be made of the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, for the gathering and compiling whereof thirty two perſons were aſſigned by Act of Parliament the ſaid preſent year, 1549. But becauſe theſe be rather matters of tractation, than hiſtorical, I mean (God willing) to defer the further conſideration thereof unto the end of the Hiſtory of this Kings days, and ſo to paſs forward to other matters in the mean while.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws by Act of Parliament to be compiled by 32 perſons. Stat. An. 3 Ed. 6.

Books of Latine-Service called in, and aboliſhed.

IT followeth then in ſtory, that certain of the vulgar multitude, hearing of the apprehenſion of the Lord Protector, and ſuppoſing the alteration of publick Service into Evil diſpoſed people thinking to have their Latine-Service again after the apprehenſion of the Lord Protector.

KING Edw. 6. into Engliſh, and Adminiſtration of the Sacrament and other Rites lately appointed in the Church, had been the act chiefly or only of the ſaid Lord Protector, began upon the ſame to noiſe and brute abroad, that they ſhould now have their old Latine-Service with holy Bread and holy Water, and their other like ſuperſtitious Ceremonies again: whereupon the King, with the body and ſtate of the Privy-Council then being, directed out his Letters of Requeſt, and ſtrait commandment to the Biſhops, in their Dioceſs, to cauſe and warn the Dean and Prebendaries of their Cathedral Churches, all Parſons, Vicars and Curates, with the Church-Wardens of every Pariſh within their Dioceſs, to bring in and deliver up all Antiphoners, Miſſales, Grailes, Proceſſionals, Manuals, Legends, Pies, Portuaſes, Journals, and Ordinals after the uſe of Sarum, Lincoln, York, Bangor, Hereford, or any other private uſe, and all other Books of Service, the having whereof might be any let to the Service now ſet forth in Engliſh, charging alſo and commanding that all ſuch as ſhall be found ſtubborn or diſobedient in this behalf ſhould be committed unto Ward.

And becauſe the King moreover was advertiſed, That there was a ſlackneſs and frowardneſs among the people, refuſing to pay toward the finding of Bread and Wine for the holy Communion, by reaſon whereof the Communion in many places was omitted, the Biſhops in like manner had given in charge to provide for redreſs thereof, and to puniſh them which ſhould refuſe ſo to do. Whereby it may appear to us now, that no Wafer-Cakes, but common Bread was then by the Kings appointment ordinarily received and uſed in Churches. This was about the later end of December, Anno 1549.

Taking down Altars.

FUrthermore, in the year next following, 1550. other Letters likewiſe were ſent for the taking down of Altars in Churches, and ſetting up the Table in ſtead of the ſame, unto Nicholas Ridley, who, being Biſhop of Rocheſter before, was then made Biſhop of London in Bonners place. The Copy and Contents of the Kings Letters are theſe, as followeth.

The Kings Letter to Nicholas Ridley then Biſhop of London.

RIght Reverend Father in God, right truſty and well-beloved, we greet you well. And where it is come to our knowledge, that the Altars within the moſt part of the Churches of this Realm being already upon good and godly Conſiderations taken down, there do yet remain Altars ſtanding in divers other Churches, by occaſion whereof much variance and contention ariſeth among ſundry of our Subjects, which, if good foreſight were not had, might perchance ingender great hurt and inconvenience; we let you wit, that minding to have all occaſion of contention taken away, which many times groweth by thoſe and ſuch like diverſities, and conſidering that amongſt other things belonging to our Royal Office and Cure, we do accompt the greateſt to be, to maintain the common quiet of our Realm; we have thought good by the advice of our Council to require you, and nevertheleſs eſpecially to charge and command you, for the avoiding of all matters of further contention and ſtrife about the ſtanding or taking away of the ſaid Altars, to give ſubſtantial Order throughout all your Dioceſs, that with all diligence all the Altars in every Church or Chappel, as well in places exempted as not exempted, within your ſaid Dioceſs, be taken down, and in ſtead thereof a Table to ſet up in ſome convenient part of the Chancel, within every ſuch Church or Chappel, to ſerve for the miniſtration of the bleſſed Communion. And to the intent the ſame may be done without the offence of ſuch our loving Subjects as be not yet ſo well perſwaded in that behalf as we would wiſh, we ſend unto you herewith certain conſiderations gathered and collected, that make for the purpoſe, the which, and ſuch other as you ſhall think meet to be ſet forth to perſwade the weak to embrace our proceedings in this part, we pray you cauſe to be declared to the people by ſome diſcreet Preachers, in ſuch places as you ſhall think meet, before the taking down of the ſaid Altars; ſo as both the weak Conſciences of other may be inſtructed and ſatisfied as much as may be, and this our pleaſure the more quietly executed. For the better doing whereof, we require you to open the foreſaid Conſiderations in that our Cathedral Church in your own perſon, if you conveniently may, or otherwiſe by your Chancellor, or ſome other grave Preacher, both there and in ſuch other Market-Towns and moſt notable places of your Dioceſs, as you may think moſt requiſite.

Reaſons why the Lords Board ſhould rather be after the form of a Table, than of an Altar.

The firſt Reaſon.

Conſiderations and Reaſons why the Table were more convenient in the Church than the Altar.

FIrſt, The form of a Table ſhall more move the ſimple from the ſuperſtitious Opinions of the Popiſh Maſs, unto the right uſe of the Lords Supper. For the uſe of an Altar is to make Sacrifice upon it; the uſe of a Table is to ſerve for men to eat upon. Now when we come unto the Lords Board, what do we come for? To Sacrifice Chriſt again, and to Crucifie him again, or to feed upon him that was once only crucified and offered up for us? If we come to feed upon him, ſpiritually to eat his Body, and ſpiritually to drink his Blood, which is the true uſe of the Lords Supper, then no man can deny but the form of a Table is more meet for the Lords Board than the form of an Altar.

The ſecond Reaſon.

The ſecond Reaſon. Anſwer to certain Cavillers which take hold of the term of the Altar in the Kings Book.

Item, Whereas it is ſaid, The Book of Common Prayer maketh mention of an Altar; wherefore it is not lawful to aboliſh that which the Book alloweth. To this it is thus anſwered, The Book of Common Prayer calleth the thing whereupon the Lords Supper is miniſtred, indifferently a Table, an Altar, or the Lords Board, without preſcription of any form thereof, either of a Table or of an Altar: ſo that whether the Lords board have the form of an Altar, or of a Table, the Book of Common Prayer calleth it both an Altar and a Table. For as it calleth it an Altar, whereupon the Lords Supper is miniſtred, a Table, and the Lords Board, ſo it calleth the Table where the holy Communion is diſtributed with Lauds and Thankſgiving unto the Lord, an Altar, for that there is offered the ſame Sacrifice of Praiſe and Thankſgiving. And thus it appeareth, that here is nothing either ſaid or meant contrary to the Book of Common-Prayer.

The Table how it may be called an Altar, and in what reſpect.

The third Reaſon.

The third Reaſon. This reaſon for taking away the ſuperſtitious Opinion, ſerveth alſo as well for the aboliſhing of other things more beſides Altars, &c.

Thirdly, The Popiſh Opinion of Maſs was, That it might not be celebrated but upon an Altar, or at the leaſt upon a Super-Altar, to ſupply the fault of the Altar, which muſt have had his prints and characters, or elſe it was thought that the thing was not lawfully done. But this ſuperſtitious Opinion is more holden in the minds of the ſimple and ignorant by the form of an Altar, than of a Table; wherefore it is more meet, for the aboliſhment of this ſuperſtitious Opinion, to have the Lords Board after the form of a Table than of an Altar.

The

The fourth Reason.

tourth ſon. name ll Al- ow it deri ed, d what it nifi. the Fourthly, The form of an Altar was ordained for the Sacrifices of the Law, and therefore the Altar in Greek is called θυσιαστήριον, Quaſi Sacrificii locus. But now both the Law and the Sacrifices thereof do ceaſe; wherefore the form of the Altar uſed in the Altar ought to ceaſe withall.

The fifth Reaſon.

he fifth aſon. hriſt uſed Table and ot an Al- ar. he Altar ever uſed mong the poſtles.

Fifthly, Chriſt did inſtitute the Sacrament of his Body and Blood at his laſt Supper at a Table, and not at an Altar, as it appeareth manifeſtly by the three Evangeliſts. And Saint Paul calleth the coming to the holy Communion, the coming unto the Lords Supper. And alſo it is not read, that any of the Apoſtles or the Primitive Church did ever uſe any Altar in miniſtration of the holy Communion.

Wherefore ſeeing the form of a Table is more agreeable to Chriſts Inſtitution, and with the uſage of the Apoſtles, and of the Primitive Church, than the form of an Altar, therefore the form of a Table is rather to be uſed than the form of an Altar in the Adminiſtration of the holy Communion.

The ſixth Reaſon.

The ſixth Reaſon.

Finally, It is ſaid in the Preface of the Book of Common Prayer, that if any doubt do ariſe in the uſe and practiſing of the ſame Book; to appeaſe all ſuch diverſity, the matter ſhall be referred unto the Biſhop of the Dioceſs, who by his diſcretion ſhall take order for the quieting and appeaſing of the ſame, ſo that the ſame Order be not contrary unto any thing contained in that Book.

After theſe Letters and Reaſons received, the forenamed Nicholas Ridley, Biſhop of London, conſequently upon the ſame did hold his Viſitation, wherein, amongſt other his Injunctions, the ſaid Biſhop exhorted thoſe Churches in his Dioceſs, where the Altars did then remain, to conform themſelves unto thoſe other Churches which had taken them down, and had ſet up in ſtead of the multitude of their Altars one decent Table in every Church.

Nicholas Ridley Biſhop of London appointed in his Dioceſs the right form of a Table.

Upon the occaſion whereof there aroſe a great diverſity about the form of the Lords Board, ſome uſing it after the form of a Table, and ſome of an Altar. Wherein when the ſaid Biſhop was required to ſay and determine what was moſt meet, he declared he could do no leſs of his bounden duty, for the appeaſing of ſuch diverſity, and to procure one godly Uniformity, but to exhort all his Dioceſs unto that which he thought did beſt agree with Scripture, with the uſage of the Apoſtles, and with the Primitive Church, and to that which is not only not contrary unto any thing contained in the Book of Common Prayer, (as is before proved) but alſo might highly further the Kings moſt godly proceedings in aboliſhing of divers vain and ſuperſtitious Opinions of the Popiſh Maſs out of the hearts of the ſimple, and to bring them to the right uſe taught by holy Scripture of the Lords Supper, and ſo appointed he the form of a right Table to be uſed in his Dioceſs, and in the Church of Paul brake down the Wall ſtanding then by the high Altars ſide.

The Wall by the high Altars ſide *Paul*s ch brokown bolas ſty.

Now we will enter (God willing) into thoſe matters which happened between King Edward and his Siſter Mary, as by their Letters here following are to be ſeen.

To my Lord Protector and the reſt of the Kings Majeſties Council.

Lady Maries Letter to the Lords of the Council.

MY Lord, I perceive by the Letters which I late received from you, and other of the Kings Majeſties Council, that ye be all ſorry to find ſo little Conformity in me touching the Obſervation of his Majeſties Laws; who am well aſſured, that I have offended no Law, unleſs it be a late Law of your own making, for the altering of matters in Religion, which in my Conſcience is not worthy to have the name of a Law, both for the Kings Honour-ſake, the wealth of the Realm, and giving an occaſion of an evil brute through all Chriſtendom, beſides the partiality uſed in the ſame, and (as my ſaid Conſcience is very well perſwaded) the offending of God, which paſſeth all the reſt: but I am well aſſured that the King his Fathers Laws were all allowed and conſented to without compulſion by the whole Realm, both Spiritual and Temporal, and all ye Executors ſworn upon a Book to fulfil the ſame, ſo that it was an authoriſed Law, and that I have obeyed, and will do with the Grace of God, till the Kings Majeſty my Brother ſhall have ſufficient years to be a Judge in theſe matters himſelf. Wherein, my Lord, I was plain with you at my laſt being in the Court, declaring unto you at that time whereunto I would ſtand, and now do aſſure you all, that the only occaſion of my ſtay from altering mine Opinion, is for two cauſes:

One principally for my Conſcience ſake; the other, That the King my Brother ſhall not hereafter charge me to be one of thoſe that were agreeable to ſuch alterations in his tender years. And what fruits daily grow by ſuch changes ſince the death of the King my Father, to every indifferent perſon it well appeareth, both to the diſpleaſure of God and unquietneſs of the Realm.

Notwithſtanding, I aſſure you all, I would be as loth to ſee his Highneſs take hurt, or that any evil ſhould come to this his Realm, as the beſt of you all, and none of you have the like cauſe, conſidering how I am compelled by nature being his Majeſties poor and humble Siſter, moſt tenderly to love and pray for him, and unto this his Realm (being born within the ſame) wiſh all wealth and proſperity to God's Honour.

And if any judge of me the contrary for mine Opinion ſake, as I truſt none doth, I doubt not in the end, with Gods help, to prove my ſelf as true a natural and humble Siſter, as they of the contrary Opinion, with all their devices and altering of Laws, ſhall prove themſelves true Subjects; praying you my Lord, and the reſt of the Council, no more to trouble and unquiet me with matter touching my Conſcience, wherein I am at a full point with Gods help, whatſoever ſhall happen to me, intending with his Grace, to trouble you little with any wordly Suits but to beſtow the ſhort time I think to live in quietneſs and pray for the Kings Majeſty and all you, heartily wiſhing, that your proceedings may be to Gods Honour, the ſafeguard of the Kings Perſon, and quietneſs to the whole Realm.

Moreover, where your deſire is, That I ſhould ſend my Controuler and Doctor Hopton unto you, by whom you would ſignifie your minds more amply, to my contentation and honour; it is not unknown to you all, that the chief charge of my houſe reſteth only upon the travels of my ſaid Controuler, who hath not been abſent from my houſe three whole days ſince the ſetting up of the ſame, unleſs it were for my Letters Patents; ſo that if it were not for his continual diligence, I think my little portion would not have ſtretched ſo far. And my Chaplain by occaſion of ſickneſs hath been long abſent, and is not yet able to ride.

Therefore like as I cannot forbear my Controuler, and my Prieſt is not able to journey, ſo ſhall I deſire you my Lord, and all the reſt of the Council, that having any thing to be declared to me, except matters of Religion, you will either write your minds, or ſend ſome truſty Perſon with whom I ſhall be contented to talk, and make anſwer as the caſe ſhall require; aſſuring you that if any Servant of mine, either Man or Woman, or Chaplain, ſhould move me to the contrary of my Conſcience, I would not give ear to them, nor ſuffer the like to be uſed within my houſe. And thus my Lord, with my hearty Commendations, I wiſh unto you and the reſt as well to do as my ſelf.

From my houſe at Kinning-Hall, the two and twentieth of June, 1594.

Your aſſured friend to my power,

Mary.

A remem-

KING Edw.6

A remembrance of certain matters appointed by the Council to be declared by D. Hopton to the Lady Maries Grace, for anſwer to her former Letter; which ſaid Hopton was after ſhe came to her Reign Biſhop of Norwich.

Her Grace writeth, That the Law made by Parliament is not worthy the name of Law, meaning the Statute for the Communion, &c.

You ſhall ſay thereto,

THe fault is great in any Subject to diſallow a Law of the King, a Law of a Realm, by long ſtudy, free diſputation, and uniform determination of the whole Clergy, conſulted, debated, and concluded; but the greater fault is in her Grace, being next of any Subject in blood and eſtate to the Kings Majeſty her Brother and good Lord, to give example of diſobedience, being a Subject, or of unnaturalneſs, being his Majeſties Siſter, or of neglecting the Power of the Crown, ſhe being by limitation of Law next to the ſame. The example of diſobedience is moſt perilous in this time, as ſhe can well underſtand; Her unkindneſs reſteth in the Kings own acceptation; The neglecting of the Power before God is anſwerable, and in the World toucheth her honour.

The Executors (ſhe ſaith) were ſworn to King Henry the Eighth his Laws.

You ſhall ſay,

It is true, they were ſworn to him, his Laws, his Heirs and Succeſſors; which Oath they duly obſerve, and ſhould offend if they ſhould break any one jot of the Kings Laws now being, without a diſpenſation by a Law, and herein her Grace ſhall underſtand, That it is no Law, which is diſſolved by a Law: neither may her Grace do that injury to the Kings Majeſty her Brother, to diminiſh his Authority ſo far, that he may not, by the free conſent of a Parliament, amend and alter unprofitable Laws, for the number of inconveniences which hereof might follow, as her Grace with conſideration may well perceive.

Offence taken by the ſending for her Officers.

You ſhall ſay,

If her Grace conſider the firſt Letters of that purpoſe, they will declare our good meaning to her, and her gentle uſage, requiring the preſence of her truſty Servant, becauſe ſhe might give more truſt to our Meſſage.

Her Houſe is her Flock.

You ſhall ſay,

It is well liked her Grace ſhould have her Houſe or Flock, but not exempt from the Kings Orders; neither may there be a Flock of the Kings Subjects, but ſuch as will hear and follow the Voice of the King their Shepherd. God diſalloweth it, Law and Reaſon forbiddeth it, Policy abhorreth it, and her Honour may not require it.

Her Grace deferreth her Obedience to the Kings Laws, until his Majeſty be of ſufficient years.

You ſhall ſay,

She could in no one ſaying more diſallow the Authority of the King, the Majeſty of his Crown, and the State of the Realm. For herein ſhe ſuſpendeth his Kingdom, and eſteemeth his Authority by his Age, not by his Right and Title. Her Grace muſt underſtand he is a King by the Ordinance of God, by deſcent of Royal Blood, not by the numbring of his years.

As a Creature ſubject to Mortality, he hath Youth, and by Gods Grace ſhall have Age; but as a King he hath no difference by days and years. The Scripture plainly declareth it, not only young Children to have been Kings by Gods ſpecial Ordinance, but alſo (which is to be noted) to have had beſt ſucceſs in their Reign, and the favour of God in their proceedings. Yea, in their firſt years have they moſt purely reformed the Church and ſtate of Religion. Therefore her Grace hath no cauſe thus to diminiſh his Majeſties Power, and to make him as it were no King until ſhe think him of ſufficient years. Wherein how much his Majeſty may be juſtly offended, they be ſorry to think.

She ſaith ſhe is ſubject to none of the Council.

You ſhall ſay,

If her Grace underſtandeth it of us in that acceptation as we be private men, and not Counſellors ſworn to the Kings Majeſty, we knowledge us not to be Superiors; but if ſhe underſtand her writing of us as Counſellors and Magiſtrates ordained by his Majeſty, her Grace muſt be contented to think us of Authority ſufficient by the reaſon of our Office to challenge a Superiority; not to rule by private affection, but by Gods Providence; not to our eſtimation, but to the Kings Honour, and finally to increaſe the Kings eſtate with our Counſel, our Dignity and Vocation; and we think her Grace will not forget the ſaying of Solomon in the ſixth Chapter of the Book of Wiſdom, to move a King to Rule by Counſel and Wiſdom, and to build his eſtate upon them. Wherefore her Grace muſt be remembred, the Kings Majeſties politick Body is not made only of his own Royal material body, but of a Council, by whom his Majeſty ruleth, directeth and governeth his Realm. In the place of which Council her Grace is not ignorant that we be ſet and placed. Wherefore the reputation ſhe ſhall give us, ſhe ſhall give it to the Kings Honor, and that which ſhe ſhall take from us, ſhe ſhall take from his Majeſty, whoſe Majeſty we think if it might take increaſe or honour, as God giveth a daily abundance, it ſhould receive rather increaſe from her, being his Majeſties Siſter, than thus any abatement.

She received Maſter Arundel, and Maſter Englefield.

You ſhall ſay,

All the Council remembreth well her refuſal to have her houſe charged with any more number, alledging the ſmall proportion for her charge, and therefore it was thought to come more for their earneſt Suit, meaning to be priviledged Subjects from the Law, than of her deſire, which refuſed very often to increaſe her number. Their cautele the King might not ſuffer, to have his Law diſobeyed, their Countries where they ſhould ſerve by them to be deſtitute, and having been Servants to his Majeſty, the circumſtances of their departure might in no wiſe be liked.

She refuſed to hear any man to the contrary of her Opinion.

You ſhall ſay,

It is an anſwer more of will than of reaſon, and therefore her Grace muſt be admoniſhed neither to truſt her own opinion without ground, neither to miſlike all others having ground. If hers be good, it is no hurt if ſhe hear the worſe. If it be ill, ſhe ſhall do well to hear the better. She ſhall not alter by hearing, but by hearing the better. And becauſe ſhe ſhall not miſlike the offer, let her Grace name of learned men whom ſhe will, and further than they by Learning ſhall prove ſhe ſhall not be moved. And ſo far it is thought reaſon will compel her Grace.

In the end ye ſhall ſay,

The good wills and minds of the Lord Protector and the Council is ſo much toward her Grace, that howſoever ſhe would her ſelf in honour be eſteemed, howſoever in conſcience quieted, yea howſoever benefited, ſaving their duties to God and the King, they would as much, and in their doings (if it pleaſe her to prove it) will be nothing Inferiors, aſſuring her Graee, that they be moſt ſorry that ſhe is thus diſquieted: and if neceſſity of the cauſe, the honour and ſurety of the King, and the judgment of their own conſcience moved them not, thus far they would not have attempted. But their truſt is, her Grace will allow them the more, when ſhe ſhall perceive the cauſe, and think no leſs could be done by them, where ſhe provoked them ſo far.

Theſe and other of like credit, more amply committed to you in ſpeech, you ſhall declare to her Grace, and further declare your conſcience for the allowing of the manner of the Communion, as ye have plainly profeſſed it before us.

Note Dr. Hoptons allowance of the Communion in thoſe days.

At Richmond the fourteenth of June, 1549.

The Lady Mary to the Lord Protector and the reſt of the Council, June 27. 1549.

MY Lord, I perceive by Letters directed from you, and other of the Kings Majeſties Council, to my Controuler, my Chaplain, and Maſter Englefield my Servant, that ye will them upon their Allegiance, to repair immediately to you, wherein you gave me evident cauſe to change mine accuſtomed opinion of you all; that is to ſay, to think you careful of my quietneſs and well doing, conſidering how earneſtly I writ to you for the ſtay of two of them, and that not without very juſt cauſe. And as for Maſter Englefield, aſſoon as he could have prepared himſelf, having his horſes ſo far off, although ye had not ſent at this preſent, he would have performed your requeſt. But indeed I am much deceived. For I ſuppoſe ye would have weighed and taken my Letters in better part, if ye have received them; if not, to have tarried my anſwer, and I not to have found ſo little friendſhip, nor to have been uſed ſo ungently at your hands in ſending for him upon whoſe travel doth reſt the whole charge of my whole houſe, as I writ unto you lately; whoſe abſence therefore ſhall be to me and my ſaid houſe no little diſpleaſure, eſpecially being ſo far off. And beſide all this, I do greatly marvel to ſee your writing for him, and the other two, with ſuch extream words of peril to inſue towards them in caſe they did not come, and ſpecially for my Controuler, whoſe charge is ſo great, that he cannot ſuddenly be meet to take a journey: which words in mine opinion needed not (unleſs it were in ſome very juſt and neceſſary cauſe) to any of mine, who taketh my ſelf Subject to none of you all, not doubting but if the Kings Majeſty my Brother were of ſufficient years to perceive this matter, and knew what lack and incommodity the abſence of my ſaid Officer ſhould be to my houſe, his Grace would have been ſo good a Lord to me, as to have ſuffered him to remain where his charge is. Notwithſtanding, I have willed him at this time to repair to you, commanding him to return forthwith for my very neceſſities ſake, and I have given the like leave to my poor ſick Prieſt alſo, whoſe life I think undoubtedly ſhall be put to hazard by the wet and cold painful travel of this journey. But for my part I aſſure you all, that ſince the King my Father, your late Maſter, and very good Lord, died, I never took you for other than my Friends; but in this it appeareth contrary. And ſaving I thought verily that my former Letters ſhould have diſcharged this matter, I would not have troubled my ſelf with writing the ſame, not doubting but you do conſider, that none of you all would have been contented to have been thus uſed at your inferiors hands: I mean, to have had your Officer or any of your Servants ſent for by force (as ye make it) knowing no juſt cauſe why. Wherefore I do not a little marvel, that ye had not this remembrance towards me, who always have willed and wiſhed you as well to do as my ſelf, and both have and will pray for you all as heartily, as for mine own Soul, to Almighty God, whom I humbly beſeech to illuminate you all with his holy Spirit, to whoſe mercy alſo I am at a full point to commit my ſelf, whatſoever ſhall become of my Body. And thus with my Commendations I bid you all farewel. From my houſe at Kenninghall, the 27th of June.

{Anno 1550}

{KING Edw. 6}

Your Friend to my power, though you give me contrary cauſe,

Mary.

A Copy of the Kings Majeſties Letter to the Lady Mary the four and twentieth of January, 1550.

RIght dear, &c. We have ſeen by Letters of our Council, ſent to you of late, and by your anſwer thereunto, touching the cauſe of certain your Chaplains, having offended our Laws in ſaying of Maſs, their good and convenient adviſes, and your fruitleſs and indirect miſtaking of the ſame: which thing moveth us to write at this time, that where good counſel from our Council hath not prevailed, yet the like from our ſelf may have due regard. The whole matter we perceive reſts in this, that you being our next Siſter, in whom above all other our Subjects nature ſhould place the moſt eſtimation of us, would wittingly and purpoſely, not only break our Laws your ſelf, but alſo have others maintained to do the ſame. Truly howſoever the matter may have other terms, other ſenſe it hath not: and although by your Letter it ſeemeth you challenge a promiſe made, that ſo you may do; yet ſurely we know the promiſe had no ſuch meaning, neither to maintain, ne to continue your fault. You muſt know this, Siſter, you were at the firſt time, when the Law was made, born withall, not becauſe you ſhould diſobey the Law, but that by our lenity and love ſhewed you might learn to obey it. We made a difference of you from our other Subjects, not for that all other ſhould follow our Laws, and you only gainſtand them, but that you might be brought as far forward by love, as others were by duty. The error wherein you would reſt is double, and every part ſo great, that neither for the love of God we can well ſuffer it unredreſſed, neither for the love of you can we but wiſh it amended. Firſt, you retain a faſhion in honouring of God, who indeed thereby is diſhonoured, and therein err you in zeal for lack of Science, and having Science offered you, you refuſe it, not becauſe it is Science, we truſt (for then ſhould we diſpair of you) but becauſe you think it is none. And ſurely in this we can beſt reprehend you, learning daily in our School, that therefore we learn things becauſe we know them not, and are not allowed to ſay we know not thoſe things, or we think they be not good, and therefore we will not learn them. Siſter, you muſt think nothing can commend you more than reaſon, according to the which you have been hitherto uſed; and now for very love we will offer you reaſon our ſelf. If you are perſwaded in conſcience to the contrary of our Laws, you or your Perſwaders ſhall freely be ſuffered to ſay what you or they can, ſo that you will hear what ſhall be ſaid again.

In this Point you ſee I pretermit my eſtate, and talk with you as your Brother rather than your ſupream Lord and King. Thus ſhould you, being as well content to hear of your opinions as you are content to hold them, in the end thank us as much for bringing your to light, as now before you learn you are loth to ſee it. And if thus much reaſon with our natural love ſhall not move you, whereof we would be ſorry, then muſt we conſider the other part of your fault, which is the offence of our Laws. For though hitherto it hath been ſuffered in hope of amendment, yet now, if hope be none, how ſhall there be ſufferance? Our charge is to have the ſame care over every mans eſtate, that every man ought to have over his own. And in your own houſe as you would be loth openly to ſuffer one of your Servants, being next you, moſt manifeſtly to break your Orders, ſo muſt you think in our ſtate it ſhall miſcontent us to permit you, ſo great a Subject, not to keep our Laws. Your nearneſs to us in blood, your greatneſs in eſtate, the condition of this time maketh your fault the greater. The example is unnatural that our Siſter ſhould do leſs for us than our other Subjects. The cauſe is ſlanderous for ſo great a Perſonage to forſake our Majeſty.

Finally,

KING Edw. 6

Finally, It is too dangerous in a troubleſome Commonwealth, to make the people to miſtruſt a Faction. We be young, you think, in years to conſider this. Truly Siſter, it troubleth us ſomewhat the more; for it may be, this evil ſuffered in you is greater than we can diſcern, and ſo we be as much troubled becauſe we doubt whether we ſee the whole peril, as we be for that we ſee. Indeed we will preſume no further than our years giveth us; that is, in doubtful things not to truſt our own wits, but in evident things we think there is no difference. If you ſhould not do as other Subjects do, were it not evident that therein you ſhould not be a good Subject? Were it not plain in that caſe, that you ſhould uſe us not as your Sovereign Lord? Again, if you ſhould be ſuffered to break our Laws manifeſtly, were it not a comfort for others ſo to do? And if our Law be broken, and contemned, where is our eſtate? Theſe things be ſo plain, as we could almoſt have judged them ſix years paſt. And indeed it grieveth us not a little, that you, which ſhould be our moſt comfort in our young years, ſhould alone give us occaſion of diſcomfort. Think you not but it muſt needs trouble us, and if you can ſo think, you ought Siſter to amend it. Our natural love towards you without doubt is great, and therefore diminiſh it not your ſelf. If you will be loved by us, ſhew ſome token of love towards us, that we ſay not the with the Pſalm, Mala pro bonis mihi reddiderunt. If you will be believed when by writing you confeſs us to be your Sovereign Lord, hear that which in other things is often alledged, Oſtende mihi fidem tuam ex factis tuis. In the anſwer of your Letter to our Council, we remember you ſtick only upon one reaſon divided into two parts. The firſt is, that in matters of Religion your Faith is none other, but as all Chriſtendom doth confeſs. The next is, you will aſſent to no alteration, but wiſh things to ſtand as they did at our Fathers death. If you mean in the firſt to rule your Faith by that you call Chriſtendom, and not by this Church of England wherein you are a Member, you ſhall err in many Points, ſuch as our Fathers and yours would not have ſuffered, whatſoever you ſay of the ſtanding ſtill of things as they were left by him. The matter is too plain to write, what may be gathered, and too perilous to be concluded againſt you. For the other part, if you like no alteration by our Authority, of things not altered by our Father, you ſhould do us too great an injury. We take our ſelf, for the adminiſtration of this our Commonwealth, to have the ſame Authority which our Father had, diminiſhed in no part, neither by example of Scripture, nor by univerſal Laws. The ſtories of Scripture be ſo plenteous, as almoſt the beſt ordered Church of the Iſraelites was by Kings younger than we be. Well Siſter, we will not in theſe things interpret your writings to the worſt; Love and Charity ſhall expound them. But yet you muſt not thereby be bold to offend in that whereunto you ſee your writings might be wreſted. To conclude, we exhort you to do your duty, and if any impediment be thereof, not of purpoſe, you ſhall find a brotherly affection in us to remedy the ſame. To teach and inſtruct you we will give Order, and ſo procure you to do your duty willingly, that you ſhall perceive you are not uſed meerly as a Subject, and only commanded, but as Daughter, a Scholar, and a Siſter, taught, inſtructed and perſwaded. For the which cauſe, when you have conſidered this our Letter, we pray you that we may ſhortly hear from you.

To the Kings moſt excellent Majeſty.

MY duty moſt humbly remembred to your Majeſty, pleaſe it the ſame to underſtand that I have received your Letters by Maſter Throgmorton this bearer. The contents whereof do more trouble me than any bodily ſickneſs, though it were even to the death; and the rather for that your Highneſs doth charge me to be both as breaker of your Laws, and alſo an incourager of others to do the like. I moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſty to think that I never intended towards you otherwiſe than my duty commaudeth me unto; that is, to wiſh your Highneſs all Honour and Proſperity, for the which I do and daily ſhall pray. And where it pleaſeth your Majeſty to write, that I make a challenge of a promiſe made otherwiſe than it was meant, the troth is, the promiſe could not be denied before your Majeſties preſence at my laſt waiting upon the ſame. And although, I confeſs, the ground of Faith (whereunto I take reaſon to be but an Hand-Maid) and my conſcience alſo hath and do agree with the ſame: yet touching that promiſe, for ſo much as it hath pleaſed your Majeſty (God knoweth by whoſe perſwaſion) to write, it was not ſo meant; I ſhall moſt humbly deſire your Highneſs to examine the truth thereof indifferently, and either will your Majeſties Ambaſſador, now being with the Emperor, to inquire of the ſame, if it be your pleaſure to have him move it, or elſe to cauſe it to be demanded of the Emperors Ambaſſador here, although he were not within this Realm at that time. And thereby it ſhall appear that in this point I have not offended your Majeſty, if it may pleaſe you ſo to accept it. And albeit your Majeſty (God be praiſed) hath at theſe years as much underſtanding and more, than is commonly ſeen in that Age, yet conſidering you do hear but one part (your Highneſs not offended) I would be a Suiter to the ſame, that till you were grown to more perfect years, it might ſtand with your pleaſure to ſtay in matters touching the Soul. So undoubtedly ſhould your Majeſty know more, and hear others, and nevertheleſs be at your liberty and do your will and pleaſure. And whatſoever your Majeſty hath conceived of me, either by Letters to your Council, or by their report, I truſt in the end to prove my ſelf as true to you, as any Subject within your Realm, and will by no means ſtand in argument with your Majeſty, but in moſt humble wiſe beſeech you, even for Gods ſake, to ſuffer me, as your Highneſs hath done hitherto. It is for no worldly reſpect I deſire it, God is my Judge, but rather than to offend my conſcience, I would deſire of God to loſe all that I have and alſo my life; and nevertheleſs live and die your humble Siſter and true Subject. Thus after pardon craved of your Majeſty for my rude and bold writing, I beſeech Almighty God to preſerve the ſame in Honour with as long continuance of health and life, as ever had Noble King. From Beaulieu, the third of February.

Your Majeſties moſt humble and unworthy Siſter, Mary.

The Lady Mary to the Lords of the Council the fourth of December, 1550.

MY Lords, your Letters dated the ſecond of this preſent were delivered unto me the third of the ſame. And where you write that two of my Chaplains, Doctor Mallet and Barkly, be indicted for certain things committed by them contrary to the Kings Majeſties Laws, and Proceſs for them alſo awarded forth, and delivered to the Sheriff of Eſſex; I cannot but marvel they ſhould be ſo uſed, conſidering it is done, as I take it, for ſaying Maſs within my houſe: and although I have been of my ſelf minded always, and yet am, to have Maſs within my houſe; yet I have been advertiſed that the Emperors Majeſty hath been promiſed that I ſhould never be unquieted nor troubled for my ſo doing, as ſome of you my Lords can witneſs. Furthermore, beſides the declaration of the ſaid promiſe made to me by the Emperors Ambaſſador that dead is, from his Majeſty, to put my Chaplains more out of fear, when I was the laſt year with the Kings Majeſty my Brother, that queſtion was then moved, and could not be denied, but affirmed by ſome of you before his Majeſty to be true, being not ſo much unquieted for the trouble of my ſaid Chaplains, as I am to think how this matter may be taken, the promiſe to ſuch a perſon being no better regarded. And for mine own part, I thought full little to have received ſuch ungentleneſs at your hands, having always (God is my Judge) wiſhed unto the whole number of you as to my ſelf, and have refuſed to trouble you, or to crave any thing at your hands, but your good will and friendſhip, which very ſlenderly appeareth in this matter. Notwithſtanding, to be plain with you, howſoever ye ſhall uſe me or mine (with Gods help) I will never vary from mine opinion touching my Faith. And if ye or any of you bear me the leſs good will for that matter, or faint in your Friendſhip towards me only for the ſame, I muſt and will be contented, truſting that God will in the end ſhew his mercy mercy upon me, aſſuring you, I would rather refuſe the friendſhip of all the world (whereunto I truſt I ſhall never be driven) than forſake any point of my Faith. I am not without ſome hope that ye will ſtay this matter, not inforcing the rigour of the Law againſt my Chaplains. The one of them was not in my houſe theſe four months, and Doctor Mallet, having my licence, is either at Windſor, or at his Benefice, who, as I have heard, was indicted for ſaying Maſs out of my houſe, which was not true. But indeed, the day before my removing from Woodham-water, my whole Houſhold in effect being gone to Newhall, he ſaid Maſs there by mine appointment. I ſee and hear of divers that do not obey your Statutes and Proclamations, and nevertheleſs eſcape without puniſhment. Be ye Judges if I be well uſed to have mine puniſhed by rigour of a Law, beſides all the falſe bruits that ye have ſuffered to be ſpoken of me. Moreover, my Chaplain Doctor Mallet, beſides mine own Commandment, was not ignorant of the promiſe made to the Emperor, which did put him out of fear. I doubt not therefore but ye will conſider it, as by that occaſion no piece of friendſhip be taken away, nor I to have cauſe but to bear you my good will, as I have done heretofore: for albeit I could do you little pleaſure, yet of my friendſhip ye were ſure, as if it had lien in my power, ye ſhould have well known. Thus with my hearty Commendations to you all, I pray Almighty God to ſend you as much of his Grace, as I would wiſh to mine own Soul.

From Beulien, the fourth of December.

Your aſſured friend to my power,

Mary.

The Council to the Lady Mary, the five and twentieth of December.

After our due Commendations to your Grace. By your Letters to us, as an anſwer to ours, touching certain Proceſs againſt two of your Chaplains, for ſaying Maſs againſt the Law and Statute of the Realm, we perceive both the offence of your Chaplains is otherwiſe excuſed than the matter may bear, and alſo our good wills otherwiſe miſconſtrued than we looked for. And for the firſt part, where your greateſt reaſon to excuſe the offence of a Law, is a promiſe made to the Emperors Majeſty, whereof you write, that firſt ſome of us be witneſſes, next that the Embaſſador for the Emperor declared the ſame unto you; and laſtly, that the ſame promiſe was affirmed to you before the Kings Majeſty at your laſt being with him: we have thought convenient to repeat the matter from the beginning, as it hath hitherto proceeded, whereupon it ſhall appear how evidently your Chaplains have offended the Law, and you alſo miſtaken the promiſe. The promiſe is but one in it ſelf, but by times thrice as you ſay repeated. Of which times, the firſt is chiefly to be conſidered, for upon that do the other two depend. It is very true the Emperor made requeſt to the Kings Majeſty, that you might have liberty to uſe the Maſs in your houſe, and to be as it were exempted from the danger of the Statute. To which requeſt divers good reaſons were made, containing the diſcommodities that ſhould follow the grant thereof, and means deviſed rather to perſwade you to obey and receive the general and godly Reformation of the whole Realm, than by a private fancy to prejudice a common Order. But yet, upon earneſt deſire and entreaty made in the Emperors name, thus much was granted, that for his ſake and your own alſo, it ſhould be ſuffered and winked at, if you had the private Maſs uſed in your own Cloſet for a ſeaſon, until you might be better informed, whereof there was ſome hope, having only with you a few of your own Chamber, ſo that for all the reſt of your Houſhold the Service of the Realm ſhould be uſed, and none other; further than this the promiſe exceeded not. And truly ſuch a matter it then ſeemed to ſome of us, as indeed it was, that well might the Emperor have required of the Kings Majeſty a matter of more profit, but of more weight or difficulty to be granted his Majeſty could not. After this grant in words, there was by the Embaſſador now dead, oftentimes deſired ſome writing, as a teſtimony of the ſame. But that was ever denied; not becauſe we meant to break the promiſe, as it was made, but becauſe there was daily hope of your Reformation. {KING Edw.6}

Now to the ſecond time, you ſay the Emperors Embaſſadors Declaration made mention of a promiſe to you, it might well ſo be. But we think no otherwiſe than as it appeareth before written. If it were, his fault it was to declare more than he heard; ours it may not be, that deny not what we have ſaid. As for the laſt time when ye were with the Kings Majeſty, the ſame ſome of us (whom by theſe words your Letter noteth) do well remember, that no other thing was granted to you in this matter, but as the firſt promiſe was made to the Emperor, at which time you had too many arguments made to approve the proceedings of the Kings Majeſty, and to condemn the abuſe of the Maſs, to think that where the private Maſs was judged ungodly, there you ſhould have authority and ground to uſe it. About the ſame time, the Embaſſador made means to have ſome teſtimony of the promiſe under the great Seal; and that not being heard, to have it but by a Letter; and that alſo was not only denied, but divers good reaſon alledged, that he ſhould think it denied with reaſons, and ſo to be contented with an anſwer. It was told him, in reducing that which was commonly called the Maſs to the Order of the Primitive Church, and the Inſtitution of Chriſt, the Kings Majeſty and his whole Realm had their Conſciences well quieted, againſt the which if any thing ſhould be willingly committed, the ſame ſhould be taken as an offence to God, and a very ſin againſt a truth known. Wherefore to licenſe by open act ſuch a deed, in the conſcience of the Kings Majeſty and his Realm, were even a ſin againſt God. The moſt that might herein be born, was, that the Kings Majeſty might, upon hope of your Graces reconciliation, ſuſpend the execution of his Law, ſo that you would uſe the licenſe as it was was firſt granted. Whatſoever the Embaſſador hath ſaid to others, he had no other manner of grant from us, nor having it thus granted, could alledge any reaſon againſt it. And where in your Letter your Grace noteth us as breakers of the promiſe made to the Emperor, it ſhall appear who hath broken the promiſe; whether we that have ſuffered more than we licenſed, or you that have tranſgreſſed that which was granted. Now therefore we pray your Grace confer the doings of your Chaplains with every point of the premiſſes; and if the ſame cannot be excuſed, then think alſo how long the Law hath been ſpared. If it prick our conſciences ſomewhat, that ſo much ſhould be uſed as by the promiſe you may claim, how much more ſhould it grieve us to licenſe more than you can claim? And yet could we be content to bear a great burthen to ſatisfie your Grace, if the burthen preſſed not our conſciences ſo much as it doth; whereof we muſt ſay as the Apoſtle ſaid, Gloriatio noſtra eſt hæc, teſtimonium conſcientiæ noſtræ. For the other part of your Graces Letter, by the which we ſee you miſconſtrue our good wills in writing to you, howſoever the Law had proceeded againſt your Chaplains, our order in ſending to you was to be liked, and therein truly had we ſpecial regard of your Graces Degree and Eſtate. And becauſe the Law it ſelf reſpecteth not perſons, we thought to give reſpect to you, firſt ſignifying to you what the Law required, before it ſhould be executed, that being warned, your Grace might either think no ſtrangeneſs in the execution, or for an example of obedience cauſe it to be executed your ſelf. Others we ſee perplexed with ſuddenneſs of matters; your Grace we would not have unwarned, to think any thing done on a ſudden. Truly we thought it more commendable for your Grace to help the execution of a Law, than to help the offence of one condemned by Law. And in giving you knowledge what the Kings Laws required, we looked for help in the execution by you the Kings Majeſties Siſter. The greater Perſonage your Grace is, the nigher to the King, ſo much more ought your example to further his Laws. For which cauſe it hath been called a good Commonwealth where the people obeyed the higher Eſtates, and they obeyed the Laws. As nature hath joyned your Grace to the Kings Majeſty to love him moſt entirely, ſo hath Reaſon and Law ſubdued you to obey him willingly. The one and the other we doubt not but your Grace remembreth: and as they both be joyned together in your Majeſties Siſter, ſo we truſt you will not ſever them; for indeed your Grace cannot love him as your Brother, but you muſt obey his Majeſty as his Subject.

Example

KING Edw. 6

Example of your obedience and reverence of his Majeſties Laws is inſtead of a good Preacher to a great number of his Majeſties Subjects, who if they may ſee in you negligence of his Majeſty, or his Laws, will not fail, but follow on hardly, and then their fault is not their own but yours, by example, and ſo may the Kings Majeſty, when he ſhall come to further judgment, impute the fault of divers evil people (which thing God forbid) to the ſufferance of your Graces doings. And therefore we moſt earneſtly, from the depth of our hearts deſire it, that as nature hath ſet your Grace nigh his Majeſty by bloud, ſo your love and zeal to his Majeſty will further his eſtate by obedience. In the end of your Letter two things be touched, which we cannot pretermit; the one is, you ſeem to charge us with permiſſion of men to break Laws and Statutes. We think indeed it is too true, that Laws and Proclamations be broken daily, the more pity it is, but that we permit them, we would be ſorry to have it proved. The other is, that we have ſuffered brutes to be ſpoken of you, and that alſo muſt be anſwered as the other. It is pity to ſee men ſo evil, as whom they may touch with tales and infamies they care not, ſo they miſs not the beſt. Such is the boldneſs of people, that neither we can fully bridle them to raiſe tales of you, nor of our ſelves. And yet whenſoever any certain perſon may be gotten, to be charged with any ſuch, we never leave them unpuniſhed. Indeed the beſt way is, both for your Grace, and us alſo, that when we cannot find and puniſh the offendor, let us ſay as he ſaid that was evil ſpoken of, Yet will I ſo live, as no credit ſhall be given to my backbiters. Certainly, if we had credited any evil tale of your Grace, we would friendly have admoniſhed you thereof, and ſo alſo proceeded, as either the tale-tellers ſhould have been puniſhed, or elſe to have proved their tales. And therefore we pray your Grace to think no unkindneſs in us, that any evil brutes have been ſpread by evil men; but think rather well of us, that howſoever they were ſpread, we believed them not. Hitherto your Grace ſeeth we have written ſomewhat at length, of the promiſe made to you, and our meanings in our former writings. And now for the latter part of our Letter, we will as briefly as we can remember to you two ſpecial matters, whereof the one might ſuffice to reform your proceedings, and both together, well conſidered, we truſt ſhall do your Grace much good. The one is, the truth of that you be deſired to follow; The other is, the commodity that thereby ſhall enſue. They both make a juſt commandment, and becauſe of the firſt, the later followeth, that firſt ſhall be entreated of. We hear ſay, your Grace refuſeth to hear any thing reaſoned contrary to your old determination, wherein you may make your opinion ſuſpicious, as that you are afraid to be diſſwaded. If your faith in things be of God, it may abide any ſtorm or weather; if it be but of ſand, you do beſt to eſchew the weather. That which we profeſs hath the foundation in Scriptures upon plain Texts and no Gloſſes, the confirmation thereof by the uſe in the Primitive Church, not in this later corrupted. And indeed our greateſt change is not in the ſubſtance of our faith, no not in any one Article of our Creed; only the difference is, that we uſe the Ceremonies, Obſervations and Sacraments of our Religion, as the Apoſtles and firſt Fathers in the Primitive Church did. You uſe the ſame that corruption of time brought in, and very barbarouſneſs and ignorance nouriſhed, and ſeem to hold for Cuſtom againſt the Truth, and we for Truth againſt Cuſtom. Your Grace in one or two places of your Letter ſeemeth to ſpeak earneſtly in the maintenance of your faith, and therein (ſo that your faith be according to the Scriptures) we muſt have the like opinion; the ſaying is very good, if the faith be ſound. But if every opinion your Grace hath (we cannot tell how conceived) ſhall be your faith, you may be much better inſtructed. Saint Paul teacheth you, that faith is by the Word of God. And it was a true ſaying of him that ſaid, Non qui cuivis credit fidelis eſt, ſed qui Deo: For where hath your Grace ground for ſuch a faith, to think Common Prayer in the Engliſh Church ſhould not be in Engliſh, that Images of God ſhould be ſet up in the Church; or that the Sacrament of Chriſts body and bloud ſhould be offered by the Prieſts for the dead; yea, or that it ſhould be otherwiſe uſed than by the Scripture it was inſtitu[ted]? Though you have no Scripture to maintain them, we have evident Scriptures to forbid them. And although fault may be found, that of late Baptiſm hath been uſed in your Graces houſe, contrary to law, and utterly without licence, yet is it the worſe, that contrary to the Primitive Church, it hath been in an unknown Tongue, by the which the beſt part of the Sacrament is unuſed, and as it were a blind bargain made by the Godfathers in a matter of illumination; and thus in the reſt of the things in which your Grace differeth from the common order of the Realm, where have you ground or reaſon, but from cuſtom, which oftentimes is mother of many errors? And although in Civil things ſhe may be followed where ſhe cauſeth quiet, yet not in Religion where ſhe excuſeth no error, as in Leviticus it is ſaid, Ye ſhall not do after the cuſtom of Egypt, wherein ye dwelled, nor after the cuſtom of Canaan; no, you ſhall not walk in their laws, for I am your Lord God, keep you my laws and commandments. The points wherein your Grace differeth in your Faith, as you call it, may be ſhewed where, when, how and by whom they began ſince the Goſpel was preached, the Church was planted, and the Apoſtles martyred. At which time your faith depended upon the Scripture, and otherwiſe there was no neceſſity to believe. For as Hierome ſaith, Quod de Scripturis non habet authoritatem, eadem facilitate contemnitur qua probatur. And becauſe your Grace, as we hear ſay, readeth ſometimes the Doctors, we may alledge unto you two or three places of other principal Doctors. Auguſtine ſaith, Cum Dominus tacuerit, quis noſtrum dicat, illa vel illa ſunt: aut ſi dicere audeat, unde probat? And Chryſoſtome's ſaying is not unlike; Multi, inquit, jactant ſpiritum ſanctum, ſed qui propria loquuntur, falſo illum prætendunt. And if you will take their meaning plain, read the fifth Chapter of the firſt Book of Eccleſiaſtica hiſtoria; and where Conſtantine had theſe words in the Council. In diſputationibus, inquit, rerum divinarum habetur præſcripta ſpiritus ſancti doctrina; Evangelici & Apoſtolici libri cum prophetarum oraculis plene nobis oſtendunt ſenſum numinis; proinde diſcordia poſita, ſumamus ex verbis ſpiritus quæſtionum explicationes. What plainer ſayings may be than theſe to anſwer your fault? Again, too infinite it were to remember your Grace of the great number of particular errors (crept into the Church) whereupon you make your foundation. The fables of falſe Miracles and lewd Pilgrimages may ſomewhat teach you. Only this we pray your Grace to remember with your ſelf, the two words that the Father ſaid of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, Ipſum audite. To the ſecond point of the commodity that may follow your obedience, we having by the Kings authority in this behalf, the governance of this Realm, muſt herein be plain with your Grace. And if our ſpeech offend the ſame, then muſt your Grace think it is our charge and office to find fault where it is, and our part to amend it as we may. Moſt ſorry truly we be, that your Grace, whom we ſhould otherwiſe honour for the Kings Majeſties ſake, by your own deeds ſhould provoke us to offend you; we do perceive great diſcommodity to the Realm by your Graces ſingularity (if it may be ſo named) in opinion; and in one reſpect, as you are Siſter to our Sovereign Lord and Maſter, we moſt humbly beſeech your Grace to ſhew your affection continually towards him, as becometh a Siſter. And as your Grace is a Subject, and we Counſellers to his Majeſties Eſtate, we let you know the example of your Graces opinion hindreth the good weal of this Realm, which thing we think is not unknown to you; and if it be, we let your Grace know it is too true. For Gods ſake we beſeech your Grace, let nature ſet before your eyes the young age of the King your Brother. Let reaſon tell you the looſneſs of the people; how then can you without a wailing heart think that you ſhould be the cauſe of diſturbance? If your Grace ſee the King, being the ordinary Ruler under God, not only of all others in the Realm, but of you alſo, call his people by ordinary laws one way, with what heart can your Grace ſtay your ſelf without following; much worſe to ſtay other that would follow their Sovereign Lord? Can it be a love in you to forſake him, his rule and law, and take a private way by your ſelf? if it be not love, it is much leſs obedience. If your Grace think the Kings Majeſty to be over his people as the head in a mans body is over the reſt, not only in place but in dignity and ſcience, how can you, being a principal member in the ſame body, keep the nouriſhment from the head? We pray your Grace moſt earneſtly, think this thing ſo much grieveth us, as for our private affection and good wills to you (though we ſhould diſſemble) yet for our publick office we cannot but plainly inform your Grace, not doubting but that your wiſdom can judge what our office is, and if it were not your own cauſe, we know your Grace by wiſdom could charge us, if we ſuffered the like in any other. Truly every one of us apart honoureth your Grace for our Maſters ſake, but when we joyn together in publick ſervice, as in this writing we do, we judge it not tolerable, to know diſorder, to ſee the cauſe, and leave it unamended. For though we would be negligent, the World would judge us. And therefore we do altogether eſtſoons require your Grace, in the Kings Majeſties name, that if any of your two Chaplains, Mallet or Barkley, be returned, or aſſoon as any of them ſhall return to your Graces houſe, the ſame may be, by your Graces commandment or order, ſent and delivered to the Sheriff of Eſſex, who hath commandment from the Kings Majeſty, by order of the Law and of his Crown, to attach them, or if that condition ſhall not like your Grace, yet that then he may be warned from your Graces houſe, and not kept there, to be as it were defended from the power of the Law. Which thing we think ſurely neither your Grace will mean, nor any of your Council aſſent thereto. And ſo to make an end of our Letter, being long for the matter, and hitherto deferred for our great buſineſs, we truſt your Grace firſt ſeeth how the uſage of your Chaplains differeth from the manner of our licence, and what good intent moved us to write to you in our former Letters; laſtly, that the things whereunto the King and the whole Realm hath conſented, be not only lawful and juſt by the policy of the Realm, but alſo juſt and godly by the laws of God. So that if we, which have charge under the King, ſhould willingly conſent to the open breach of them, we could neither diſcharge our ſelves to the King for our duties, neither to God for our conſcience; the conſideration of which things we pray Almighty God, by his holy Spirit, to lay in the bottom of your heart, and thereupon to build ſuch a profeſſion in you, as both God may have his true honour, the King his due obedience, the Realm concord, and we moſt comfort. For all the which we do heartily pray, and therewith for the continuance of your Graces health to your hearts deſire.

From Wincheſter the five and twentieth of December.

The Lady Mary to the Lords of the Council, the ſecond of May, 1551.

MY Lords, after my hearty commendations to you, although both I have been and alſo am loth to trouble you with my Letters, yet nevertheleſs the news which I have lately heard touching my Chaplain Doctor Mallet, forceth me thereunto at this preſent; for I hear by credible report, that you have committed him to the Tower, which news ſeems to me very ſtrange. Notwithſtanding I thought it good by theſe to deſire you to advertiſe me what is the cauſe of his impriſonment, aſſuring you I would be ſorry that any of mine ſhould deſerve the like puniſhment, and there is no creature within the Kings Majeſties Realm would more lament, that any belonging to them ſhould give juſt cauſe ſo to be uſed, than I would do; who would have thought much friendſhip in you, if you had given me knowledge wherein my ſaid Chaplain had offended, before you had miniſtred ſuch puniſhment unto him, eſtſoons requiring you to let me know by this bearer the truth of the matter. And thus thanking you for the ſhort diſpatch of the poor Merchant of Portugal, I wiſh to you all no worſe than to my ſelf, and ſo bid you farewel.

From Beaulien the ſecond of May.

Your Friend to my power,

Mary.

The Council to the Lady Mary, the ſixth of May, 1551.

AFter our humble commendations to your Grace, we have received your Letters of the ſecond of this Month, by the which your Grace ſeemeth to take it ſtrangely that Doctor Mallet is committed to Priſon, whereof we have the more marvel, ſeeing it hath been heretofore ſignified unto you, that he hath offended the Kings Majeſties Laws, and was therefore condemned, and your Grace hath been by our Letters earneſtly deſired that he might be delivered to the Sheriff of Eſſex, according to the juſt proceſs of the Law, to the which all manner of perſons of this Realm be ſubject: Wherefore howſoever it ſeem ſtrange at this time to your Grace, that he is impriſoned, it may ſeem more ſtrange to other that he hath eſcaped it thus long; and if the place, being the Tower, move your Grace not to impute his impriſonment to his former offence, then we pray your Grace to underſtand that indeed it is for the very ſame, and the place of the impriſonment to be at the Kings Majeſties pleaſure, from whom, beſides the charge of his Laws, we have expreſs commandment to do that we do. And ſo we beſeech your Grace to think of us, that neither in this caſe, nor in any other, we mean to do any other than miniſter, and ſee, as much as in our power lieth, juſtice miniſtred indifferently to all perſons. Which doing, then we think your Grace ſhould not think it any lack of friendſhip that we did not certifie you of the offence of your Chaplain, although indeed the cauſe hath already been certified. And we truſt your Grace both of your natural nearneſs to the Kings Majeſty, and your own good wiſdom, will not miſlike our Miniſtry in the execution of the Laws of the Realm, and the pleaſure of the Kings Majeſty. So we wiſh to your Grace from the bottom of our heart, the grace of Almighty God, with the riches of his holy gifts.

The Lady Mary to the Council, the eleventh of May.

MY Lords, it appeareth by your Letters of the ſixth of this preſent which I have received, that the impriſonment of my Chaplain Doctor Mallet is for ſaying of Maſs, and that he was condemned for the ſame. Indeed I have heard that he was indicted, but never condemned. Nevertheleſs I muſt needs confeſs and ſay, that he did it, but by my commandment, and I ſaid unto him, that none of my Chaplains ſhould be in danger of the Law for ſaying Maſs in my houſe. And thereof to put him out of doubt, the Emperors Embaſſador that dead is, declared unto him before that time, how and after what ſort the promiſe was made to his Majeſty, whereby it appeareth that the man hath not in that willingly offended. Wherefore I pray you to diſcharge him of impriſonment, and ſet him at liberty; if not, ye miniſter cauſe not only to him, but to others, to think that I have declared more than was true, which I would not wittingly do, to gain the whole World. And herein, as I have often ſaid, the Emperors Majeſty can be beſt Judge. And to be plain with you according to mine old cuſtom, there is not one amongſt the whole number of you all, that would be more loth to be found untrue of their word than I. And well I am aſſured, that none of you have found it in me. My Lords, I pray you ſeek not ſo much my diſhonour, as to diſprove my word, whereby it ſhall appear too plain, that you handle me not well. And if you have cauſe to charge my Chaplain for this matter, lay that to me, and I will diſcharge it again, by your promiſe made to the Emperors Majeſty, which you cannot rightfully deny; wiſhing rather that you had refuſed it in the beginning, than after ſuch promiſe made, and to ſuch a perſon, to ſeem to go from it; which my Lords, as your very friend I heartily deſire you to conſider, and to give me no cauſe to think you otherwiſe than my friends, conſidering I have always, and yet do (God is my judge) wiſh to you all no worſe, neither in ſouls nor bodies, than to my ſelf, and ſo, with my hearty commendations, I commit you all to God.

The

{KING Edw.6}

The Council to the Lady Mary, the ſeven and twenticth of May 1551.

AFter our due commendations to your Grace, although the ſame receiveth not anſwer ſo ſoon, as perchance was looked for upon the return of your Graces ſervant: Yet we doubt not but your Grace underſtanding that where we have matters of eſtate pertaining to the Kings Majeſty in hand, as indeed we have had of late, the deferring of the anſwer, in a matter being no greater, requireth to be born withal. And touching the anſwer of your Graces Letter for Doctor Mallet, we pray your Grace to underſtand, that although you write he was indicted, but not condemned, and ſo ſeem to take exception at the manner of his impriſonment; yet if they which informed your Grace of that manner of reaſon in the law, were as well diſpoſed to pleaſe your Grace with truth, as the reaſon indeed is not true, then ſhould they have told your Grace that by the Act of Parliament, if either Mallet hath been convicted by the Oaths of twelve men, or that the fact have been notorious, then the puniſhment doth follow juſtly. The truth of the one and the other way of conviction in this caſe is notorious enough, beſides his flying from the proceſs of the law. And where your Grace, to relieve him, would take the fault upon your ſelf, we are ſorry to perceive your Grace ſo ready to be a defence to one that the Kings Law doth condemn. Nevertheleſs, he is not puniſhed becauſe your Grace bad him, and willed him to do that which was an offence, but he is puniſhed for doing it; And if we ſhould not ſo ſee the Kings laws executed without reſpect, it might appear that we have too much neglected our duty; and for that your Grace taketh it as a diſcredit to your ſelf, that he ſhould be puniſhed for that you bad him do, alledging to him that you had authority ſo to do, and that ſo promiſe was made to the Emperor, it hath been both written and ſaid to your Grace what is truth in that behalf. And howſoever that your Grace pretendeth your Licence to have Maſs ſaid before your ſelf, for a time of your reconciliation, it had been far out of reaſon to have deſired that whoſoever was your Chaplain, might ſay Maſs in any houſe that was yours, when your Graces ſelf was not there; for ſo is Dr. Mallet's offence, for ſaying Maſs at one of your houſes where your Grace was not, which thing as it was never granted, ſo do we not remember that ever it was demanded. The ſuit that hath been at any time made, either by the Emperors Embaſſador that dead is, or by him that now is, was never but in reſpect of your Grace, and not to be taken that the Emperor or his Embaſſador meant to priviledge Maſter Doctor Mallet, or any other, to ſay Maſs out of your preſence. Wherefore as we do plainly write to your Grace, ſo we do pray you to take it in good part, and think we be as ready to do our due reverence towards your Grace in any thing we may do with our duty to our Maſter, as any your Grace may command; and of ſuch wiſdom we know your Grace to be, that ye ſhould judge the better of us, for that we be diligent to ſee the Laws of the Realm executed, wherein reſteth the ſtrength and ſafeguard of the Kings Majeſty our Sovereign Lord and Maſter.

The Lady Mary to the Lords of the Council the one and twentieth of June 1551.

MY Lords, although I received by my ſervant this bearer (who lately delivered unto you my Letters, wherein I deſired to have my Chaplain Dr. Mallet diſcharged of his impriſonment) your gentle meſſage in general words, for the which I give you moſt hearty thanks; yet have I no knowledge whether you will ſet him at liberty or no; but I think that your weighty affairs at that time was the let and cauſe ye did not write, for elſe I doubt not but ye would have anſwered me. Wherefore not being ſatisfied, and underſtanding ye would gladly pleaſure me, I thought good eftſoons to deſire you that my ſaid Chaplain may have his liberty, wherein I aſſure you ye ſhall much ratifie me, being not a little troubled, that he is ſo long in Priſon without juſt cauſe, ſeeing the matter of his impriſonment is diſcharged by the promiſe made to the Emperors Majeſty, as in my late Letter I declared unto you. Wherefore, my Lords, I pray you let me have knowledge by this Bearer, how ye will uſe me in this matter; wherein if ye do pleaſure me accordingly, then ſhall it well appear that ye reguard the foreſaid promiſe, and I will not forget your gentleneſs therein, God willing, but requite it to my power. And thus with my hearty commendations to you all, I bid you farewel. From Beaulieu the one and twentieth of June.

Your aſſured friend to my power,
Mary.

The Council to the Lady Mary the twenty fourth of June 1551.

AFter our humble commendations to your Grace, we have received your Graces Letter of the one and twentieth hereof, wherein is received the ſame requeſt that in your former Letters hath been made for the releaſe of Doctor Mallet, and therein alſo your Grace ſeemeth to have looked for the ſame anſwer of your former Letter, the which indeed partly was omitted (as your Grace conjecture) by the reaſon of the Kings Majeſties affairs, wherewith we be throughly occupied: partly for that we had no other thing to anſwer, than you had heretofore heard in the ſame matter. And therefore where your Grace deſireth a reſolute anſwer, we aſſure the ſame we be right ſorry for the matter, and that it ſhould be your Graces chance to move it, ſith we cannot with our duties to the Kings Majeſty accompliſh your deſire. So neceſſary a thing it is to ſee the laws of the Realm executed indifferently in all manner of perſons, and in theſe caſes of contempt of the Eccleſiaſtical Orders of this Church of England, that the ſame may not, without the great diſpleaſure of God, and the ſlander of the State, be neglected; and therefore your Grace may pleaſe to underſtand, that we have not only puniſhed your Chaplain, but all ſuch others whom we find in like caſe to have diſobeyed the Laws of the Kings Majeſty. And touching the excuſe your Grace oftentimes uſeth, of a promiſe made, we aſſure your Grace, none of us all, nor any other of the Council, as your Grace hath been certified, hath ever been privy to any ſuch promiſe, otherwiſe than hath been written. And in that matter your Grace had plain anſwer both by us of the Kings Majeſties Council, at your being laſt in his Majeſties preſence; and therein alſo your Grace might perceive his Majeſties determination; whereunto we beſeech your Grace not only to incline your ſelf, but alſo to judge well of us that do addict our ſelves to do our duties. And ſo alſo ſhall we be ready to do, with all our hearts, our due reverence toward your Grace, whoſe preſervation we commend to Almighty God with our prayer.

The Copy of the Lady Maries Letter to the Kings Majeſty.

MY Duty moſt humbly remembred to your Majeſty; it may pleaſe the ſame to be advertiſed, that I have received by my ſervants your moſt honourable Letters, the contents whereof do not a little trouble me, and ſo much the more, for that any of my ſaid ſervants ſhould move or attempt me in matters touching my ſoul, which I think the meaneſt Subject within your Highneſs Realm could evil bear at their ſervant's hands, having for my part utterly refuſed heretofore to talk with them in ſuch matters, and of all other perſons leaſt reguarded them therein, to whom I have declared what I think, as ſhe which truſted that your Majeſty would have ſuffered me your poor Siſter and Beadwoman to have uſed the accuſtomed Maſs, which the King your Father and mine, with all his Predeceſſors did evermore uſe. Wherein alſo I have been brought up from my youth. And thereunto my Conſcience doth not only bind me, which by no means will ſuffer me to think one thing, and do another, but alſo the promiſe made to the Emperor by your Majeſties Council was an aſſurance to me, that in ſo doing I ſhould not offend the Laws, although they ſeem now to qualifie and deny the thing. And at my laſt waiting upon your Majeſty;

I was so bold to declare my mind and Conscience to the same, and desired your Highness, rather than you should constrain me to leave Mass, to take away my life, whereunto your Majesty made me a very gentle answer. And now I most humbly beseech your Highness to give me leave to write what I think touching your Majesties Letters. Indeed, they be signed with your own hand, and nevertheless (in mine opinion) not your Majesties in effect, because it is well known (as heretofore I have declared in the presence of your Highness) that although, our Lord be praised, your Majesty hath far more knowledge and greater gifts than other of your years, yet it is not possible that your Highness can at these years be a Judge in matters of Religion; and therefore I take it that the matter in your Letters proceedeth from such as do wish those things to take place which be most agreeable to themselves, by whose doings, your Majesty not offended, I intend not to rule my Conscience. And thus without molesting your Highness any further, I humbly beseech the same, even for Gods sake, to bear with me as you have done, and not to think that by my doings or example any inconvenience might grow to your Majesty or your Realm; for I use it not after such sort, putting no doubt but in time to come, whether I live or dy, your Majesty shall perceive that mine intent is grounded upon a true love towards you, whose Royal Estate I beseech Almighty God long to continue, which is and shall be my daily prayer according to my duty. And after pardon craved of your Majesty for these rude and bold Letters, if neither at my humble suit, nor for the reguard of the promise made to the Emperor, your Highness will suffer and bear with me as you have done, till your Majesty may be a Judge herein your self, and rightly understand their proceedings, (of which your goodness yet I despair not:) otherwise rather than to offend God and my Conscience, I offer my body at your will, and death shall be more welcome than life with a troubled Conscience; most humbly beseeching your Majesty to pardon my slowness in answering your Letters. For mine old disease would not suffer me to write any sooner. And thus I pray Almighty God to keep your Majesty in all vertue and honour, with good health and long life to his pleasure.

From my poor House at Copped-Hall, the Nineteenth of August.

Your Majesties most humble Sister

Mary.

A Copy of the Kings Majesties Letters to the said Lady Mary.

RIght dear and right entirely beloved Sister, we greet you well, and let you know that it grieveth us much to perceive no amendment in you, of that which we for Gods, cause, your souls health, our conscience, and the common tranquillity of our Realm, have so long desired; assuring you that our sufferance hath much more demonstration of natural love, than contentation of our Conscience, and foresight of our safety. Wherefore although you give us occasion, as much almost as in you is, to diminish our natural love; yet we be loth to feel it decay, and mean not to be so careless of you as we be provoked.

And therefore meaning your weal, and therewith joyning a care not to be found guilty in our Conscience to God, having cause to require forgiveness that we have so long, for respect of love toward you, omitted our bounden duty, we send at this present our right trusty and right well-beloved Counsellor, the Lord Rich Chancellor of England, and our trusty and right well-beloved Counsellors, Sir A. W. Knight, Controllor of our Houshold, and Sir W. P. Knight, one of our Principal Secretaries in message to you, touching the order of your house, willing you to give them firm credit in those things they shall say to you from us, and do there in our name.

Given under our Signet at our Castle of Windsor, the 24*th* of August, in the first year of our Reign.

KING Edw 6

A Copy of the Kings Majesties instructions, given to the said Lord Chancellor, Sir A. W. and W. P. Knights, &c. the four and twentieth of August 1551.

FIrst you the said Lord Chancellor and your Collegues shall make your immediate repair to the said Lady Mary, giving to her his Majesties hearty commendations, and shew the cause of your coming to be as followeth.

Although his Majesty hath long time, as well by his Majesties own mouth and writing, as by his Council, travelled that the said Lady being his Sister, and a principal Subject and Member of his Realm, should both be indeed, and also shew her self conformable to the Laws and Ordinances of the Realm, in the Profession and Rites of Religion, using all the gentle means of exhortation and advice that could be devised, to the intent that the Reformation of the fault might willingly come of her self, as the expectation and desire of his Majesty, and all good wise men was; yet notwithstanding his Majesty seeth that hitherto no manner of amendment hath followed, but by the continuance of the error, and manifest breach of his laws no small peril consequently may hap to the state of his Realm, especially the sufferance of such a fault being directly to the dishonour of God, and the great offence of his Majesties Conscience, and all other good men; and therefore of late, even with the consent and advice of the whole state of his Privy Council, and divers others of the Nobility of his Realm, whose names ye may repeat, if you think convenient, his Majesty did resolutely determine it just, necessary and expedient, that her Grace should not in any wise use or maintain the private Mass, or any other manner of Service, than such as by the Law of the Realm is authorised and allowed. And to participate this his Majesties determination to her Grace, it was thought in respect of a favourable proceeding with her self, to have the same not only to be manifested by her own Officers and Servants, being most esteemed with her, but also to be executed with them in her house, as well for the quiet proceeding in the very matter, as for the less molesting of her Grace with any message by strangers, in that time of her solitariness, wherein her Grace was then by reason of the late sickness. For which purpose her three servants, Rochester, Englefield and Walgrave were sent in message in this manner. First to deliver his Majesties Letter to her, next to discharge the complaints of saying Mass, and prohibiting all the Houshold from hearing any. Wherein the Kings Majesty perceiveth, upon their own report, being returned to the Court, how negligently, and indeed how falsly they have executed their commandment and charge, contrary to the duty of good Subjects, and to the manifest contempt of his Majesty. Insomuch as manifestly they have before his Majesties Council refused to do that which pertaineth to every true faithful Subject, to the offence so far of his Majesty, and derogation of his authority, that in no wise the punishment of them could be forborn; and yet in the manner of the punishment of them, his Majesty and his Council hath such consideration and respect of her person being his Sister, that without doubt his Majesty could not with honour have had the like consideration or favour in the punishment of the dearest Counsellor he hath, if any of them had so offended; and therefore his Majesty hath sent you three not only to declare to her Grace the causes of their sending thither of late his Officers in message, but also the causes of their absence now presently. And further, in the default of the said Officers, to take order, as well with her Chaplains, as with the whole Houshold, that his Majesties laws may be there observed. And in the communication with her, you shall take occasion to answer in his Majesties name certain points of her Letter, sent now lately to his Majesty. The Copy of which Letter is now also sent to you to peruse, for your better instruction how to proceed therein. First, her allegation of the promise made to the Emperor, must be so answered, as the truth of the matter serveth, whereof every of you have heard sufficient testimony divers times in the Council. For her offering of her body at the Kings will, rather than to change her

KING Edw. 6 her Conscience, it grieveth his Majesty much, that her Conscience is so settled in error, and yet no such thing is meant of his Majesty, nor of any one of his Council, once to hurt, or will evil to her body, but even from the bottom of their heart they wish to her Mentem sanam in corpore sano. And therefore ye shall do very well to perswade her Grace, that this proceeding cometh only of the Conscience the King hath to avoid the offence of God, and of necessary counsel and wisdom to see his laws in so weighty causes executed. Item, because it is thought that Rochester had the care and consideration of her Graces provision of household, and by his absence the same might be disordered or disfurnished; his Majesty hath sent a trusty skilful man of his own household, to serve her Grace for the time. Who also is sufficiently instructed of Rochester of the state of her things of household. And if there shall be any thing lacking in the same, his Majesties pleasure is, that his servant shall advertise his own chief Officers of household, to the intent if the same may be supplied of any store here, or otherwhere helped conveniently, her Grace shall not lack.

Item, Having thus proceeded with her Grace, as for the declarations of the causes of your coming, ye shall then cause to be called before you the Chaplains, and all the rest of the household there present, and in the Kings Majesties name most straightly forbid the Chaplains either to say or use any Mass or kind of Service, other than by the law is authorised; and likewise ye shall forbid all the rest of the company to be present at any such prohibited service, upon pain to be most straightly punished, as worthily falling into the danger of the Kings indignation, and alike charge to them all, that if any such offence shall be openly or secretly committed, they shall advertise some of His Majesties Council. In the which clause ye shall use the reasons of their natural duty and allegeance that they owe as Subjects to their Sovereign Lord, which derogateth all other earthly duties.

Item, If you shall find either any of the Priests, or any other person disobedient to this order, ye shall commit them forthwith to Prison, as ye shall think convenient.

Ann. 1550 Item, Forasmuch as ye were privy to the determination at Richmond, and there understood how necessary it was to have reformation herein; his Majesty upon the great confidence he hath in your wisdom and uprightness, remitteth to your discretion the manner of the proceeding herein, if any thing shall chance to arise there that in your opinions might, otherwise than according to these Instructions, conduce you to the execution of your charge, which in one summ is to avoid the use of the private Mass, and other unlawful service in the house of the said Lady Mary.

Item, Ye shall devise by some means as you may, to have understanding after your departure, how the order you give is observed, and as you shall judge fit, to certifie hither.

The Story of Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester briefly collected, the residue whereof concerning his acts and doings may further appear in the Book of Acts and Monuments, in the first Edition, Pag. 728.

The story of Stephen Gardiner.

ALthough the first imprisonment of Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, in order of time was before the deprivation of Bishop Bonner; yet forsomuch as he was not deposed from his Bishoprick till the next or second year after, which was 1551. I have therefore driven off the History of the said Bishop of Winchester to this present place, intending nevertheless here not to extend and prosecute the explication of that busie matter, with all circumstances and particularities thereof, so amply and full as I might, partly for that being done in my first Volume of Acts and Monuments, it may here suffice and content the Reader, being disposed there to search and further to read touching the same, partly also considering how this present Volume is grown already very large and great, I thought not to pester the same with any more superfluity than needs must; and therefore leaving out his idle Letters, his long process of Articles and Examinations, his tedious talk, with the multitude of Depositions brought in against him, and other his acts and interlocutories superfluous, I mind here (the Lord willing) briefly and summarily to excerp only the principal effects, as to the Story may seem most appertinent, referring the residue to be searched (if any Reader so list to do) to the Book of Monuments aforesaid, beginning in the Page 728.

For the full tractation of Stephen Gardiner's story read in the Book of Acts and Monuments, of the first Edition, page 728.

Briefly therefore, as touching the acts, doings, deservings and misdemeanors of this stout Prelat and Bishop of Winchester; first we will set before the Reader the Copy of a certain Writ or Evidence against the said Bishop, wherein as in a brief summ generally is described the whole order and manner of his misordered demeanor, copied out of the publick Records in manner as followeth.

The Copy of a Writ or Evidence touching the order and manner of the misdemeanor of Winchester, with declaration of the faults wherewith he was justly charged.

The Writ or Evidence given out against Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester.

WHereas the Kings Majesty, by the advice of the Lord Protector and the rest of his Highness Privy Council, thinking requisite for sundry urgent considerations to have a general visitation throughout the whole Realm, did about ten Months past address forth Commissions, and by the advice of sundry Bishops, and other the best learned men of the Realm, appointed certain Orders or Injunctions to be generally observed; which being such as in some part touched the Reformation of many abuses, and in other parts concerned the good governance and quiet of the Realm, were (as reason would) of all men of all sorts obediently received, and reverently observed and executed, saving only of the Bishop of Winchester, who as well by conference with other, as by open Protestation and Letters also, shewed such a wilful disobedience therein, as if it had not been quickly espied, might have bred much unquietness and trouble: Upon the knowledge thereof he being sent for, and his lewd proceedings laid to his charge, in the presence of the whole Council so used himself, (as well in denying to receive the said Orders and Injunctions, as otherwise) as he was thought worthy most sharp punishment; and yet considering the place he had been in, he was only sequestred to the Fleet, where after he had remained a certain time, as much at his ease as if he had been at his own house, upon his promise of conformity he was both set at liberty again, and also licensed to repair to and remain in his Dioces at his pleasure. Where when he was, forgetting his duty, and what promise he had made, he began forthwith to set forth such matters as bred again more strife, variance and contention in that one small City and Shire, than was almost in the whole Realm after. Besides that, the Lord Protectors Grace and the Council were informed, that to withstand such as he thought to have been sent from their Grace and Lordships into those parts, he had caused all his servants to be secretly armed and harnessed; and moreover when such Preachers, as being men of godly life and learning were sent into that Dioces by his Grace and Lordships to preach the Word of God, had appointed to preach, the Bishop, to disappoint and disgrace them, and to hinder his Majesties proceedings, did occupy the Pulpit himself, not fearing in his Sermon to warn the people to beware of such new Preachers, and to embrace none other Doctrine but that which he had taught them (than the which words none could have been spoken more perilous and seditious. Whereupon being eftsoons sent for, and their Grace and Lordships objecting to him many particular matters wherewith they had just cause to charge him, they did in the end upon his second promise leave him at liberty, only willing him to remain at his house at London, because they thought it most meet to sequester him from his Dioces for a time; and being come to his house, he began afresh to ruffle and meddle in matters wherein he had Winchester misusing himself before the Council.

Winchester committed to the Fleet.

Winchester delivered out of the Fleet, and set at liberty.

Winchester forgetteth himself again in his Dioces.

Winchester sent for again by the Council.

Winchester commanded to keep his house.

Winchester again breaketh promise with the Council

neither commiſſion nor authority; part whereof touched the Kings Majeſty. Whereof being yet once again admoniſhed by his Grace and their Lordſhips, he did not only promiſe to conform himſelf in all things like a good Subject, but alſo becauſe he underſtood that he was diverſly reported of, and many were alſo offended with him, he offered to declare to the World his conformity, and promiſed in an open Sermon ſo to open his mind in ſundry Articles agreed upon, that ſuch as had been offended ſhould have no more cauſe to be offended, but well ſatisfied in all things. Declaring further, that as his own Conſcience was well ſatisfied, and liked well the Kings proceedings within this Realm, ſo would he utter his Conſcience abroad, to the ſatisfaction and good quiet of others. And yet all this notwithſtanding, at the day appointed, he did not only moſt arrogantly and diſobediently, and that in the preſence of his Majeſty, their Grace and Lordſhips, and of ſuch an audience as the like whereof hath not lightly been ſeen, ſpeak of certain matters contrary to an expreſs commandment given to him on his Majeſties behalf both by mouth and by Letters, but alſo in the reſt of the Articles whereunto he had agreed before, uſed ſuch a manner of utterance as was very like, even there preſently, to have ſtirred a great tumult, and in certain great matters touching the policy of the Realm, handled himſelf ſo colourably, as therein he ſhewed himſelf an open great offender, and a very ſeditious man; forſomuch as theſe his proceedings were of ſuch ſort, as being ſuffered to eſcape unpuniſhed, might breed innumerable inconveniences, and that the clemencies ſhewed to him afore, by their Grace and Lordſhips, did work in him no good effect, but rather a pride and boldneſs to demean himſelf more and more diſobediently againſt his Majeſties and his Graces proceedings; it was determined by their Grace and Lordſhips, that he ſhould be committed to the Tower, and be conveyed thither by Sir Anthony Wingfield, and that at the time of his committing, Sir Ralph Sadler, and William Hunnings Clerk of the Council, ſhould ſeal up the Doors of ſuch places in his houſe as they ſhould think meet; all which was done accordingly.

Wincheſter promiſeth to ſhew his conformity openly in preaching.

Wincheſter in his ſermon ſwarveth from his own promiſe and the Kings Commandments.

Wincheſter for his ſeditious diſobedience had to the Tower.

By this Evidence above mentioned, firſt here is of the Reader to be noted how lewdly and diſobediently the ſaid Stephen Gardiner miſuſed himſelf in the Kings general Viſitation, in denying to receive ſuch Orders and Injunctions, as for the which he juſtly deſerved much more ſevere puniſhment, albeit the King with his Uncle the Lord Protector, more gently proceeding with him, were contented only to make him taſte the Fleet. In the which houſe, as his durance was not long, ſo his intreating and ordering was very eaſie. Out of the which Fleet divers and ſundry Letters he wrote to the Lord Protector and other of the Council, certain alſo to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and ſome to Maſter Ridley Biſhop of London; the particulars were too long here to rehearſe, conſidering how this Book is overcharged as ye ſee already; and eſpecially ſeeing the ſame to be notified in our firſt Edition ſufficiently, as is aforeſaid. Wherefore omitting the rehearſal of theſe ſaid Letters, and referring the Reader to the Book aforeſaid, I will only repeat one Letter of the ſaid Biſhop, with the anſwers of the Lord Protector unto the ſame; the contents whereof be theſe as follow.

For the Letters of Wincheſter read in the Book of Acts and Monuments of the firſt Edition, Page 732.

A Letter of Wincheſter to Maſter Vaughan.

A Letter of Stephen Gardiner to Captain Vaughan.

MAſter Vaughan, after my right hearty commendations: In my laſt Letters to my Lord Protector, ſignifying, according to the general commandment by Letters given to all Juſtices of Peace, the ſtate of this Shire, I declared (as I ſuppoſed true) the Shire to be in good order, quiet and conformity, for I had not then heard of any alteration in this Shire, which the ſaid Letters of commandment did forbid. Now of late within theſe two days I have heard of a great and deteſtable (if it be true that is told me) innovation in the Town of Portſmouth, where the Images of Chriſt and his Saints have been moſt contemptuouſly pulled down, and ſpitefully handled. Herein I thought good both to write to you and the Mayor, the Kings Majeſties chief Miniſters, as well to know the truth, as to conſult with you for the Reformation of it, to the intent I may be ſeen to diſcharge my duty, and diſcharging it indeed both to God and to the Kings Majeſty, under whom I am here appointed to have Cure, and care to relieve ſuch as be by any ways fallen, and preſerve the reſt that ſtand from like danger.

Images plucked down at Portſmouth.

Ye are a Gentleman with whom I have had acquaintance, and whom I know to be wiſe, and eſteem to have more knowledge, wiſdom and diſcretion than to allow any ſuch enormities, and therefore I do the more willingly conſult with you herein, with requeſt friendly to know of you the very truth in the matter, who be the doers, and the circumſtances of it, and whether ye think the matter ſo far gone with the multitude, and whether the reproof and diſproving of the deed, might without a further danger be enterpriſed in the Pulpit or not, minding, if it may ſo be, to ſend one thither for that purpoſe upon Sunday next coming. I would uſe preaching as it ſhould not be occaſion of any further folly where a folly is begun, and to a multitude perſwaded in the opinion of deſtruction of Images, I would never preach. For (as Scripture willeth us) we ſhould caſt no precious ſtones before Hogs. Such as be infected with that opinion, they be Hogs and worſe than Hogs, if there be any groſſer Beaſts than Hogs be, and have been ever ſo taken, and in England they are called Lollards, who denying Images, thought therewithal the Crafts of painting and graving to be generally ſuperfluous and naught, and againſt Gods laws.

Then were the old Fathers and Biſhops in the Primitive Church, with Epiphanius and Carolus Magnus, and all the Council of Francford, Hogs and Dogs.

In Germany ſuch as maintained that opinion of deſtroying of Images were accounted the dregs caſt out by Luther after he had turned all his brewings in Chriſts Religion, and ſo taken as Hogs meat. For the reproof of whom Luther wrote a Book ſpecially, and I have with mine eyes ſeen the Images ſtanding in all Churches, where Luther was had in eſtimation. For the deſtruction of Images containeth an enterpriſe to ſubvert Religion, and the ſtate of the World with it, and eſpecially the Nobility, who by Images ſet forth and ſpread abroad to be read of all people, their Lineage, Parentage, with remembrance of their ſtate and acts; and the Purſevant carrieth not on his breaſt the Kings name written with ſuch Letters as a few can ſpell, but ſuch as all can read be they never ſo rude, being great known Letters in Images of three Lions, and three flowers de luce, and other beaſts holding thoſe Arms. And he that cannot read the Scripture written about the Kings Great Seal, yet he can read St. George on Horſeback on the one ſide, and the King ſitting in his Majeſty on the other ſide, and readeth ſo much written in thoſe Images, as if he be an honeſt man, he will put off his Cap; and although if the Seal were broken by chance, he would and might make a Candle of it, yet he would not be noted to have broken the Seal for that purpoſe, or to call it a piece of wax only whilſt it continueth whole. And if by reviling of ſtocks and ſtones, in which matter Images be graven, the ſetting of the truth to be read of all men, ſhall be contemned; how ſhall ſuch writing continue in honour as is compriſed in clouts and pitch, whereof and whereupon our Books be made, ſuch as few can skill of, and not the hundredth part of the Realm? and if we a few that can read, becauſe we read in one ſort of Letters, ſo priviledged as they have many reliefs, ſhall pull away the Books of the reſt, and would have our letters only in eſtimation, and blind all them, ſhall not they have juſt cauſe to miſtruſt what is meant? And if the Croß be a truth, and if it be true that Chriſt ſuffered, why may we not have a writing thereof, ſuch as all can read, that is to ſay an Image? If this opinion ſhould proceed, when the Kings Majeſty hereafter ſhould ſhew his perſon, his lively Image, the honour due by Gods law among ſuch might continue; but as for the Kings Standards, his Banners, his Arms ſhould hardly continue in their due reverence for fear of Lollards Idolatry, which they gather upon Scripture beaſtly, not only untruly. The Scripture reproveth falſe Images made of ſtocks and ſtones, and ſo it doth falſe men made of fleſh and bones.

Wincheſter's reaſon. The Purſevant carrieth about Saint George on Horſeback, and the Kings Picture, Ergo Images muſt ſtand in churches.

Books ſerve only to be read and not to be kneeled unto and worſhipped; for ſo are they no Books, but are made idols, and are to be broken.

When the Emperors mony was ſhewed to Chriſt, wherein was the Image of the Emperor, Chriſt contemned not that Image calling it an Idol, nor noted that mony to be againſt Gods law, becauſe it had an Image in it, as though it were againſt the precept of God, Thou ſhalt have no graven Image; but taught them good civility, in calling it the Emperors Image, and bad them uſe the mony as was ordered to be uſed in his right uſe.

{Anno 1550.}

KING [Edw.6] There is no Scripture that reproveth truth, and all Scripture reproveth falſhood. Falſe writings, falſe books, falſe images and falſe men, all be naught, to be contemned and deſpiſed; as for paper, ink, parchment, ſtones, wood, bones, A.B. of the Chancery hand, and A. B. of the Secretary hand, a Letter of Germany faſhion, or of any other form, they be all of one eſtimation, and may be, of man enclining to the Devil, uſed for falſhood, or applying to Gods gracious calling, uſed to ſet forth truth. It is a terrible matter to think, that this falſe opinion conceived againſt Images ſhould trouble any mans head: and ſuch as I have known vexed with that Devil (as I have known ſome) be nevertheleſs wondrouſly obſtinate in it; and if they can find one that can ſpell Latine to help forth their madneſs, they be more obdurate than ever were the Jews, and ſlander whatſoever is ſaid to them for their relief. Of this ſort I know them to be, and therefore if I wiſt there were many of that ſort with you, I would not irritate them by preaching without fruit, but labour for reformation to my Lord Protector. But if you thought there might be other ways uſed firſt to a good effect, I would follow your advice, and proceeding with you and the Mayor, with both your helps to do that may ly in me to the redreſs of the matter, which I take to be ſuch an enterpriſe againſt Chriſts Religion, as there cannot be a greater by man excogitate with the Devils inſtigation, and at this time much hurtful to the common eſtate, as ye can of your wiſdom conſider. Whom I heartily deſire and pray to ſend me anſwer by this Bearer to theſe my Letters, to the intent I may uſe my ſelf in ſending of a Preacher thither, or writing to the Lord Protector, as the caſe ſhall require accordingly. And thus fare you heartily well.

If every Image repreſenting a thing of truth may ſtand in a place of Worſhip, then let Wincheſters face ſtand in the Church alſo.

From my houſe at Wolveſay, the 3d of May, 1547.
Steph. Wint.

A Letter of the Lord Protector, anſwering to the Letter above.

AFter hearty commendations, I received of late two Letters from your Lordſhip, the one incloſed in a Letter of Maſter Vaughan's to us, and directed to him, the other directed ſtraight unto us, very wittily and learnedly written, whereby we do perceive how earneſt you are that no Innovations ſhould be had. The which mind of yours, as we do highly eſteem and allow, proceeding from one that would quietneſs, ſo we would likewiſe wiſh, that you ſhould take good heed that too much fear of Innovation or diſturbance doth not cauſe both of them to be. Many times in an Hoſt, he that crieth Enemies, Enemies, when there be none, cauſeth not only diſturbance, but ſometimes a Mutiny or Rebellion to be made; and he that for fear of a ſickneſs to come, taketh unadviſedly a purgation, ſometimes maketh himſelf ſick indeed. We perceive by the ſaid your Letters, that heinouſer facts and words have been brought to your ears, than there was cauſe why; and thoſe facts which were puniſhable, be already by him redreſt.

Images. For the matter of Images, an order was taken in the late King of famous memory, our Sovereign Lords days. When the abuſed Images (yet lurking in ſome places by negligence of them who ſhould ere this time have looked unto the ſame) be now aboliſhed, let not that be a matter of the aboliſhing of all Images. Though Felons and Adulterers be puniſhed, all men be not ſlain. Though the Images which did adulterate Gods glory be taken away, we may not think by and by all manner of Images to be deſtroyed. Yet after our advice, better it were for a time to aboliſh them all, than for that the dead Images, the Kings loving Subjects, being faithful and true to the Kings Majeſty, ſhould be put to variance and diſturbance. With quietneſs the Magiſtrates and Rulers ſhall keep them well in order, whom contentious Preachers might irritate and provoke to diſorder and ſtrife. So it muſt be provided that the Kings Majeſties Images, Arms and Enſigns, ſhould be honoured and worſhipped after the decent order and invention of humane laws and ceremonies, and nevertheleſs that other Images, contrary to Gods Ordinances and Laws, ſhould not be made partakers of that reverence, adoration and invocation, (which forbidden by God) ſhould derogate his honour, and be occaſion to accumulate Gods wrath upon us. Where they be taken for a remembrance, it maketh no great matter though they ſtand ſtill in the Church or Market ſtead, following the late King of famous memory his counſel and order; yet more gentleneſs was ſhewed to thoſe Books of Images, than to the true and unfeigned Books of Gods Word, both being abuſed, the one with idolatry, the other with contention. The Scripture was removed for a time from certain perſons, and almoſt from all: The Images were left ſtill to them who moſt did abuſe them, the thing being yet choſen from them which ſhould teach the uſe. Wherefore it may appear unto us meet, more diligent heed to be taken that the abuſed before be not abuſed again, the advantage of ſome Prieſts, ſimplicity of Laymen, and great inclination of mans nature to Idolatry, giving cauſe thereto.

Kindion Images.

More gentleneſs ſhewed to the Books of Images, than to the Books of Gods Word in K. Henrys time.

They that contemn Images, becauſe the matter that they are made of is but vile, as ſtocks and ſtones, may likewiſe deſpiſe printing in Paper becauſe the Ink hath Pich in it, and the Paper is made of old Rags. And if they be both alike, it might be reaſoned why a man ſhould be more agrieved, that an Image of Wood, though it were of Saint Ann, or St. Margaret ſhould be burned, than he will that the Bible, wherein the undoubted Word of God is compriſed, ſhould be torn in pieces, burned or made paſte of. Nor do we now ſpeak of falſe Bibles, nor falſe Goſpels, but of the very true Goſpel, either in Latine, Greek or Engliſh, which we ſee every day done, and ſometime commanded, becauſe the Tranſlator diſpleaſeth us; and yet herein no man exclaimeth of a terrible and deteſtable fact done. But let one Image either for age, and becauſe it is worm-eaten, or becauſe it hath been fooliſhly abuſed, be burnt or aboliſhed, by and by ſome men are in exceeding rage, as though not a ſtock or a ſtone, but a true Saint of fleſh and bone ſhould be caſt into the fire, which were a deteſtable and a terrible ſight. We cannot ſee but that Images may be counted marvellous Books to whom we have kneeled, whom we have kiſſed, upon whom we have rubbed our Beads and Handkerchiefs, unto whom we have lighted Candles, of whom we have asked pardon and help, which thing hath ſeldom been ſeen done to the Goſpel of God, or the very true Bible. For who kiſſeth that but the Prieſt at the Maſs, at a painted Picture, or in ſuch a ceremony? Or who kneeleth unto it, or ſetteth a Candle before it? And yet it ſeeth or heareth, as well as the Images or Pictures either of S. John, or our Lady, or Chriſt.

Papiſts can better abide the Book of Gods Word than Images to be burned.

Images falſly called and counted for Lay-mens Books.

Indeed Images be great Letters; yet as big as they be, we have ſeen many which have read them amiſs. And belike they be ſo likely to be read amiſs, that God himſelf, fearing the Jews to become evil Readers of them, generally did forbid them. Nor is it any great marvel though in reading of them the lay-people are many times deceived, when your Lordſhip (as appeareth) hath not truly read a moſt true and a moſt common Image. Your Lordſhip hath found out, in the Kings Highneſs Great Seal, St. George on Horſeback, which the Graver never made in it; nor the Sealer ever ſealed with it; and this Inſcription is not very little, and if it were, it could not eſcape your Lordſhips eyes. As the Inſcription teſtifieth, the Kings Image is on both the ſides; on the one ſide as in War the chief Captain; on the other ſide as in Peace the liege Sovereign; in harneſs with his Sword drawn to defend his Subjects; in his Robes in the Seat of Juſtice with his Scepter rightfully to rule and govern them, as he whom both in Peace and War we acknowledge our moſt natural and chiefeſt Head, Ruler and Governour. If it were S. George (my Lord) where is his Spear and Dragon? And why ſhould the Inſcription round about tell an untruth, and not agree to the Image? Yet it is called ſometimes ſo of the rude and ignorant people; but not by and by, that that is commonly called ſo, is always trueſt. And ſome have thought that by like deceiving, as your Lordſhip herein appeareth to have been deceived, the Image of Bellerophon or Perſeus was turned firſt and appointed to be St. George, and of Polyphemus, of Herculeſ, or of ſome other Coloſſus, to be S. Chriſtopher, becauſe authentical Hiſtories have not fully proved their two lives. But thoſe be indifferent to be true or not true, either thus invented upon ſome device, or riſing of a true fact or Hiſtory, and whether it were true or not, it maketh no great matter.

Wincheſter overſeen in miſtaking the Kings Image for S. George on Horſeback.

If it be against reason, that learned men ſhould take from the unlearned the books of their Images, much more is it againſt reaſon, to take from them the books of Gods word.

It were hardly done indeed my Lord, if that you, and a few which can read, ſhould take away from the unlearned multitude their Books of their Images: but it were more hardly done, if that you or a few which can read in one or two Languages, (as Greek and Latin) the word of God, and have had thereby many reliefs and priviledges, ſhould pull away the Engliſh Books from the reſt which only underſtand Engliſh; and would have only your Letters of Greek and Latin in eſtimation, and bind all them which underſtand not theſe languages, from the knowledg of Gods Word. And indeed, my Lord, by your ſaying they have juſt occaſion to ſuſpect what is meant.

1 Cor. 8. Winchester's diſtinction between true and falſe images refuted.

What you mean by true Images and falſe Images, it is not ſo eaſie to perceive. If they be only falſe Images, which have nothing that they repreſent, as Saint Paul writeth, An Idol is nothing, (becauſe there is no ſuch god) and therefore the Croſs can be no falſe Image, becauſe it is true that Chriſt ſuffered upon it: then the Image of the Sun and the Moon were no Idols, for ſuch things there be as the Sun and the Moon, and they were in the Image then ſo repreſented, as Painting and Carving doth repreſent them. And the Image of Ninus and Ceſar, and (as ſome write) the Images of all the twelve choſen gods (as they called them) were the Images of once living men. And it might be ſaid that the Image of God the Father hath no ſuch eyes, noſe, lips, and a long gray beard, with a furred robe, nor ever had, as they carve and paint him to have. But if that be a falſe Image and an Idol which is otherwiſe worſhipped and accepted than it ought to be, as the Braſen Serpent, being a true Image and repreſentation of Chriſt, by abuſe was made an Idol; it may be thought in times paſt, and peradventure now at this time, in ſome places, the Images not only of St. John, or St. Anne, but of our Lady and Chriſt be falſe Images and Idols, repreſenting to fooliſh, blind and ignorant mens hearts and thoughts, that which was not in them, and they ought not to be made for. The which were by you (my Lord) to have been removed ſooner, and before that the Captain there ſhould have need to have done it. But if your Lordſhip be ſlack in ſuch matters, he that removeth falſe Images and Idols abuſed, doth not a thing worthy of blame.

The Image of the Father is falſe, and therefore by Winchester's reaſon to be aboliſhed.

Chriſt called not the money, having Ceſars Image in it, an Idol, when it was uſed to lawful uſes, and to pay the due tribute withal. But when a man doth not uſe thoſe Images graven in money to do his neighbour good, and the Commonwealth ſervice, St. Paul Chriſts Diſciple called that covetouſneſs, and the ſerving and bondage to Idols. So that even in money may be Idolatry, if we make too much of thoſe Images which Chriſt here doth not reprehend. There be ſome ſo tickliſh, and ſo fearful one ways, and ſo tender ſtomached, that they can abide no old abuſes to be reformed, but think every reformation to be a capital enterpriſe againſt all Religion and good order; as there be on the contrary ſide ſome too raſh, who having no conſideration what is to be done, headlong will ſet upon every thing. The Magiſtrates duty is betwixt theſe, ſo in a mean to ſee and provide that old doting ſhould not take further or deeper ruſt in the Commonwealth, neither ancient error overcome the ſeen and tried truth, nor long abuſe, for the age and ſpace of time only, ſtill be ſuffered; and yet all theſe with quietneſs and gentleneſs, and without all contention, if it were poſſible to be reformed. To the which your Lordſhip, as a man to whom God hath given great qualities of wit, learning, and perſwaſion, could bring great help and furtherance, if it were your pleaſure, with great thanks of men and reward of God. The which thing is our full deſire and purpoſe, and our hearty and daily prayer to God, that in the Kings Majeſties time, whoſe Majeſties Reign God preſerve, all abuſes with wiſdom reformed, Chriſts Religion with good and politick order of the Commonwealth, without any contention and ſtriſe among the Kings ſubjects, might flouriſh and daily increaſe. And this to your Lordſhips Letter ſent to Maſter Vaughan of Portſmouth.

{KING Edw. 6}

Wincheſter to the Lord Protector.

He noted Mr. Barnes.

MAY it pleaſe your Grace to underſtand, that I have noted ſome points in my Lord of St. Davids Sermon, which I ſend unto you herewith, whereby to declare unto you ſome part what I think, for the whole I cannot expreſs: ſomewhat I ſhall incumber you with my babling, but he hath incumbred ſome friends more with his tatling. And alas, my Lord, this is a piteous caſe, that having ſo much buſineſs as ye have, theſe inward diſorders ſhould be added unto them, to the courage of ſuch as would this Realm any ways evil. For this is the thing they would deſire, with hope thereby to diſorder this Realm, being now a time rather to repair that which needeth reparation, than to make any new buildings which they pretend. Quiet, tranquillity, unity, and concord ſhall maintain eſtimation. The contrary may animate the enemy to attempt that which was never thought on, which God forbid. There was never attempt of alteration made in England, but upon comfort of diſcord at home, and wo be to them that mind it. If my Lord of St. Davids, or ſuch others have their head cumbred with any new Platform, I would wiſh they were commanded, between this and the Kings Majeſties full age, to draw the Plat, diligently to hew the ſtones, dig the ſand, and chop the Chalk in the unſeaſonable time of building, and when the Kings Majeſty cometh to full age, to preſent their labours to him, and in the mean time not to diſturb the State of the Realm, whereof your Grace is Protector, but that you may in every part of Religion, Laws, Lands, and Decrees (which four contain the State) deliver the ſame unto our Sovereign Lord, according unto the truſt you be put in, which ſhall be much to your honour, and as all honeſt men wiſh and deſire. To which deſired effect there can be nothing ſo noiſome and contrarious, as trouble and diſquiet. Wherein your Grace ſhall be ſpecially troubled, as on whoſe ſhoulders all the weight lyeth, and whatſoever ſhall happen amiſs by the faults of other, ſhall be imputed to your Grace, as doer thereof, or wanting foreſight in time to withſtand the ſame. And albeit that you mind not to be faulty in either, yet if the effect be not to the Realm as it were to be wiſhed, the Prince though he were of age ſhould be excuſed, and the Governors bear the blame. And this is the infelicity of preheminence and authority, and ſpecially in this Realm, as ſtories make mention, which ſhould not diſcourage you, for you need fear nothing without, if quiet be reſerved at home; and at home if the beginning be reſiſted, the intended folly may eaſily be interrupted. But if my Brother of S. Davids, may like a Champion with his ſword in his hand, make entry for the reſt, the door of licence opened, there ſhall more by folly thruſt in with him than your Grace would wiſh. Thus, as I think, I write homely to your Grace, becauſe you were content I ſhould write, wherein I conſider only to have all things well. And becauſe your Grace is the Protector, and the chief Director of the Realm, to preſent unto your wiſdom what my folly is, I have been oftentimes blamed for fearing over much, and yet I have had an inkling that they that ſo blamed me, feared even as much as I. Being in the ſtate that you be in, it ſhall be ever commendable to foreſee the worſt. In quiet ye be ſtrong, in trouble ye be greatly weak, and bring your ſelf in danger of one part, when parties be, therewith one to ſcourge the other. Whereas in concord they be both yours, in an honeſt, reverent, lovely fear to do their duty, which I doubt not your wiſdom can conſider. And conſider alſo how noiſome any other outward incumber might be in the time of the minority of our Sovereign Lord. I told the Emperors Council, That our late Sovereign Lord did much for the Emperor, to enter War with him, and to put his Realm in his old days in the adventure of fortune, whether he ſhould enjoy it or no, for that is the nature of War. And ſometime the contemned and abject have had the upper hand. And when ye adminiſter the Realm for another, it were a marvelous queſtion of him that ſhall enjoy the Realm to ſay, What meant you in the time of adminiſtration to adventure my Realm? Why took ye not rather for the time of my minority any Peace, whatſoever it were, which is better than the beſt War, as ſome men have written? I know you have authority

Where quiet and tranquility goeth with right formed religion, by all means it is to be maintained, but contrary, where Gods religion lacketh his right, there the ſecond Table muſt give place to the firſt.

This Biſhop reaſoneth here as one having more reſpect to worldly tranquility than to Chriſts glory.

Why Winchester under pretence of giving ſage counſel, craftily goeth about to incenſe and ſet the Lord Protector againſt all good men, and all godly proceedings.

{KING Edw.6}

thority ſufficient, and wiſdom plenty, and yet being entred to write, I forget for the time what ye be, and commune with you as I were talking at Bruſſels with you, deviſing of the world at large. And if I were ſworn to ſay what I think of the ſtate of the world, I would for a time let Scots be Scots, with diſpair to have them, unleſs it were by conqueſt, which ſhall be a goodly enterpriſe for our young Maſter when he cometh to age. And in the mean time prepare him mony for it, and ſet the Realm in an order which it hath need of. And for a ſtay, if the Emperor would offer the King of Romans Daughter, as he did; do with him in our Maſters minority, as he did with us in his, whereby all this hath chanced unto him. And by this alliance your eſtimation ſhall encreaſe, and our Sovereign Lords ſurety not a little encreaſe and be augmented. For of France it muſt be taken for a rule, They be ſo wanton, they cannot do well longer than they ſee how they may be ſcourged if they do not. Here is all the wit that I have, which I offer unto you upon this occaſion of writing, and ſhall pray God to put into your mind that which ſhall be for the beſt, as I truſt he will; and in the mean time to extinguiſh this barbarous contention at home, which can ſerve only to do hurt, and no good. I had faſhioned a Letter to Maſter Ridley, which I ſend unto your Grace, and encumber you with theſe melancholly writings, ingendred of this fondneſs, which be not worth the reading. And ſo it may like you to uſe them, for having heard that which ye have ſaid unto me, and otherwiſe heard and ſeen what you do, I ſhall go occupy my wit in other matters, and now ſuch as have fond enterpriſes ſhall ſee that I letted not their follies, which they called Gods Word. But for his time the King our Sovereign Lord that dead is, and after his time you have done much to your honour and reputation; howſoever any ſhall be here not contented; which miſcontentation hath been ſo fond in ſome, as they have burſt out and wiſhed, that they might without breach of his Laws kill me; which is to me a token of a marvellous fury, which hath been cauſe why I am glad both to depart hence, and to depart the ſooner, and pray to God to order all things for the beſt, With preſervation of our Sovereign Lord, and increaſe of your Graces honour. At my Houſe in Southwark, the laſt of February.

Winchester hereby meaneth a fetch, if he could have brought it about.

Winchesters Letters againſt Ridley.

Gods Word a folly to Winchester, but to them that be wiſe in the Lord it is the wiſdom of the Lord to ſalvation.

Your Graces humble Beadman, S. W.

Another Letter of S. W.

After my humble commendations to your Grace, it may like the ſame to underſtand, I have ſeen of late two Books ſet forth in Engliſh by Bale, very pernicious, ſeditious, and ſlanderous. And albeit that your Grace needeth not mine advertiſement in that matter, yet I am ſo bold to trouble your Grace with my Letters for mine own commodity, wherewith to ſatisfie mine own conſcience, to write and ſay as becometh me in ſuch matters, which I deſire your Grace to take in good part. For it grieveth me not a little to ſee, ſo ſoon after my late Sovereign Lord and Maſters death, a Book ſpread abroad more to his diſhonour (if a Princes honour may be by vile inferiour ſubjects impeached) than profeſſed enemies have imagined, to note a woman to have ſuffered under him as a Martyr, and the woman therewith to be by Bales own elucidation (as he calleth it) ſo ſet forth and painted as ſhe appeareth to be, and is boaſted to be a Sacramentary, and by the Laws worthy (as ſhe ſuffered) the pains of death; ſuch like things have by ſtealth in our late Sovereign Lords days gone abroad as they do now. And as I am wont in ſuch caſes to ſpeak, I keep my wont to write to your Grace now, in whoſe hands I know the ſtate of the Realm to be for the time in Government, and to whom for reſpects of old acquaintance I wiſh all felicity. In theſe matters of Religion I have been long exerciſed, and have (thanks be to God) lived ſo long as I have ſeen them throughly tried, and beſides that I have learned in written Books of authority, I have perceived by Books written without authority, as by Maſter Bale, Joy, and other, and eſpecially as Bale uſeth now, that Scripture doth by abuſe, ſervice to the right hand and the left at once, in ſo much as at one time Bale praiſeth Luther, and Winchester wrangleth againſt Bales Books.

ſetteth his death forth in Engliſh, with commendation as of a Saint, which Luther (whatſoever he was otherwiſe) ſtoutly affirmed the Preſence really of Chriſts natural Body in the Sacrament of the Altar. And yet Bale the noble Clerk would have Anne Askew, blaſphemouſly denying the Preſence of Chriſts natural Body, to be taken for a Saint alſo. So as Bales Saints may vary in Heaven, if they chance not by the way; which might ſuffice to diſprove the mans credit, if thwarting talk were more deſired of many than the truth indeed, which truth was ſuppoſed to have been both in writing and exerciſe well eſtabliſhed, long before our late Lords death; and Bale and his adherents in their madneſs plainly reproved and condemned. I cannot forget, your Grace told me you would ſuffer no innovation: and indeed if you deliver this Realm to the King at eighteen years of age, as the King his Father, whoſe ſoul God aſſoil, left it, as I truſt you ſhall, the act is ſo honourable and good, as it were pity to trouble it with any innovation, which were a charge to your Grace more than needed, being already burthened heavily. And albeit in the Commonwealth every man hath his part, yet as God hath placed you, the matter is (under the Kings Majeſty) chiefly yours, and as it were yours alone. Every man hath his eye directed unto you both here and abroad, you ſhall ſhadow mens doings if they be done, which is one incommodity of high rule. And for my part beſides my duty to the Kings Majeſty and the Realm, I would that your Grace in whom ſince your Government I have found much gentleneſs and humanity, had as much honour with good ſucceſs as ever any had, and pray to God that men would let your Grace alone, and ſuffer the Realm in the time of your Government in quiet among our ſelves, whereby we may be the more able to reſiſt foreign trouble, which your Grace doth prudently foreſee. Certain Printers, Players, and Preachers make a wonderment, as though we knew not yet how to be juſtified, nor what Sacraments we ſhould have. And if the agreement in Religion made in the time of our late Sovereign Lord be of no force in their judgment, what eſtabliſhment could any new agreement have? And every incertainty is noiſome to any Realm. And where every man will be Maſter, there muſt needs be uncertainty. And one thing is marvellous that at the ſame time it is taught that all men be liers, at the ſelf ſame time almoſt every man would be believed; and amongſt them Bale, when his untruth appeareth evidently in ſetting forth the Examination of Anne Askew, which is utterly miſreported. I beſeech your Grace to pardon my babling with you. But I ſee my late Sovereign Lord and Maſter ſlandered by ſuch ſimple perſons, Religion aſſaulted, the Realm troubled, and peaceable men diſquieted, with occaſion given to enemies to point and ſay, that after Wickliffs ſtrange teaching in the Sacraments of Chriſts Church hath vexed other, it is finally turned unto us to moleſt and ſcourge us, for other fruit cannot Bales teaching have, ne the teaching of ſuch other as go about to trouble the agreement ſtabliſhed here. In which matter I dare not deſire your Grace ſpecially to look earneſtly unto it, leſt I ſhould ſeem to note in you that which becometh me not. And I know that your Grace being otherwiſe occupied, theſe things may creep in as it hath been heretofore; ſometime it may be hard for your Grace to find out or pull out the root of this naughtineſs: but yet I am ſo bold to write of theſe, of mine own ſtomach, who have ever uſed, for diſcharge of my ſelf, to ſay and write in time and place as I thought might do good for relief of the matter, remitting the reſt to the diſpoſition of God, who hath wrought wonders in theſe matters, ſince they were firſt moved, and given me ſuch knowledg and experience in them, as I ought to take them (as they be) for corruption and untruth, I mean knowledg and experience of them that be chief ſtirrers, to infect with untruth, as they cannot ſpeak or report truly in common matters: The pretence is of the ſpirit, and all is for the fleſh, women, and meat, with liberty of hand and tongue, a diſſolution and diſſipation of all eſtates, clean contrarious to the place God hath called your Grace unto. For it tendeth all to confuſion and diſorder, which is the effect of untruth.

Bale hath ſet forth a prayer for the Duke John of Saxony, wherein the Duke remitteth to Gods judgment to be ſhewed here in this world the juſtneſs of his cauſe concerning Religion, and deſireth God, if his cauſe be not good,

Luther and Ann Askew why not as well Saints both in Heaven, though they varied in one ſmall point here, as you and Smith, both the Popes friends, though ye vary, as ye ſaid your ſelf in divers.

If the ſix Articles might have continued ſtill, all were quiet with Winchester, howſoever it were elſe with the true Church of Chriſt. Printers, Players and Preachers trouble Winchester. Every incertainty is noiſome I grant. But reformation of Religion is not by and by the cauſe of incertainty in a Commonwealth, nor maketh every man to be a Maſter. The Realm is troubled by the much like as the Prophet Hely was he that troubled the Kingdom of Achab. Salt laid on a ſore, if it do vex it, the fault is not in the ſalt, but in the fleſh, which cannot abide it Winchesters what he ſaith, ſo long as he proveth not, it mattereth not what he ſaith.

to order him to be taken, and to be ſpoiled of his honour and poſſeſſions, with many ſuch gay words whereby to tempt God; ſince which prayer the Duke is indeed taken as all the world ſaith, and at the time of his taking, as the account is made, ſuch ſtrangeneſs in the Sun, as we ſaw it here, as hath not been ſeen. They happened both together, this we know, and be both marvellous; but whether the one were a token ordered to concur with the other, God knoweth, and man cannot define. Many Commonwealths have continued without the Biſhop of Romes Juriſdiction, but without true Religion, and with ſuch opinions as Germany maintained, no eſtate hath continued in the circuit of the world to us known ſince Chriſt came. For the Turks and Tartars Government is as it were a continual war, and they uphold their rule with ſubduing of Nobility by fire and ſword. † Germany with their new Religion could never have ſtood, though the Emperor had let them alone: for if it be perſwaded the underſtanding of Gods Law to be at large in women * and children, whereby they may have the rule of that, and then Gods Law muſt be the rule of all, is not hereby the rule of all brought into their hands? Theſe of ſome will be called witty reaſons, but they be indeed truths children, and ſo is all the eloquence, which ſome (to diſpraiſe me) ſay I have, whatſoever they ſay of me. For truth is of it ſelf, in a right meaning mans mouth, more eloquent than forged matters can with ſtudy bring forth. What Rithmes be ſet forth to deprave the Lent, and how fond (ſaving your Graces honour) and fooliſh? and yet the people pay money for them, and they can ſerve for nothing, but to learn the people to rail, and to cauſe ſuch as uſed to make proviſion for fiſh againſt Lent, fearing now in Lent to be ſo ſick as the Rime purporteth and like to die indeed, to forbear to make their accuſtomed proviſion for the next year. And thereto ſhall it come if the common diet be not certain. For the Fiſhmonger will never hope to have good ſale, when the Butcher may with Fleſh out-face him. And Fiſh is that great treaſure of this Realm, and food ineſtimable. And theſe good words I give, although I love it not my ſelf: for ſuch as love not Fiſh ſhould nevertheleſs commend it to other, to the intent the Fleſh by them forborn might be to ſuch as love it only the more plenty. The publick defamation and trifling with Lent is a marvellous matter to them that would ſay evil of this Realm; for there is nothing more commended unto us Chriſtian men in both the Churches of the Greeks and Latins, than Lent is, if all men be not liers. In the King our late Sovereign Lords days this matter was not thus ſpoken of. And I think our enemies would wiſh we had no Lent. Every Country hath his peculiar inclination to naughtineſs: England and Germany unto the Belly, the one in Liquor, the other in Meat; France a little beneath the Belly; Italy to vanities and pleaſures deviſed; and let an Engliſh Belly have a further advancement, and nothing can ſtay it. When I was Purveyor for the Seas, what an exclamation was there (as your Grace ſhewed me) of the Biſhops faſting-day, as they called Wedneſday, and Wincheſter, Wincheſter, grand mercy for your Wine, I beſhrew your heart for your water? Was not that Song, although it was in ſport, a ſignification how loth men be to have their licenſe reſtrained? or their accuſtomed fare abated? unleſs it were in extream neceſſity. I hear ſay that the Lent is thus ſpoken of by Joſeph and Tongue, with other new (whom I know not) as being one of Chriſts Miracles, which God ordained not man to imitate and follow, at which teaching all the world will laugh. For Chriſtian men have Chriſt for an example in all things, both to uſe the world as he did only for neceſſity, and to contemn the world as he did, and in caſe to refuſe it, and chuſe the vile death, as he did the death of the Croſs, which things he did like a Maſter moſt perfect, for he was very God, and we muſt endeavour our ſelves in the uſe of his gifts to follow that he did, not to faſt forty days without meat as Chriſt did, for we be but prentiſes, and carry about a ruinous carkaſs, that muſt have ſome daily reparation with food: but yet was there never any that ſaid, how therefore we ſhould do nothing, becauſe we cannot do all, and take Chriſts Faſt for a miracle only. And yet all that follow Chriſt truly, they work daily Miracles, in ſubduing and conforming by Gods grace their ſenſual appetites, and humble obeying to the will of God, which no man can of himſelf do. And Chriſt promiſed that his true ſervants ſhould work the works that he did, and greater works alſo. Wherefore it is a ſlender matter to ſay, Lent was one of Chriſts Miracles, for ſo it was to love his enemies, and ſpecially thoſe that ſcourged and bobbed him; which may not be (if that a legation hath place) taught Chriſtian men to follow, becauſe it was a Miracle, as they might ſay: it were more tolerable to forget Lent (as Pogge telleth) of a Prieſt in the Mountains, that knew not how the year went about, and when the Weather opened, and he went abroad, and perceived his neighbours were towards Palm Sunday, he deviſed an excuſe to his Pariſh, and bad them prepare therefore, for indeed the year had ſomewhat ſlipped him, but he would faſhion the matter ſo, as they ſhould be as ſoon at Eaſter as the reſt; and thus did he paſs over Lent with much leſs ſlander, than to teach it for a Doctrine, that Lent was one of Chriſts Miracles, and therefore not to be imitated of us. For although it was indeed a great Miracle, (as all Chriſts doings were) yet was it not a greater Miracle, nor more againſt mans nature, than to love them that laboured and were buſie to take away the natural life of his Manhood. For as the nature of man deſireth relief, ſo doth it abhor deſtruction or hurt. In will and deſire men follow Chriſt in all things; in execution they cannot; for we have brittle Veſſels, and God giveth his gifts to men, as he ſeeth expedient for his Church; ſo as men cannot heal the lame when they will, as Chriſt did when he would, but as God ſhall think profitable for the edification of the Flock aſſembled.

A Trick of Pogge.

* This proveth not; for though a man of nature abhorreth his deſtruction; as he deſireth relief; yet it followeth not that a man ſhould deſire ſo the deſtruction of another mans ſoul, as he deſireth relief of his body.

Gregory Nazianzen ſpeaketh of ſome that enterpriſed to imitate Chriſts Faſt above their power, whoſe immoderate zeal he doth not diſallow, not requiring of all men ſo to do, for that is an extremity, ne yet aſſoiling the matter, as our new Schoolmen do, that Chriſtian men ſhould let Chriſts Faſt alone as a Miracle; which manner of ſolution I heard a good Fellow make, when is was told him he might not revenge himſelf, And when he was ſtrucken on the one ear, he ſhould put forth the other; I am, quoth he) a man, I am not God, if Chriſt being God did ſo, he might (quoth he) if it had pleaſed him, have done otherwiſe. And ſo when it hath been alledged, that Chriſt faſted forty days, he might (quoth he) have eaten if he had liſt; theſe triflings in ſport might be drawn to grave ſpeech, if Chriſtian men ſhall refuſe to follow Chriſt in Miracles. For all his life was Miracles, and his love that is our Badge moſt miraculous of all, to die for his enemies. I beſeech your Grace to pardon me, for I am like one of the Common-houſe, that when I am in my tale, think I ſhould have liberty to make an end, and ſpecially writing to your Grace, with whom I account I may be bold, aſſuring you it proceedeth of a zeal towards you to whom I wiſh well, whoſe intent although it be ſuch as it ought to be, and as it pleaſed you to ſhew me it was, yet are ſuch things ſpread abroad whereof the evil willers of the Realm will take courage, and make account (although it be wrong) that all goeth on Wheels. If any man had either fondly or undiſcreetly ſpoken of Lent to engrieve it to be an importable burthen, I would wiſh his reformation; for I have not learned that all men are bound to keep the Lent in the form received, but this I reckon, that no Chriſtian man may contemn the form received, being ſuch a devout and profitable imitation of Chriſt to celebrate his Faſt, and in that time ſuch as have been in the reſt of the year, worldly to prepare themſelves to come, as they ſhould come, to the Feaſt of Eaſter, whereof St. Chryſoſtome ſpeaketh expreſly. And for avoiding contempt, a licence truly obtained of the ſuperiour ſerveth. And ſo I heard the Kings Majeſty our Sovereign Lord declare when your Grace was preſent. And therefore he himſelf was very ſcrupulous in granting of Licences; and to declare that himſelf contemned not the Faſt, he was at charge to have (as your Grace knoweth) the Lent diet daily prepared, as if it had been for himſelf, and the like hereof I hear ſay your Grace hath ordered for the Kings Majeſty that now is, which agreeth not with certain preaching in this matter, ne the Rimes ſet abroad. Lent is among Chriſtian men a godly Faſt to exerciſe men to forbear, and in England both godly and politick, ſuch as without confuſion we cannot forbear, as the experience ſhall ſhew, if it be ever attempted, which God forbid. And yet Lent is buried in Rime, and Stephen Stockfiſh

A ſtrange ſight in the Sun, at the Duke of Saxons taking.

The true Religion and opinion of theſe Germans will be found not to diſagree, when the Biſhop of Wincheſter ſhall not be able to prove the contrary, as yet he hath not done it hitherto.

His argument ſhould thus proceed, Gods Lavv hath rule of all. Men and Women ſay they are Gods Lavv. Ergo, ſuch Men and Women have rule of all, and thus in the form of the argument good, and the matter falſe.

KING Edw 6

Ste. Stockfiſh bequeathed to Ste. Gardiner.

Hovv vvell you remembred this leſſon of Master in Q. Mary time ler others judg.

Stockfiſh bequeathed, not to me, though my name be noted, wherewith for mine own part I cannot be angry, for that is mitigated by their fondneſs. But I would deſire of God to have the ſtrength of this Realm increaſed with report of concord, which doth quench many vain devices and imaginations.

And if all men be liers, as it is now to my underſtanding ſtrangely publiſhed, methink Bale and ſuch new men, as be new liers, ſhould be moſt abhorred and deteſted, and ſo much the more dangerous as they be new. That which in Italy and France is a matter of combate, is now found to be impropriate to all men. God grant the truth to be deſired of all men truly. But as one asked, when he ſaw an old Philoſopher diſpute with another, what they talked on; and it was anſwered how the old man was diſcuſſing what was vertue; it was replied, If the old man yet diſpute of vertue, when will he uſe it? So it may be ſaid in our Religion, If we be yet ſearching for it, when ſhall we begin to put it in execution? I would make an end of my Letters, and cannot, wherein I account my ſelf faulty. And though I may err, as every man may, yet I lie not, for I ſay as I think, forſomuch as I have ſaid, and further think your Grace hath no trouble troubleſome, but this matter of Religion unſeaſonably brought into the defamation of our late Sovereign Lords acts, doings, and Laws. I beſeech your Grace take my meaning and words in good part, and pardon my boldneſs, which groweth of the familiarity I have heretofore had with your Grace, which I cannot forget. And thus inforcing my ſelf to an end, I ſhall pray to Almighty God to preſerve your Grace in much felicity, with increaſe of honour and atchieving of your hearts deſire.

At Winchester the one and twentieth of March.

Your Graces Humble Beadman,
S. W.

The Letter of the Lord Protector, anſwering to Winchester.

YOUR Letters dated the one and twentieth day of May, as concerning two Books new ſet forth by one Bale, and certain Sermons preached here, were with convenient ſpeed delivered unto us. And like as in your Letters to Edward Vaughan of Portſmouth, ſo in thoſe to us we perceive that you have a vigilant and diligent eye, and very fearful of innovation: which as it cannot be blamed, proceeding of one which is deſirous of quiet, good order and continuance of the godly ſtate of this Realm; ſo we do marvel that ſo ſoon, ſo far off, and ſo plainly, you can hear tell and ſay of ſo many things done here, which indeed we being here and attendant upon the ſame cannot yet be advertiſed of. The world never was ſo quiet or ſo unite, but that privily or openly thoſe three which you write of, Printers, Players, and Preachers, would ſet forth ſomewhat of their own heads, which the Magiſtrates were unawares of. And they which already be baniſhed and have forſaken the Realm, as ſuffering the laſt puniſhment, be boldeſt to ſet forth their mind; and dare uſe their extreme licenſe or liberty of ſpeaking, as out of the hands or rule of correction, either becauſe they be gone, or becauſe they be hid. There have fooliſh and naughty Rimes and Books been made and ſet forth, of the which as it appeareth you have ſeen more than we, and yet to our knowledg too many be bought; but yet after our mind it is too ſore and too cruelly done to lay all thoſe to our charge, and to ask as it were account of us of them all. In the moſt exact cruelty and tyranny of the Biſhop of Rome, yet Paſquill (as we hear ſay) writeth his mind, and many times againſt the Biſhops tyranny, and ſometime toucheth other great Princes, which thing for the moſt part he doth ſafely, not that the Biſhop alloweth Paſquills Rimes and Verſes, ſpecially againſt himſelf, but becauſe he cannot puniſh the Author, whom either he knoweth not, or hath not. In the late Kings days of famous memory, who was both a learned, wiſe, and politick Prince, and a diligent executer of his Laws; and when your Lordſhip was moſt diligent in the ſame, yet as your Lordſhip it ſelf writeth, and it is too manifeſt to be unknown, there were that wrote ſuch lewd Rimes and Plays as you ſpeak of, and ſome againſt the Kings proceedings, who were yet unpuniſhed, becauſe they were unknown or ungotten. And when we do weigh the matter, we do very much marvel, why that about Jack of Lents lewd Ballad, and certain, as it was reported unto us, godly Sermons (which be evil in your Letters joyned together) you be ſo earneſt, when againſt Dr. Smiths Book, being a man learned in the Doctors and Scripture, which made ſo plain againſt the Kings Highneſs authority, and for the furtherance of the Biſhop of Romes uſurped power, your Lordſhip neither wrote nor ſaid any thing. And as it appeared you be ſo angry with his retractation (which frankly without fear, dread, compulſion, or impriſonment, only with learning and truth overcomed, he came unto) that you cannot abide his beginning, although having the very words of Scripture. Except peradventure you think that the ſaying of David, Omnis homo mendax, cannot be interpreted, Every man is a lier, which howſoever your Lordſhip taketh it at pleaſure, it appeareth unto us then of him taken but godly, to declare the infirmity of a man, and the truth of God and his word. And we are not able to reaſon ſo Clerkly with you, and yet we have heard of the ſubtil difference of lying and telling of a lie, or as it is in Latin called, mentiri and mendacium dicere: but if your Lordſhip be loth to be counted mendax, which belike he hath interpreted a lier, or a lying man, and think it a matter of combate, he was deceived in the interpretation, and it is a matter for Clerks to diſpute of; we would have wiſhed your Lordſhip to have written againſt his Book before, or now with it, if you think that to be defended which the Author himſelf refuſeth to aver: your Lordſhip writeth earneſtly for Lent which we go not about to put away, no more than when Dr. Smith wrote ſo earneſtly that every man ſhould be obedient to the Biſhops; The Magiſtrates by and by went not about to bring Kings and Princes and other under their ſubjection. Writers write their fantaſie, my Lord, and Preachers preach what either liketh them, or what God putteth in their heads. It is not by and by done that is ſpoken. The people buyeth thoſe fooliſh Ballads of Jack-a-Lent. So bought they in times paſt Pardons, and Carols, and Robin Hoods Tales. All be not wiſe men, and the fooliſher a thing is, to ſome (although not to the more part) it is the more pleaſant and meet; and peradventure of the Sermons there is, and indeed there is (if it be true that we have heard) otherwiſe ſpoken and reported to you, than it was of the Preachers there and then ſpoken or meant. Lent remaineth ſtill my Lord, and ſhall God willing till the Kings Highneſs, with our adviſe and the reſidue of his Graces Council, take another order, although ſome light and lewd men do bury it in writing; even as the Kings Majeſty remaineth Head of the Church, although through ſiniſter ways, and by ſubtil means ſome Traytors have gone about, and daily do, to abuſe the Kings Majeſties Supremacy, and bring in the Biſhop of Romes Tyranny, with other Superſtition and Idolatry. On both ſides great heed is to be taken, and as your Lordſhip writeth, we are ſet in a painful room to reform all lightneſs and lewdneſs, to the which we do endeavour our ſelf to the beſt of our power, although not ſo cruelly and fiercely as ſome peradventure would wiſh, yet not ſo looſely that there needeth ſuch exclamations or great fear to be. We do ſtudy to do all things attemperately, and with quiet and good order. And we would wiſh nothing more than your Lordſhip to be as ready to the reformation of the one as of the other, that neither Superſtition, Idolatry, or Papacy, ſhould be brought in, nor lightneſs, nor contempt of good order to be maintained. They both take beginning at ſmall things, and increaſe by little and little at unawares. And quiet may as well be broken with jealouſie as negligence, with too much fear or too much patience. No ways worſe than when one is over light eared the one way, and deaf on the other ſide. Rumours by ſpace and times increaſe naturally, and by that time they come at you, as it appeareth, they be doubled and trebled. We do perceive your diligent eye towards us, and we will wiſh (and truſt you have) your heart faithful to us: our moſt hearty and continual prayer to God is, to leave this Realm to the Kings Highneſs, at his Graces age by you written, rather more flouriſhing in men, poſſeſſions, wealth, learning, wiſdom, and Gods Religion and Doctrine, if it were poſſi-

Quiet may be as vvell broken by jealouſie as by negligence.

ble,

ble and Gods will, than we found it. And that is our whole intent and esperance, to the which we refuse no mans help, as knoweth God, in whom we bid you heartily Farewell.

Another Letter of Winchester to the Lord Protector.

AFter my most humble commendations to your good Grace: upon the return of my servant Massie with your Graces Letters, answering to such my Letters, wherein I signified the robbing of my Secretary, I read the same gladly, as by the contents of the matter I had cause so to do, which was such a comfortative as I digested easily the rest of the great Packet, having been accustomed thereunto in the Kings my late Sovereign Lords days, which fashion of writing his Highness (God pardon his soul) called whetting, which was not all the most pleasant unto me at all times, yet when I saw in my doings was no hurt, and sometime by the occasion thereof the matter amended, I was not so coy as always to reverse my argument, nor so that his affairs went well, did I ever trouble my self, whether he made me a wanton or not. And when such as were privy to his Letters directed unto me, were afraid I had been in high displeasure (for the terms of the Letters sounded so) yet I my self feared it nothing at all, I esteemed him, as he was, a wise Prince; and whatsoever he wrote or said for the present, he would after consider the matter as wisely as any man, and neither hurt nor inwardly disfavour him that had been bold with him. Whereof I serve for a proof, for no man could do me hurt during his life. And when he gave me the Bishoprick of Winchester, he said he had often squared with me, but he loved me never the worse; and for a token thereof gave me the Bishoprick. And once when he had been vehement with me, in the presence of the Earl of Wiltshire, and saw me dismaid with it, he took me apart into his Bed-chamber, and comforted me and said, that his displeasure was not so much to me as I did take it, but he misliked the matter, and he durst more boldly direct his speech to me, than to the Earl of Wiltshire, and from that day forward he could not put me out of courage, but if any displeasant words passed from him, as they did sometime, I folded them up in the matter; which hindred me a little: for I was reported unto him that I stooped not and was stubborn, and he had commended unto me certain mens gentle nature (as he called it) that wept at every of his words, and me thought that my nature was as gentle as theirs, for I was sorry when he was moved; but else I know when the displeasure was not justly grounded in me, I had no cause to take thought, nor was I at any time in all my life miscontent or grudging at any thing done by him, I thank God for it.

Rex te ergo semper in oculis.

And therefore being thus brought up, and having first read your Graces most gentle Letters, signifying the device of a Proclamation to stay these rumors, and reading the same Proclamation, which my servant brought with him; I read with the more quiet your Graces great Letters, and would have layed them up without further answer, were it not that percase my so doing might be mistaken. For glum silence may have another construction than frank speech, where a man may speak, as I reckon I may with your Grace, upon confidence whereof I am bold to write thus much for my Declaration touching your Graces Letters of the 27 of May, that how earnest soever my Letters be taken in fearing any innovation, I neither inwardly fear it, neither shew any demonstration in mine outward deeds to the world here, or in communication, that I do fear it to be done by authority, but in my self resist the rumors and vain enterprises, with confidence in the Truth and your Graces wisdom; for if I feared it indeed, with perswasion it should come to pass, I should have small lust to write in it; but I fear more indeed the trouble that might arise by light boldness of other, and the cumber of such matters whiles other outward affairs occupy your Graces mind, than the effect by your direction that hath been talked of abroad: and yet in the writing I do speak as the matter leads, continuing mine old manner to be earnest, which as some men have dispraised, so some have commended it; and therefore in a good honest matter I follow rather mine own inclination, than to take the pains to speak as butter would not melt in my mouth: wherewith I perceive your Grace is not miscontent, for the which I most humbly thank you. And first as concerning Portsmouth, I wrote to the Captain and Mayor in the thing as I had information, and by men of credence. And yet I suspended my credit till I had heard from thence, as by my Letters appeareth: and as I was loth to have it so, so was I loth to believe it. And to shew that I feared no innovation by authority, ne regarded any such danger, I went thither my self, and in conclusion was in such familiarity with the Captain, that after he had shewed me all the gentle entertainment that he could, he desired me to make an exhortation to his men as they stood handsomely with their weapons, wherewith they had shewed warlike feats: which I did, and departed in amity with the Captain and Soldiers, and all the Town; the Captain telling me plainly, he was nothing offended with any thing I had said in my Sermon, ne was there cause why he should. But the very act indeed in defacing the Images had no such ground as Master Captain pretended: For I asked specially for such as had abused those Images, and no such could be shewed, for that I enquired for openly. And the Image of Saint John the Evangelist standing in the Chancel by the high Altar was pulled down, and a Table of Alabaster broken: and in it an Image of Christ crucified so contemptuously handled, as was in my heart terrible, to have the one eye bored out, and the side pierced; wherewith men were wonderously offended, for it is a very persecution beyond the Sea, used in that form where the person cannot be apprehended. And I take such an act to be very slanderous, and esteeming the opinion of breaking Images, as unlawful to be had, very dangerous, void of all learning and truth, wrote after my fashion to the Captain, which Letters I perceive to have come to your Graces hands. I was not very curious in the writing of them, for with me Truth goeth out plainly and roundly, and speaking of the Kings Seal, I uttered the common language I was brought up in, after the old sort. When as I conject of a good will, the people taking Saint George for a Patron of the Realm under God, and having some confidence of succour by Gods strength * derived by him, to encrease the estimation of their Prince and Sovereign Lord, I called their King on Horseback in the seat of arms, Saint George on Horseback; my knowledg was not corrupt, I know it representeth the King, and yet my speech came forth after the common language, wherein I trust is none offence. For besides learning, I by experience have known the preheminence of a King both in war and peace, and yet if I had wist my Letter should have comen to your Graces hands to be answered, then I would have been more precise in my speech, than to give occasion of so long an argument therein. As for Saint George himself, I have such opinion of him as becometh me. And have read also of Bellerophon in Homer, as they call him, the Father of Tales, but I will leave that matter. And as for Books, let Latin and Greek continue as long as it shall please God, I am almost past the use of them, what service those Letters have done, experience hath shewed, and Religion hath continued in them fifteen hundred years; but as for the English Tongue, it self hath not continued in one form of understanding two hundred years, and without Gods work and special miracles it shall hardly continue Religion long, when it cannot last it self; and whatsoever your Graces mind is now in the matter, I know well, that having the Government of the Realm, your Grace will use the gift of policy, which is the gift of God.

{KING Edw. 6}

* Ambo ad Rom. 1. Ad Deum promerendum quem nihil actio; latet, suffragatore non est opus, sed mente devota.

And even as now at this time Bishops be restrained by a special policy to preach only in their Cathedral Churches, (the like whereof hath not been known in my time) so upon another occasion your Grace may percase think expedient to restrain (further than the Parliament hath already done) the common reading of the Scripture, as is now restrained the Bishops liberty of preaching. As for the Brazen Serpent, it did not in all mens language represent Christ, and if I had written to another than your Grace, I might have had the like matter of argument that was taken against me of Saint George on Horseback. For Gregory Nazianzen, chief Divine in the Greek Church, calleth the Serpents death the figure of the death of Christ, but not the Serpent to be the figure of Christ; and yet when I had done all my argument I would retorte

{KING Edw.6} as is resolved with me in the speech of S. George on horseback, that the common speech is otherwise, and so it is in saying the Serpent to be a true figure of Christ, and yet Gregory Nazianzen called the Serpent it self Ἀντίτυπον of Christ in these words ὁδὲ &c. in his Sermon de Paschate: and yet in Almechorus Domini, we read Aries, Leo, Vermis, spoken of Christ, and some expound the Scripture sicut Moses, &c. after that sort. And as your Grace said when I was last at your house with the French Ambassor, ye wished him and me together disputing, to see when we would make an end, even so it is in these matters, when they come in an argument, for a by thing (as S. George on Horseback) when it escaped me, or speaking of the Brazen Serpent following a speech not throughly discussed, shall be occasion of a digression all out of purpose. And therefore was it a great gift of God, that our late Sovereign Lord (God rest his soul) set these matters in quiet: Who had heard all these reasons touching Images which be now rehearsed in your Graces Letters, and having once My Lord of Canterbury and me present with him alone in his Palace, that they call otherwise New-Hall, handled that matter at length, and discussed with My Lord of Canterbury the understanding of Gods Commandment to the Jews, so as all the Clerks in Christendom could not amend it. And where as one had denyed the Image of the Trinity to be had, by reasons as be touched in your Graces Letters, I heard his Highness answer to them at another time. And when he had himself specially commanded divers Images to be abolished, yet (as your Grace knoweth) he both ordered, and himself put in execution the kneeling and creeping before the Image of the Cross, and established agreement in that truth through all this Realm, whereby all arguments to the contrary be assoiled at once. I would wish Images used as the Book of his Highness set forth doth prescribe, and no otherwise. I know your Grace only tempteth me with such reasons as other make unto you, and I am not fully at liberty, although I am bold enough (and some will think too bold) to answer some things as I would to another man mine equal, being so much inferiour to your Grace as I am: But me thinketh S. Pauls solution during the Kings Majesties minority should serve instead of all, Nos talem consuetudinem non habemus, We have no such custom in the Church.

If every thing were an Oracle by and by that King Henry did, then Winchester were a good Logician.

When our Sovereign Lord cometh to his perfect age (which God grant) I doubt not but God will reveal that which shall be necessary for the governing of his people in Religion. And if any thing shall be done in the mean time (as I think there shall not) by your Graces direction, he may when he cometh to age say in the rest, as I hear say, he said now of late concerning procession, that in his Fathers time men were wont to follow procession; upon which the Kings Majesties saying, the procession (as I heard) was well furnished afterwards by your Graces commandment; which speech hath put me in remembrace, that if the Bishops and other of the Clergy should agree to any alteration in Religion to the condemnation of any thing set forth by his Father, whereby his Father might be noted to have wanted knowledge or favour to the truth, what he would say I cannot tell, but he might use a marvelous speech, and for the excellency of his spirit, it were like he would, and having so just a cause against Bishops as he might have, it were to be feared he would. And when he had spoken, then he might by his Laws do more than any of our sort would gladly suffer at these days: For as the allegation of his authority represented by your Grace shall be then answered (as your Grace now writeth unto me) that your Grace only defineth truth according to Gods Scripture, and it may be then said, we Bishops, when we have our Soreign Lord and head in minority, we fashion the matter as we list, and then some young man that would have a piece of the Bishops Lands shall say; the beastly Bishops have always done so, and when they can no longer maintain one of their pleasures of rule and superiority, then they take another way and let that go, and for the time they be here spend up that they have, which eat you and drink you what he list and we together, with Edamus & bibamus, cras moriemur. And if we shall alledge for our defence the strength of Gods truth, and the plainness of Scripture, with the word of the Lord, and many gay terms, and say we were convinced by Scriptures, such an excellent judgement, as the Kings Majesty is like to have, will never credit us in it, nor be abused by such a vain answer. And this is a worldly politick consideration, and at home: For the noise abroad in the world will be more slanderous than this is dangerous. And touching the Bishop of Rome, the doings in this Realm hitherto hath never done him so much displeasure, as the alteration in Religion, during the Kings Majesties minority, should serve for his purpose; for he wanteth not wits to beat into other Princes ears, that where his authority is abolished, there at every change of Governours shall be change in Religion, and that which hath been amongst us by a whole consent established, shall by the pretence of another understanding in Scripture straight be brought in question; for they will give it no other name but a pretence, how stiffly soever we will affirm otherwise, and call it Gods word. And here it should be much noted that My Lord of Canterbury, being the high Bishop of the Realm, highly in favour with his late Sovereign Lord, and My Lord of Duresme a man of renowned fame in learning and gravity, both put by him in trust for their Counsel in the order of the Realm, should so soon forget their old knowledge in Scripture set forth by the Kings Majesties Book, and advise to inveigh such matter of alteration. All which things be (I know well) by your Grace and them considered. And therefore it is to me incredible that ever any such thing should be indeed with effect, whatsoever the lightness of talk shall spread abroad which your Grace hath by Proclamation well stayed. But if you had not, and the world talked so fast as ever they did, I assure your Grace I would never fear it, as men fear things they like not, unless I saw it in execution; for of this sort I am that in all things I think should not be done in reason, I fear them not, wherewith to trouble me otherwise than to take heed if I can, and to the head Governours (as now to your Grace) shew my mind, and such experience hath every man of me that hath communed with me in any such matters. And therefore albeit your Grace writeth wisely, That over much fear doth hurt, and accelerateth sometime that which was not intended, yet it needs not to me, for I have learned that lesson already, and would a great many more had, which indeed should be great stay. And thus I talk with your Grace homely, with multiplication of speech impertinent and not necessary, as though I meant to send you as great a packet as I received from you.

Canterbury and Duresme carped at of Winch.

Wherefore then serve the Scriptures for Realms to be ruled by, if God never reveal any thing in a Realm, but by the Kings own person in his mans age?

One thing necessary to answer your Grace in, is touching your marvel; how I know sooner things from thence than your Grace doth there; which ariseth not upon any desire of knowledge on my behalf, for evil things be over soon known, nor upon any slackness of your Graces behalf there, who is and is noted very vigilant, as your Graces charge requireth. But thus it is, {Anno 1550.} even as it was when I was in some little authority, they that were the evil doers in such matters would hide them from me. So now they have handled it otherwise; for as for Jack of Lents English Testament, it was openly sold in Winchester Market, before I wrote unto your Grace of it. And as for Bales Book, called Elucidation of Ann Askews Martyrdom, they were in these parts common, some with leaves unglewed, where Master Paget was spoken of, and some with leaves glewed. And I call them common, because I saw at the least four of them. As for Bales Book, touching the death of Luther, wherein was the Duke of Saxonies prayer (whereof I wrote) it was brought down into this countrey by an honest Gentleman, to whom it was (as I remember he told me) given at London for news, and he had it a great while ere I wrote to your Grace. I had not then received the inhibition for preaching, whereof men spake otherwise than they knew. And in the mean time Doctor Smith recanted, which a Priest of this Town (who to mine own mouth boasted himself to be your Graces Chaplain, but I believed it not) brought down with speed, and made by means to have it brought to my knowledge, which I knew besides, for they had by and by filled all the countrey hereabouts, of tales of me. And when I saw Doctor Smiths recantation begin with, Omnis homo mendax,

Dr. Smith reproved of Winchester.

Ilax, ſo Engliſhed, and ſuch a new humility, as he would make all the Doctors of the Church Liars with himſelf, knowing what opinions were abroad, it inforced me to write unto your Grace for the caſe of my conſcience; giving this judgment of Smith, that I neither liked his tractation of unwritten verities, nor yet his retractation, and was glad of my former judgment, that I never had familiarity with him. I ſaw him not, that I wote, theſe three years, nor talked with him theſe ſeven years, as curious as I am noted in the Commonwealth. And whereas in his unwritten verities he was ſo mad to ſay, Biſhops in this Realm may make Laws; I have witneſs, that I ſaid at that word, we ſhould be then Daws, and was by and by ſorry that ever he had written of the Sacrament of the Altar, which was not, as it was noiſed, untouched with that word, All men are liars, which is a marvellous word, as it ſoundeth in our tongue, when we ſay a man were better to have a thief in his houſe than a liar. And the depraving of mans nature in that ſort is not the ſetting out of the authority of the Scripture. For albeit the authority of the Scripture dependeth not upon man, yet the miniſtration of the letter which is writing and ſpeaking, is exerciſed, and hath been from the beginning delivered through mans hand, and taught by mans mouth; which men the Scripture calleth holy men, and that is contrary to liars. And therefore St. Auguſtin in his Book de Mendacio, ſaying, Omnis homo mendax, ſignifieth, Omnis homo peccans. If Smith had only written of Biſhops Laws, and then ſaid he had, ſaving your honour lied loudly, or to mitigate the matter, ſaid he had erred by ignorance, that had been done truly and humbly; for he that ſeeketh for much company in lying as he did, hath ſmall humility; for he would hide himſelf by the number. And thus much as touching Smith, of whom, or his Book, till he was in trouble, I never heard talking. But to the matter I wrote of, I have told your Grace how I came to knowledge of them, very ſcarcely in time, but in the thing over quickly, and never had any ſuch thought in my life, as I denyed to your Grace, to be worthily charged with them, by them I mean that may hereafter charge; for I know no ſuch yet in this world, and I never was in mine opinion ſo mad, as to write to your Grace in that ſort. When all things be well, I have many cauſes to rejoyce; but where things were otherwiſe (as I truſt they ſhall not) I have nothing to do to ask any account, I truſt I ſhall never forget my ſelf ſo much. I thank God, I am even as well learned to live in the place of obedience, as I was in the place of direction in our late Sovereing Lords life. And for my quietneſs in this eſtate I account my ſelf to have a great treaſure of your Graces rule and authority, and therefore will worſhip and honour it otherwiſe than to uſe ſuch manner of preſumption to ask any account. And I know your Grace cannot ſtay theſe matters ſo ſuddenly, and I eſteem it a great matter, that things be ſtauld hitherto thus; but if things had encreaſed as the rumors purported, your Grace might have been incumbred more in the execution of your good determination. Now, thanks be to God, your Grace goeth well about to ſtay it. As for my ſelf, I know mine inward determination to do, as I may, my duty to God and the world, and have no cauſe to complain of the univerſal diſpoſition of them in my Dioceſs. I know but one way of quiet, to keep and follow ſuch Laws and Orders in Religion as our late Sovereign Lord left with us; which, by his life, as the Biſhops and Clergy ſaid was the very truth, ſo I never read yet or heard any thing why to ſwarve from it, nor think it expedient to call any one thing in doubt, during the Kings Majeſties minority, whereby to impair the ſtrength of the accord eſtabliſhed. Which I write not miſtruſting your Grace in the contrary, but declaring my ſelf, and wiſhing the ſame mind to other about you, as I truſt they have, for which I ſhall pray to God, who proſpered our late Sovereign Lord in that rebellion, as we have ſeen experience, and by your Graces foreſight and politick government ſhall ſend the like proſperity to our Sovereign Lord that now is; wherein I ſhall do my part, as a Subject moſt bounden many ways thereunto. I ſend unto your Grace herewith my diſcuſſion of My Lord of St. Davids Purgation, wherein I walk ſomewhat more at liberty than writing to your Grace, and yet I take my ſelf liberty enough, with a reverend mind nevertheleſs to keep me within my bounds; which if I at any time exceed, I truſt your Grace will bear with me after your accuſtomed goodneſs, for whoſe proſperity I ſhall continually pray, with encreaſe of honour. {KING Edw 6}

At Wincheſter the ſixth of June.

S. W. To the Lord Protector.

After moſt humble commendations to your Grace, I have received this day Letters from My Lord of Canterbury, touching certain Homilies, which the Biſhops in the Convocation holden Anno Dom. M. v. xlij agreed to make for ſtay of ſuch errours as were then by ignorant preachers ſparkeled among the people, for other agreement there had not then paſſed among us. Since that time God gave our late Sovereign Lord the gift of pacification in thoſe matters, which eſtabliſhed by his Highneſs authority in the convocation extinguiſhed our devices, and remaineth of force with your Grace, wherein to avoid many encumbrous arguments which wit can deviſe againſt the truth, I ſend to your Grace the Copy of mine anſwer to My Lord of Canterbury, to whom I write and offer my ſelf more largely, than I ever did in any matter of the Realm, to any man beſides my Sovereign Lord, or the chief Governour as your Grace, for I am not factious, and uſe only to ſay as I am bound to ſay as occaſion ſerveth, for that is my duty, having no other thing purpoſed but truth and honeſty, whatſoever any man ſhall otherwiſe ſay of me, I am buſier with your Grace than needeth but; ſuch commendations as it pleaſed your Grace to ſend me by Maſter Coke (for the which I moſt humbly thank your Grace) hath engendred this much more boldneſs, that ever me thinketh I ſhould deſire your Grace, not to ſuffer the Kings Majeſty our late Sovereign Lords determination to ſlip the Anker-hold of authority, and come to a diſputation, for eviction whereof, afterward the burden muſt reſt on your Grace, unto whom I deſire all proſperous ſucceſs, and the increaſe and continuance of ſuch honour as God hath granted to your vertue, not to fall in encumber of any by-matter that need not to be ſtirred. If your Grace think not your ſelf encumbred with my babling, and inculking that needeth not unto you, I would anſwer your Graces Letters of 6. of April, ſo as your Grace will by other Letters withdraw your name, that I may be ſeen to diſpute with one not ſo far above me in authority, as your Grace is, which I have thought requiſite to advertiſe, leſt by my ſilence your Grace ſhould deem I thought my ſelf overcome in thoſe matters, where indeed I am of a contrary mind, and can ſhew whereupon to ground me, why I ſhould ſo think: And thus deſiring your Grace to take in good part my doings, I ſhall continually pray for the preſervation of your Grace long in felicity. At Weſtminſter the 10th of June 1547.

S. W.

To the Lord Protector.

After my moſt humble commendations to your Grace, ſince my Letters unto your Grace wherewith I ſent unto you ſuch Letters as I had writtan to My Lord of Canterbury for anſwer to his Letters touching Homilies, I have eſtſoons received other Letters from My ſaid Lord of Canterbury, requiring the ſaid Homilies by vertue of a Convocation holden 5 years paſt, wherein we communed of that which took none effect then, and much leſs needeth to be put in execution now, nor in my judgement cannot without a new authority from the Kings Majeſty that now is, commanding ſuch a matter to be enterpriſed, I wrote at length to My Lord of Canterbury, and ſent the Copy of thoſe Letters to your Grace, not to the intent your Grace ſhould loſe ſo much time to read them, for they be tedious in length, but only for my diſcharge, who never meddled, yet by private Letters with any man in the Realm to perſwade or diſſwade matters of Religion, {KING Edw.6} ligion, but with the Prince himſelf, or him that had the managing of the great matters under him. And following this determination am ſo bold to ſend your Grace the Copy of ſuch Letters as I write to My Lord of Canterbury, whoſe Letters to me, I could not of congruence forbear to anſwer, nor anſwering forbear to ſpeak freely a I think. And ſorry I am to hear the matter of Homilies ſpoken of in this time, your Grace hath done prudently to ſtop the vain rumours by Proclamation, and it hath wrought good effect, and me thinketh is not beſt to enterpriſe any thing to tempt the people with occaſion of tales, whereby to break the Proclamation and offend: And to this effect I wrote to My Lord of Canterbury: For like as in a natural body, reſt without trouble doth confirm and ſtrengthen it, ſo is it in a Commonwealth, trouble traveleth and bringeth the things to looſneſs: And My Lord of Canterbury is not ſurer of his life when the old order is broken, and a new brought in by Homilies, that he ſhall continue to ſee his new device executed, for it is not done in a day, I would there were nothing elſe to do now, I have known buſineſs to occupy ſuch as were put in truſt, when Religion hath been untouched, a new order engendereth a new cauſe of puniſhment againſt them that offend: And puniſhments be not pleaſant to them that have the execution, and yet they muſt be, for nothing may be contemned. And thus I travel in the matter with My Lord of Canterbury, becauſe he would I ſhould weigh things, and ſo do I as indifferently as ever did man for the preſervation of the Ship wherein I ſail my ſelf, and ſo many other whoſe proſperity I am bound to wiſh, I can admit no invocations.

S. W.

S. W. To the Lord Protector.

AFter my moſt humble commendations to your good Grace with thanks, that it hath pleaſed you to be content to hear from me, wherein now I have from your Grace liberty to write at large, I cannot find the like gentleneſs in my body to ſpend ſo much time as I would: And therefore ſhall now deſire your Grace to take in good part, though I gather my matter into brief ſentences.

Winchester carpeth the Paraphraſe of Eraſmus.

The Injunctions in this viſitation contain a commandment to be taught and learned, two Books, one of the Homilies that muſt be taught other by Prieſt. Another of Eraſmus Paraphraſis, that the Prieſt muſt learn himſelf, theſe Books ſtrive one with another directly, &c. Thus I have ſignified to your Grace ſome ſpecial faults that be Eraſmus own faults; and in my judgment great faults, but I have not written all: And your Grace ſhall further underſtand that he who it is, I know not who hath taken the labours to tranſlate Eraſmus into Engliſh, hath for his part offended ſometime, as appeareth plainly by ignorance, and ſometime evidently of purpoſe, to put in, leave out, and change as he thought beſt, never to the better but to the worſe, with the ſpecialties whereof, I will not now encumber your Grace, but aſſure you it is ſo. And here I will grant to your Grace, that for every lie I make unto you, ſet one c. pound fine upon mine head, and let me live here like a Beggar, whilſt my revenews pay it: My words you have in writing, and be againſt me matter of record; and ſo I yield to have me charged, as the Biſhop of London was with offering the form of his Biſhoprick, which matter came to my remembrance in the writing hereof; and now I have written unto your Grace upon what foundation my Conſcience is grounded, I ſhall truly declare unto you the manner of my proceeding from the beginning I never heard of the execution of the viſitation, till your Grace was departed from London Northward; and as the Books flowed abroad by liberty of the Printers, they came to my hands, I never ſlept while I had perſued them, as ſoon as I had found certain faults I wrote to the Council, truſting upon ſuch earneſt advertiſement as I made, they would incontinently have ſent for me, and upon knowledge of ſo evident matter as me thought I had to ſhew, have ſtayed till your Graces return, I ſaw a determination to do all things ſuddenly at one time, whereunto although your Grace agreed, yet of your wiſdom I conjected ye had rather have had it tarry whiles your return, if you had not been preſſed: And that word preſſed I noted in your Graces Letters to me, wherein you wrote you were preſſed on both ſides: me thought if by bringing my ſelf to moſt extream danger in your abſence, I could have ſtayed this matter, beſides my duty to God, and to my Sovereign Lord I had done alſo your Graces pleaſure, of whom I have this firm opinion, that willingly and wittingly your Grace will neither break the Act of Parliament, nor command Books to be bought with authority, that contain ſuch doctrine as theſe Books do: Thus I adventured in your Graces abſence, wherein although I had remembrance of your Grace, yet I made not your Grace my foundation, but God chiefly, as God knoweth with the preſervation of our late Sovereign Lords honour that dead is, and the ſecurity of our late Sovereign Lord that now is.

Which return Winchester his never looked for if all crafty practiſes were known.

Let no man be offended with the vehemency of my writing, for I wrote with a whole heart, and if I could have written it with the blood of my heart I would have done it, to have done good, in ſtaying the thing till it had been more maturely digeſted, and till your Graces ſafe return, I touched the Act of Parliament lively, but as truly as ever was any thing ſpoken of. And I never wept more bitterly then I did for a conceit that troubled my head which never paſſed my lipps, nor ſhall never come out of my Pen, I will tell it your Grace, and you require it. Now whether the King may command againſt an Act of Parliament, and what danger they may fall in, that break a Law? with the Kings conſent I dare ſay no man alive at this day hath had more experience, what the Judges and Lawyers have ſaid then I: Firſt I had experience in mine old Maſter the Lord Cardinal, who obtained his Legacy by our late Sovereign Lords requeſt at Rome: And in his ſight and knowledge occupyed the ſame with his two Croſſes, and Maces born before him many years; yet becauſe it was againſt the laws of the Realm, the Judges concluded the offence of the Præmunire: Which concluſion I bear away, and take it for a Law of the Realm; becauſe the Lawyers ſo ſaid, but my reaſon digeſted it not. The Lawyers for confirmation of their doings, brought in a caſe of the Lord Tiptoſt as I remember, a jolly Civilian, he was Chancellor to the King, who becauſe in execution of the Kings Commiſſion he had offended the Laws of the Realm he ſuffered on Tower-hill, they brought in examples of many Judges that had fines ſet on their heads in like caſe for doing againſt the Law of the Realm by the Kings commandment. And then was brought in the Judges Oath, not to ſtay any Proceſs or judgment for any commandment from the Kings Majeſty. And one Article againſt My Lord Cardinal, was that he had granted Injunctions to ſtay the Common Laws, and upon that occaſion, Magna Charta was ſpoken of, and it was made a great matter the ſtay of the Common Law, and this I learned in that caſe, ſithence that time being of the Council, when many Proclamations were deviſed againſt the Carriers out of Corn, at ſuch time as the tranſgreſſors ſhould be puniſhed, the Judges would anſwer it might not be by the Laws, whereupon enſued the Act of Proclamations, in the paſſing of which Act many liberal words were ſpoken, and a plain promiſe, that by authority of the Act for Proclamations, nothing ſhould be made contrary to an Act of Parliament, or Common Law, when the Biſhop of Exeter, and his Chancellor were by one body brought in a Præmunire, which matter my Lord Privy Seal cannot forget, I reaſoned with the Lord Audly then Chancellor, ſo far as he bade me hold my peace for fear of entring into a Præmunire my ſelf, whereupon I ſtayed, but concluded, it ſeemed to me ſtrange that a man authoriſed by the King (as ſince the Kings Majeſty hath taken upon him the ſupremacy every Biſhop is ſuch a one) could fall in a Præmunire. After I had reaſoned the matter once in the Parliament Houſe, where was free ſpeech without danger, and there the Lord Audly then Chancellor, to ſatisfie me familiarly, becauſe I was in ſome ſecret eſtimation as he then knew, thou art a good fellow Biſhop, quoth he, which was the manner of his familiar ſpeech, look the Act of Supremacy, and there the Kings doings be reſtrained to ſpiritual juriſdiction; and in another Act it is provided, that no ſpiritual Law ſhall have place contrary to Crocodili lacrimæ.

And why did you and your break the Act of Parliament of King Edward, for the Communion by a Proclamation, or ſetting up the Maſs in Q. Maries days. Like Maſter like man.

If Winchester never ſlept till he had read the Paraphraſe, either he was a quick reader, or elſe he read faſter than he well underſtood.

a Common Law or Act of Parliament. And this were not (quoth he) you Biſhops would enter in with the King, and by means of his Supremacy order the Laity as ye liſted; but we will provide quoth he, that the Præmunire ſhall ever hang over your heads, and ſo we Lay men ſhall be ſure to enjoy our inheritance by the Common Laws, and Acts of Parliament. It is not yet full two years ago, ſince in a caſe of Jewels I was fain with the Emperors Embaſſador, and after in the Emperors Court, to defend and maintain by commandement, That the Kings of this Realm were not above the order of their Laws. And therefore the Jeweller, although he had the Kings Bill ſigned, yet it would not be allowed in the Kings Court, becauſe it was not obtained according to the Laws, in which matter I was very much troubled, even this time twelve month, when I was in Commiſſion with My Lord great Maſter, and the Earl of Southampton for altering the Court of Augmentations. There was My Lord Mountague, and other of the Kings Learned Council, of whom by occaſion of that matter I learned what the King might do contrary to an Act of Parliament, and what danger it was to them that medled againſt the Act; it is freſh in memory, and they can tell whether I ſaid true or no; and therefore being learned in ſo notable caſes, I wrote in your Graces abſence to the Council therein, as I had learned by hearing the Commons ſpeak, whoſe judgments rule thoſe matters, howſoever my reaſon can digeſt them, and ſo wrote to the Council; which my writings I faſhioned ſo as I truſted My Lord would have ſtayed till your Graces return. And thus I have declared to your Grace the purpoſe of my writing to the Council ſo vehement, which nevertheleſs I continued with all humility to abide the order of authority, and learn all other obedience; for thereunto I have ever had as great regard as any man in this Realm. And as my word is Vana ſalus hominis, ſo I aſſure your Grace I practiſe it throughly in my deeds.

When My Lords ſent laſt for me, I came to them with as much ſpeed as I might, with my ſleeves and boſome truſt full of Books to furniſh my former Allegations; I was heard very well and gently, and me thought I ſhewed matter that ſhould have moved, for I ſhewed the two Books to be contrary, as I have written before, wherewith they ſaid they were not moved, adding how their Conſcience agreed not with mine, uſing many good words to bring me to ſuch conformity, as they would have had me at; whereupon knowing that I know, I could not relent, but after I had been a little beſide from them, and was returned, they entred a preciſe order with me, either to receive preciſely the Injunctions, or to refuſe; in which caſe they had further to ſay to me, adding that your Grace was privy to that was done there that day: My anſwer was, that I would receive the Injunctions as far as Gods Law and the Kings would bind me; and becauſe I ſaw they grew to ſuch preciſeneſs, and remembring how after a good ſort they had cauſed me to be accompanied before with Maſter Wingfield, making innovations, what would be the end if I would not yield? I would not therefore leave unſpoken, that I thought might avoid that followed: I told them there were 3 weeks of delay to the coming of the Viſitors to me: In the mean time, I offered to go to Oxford to abide the diſcuſſion there, which offer was not allowed. I deſired them to go to my houſe at London, and to have Learned men ſpeak with me there, which was not accepted. I entred then the allegation of the Goſpel of the Servant that ſaid he would not do a thing, and yet did it, and ſo I ſaid it might be that although I then ſaid nay, as my Conſcience ſerved me, yet I might perceaſe change, and was a man that might be tempted. But as my Conſcience was then, me thought Gods Law and the Kings letted me, and upon knowledge of their pleaſures, that I muſt to the Fleet, I told My Lords I thought it hard, unleſs there were a greater matter than to ſend me to Priſon; for declaring before hand what I minded to do before any thing had been by me actually done to reſiſt the viſitation, who had all the mean time to think on the matter, and repent me. Whereunto the anſwer was ſuch as diſpleaſed me not inwardly ſo much, but I have well digeſted it; and (ſo all may be well) care not what becometh of my body; I departed as quietly from them as ever man did, and have endured with as little grudge here, and have learned this leſſon in the world, never to look backward, as S. Paul ſaith, nor remember that is paſt, I will never grudge or complain of nothing for my ſelf. {KING Edw. 6}

As for the matter to have ſuch Books recommended to the Realm in the Kings name by your Graces direction, me ſeemeth very weighty, and your Grace not to have been well handled in it. All the world knoweth the Kings Highneſs himſelf knew not theſe Books, and therefore nothing can be aſcribed unto him; your Grace hath been to your increaſe of honour ſo occupied, as all men know, your Grace had no leiſure your ſelf to peruſe theſe Books, and yet be the Books as I have written. I leave the reſt to your Grace. If I that tell the Council my mind of them that have done ſo far amiſs, becauſe when I know ſo much, I will not yet allow them, I ſhall from henceforth the more regard the leſſon of an old Embaſſador, that bade me, let evil tydings go home to my Maſter a Foot, and ſend only good tydings by Poſt. A ſhift with the word, which agreeth not with my nature, as Maſter Wallop ſaith. Upon Friday laſt paſt, My Lord of Canterbury ſent for me to the Dean of Pauls houſe, whether I went with ſome gazing of the World. There I found My Lord of Canterbury accompanied with the Biſhop of Roceſter, Maſter Doctor Cox, and Maſter Aire, and I was brought thither by the Biſhop of Lincoln; what report My Lord of Canterbury hath made thereof I cannot tell, my Lord of Canterbury was in hand with his Homily of Salvation, but nothing heard, or ſaw I to ſave my Conſcience in agreeing to him, but heard that I ſhould juſtly confirm me in mine one Conſcience; I made offer to yield to them in that Homily, if they could ſhew me any old Writer that wrote how faith excluded charity in the office of juſtification, it is againſt Scriptures plain words, and to ſwarve from Scripture without any ony Doctor to lean to it, were ſore: Where Scriptures and Doctors want, My Lord of Canterbury would fall to arguing, and overcome me that am called the Sophiſter, by ſophiſtry. When I heard My Lords argument I denyed it, and would enter none other declaration, for I keep that anſwer till ſome other than were there, be preſent, my ſolution whereunto, when I declare it, ſhall make all the reſt of the matter very weak, and My Lord not to like his argument at all. One argument I could not aſſoil to come again to the Fleet: My Lord of Canterbury charged me, that I like nothing unleſs I do it my ſelf, whereof I am not guilty, I was never Author of any one thing either Spiritual or Temporal, I thank God for it. I am alſo charged that all the Realm hath received theſe Homilies without contradiction ſave I: Whereunto I anſwer, I think they have not read that I have read in theſe Books; what hath been done I cannot tell, now I am kept as I cannot know, though I would when I was abroad, I never ſought to know more than was brought by common fame; for this ſhall be found true, I never adviſed any man to object any thing againſt theſe Books, no one man, not my Chaplains: A kinſman of mine beneficed in my Dioceſs, and not unlearned, came to me, and told me how he heard a lewd Fellow ſay that I would not receive the Injunctions. And Sir (quoth I) I rebuked him, and reviled him, and ſaid you would as readily receive as any man; I told him that in ſo ſaying he did very well; upon my coming up, a Chaplain of mine a Doctor of Divinity told me, he would receive the Injunctions quietly, and ſay nothing, I told him it ſhould be well done, if I had tarried in my Dioceſs; if any man had ſpoken but my ſelf I would have loſt my life for it, nor I think there hath not now. This matter was to try a Biſhop, whether he careth more for the truth, or his own reſt. What examples have I ſeen in this Realm, how freely men have ſaid their Conſcience againſt our late Sovereign Lords determination, and againſt the Act of Parliament? D. Crow a mean man preached againſt our late Sovereign Lords determinations, and how daintily he was handled to relieve his Conſcience? if your Grace would have this for a preſident, that whatſoever the Kings Council for the time of a Princes minority ſhall ſend to be preached muſt needs be received without allegation; of what ſtrength is the Act of Parliament againſt the Biſhop of Rome? The Kings Majeſty, when he cometh to his age will look to be bold to do as much with his Subjects as his Council did in his minority, whereof the Counſellors may be then weary, Preſidents be dangerous. For I have ſeen it almoſt for a rule, That whatſoever hath been once done, may then without queſtion be done

{KING Edw.6} done again, in our late Sovereign Lords time, I have ſeen the Council much aſtonied, when the King would have done ſomewhat againſt an Act of Parliament, it was made then a great matter. The Lord Cromwel had once put in the Kings our late Sovereign Lords head to take upon him to have his will and pleaſure regarded for a Law, for that he ſaid was to be a very King, and thereupon I was called for at Hampton Court. And as the Lord Cromwell was very ſtout, come on my Lord of Wincheſter (quoth he) for that conceit he had whatſoever he talked with me, he knew ever as much as I, Greek or Latine, and all. Anſwer the King here (quoth he) but ſpeak plainly and directly, and ſhrink not man. Is not that (quoth he) that pleaſeth the King a Law? Have ye not therein the Civil Laws (quoth he) quod principi placuit, and ſo forth (quoth he) I have ſomewhat forgotten it now, I ſtood ſtill and wondered in my mind to what concluſion this ſhould tend: The King ſaw me muſing, and with earneſt gentleneſs ſaid: Anſwer him whether it be ſo or no, I would not anſwer my Lord Cromwell, but delivered my ſpeech to the King, and told him: I had read indeed of Kings that had their will always received for a Law, but I told him the form of his Reign, to make the Laws his will was more ſure and quiet, and by this form of Government ye be eſtabliſhed (quoth I) and it is agreeable with the nature of your people: If ye begin a new manner of policy, how it will frame no man can tell, and how this frameth ye can tell, and would never adviſe your Grace to leave a certain for an uncertain: The King turned his back, and left the matter after till the Lord Cromwel turned the Cat in the Pan afore company, when he was angry with me, and charged me as though I had played his part: This tale is true, and not without purpoſe to be remembred, how I have been toſſed to and fro in this kind of matter. Thus I have ſhewed your Grace the whole matter with many more words than I intended in the entry of my Letter, and make now an end, enforced by wearineſs of my body, fed with cloſe air, rather then meat, which my ſtomach deſireth not, yet I muſt ſay ſomewhat in the matter of only Faith, wherein my Lord of Canterbury, ſo much travelleth.

Firſt it is ſure, he ſhall never prove that he would ſay in that matter, but to make an end of it, either I am a very fool in mine own conceit, which may eaſily be, or I ſee an occaſion given to your Grace to make ſuch a true determination in it, as may be honourable to your Grace, the contentation of all the world, the preſervation of the Kings honour that dead is, without prejudice of the Act of Parliament, without derogation to My Lord of Canterburies honour, without diminution of the reputation of the Counſil, and without any glory to the Biſhop of Wincheſter. Which is ſome mens conceit the greateſt matter of all that be yet rehearſed, and in good faith I would I were not, ſo all were well. Your Graces doing in Scotland, is not to my judgment more to your Graces honour than this would be, which God grant and your Grace much honour and felicity.

At the Fleet the xiv of October.

Your Graces humble Beadman, S. W.

To the Lord Protector.

AFter my moſt humble commendations to your good Grace, ſince the writing of my laſt long Letters to your good Grace, which as they wearied me in writing, ſo they have I think wearied your Grace in reading, I have been in great expectation to hear ſomewhat from your Grace, of whoſe gentle and favourable mind towards me, I cannot doubt, howſoever the Declaration thereof at this time be hindred by other by-perſwaſions, wherewith although your Grace may be ſomewhat moved, I marvail not, and therefore whiles all things may be tryed, do well ſatisfie my ſelf, not minding by any ſute, I have or ſhall make; otherwiſe to preſs your Grace than may be conveniently obtained of you in the ſtate you now preſent. And yet ſue I muſt of congruence, for declartion of my humility, and alſo importunely ſue, leſt I ſhould be ſeen to contemn, and to be entered into a melancholly, proudly to diſdain the world, which I aſſure your Grace I do not, nor never had any ſuch fantaſie: Whereof they can be witneſs, that have continually ſeen my behaviour, ſince the death of our late Sovereign Lord, and ſince my coming to this Priſon. And yet my L. of Canterbury, when he ſent for me laſt out of the Fleet, handled me with fair words, declaring me a man meet in his opinion to be called to the Council again, adding how we (he ſaid) did daily choſe in, other that were not appointed by our late Sovereign Lord. They were worldly comfortable words, and as far contrarious on the one ſide, as the Fleet is on the other ſide: But I have not I thank God, that deceit which My Lord of Canterbury thought to be in me, or would ſeem to think ſo, whereby to enduce others to think the ſame, as though I were not moved to ſay as I do, for any zeal to the truth, but of perverſe frowardneſs, as one that like not his eſtate, and therefore cared not what became of him: The truth whereof to be otherwiſe God knoweth: And I am able to make to the world ſufficient proof and Teſtimony of the contrary if it be required: Firſt, as touching the Book of Paraphraſis, whereof I wrote to your Grace ſpecial faults, and other I have to ſhew as great as they I truſt: And doubt not, the matter it ſelf ſhall ſufficiently declare, that I have done well to ſpeake againſt that Book, aſſuring your Grace, that ſince my coming to Priſon, many days together when I looked on it, I ſaw every day, ſome new thing in ſuch ſort of fault, as ought worthily to condemn the work, I have favoured * Eraſmus name as much as any other, but I never ſtudied over this Book till now, and now I agree with them that ſaid, Eraſmus laid the Eggs, and Luther hatched them: adding further, that of all the monſterous opinions that have ariſen, evil men had a wonderous occaſion miniſtred to them of that Book; and therefore I truſt the matter of that Book will purge the evil opinion as might be gathered of me, wherein I offer to prove that I ſaid with any learned man, pain of ſhame and rebuke, and to be taken for a Malicolick Beaſt. As for the Book of Homilies, in that point where my Lord of Canterbury would have taught how faith excluded charity in the office of juſtifying, beſides that my Conſcience is otherwiſe perſwaded, and truly preſwaded, it doth ſo touch me outwardly in the world, as if I would for any interceſſion or requeſt upon offer to be a Counſellor, or have as much more Land as all the Biſhops may ſpend. I were worthy for ſo agreeing for mede on the one ſide, ordered on the other ſide; firſt, to be whipped in every Market Town in the Realm, and then hanged for example, as the verieſt Varlet that ever was Biſhop in any Realm chriſtned, unleſs My Lord of Canterbury could ſhew me either Scripture that ſo ſaid, or ſome ancient † Writer, wherein I deſire only to ſee but one where commonly two be required in every matter: But becauſe it is in the matter of only Faith, I require but one ancient Writer, whereby I cared not for my Conſcience as ſome would have it, perſwaded if I might excuſe my ſelf at leaſt to the world that I were not worthy to be whipped, and hanged in all good mens judgements, and mine own alſo. And this matter I write unto your Grace, to declare unto you in what ſtraits I am * tyed inwardly in my Conſcience by very truth, ſo I am tyed outwardly in the world with ſhame, whereby appeareth that I reſiſt not this matter of a willful purpoſe, or that I like it not becauſe I was not a Counſellor, which words My Lord of Canterbury uſed to me, for I am even driven to do as I do of neceſſity on both ſides in my Conſcience before † God and the world abroad, whereof if I ſhew not your Grace ſuch a proof as cannot be denyed, let me be out of all credit in every thing, and be accounted a lyer, which I abhore above all faults. Whereupon me ſeemeth my caſe is miſerable to be ſo encumbred as I am, and yet to be uſed as I were without cauſe obſtinate, notwithſtanding all ſuch circumſtances as I have uſed to humble my ſelf to learn and abide; I yield my ſelf to be oppoſed at Oxford, that I might ſay, if I yielded, learning had overcome me: When that was refuſed, I offered my ſelf to go to School at home, which offer to yield to the truth. And although I have to maintain me, both the plain Scriptures, the Doctors plain and the plain Act of Parliament: Yet for conformity offered to my Lord of Canterbury, to yield if he could ſhew me one Scripture affirming faith to exclude Charity in juſtification, or Scripture failing as it doth indeed to ſhew me but one ancient Writer that writeth ſo, with offer to yield and give place, which offer excludeth all

* Eraſmus if he bee ſtil alive, he could as well have anſwered to this matter, as he anſwered to Alberus Pius objecting againſt him the ſame.

† Becauſe ye require an ancient author, what ſay you to Chryſoſtom in epiſt. ad tit. hom. 3. Si fidei credis, cur alia infers? quæ fides non ſuffiat ſola.

* The ſame Chryſoſtom alſo.

† In Mat. 8. hom. 27. Tom. 3. ut jam nemini fugere poſſit, his verbis declarari non ex operibus ſed ex fide ſalutem hominibus æternam præſtari.

If I might be ſo bold with this noble Clerk I would oppoſe him in his Grammar, what part of ſpeech were Abſque in S. Paul, where he ſaith, Fide juſtificamur abſque operibus, we are juſtified by Faith without works; if he ſay it is a propoſition excluſive, as he muſt needs do, then how can he deny here charity to be excluded with all the works of the Law in the action of juſtification, if this word excluding do diſleaſe you, then take away in S. Paul theſe words Gratis, non ex operibus abſque præcibus Domini eſt, &c. That is freely not of works, with ut works it is Gods gift, &c. Works of charity are not excluded not to follow; but not merit any part of juſtification.

ſtubborneſs, and all evil opinion that might be conceived of wilfulneſs in me; it is now twenty days ago ſince I ſpake with my Lord of Canterbury, when the ſtrongeſt arguments he made me, were to agree, with hope to be a Counſellor again, or go to the Fleet from whence I came, for when I made requeſt to the contrary, he ſaid he had no ſuch Commiſſion from the Council, and ſo here I remain without Bail or Mainpriſe, without comfort of any of my Friends or Servants, as one divided from the world, no Chaplain to accompany me in prayer, no Barber nor Taylor for bodily neceſſaries, nor liberty to uſe Phyſitian for relief of Diſeaſe, whereof I have need: And your Grace who I think would ſhew me relief: for I will never think want of good will in you, is percaſe perſwaded, by means that I reſiſt the truth wilfully, and that your Grace may not in any wiſe ſhew me the leaſt comfort in the world, for then no man ſhall rule me. And then your Grace that ſhewed ſo much favour to the Earl of Southampton late Chancellor, wherein all the world commended your gentleneſs, if your Grace ſhould now any ways comfort me in Priſon with the leaſt token of gentleneſs, ye might be noted to favour Wincheſters factions, as ſome term it, whereas I take God to record I never joyned my ſelf with any man, nor have ſecretly encouraged any man to be of my opinion. And yet as I have none other opinion, but ſuch as the Parliament hath eſtabliſhed. The Earl of Southampton did many things whiles he was Chancellor, touching Religion, which miſliked me not, but did never adviſe him ſo to do: nor made on him the more for it when he had done, he was one of whom by reaſon I might have been bold, but I left him to his Conſcience, therein I never ſaid ſo much ſecretly to any Noble man of the Realm, as I have to your Grace, at which time I adviſed your Grace to be noted neither on the one ſide, nor on the other. And your Grace hath for your ſelf as good a name as can be. And I ſhall ſay this without flattery, that like as chance very notably hath advanced your Eſtate many degrees, ſince the time of my firſt acquaintance with you, ſo have you had occaſion to ſhew your vertue, whereby to be thought worthy your Eſtate, by means whereof you cannot wiſh a more felicity than you have to be the beginning of ſuch an Eſtate as ye ſhall leave by Gods grace to your Poſterity. This is not altogether out of my matter, for whatſoever become of me, I would your Grace did well, men be mortal, and deeds revive, and me think My Lord of Canterbury doth well to entangle this your Grace with this matter of Religion, and to borrow of your authority the Fleet, the Marſhalſea, and the Kings-Bench, with priſonment in his houſe, wherewith to cauſe men to agree to that it pleaſeth him to call truth in Religion, leaving that he ſetteth forth not ſtabliſhed, by any Law in the Realm, but contrary to a Law in the Realm: At the leaſt a Law it is not yet, and before a Law made, I have not ſeen ſuch a kind of impriſonment, as I ſuſtain, humbly offering my ſelf ready to learn: Our late Sovereign Lord, whoſe ſoul God pardon, ſuffered every man to ſay his mind without impriſonment, till the matter were eſtabliſhed by Law. If My Lord of Canterbury hath the ſtrength of Gods ſpirit, with ſuch a learning in his Laws, as be able to overthrow with that breath all untruths, and eſtabliſh truths; I would not deſire the let of it by your Grace, nor the work of Gods truth any way hindered: In which caſe if all the Realm be perſwded beſides my ſelf in this matter, it ſhall be eaſie for to reprove me in the face of all the World, and drive me to the ground with the Sword of Gods Scripture, which he ſhould rather deſire to do, than to borrow the Sword your Grace hath the rule of, wherewith to fear men, which is a mean to ſlander all that is done or ſhall be done, if men be priſoned before a Law made. And I cannot believe but there be more than I, or elſe I ſhould not be kept ſo ſecret. For all my folks reſorted to me, and told me there was no reaſon to ſtand alone againſt all men, to undo them and my ſelf alſo in this world. It were a greater temptation than My Lord of Canterbury made to put me in hope to be a Counſellor again. Be your Grace aſſured, the foundation of my ground is a zeal to the truth, although I have many worldly conſiderations to alledge for me, which ſerve to purgeme of wilfulneſs, which I aſſure your Grace is not my fault, I will not trouble your Grace with all I could ſay of my knowledge: whatſoever my words be of My Lord of Canterbury, which the matter enforceth me to ſpeak, I am in none enmity with his perſon; and that I am able to prove, but My Lord hath in the Homily of ſalvation taken ſuch a matter in hand, and ſo handled it, as if I were his extream enemy, I would have wiſhed him to have taken that piece in hand, and ſo handled it as he hath done. For that aſſeveration how Faith excluded Charity, can neither be proved by Scripture, nor confirmed by any ancient Writer, or perſwaded by any effectual argument. And one argument My Lord hath deviſed, which he frameth thus: We be juſtified by Faith without all works of the Law: Charity is a work of the Law. Ergo we are juſtified without Charity. The anſwering of which argument, which I can do plainly by authority, ſhall declare that either My Lord is deceived himſelf if he take it for a ſtrong argument, when the opinion of his learning ſhall be hindered, or if he uſe it willingly knowing the fault in it, the lack is greater another way. But the anſwer to that argument diſſolveth all the matter, whereunto I have an anſwer made 1200 years by-paſt, which I will of my peril ſhew, if My Lord will avow it for his argument. And if my Lord will ſend me the argument of his hand, I will ſend him the anſwer of my hand, whereby ſhall ſhortly appear, whether I trifle or no. In the later end of my laſt Letter to your Grace I ſpake of a determination, whereof I wiſhed your Grace were Author. For wearineſs of writing I did not open what I meant in ſpeciality, intending now to begin in the middle of this ſorrow, with a merry tale: But a very true tale, and not unmeet to be rehearſed: Thus it happned, certain Doctors of Divinity at Paris, minding with utterance of ſome learning, whereof they had ſtore to requite a Gentleman that had bidden them to Dinner, uſing a Preface, that as he had fed them with bodily meat, they would feed him with ſpiritual food, proponed this queſtion to be diſputed amongſt them: Whether the Aſs that carried our Lady and Chriſt, when Joſeph fled with them into Egypt, when it carried our Lady only with Chriſt, in her lap, carried then as perfect a burthen, as when it carried our Lady with Chriſt on her lap, and a Flea ſitting on her head? Herein the Doctors were in great earneſt, and many hot arguments were between them in the matter, with much ſpence of language. Whether our Lady alone, with Chriſt in her lap, were as perfect a burthen, as our Lady and Chriſt with a Flea upon our Ladies head? The audience which was learned, was well cheared with laughing, but other edification the matter had not. And it may be laughed at, whenſoever it is told to ſee in what trifles many men ſpend their time: And now I ſhall ſay that which is ſtrange at the firſt reading, but it is true.

The matter of Juſtification with only Faith juſtifieth, and whether Faith excludeth Charity in juſtification, pertaineth no more to the uſe and practiſe of our Church of England, although in knowledge it be a grave matter, than the trifling queſtion I rehearſed pertained to the hearers edification in good living: I beſeech your Graece to know how I put a difference between uſe and knowledge. The knowledge of Juſtification as I have ſaid is in learning of more weight, and ſuch as for the entreating of it, many have wept even here at home, beſides thoſe that have wept in Germany, but the uſe and practice of it is no more neceſſary in the ſtate of the Church of England, than is the handling of the other queſtion, and for any uſe in the Church, the one may be forborn as well as the other, conſidering the Baptiſm of Infants, is ſo duly obſerved. In which Sacrament of Baptiſm all we be juſtified before we can talk of the Juſtification we ſtrive for. And unleſs the Church leave the uſe to Chriſtian Infants, which ſhall not be, there cannot be a time, in which the knowledge of the Juſtification we ſtrive for, can be practiſed: But all men ſhall as we already have, receive their Juſtification in Baptiſm in their Infancy. So as the Doctrine of only Faith juſtifieth, if it were true as the Homily declareth, it is no more neceſſary for the preſent ſtate of the Church, than to know whether the burthen of our Lady and Chriſt only were as perfect as the burthen of our Lady and Chriſt with a Flea ſitting upon our Ladies head, which the ſolemn Doctors of Paris ſo earneſtly entreated.

Hereby it is evident that this unſenſible Aſs had no feeling of Gods ſpirit in the matter of juſtification.

Some

KING Edw. 6 Some will ſay I am waxed mad in Priſon to compare theſe two together: But as I compare them for uſe and practiſe, the one is as neceſſary as the other. And as I was bold to uſe the merry example to imprint the matter the better in your Graces memory. For it is as I ſay, when we have all talked, for we all are juſtified in Baptiſm, younglings and falling after Baptiſm, we muſt ariſe by the Sacrament of Penance, which muſt be confeſſed of all Men, unleſs they be ſuch as deny all Sacraments as ſome have done indeed, wading ſo far in the ſifting of only Faith, that they have left nothing but Faith alone, and yet ſpent a great deal of their Faith in the handling of it, or rather all. And that is a general fault I find, that ſuch as write in that matter do not handle it Faithfully in alledging the Doctors and Scriptures right as they be. Now if this be true that I have written, which is true indeed, were it not an horrible part of you to ſay, Why trouble ye the World for a thing not neceſſary, and ſo put it from the Country, and make it as it were a Checker Chamber-caſe, and ſo to be ſent to the Univerſities, for whom it is meet ſoberly to talk, and not for Homilies, wherein the People ſhall hear that they ſhall never practiſe, becauſe they learn it too late, being juſtified before in their infancy in Baptiſm. My Lord of Canterbury told me his intent, is only to ſet out the freedom of Gods mercy, which may be done much more plainly, with putting the People in remembrance of the conſtant received Faith of the Church in the Baptiſm of Infants, whereby ſuch as be juſtified and ſaved in the vertue of Chriſts Paſſion, as after Baptiſm by malice fall not to ſin, and thoſe muſt return to Chriſt by Penance; but ſuch as die (before that actual ſin, hath defiled their Soul again) if they die in the innocency received in Baptiſm, be ſalved.

And yet thoſe Children, when they were Chriſtened did nothing but cry for cold, or when they were over-hard griped for fear of falling. And when this is believed, is not Gods mercy believed to be miniſtred after a moſt free liberal ſort? If my Lord of Canterbury mind only that the matter ſhall appear without Argument, as we practiſe Juſtification in receiving the Sacrament of Baptiſm. And as for Juſtification by only Faith, is all out of uſe, howſoever we expound it, as the ſtate of the Church is now.

And it is a terrible matter to think on, to ſee ſuch a contention to riſe upon a matter not neceſſary to be ſpoken of, wherein if my Lord of Canterbury will needs travel, my judgment is, That he ſhall never perſwade that Faith excludeth Charity in Juſtification, unleſs he borrow of your Graces Authority Priſons, and then he ſhall percaſe have ſome agree unto it, as poor Men kneel at Rome, when the Biſhop there goeth by; that is to ſay, knocketh on the head with a Halberd, if he kneel not, for that is one piece of the office of the Biſhop of Romes Guard. Finally there hath been nothing done, but your Grace may uſe it to the augmentation of your honour. I have things more to ſay, but this matter is over-long already, and me thinks I have been over-long here, and ſhewing my ſelf ſo humble a Scholar, as I have done, it is much to be beaten, becauſe I do not learn where no Man teacheth me, and ſo willing to learn as I ask but one Scripture, or Scripture failing, as it doth for my Lord of Canterburies purpoſe, I ask but one ancient Doctor: This is my caſe, for as touching any act of diſobedience, my Lords of the Council did foreſee, that I ſhould not fall in that danger, and therefore would not truſt my frailty to be in the Country, when the Viſitors ſhould be there: But made me ſure here, leſt I might have offended, if I had been there, though I had but a few words to ſpeak; that is to ſay, ſaving Gods Laws and the Kings, yet they might have been miſreported, and ſo engendred me more trouble; and this good I have of my being here, which I ſuffer patiently, and make it to ſerve for my purpoſe in my conceit, as I thank God I have no diſpleaſure of mind, and only feel ſuch as the Body engendereth for want of ſome neceſſaries, whereof if I may have relief at your Grace's hand, I will accept it as thankfully, as any Man hath any benefit at your hand, and as inſtantly require it of you. And yet if I have no other comfort from your Grace than I have hitherto had, I will think nevertheleſs as well of your Grace as ever I did, and be only ſorry, that in the ſtate you be in the liberty of doing that your heart would perſwade you, ſhould be ſtraitly enclofed with reſpects, as my Body is with wakes. Thus deſiring your Grace to take in good part my bold writing to you, I ſhall make and pray Almighty God for the preſervation of your Perſon. With encreaſe of honour and felicity.

Your Graces humble Bead-man,

S. W.

S. W. To the Lord Protector.

After my moſt humble commendations to your good Grace, upon truſt that your Grace would take my Letters in good part, and not otherwiſe than I wrote them. I wrote to your Grace out of this Priſon, as I was wont to write to our late Sovereign Lord, whoſe Soul God pardon; when I was Ambaſſador, refreſhing my ſelf ſomtime with a merry tale in a ſad matter, which his Highneſs ever paſſed over without diſpleaſure, as I truſt your Grace will do the ſemblable. For though ſome account me a Papiſt, yet I cannot play the Pope holy, as the old term was, I dare not uſe that ſeverity in writing, which my cauſe requireth to ſpeak of God, and his Truth in very ſecond ſentence, and become ſuddainly a Prophet to your Grace, with a new Phraſe of ſpeech, with whom I have been heretofore ſo familiarly converſant, as I think honour hath not altered your Graces nature, even ſo adverſity hath not changed mine. Of your high Place in the Common-wealth, no Man is more glad than I, nor no Man ſhall do his duty further than I, to acknowledge you as your Grace is now, Protector and Governor of the Realm. But I have been ſo traded to ſpeak boldly, that I cannot change my manner now, when percaſe it doth me no good. And although there be an Italian in Priſon with me, in whom I ſee a like folly, who living with a little miſerably, will not for his honour take Alms, fanſying to be ſtill in the ſtate he was ſometime, which manner I condemn in him, yet I follow him thus far, rather to write after my old manner, which cometh plainly to mind, than to take Alms and aid of Eloquence, whereof I have this ſtate need. For your Graces Letters return every word of my Letters in my Neck, and take my Fly as it were a Bee, which I thought ſhould have ſtung no Man, which matter in mirth, declareth the neceſſity of the other matter, as aptly as may be, neither to be neceſſary. And when I wrote I forgat as my fellow Priſoner, the Italian doth the ſtate I am in now. And wrote as I had written from Antwerp in the ſtate of Ambaſſador. The Italian my companion hath his folly of nature, I have it of cuſtom in bringing up, which hath the effect of nature: And is called of learned Men, Another nature. And then the Proverb of gentleneſs hath place, when Men ſay to him that is offended, You muſt bear with the Mans nature, and ſo I truſt you will do with me. Two things there be in your Graces Letter, which I truſt I may touch without contention. One is, That if your Grace will in a plain ſimilitude ſee the iſſue of Faith only, and whether Faith may exclude Charity in the office of Juſtifying, or not, it may be well reſembled in the making of Laws in this Parliament, where the Acts be paſſed by three Eſtates, which be all three preſent, and do ſomewhat together, and concur to the perfecting of the Law, wherein we may not ſay, That any one Eſtate only made the Law, or that any one Eſtate excludeth the other in the office of making the Law. This may be ſaid, That theſe three Eſtates only in reſpect of the reſt of the Realm, make the Law, and there need no more of the Realm be preſent but they. But if we ſpeak of theſe three Eſtates within themſelves, there is none Eſtate only, that maketh the Law.

But where the Law hath as it were a Body and a Soul. The high Houſe and the low Houſe of the Parliament make as it were the Body of the Law, which lieth as it were a dead matter, ſuch as is not apt to take life till the Kings Majeſty hath by the breath of his mouth, ſaying, le Roy le veult, breathed a full life into it; in the concluſion beſides

beſides the life the Aſſembly of the other Eſtates had by his Authority to Aſſemble, which had elſe been a dead Aſſembly, even as Faith and Hope be dead without Charity: And as the Kings Majeſty in this ſimilitude of making Laws excludeth not in office of the whole the other two Eſtates, no more do the Eſtates, becauſe they deviſe and frame Laws, exclude the Kings Majeſty in the Office of making Laws, for without his Authority they be nothing, as Faith and Hope be without Charity not effectual. And look what abſurdity and untruth this ſaying hath in this Realm to ſay, The higher Houſe, and the lower Houſe, exclude the King in the Office of making of Laws; the ſame abſurdity is yet in Religion to ſay, That Faith excludeth Charity in the Office of Juſtification. And therefore it was never written of ancient writers. And therefore I deſired my Lord of Canterbury to ſhew me but one, and yet cannot. In our time this Dream hath been dreamed without Scripture, without Authority, againſt Scripture, and againſt Authority, as I can ſhew. And further can ſhew how this imagination extendeth ſo far by them, that open their mind in it throughly, as your Grace would not at the firſt believe if I did expreſs it. But I can ſhew that I fain not evidently as clearly for my diſcharge as I could wiſh. An other matter of your Graces Letter is, Where your Grace reaſoneth with me that I am over preciſe in finding of faults in the Paraphraſis, ſeeing every Book hath ſome faults. And then your Grace taketh not Eraſmus for a Goſpel, but as one in whom ſomewhat may be reprehended or amended. After which manner of ſort, if your Grace take the Homilies; as for like reaſon in my judgment they muſt, for they be Mens compoſitions, as the Paraphraſis is, and not the very Goſpel it ſelf, why ſhould I be kept in Priſon, who offered to receive the Homilies and Eraſmus both, ſo far as they were not without fault, either of Gods Law or of the Kings? Becauſe I ſaw the Errors before, and ſpake of them, I have made more ſpeed to Priſon than other have done, who percaſe for troubling of their Conſcience have received the Books cloſe with ſuch reverence, as becometh Men to receive that is ſent from their Prince, wherein I would have done as they did, if I had not ſeen the Books before. But I did as I have ſeen divers Noble Men do. And among them as I remember your Grace, when they have being ſent in ſervice to have uſed ſuch diligence, as to ſee their Commiſſion and Inſtructions made, or they went and finding ſomething doubtful or amiſs, after the Commiſſion was Sealed, and Injunctions Signed worthy to be mended, have upon declaration of their mind therein obtained amendment with commendation. Now I have a charge in the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter to ſee the People fed with wholſome Doctrine, wherein if I be ſo diligent as to look upon the Commiſſion, and conſidering what I ſhall be charged with to do, take this or that for a fault in my judgment, and labour to have it amended, wherein differ I from other Mens diligence? And how can it be taken for a fault to ſay reverently to the Council? My Lords, me ſeemeth, this and this cannot ſtand together, either inſtruct me in them, or amend them; In what nature of crime ſhould this Humility be? Am I worthy for ſo ſaying to be condemned to a perpetual Priſon? And to be a cloſe Priſoner, to ſpeak with no Man, to hear from no Man, to talk with no Man, for my Houſhold which is a great number, wandering and lamenting for me? My Caſe ſhould be in the nature of praiſe, in the nature of commendation, in the nature of thanks, if none other have ſaid that I can ſay: if one only Man in a Realm ſaith, He knoweth Treaſon to ſubvert the whole Realm, and can ſhew evident proof of his ſo ſaying, ſhall he be Priſoned becauſe of good will he offereth to ſay and prove that no Man elſe uttereth but he? And therewith offereth to prove that he ſaith to be true: it is incredible, that a King ſhould ſet forth a Book tending to the ſubverſion of his own Eſtate, and therefore that I ſhall ſay cannot touch his Majeſty, who knoweth not what is done, as reaſon judgeth in his tender age: it is alſo incredible, That your Grace being Uncle to him, ſhould be content, that any Book ſhould be ſet forth that might tend to the ſubverſion of his Eſtate. And I dare ſay for your Grace, you would not if the Book be like the Horſe that the Trojans received into their City, wherein the Trojans knew not what was in it, let me be heard that know what is in it, and ſo know it, as I can ſhew it as evidently, as I can the Sun and the Moon in bright Days, and bright Nights, when both ſhine: I do not trifle with my wit to undo my ſelf, but travel with my honeſty to preſerve my Country, to preſerve my Prince, to preſerve Religion: And this your Grace ſhall find to be true, which knowing my Letters to be conſtrued to the extremity, I would not write unleſs I were furniſhed with matter to diſcharge my writing. Your Grace I doubt not remembreth Singleton's Conſpiracy. And Eraſmus hath framed his Doctrine, as though Singleton had required him thereunto. I have ſuch matter to ſhew, as though I had my ſelf deviſed it for my juſtification. And yet I am reaſoned with, as though one given to let good Doctrine, to find a knot in a Ruſh, to trouble good enterpriſes; after which ſort your Grace is moved to write unto me, and thereupon I remain here ſtill without hearing, having ſuch matter to utter as ſhall confound them all; which I would not write if I were not aſſured: For it were a ſmall pleaſure to me writing thus extreamly, to be confounded when I had been heard, and then worthily ſent hither again for lying ſo manifeſtly, which I would think a worthy puniſhment, as this is unworthy to be handled as I am for vertue, that I dare ſay the truth, can declare the abomination of this Paraphraſis, and of the Homilie alſo, in both which matters I have ſhewed all I can ſhew, I ſhall declare I am not worthy to be kept here, and yet here I have remained theſe ſeven weeks, without ſpeaking with any Man ſaving my Phyſician, who I thank your Grace hath done me good: And yet when Men ſee I am thus baniſhed from the World, ſo as no Man may ſpeak with me, it is not pleaſant for any Man to reſort unto me, and that I perceive if my Lord of Canterbury think I will wax mad he is deceived, for I wax every day better learned than other, and find every day ſomewhat to impugne the Paraphraſis and Homilies, not by wit or deviſe, or other ſubtilty, but plain ſenſible matter if I may be heard: And if I be not heard my Conſcience telleth me I have done my duty, and therewith from travel ſhall apply my ſelf to prayer, wherein I ſhall remember the proſperous eſtate of your Grace whom God preſerve.

Wincheſter reſembleth the Homilies to the Horſe of Troy.

To the Lord Protector.

AFter my moſt humble commendations to your good Grace, whatſoever your Graces conſiderations be not to hear me yet, nor anſwer me, and howſoever I determine and do bear patiently the ſtate I am now in, Reaſon nevertheleſs bindeth me to continue my ſute, That if your Grace ſeeth at any time occaſion to change your determination, there ſhall nothing want on my behalf to provoke your Grace ſo to do: He that is refuſed at one time may be heard at another, and importunity ſpeedeth when none other mean can prevail. Being alſo a fault in the Inferior to deſpair of the Superior in ſo reaſonable a requeſt as mine is; which I cannot do of your Grace for other reſpects: I have remained here long unheard of your Grace, incloſed up more cloſely, now cloſe Religions be begun, than ever were any whilſt they were here, no ſtranger may ſpeak with me, I cannot have the company of my Chaplain, which is neceſſary for me after ſo long time. And if your Grace hath no leaſure to hear me ſhortly, I truſt you will without delay ſuffer my Chaplain to reſort unto me, as well as of your gentleneſs ye have ſuffered the Phyſician for my Body to come to me, for the which I moſt humbly thank your Grace; herein I deſire your Grace to anſwer me by this bearer, that I may have ſome comfort from you, for whoſe preſervation I ſhall pray to Almighty God.

Your Graces humble Bead-man,

S. W. To the Lord Protector.

AFter my moſt humble commendations to your good Grace, I am very loath, knowing your Graces buſineſs to trouble you with many Letters, and yet not hearing from your Grace any thing for anſwer to mine own Letters before written, I am ſo bold to write theſe, wherewith to put your Grace in remembrance of mine eſtate in Priſon, as one diſſevered from the uſe of his Servants and Friends, and as it were buried quick without knowledge of any juſt cauſe wherefore, and with knowledge, by courſe of time that now the Parliament is begun, whereof I am a member, unleſs my fault had cut me off, and whereunto I was called by Writ, which I received before my coming hither, where I would alſo gladly do my duty, as I am bounden if I were not detained and bounden in Priſon from my liberty, that I might ſo do, which allegation I make the rather to your Grace, to the intent with the opening of a neceſſary ſute worthy to be regarded, I might miniſter occaſion to your Grace, whereupon to ſhew ſuch gentleneſs to me, as of your own gentle heart, I am perſwaded your Grace gladly would, for whoſe preſervation with increaſe of honour I ſhall pray to Almighty God, who have your Grace in his tuition.

Your Graces humble Bead-man,

S. W.

To the Lord Protector.

AFter my moſt humble commendations to your good Grace, I cannot diſcuſs by conjecture, why evidence is thus put off in my caſe, that hath been wont commonly to be granted to all Men: if it ſhould be of any Man through policy, to keep me from the Parliament, it were good to be remembred, whether mine abſence from the upper Houſe, with the abſence of thoſe I have uſed to name in the nether Houſe, will not engender more cauſe of objection, if opportunity ſerve hereafter, then any preſence with ſuch as I ſhould appoint were theſe, the ſignification whereof is the chief cauſe of theſe Letters, for as I am now encumbred with being here, ſo might ſome be encumbred therewith hereafter, which ſhould do me pleaſure: My matter that I have to ſay toucheth the higheſt, and is worthy to be heard, whereunto my Lord of Canterbury can only anſwer that he would never have thought it, or that he hath been otherwiſe enformed of them he put in truſt, for it would touch him over-much to grant he had ſo much knowledge in the Paraphraſis, as I now have, and knowing the ſame to have adviſed your Grace to ſet it forth to the People, I can ſay much, which is expedient for your Grace to hear and conſider, deſiring only this credit of your Grace to think me worthy to be heard, and thereupon give me audience, I cannot enchant Men, ne look not to be believed in the matter, unleſs it be ſo plain, as no Man can gain-ſay it, and therein the Book to be Judge. The nature of my cauſe ſhould move your Grace, the preſent Aſſembly of learned Men ſhould move your Grace to celebrate mine audience: And if your Grace knew what I could ſay of the Long Letters your Grace ſent, good faith, your Grace would make ſo much the more ſpeed. For whereas the purpoſe of your Grace in theſe Letters is, to alter my Judgment, the handling of the matters is ſuch, as I am able to ſhew good cauſe why they ſhould as they do, work a contrary effect, as I am able to declare, if ever I come to your preſence. My Lord of Canterbury will needs maintain that our late Soveraign Lord was ſeduced, and then it is poſſible that your Grace may be ſeduced alſo, and therefore it is good for your Grace to hear and to hear in time; whatſoever I have written to your Grace is true, and I have not written all the ſpecialties I know in the greateſt matters, which your Grace ſhall perceive to be true, I ſee evidently, that unleſs my matter be very notable, and alſo plain, it ſhall not boot me to alledge it thus much, I am learned by your Graces Letters, and therefore if I had any cauſe to miſtruſt it, I would uſe another mean whereof in your Graces Letters I ſee ſome comfort, but my matter is ſo plain and ſo expedient to be underſtood, that I muſt needs deſire your Grace to be heard in it, wherein it may like you to ſend me knowledge of your pleaſure, and that my ſute to your Grace may ſtand in ſome ſtead, for whoſe preſervation in honour I ſhall daily pray to Almighty God, who preſerve your Grace.

In the Fleet.

Your Graces humble Bead-man,

S. W.

To the Lord Protector.

AFter my moſt humble commendations to your good Grace: In my third Letters I ſignified unto your Grace my need of the counſel of Phyſician, as the ſtate of my Body then required: whereunto becauſe I had no anſwer, I have uſed all other means of relief, that I could to avoid that need, as one loth to trouble your Grace with requeſts not neceſſary. Maſter Warden of the Fleet, and my ſervants know that I fain not, and I have cauſe to fear, the effect will ſhew I fain not indeed. In this caſe I may not deſperately forbear to write to your Grace, and think that becauſe I have had no anſwer to all mine other Letters, among which I made mention of this neceſſity, that I ſhould likewiſe have none anſwer to this: As I have determined my ſelf to a truth in the chief matters, ſo I eſchew to uſe ſimulation in by-matters: My mind I thank God was never ſo quiet, as hath been ſince my coming hither, which hath relieved my Body much, but the Body hath need of other relief, which cannot be had as I am kept by commandment. Theſe ſeven weeks ſaving one day I have been here under ſuch ſtrait keeping, as I have ſpoken with no Man. And thus me ſeemeth I ſee my matter perplexed, your Grace will meddle with nothing done before your come home. And thoſe of the Council that ſent me hither, can by themſelves do nothing, now your Grace is coming home: upon which conſideration I ſue to none of them, and perceive that your Grace to whom I ſue, for ſome reſpect forbeareth to make me anſwer, for ſuch a Paraphraſis I make of your Graces ſilence, wherein I go near as think the truth, then Eraſmus in his Paraphraſis ſome time, wherein he taketh upon him to geſs the cauſes of Chriſts doings. I thank God my mind can take no hurt, how vehement ſoever theſe temptations be. But when a certain Sect of Philoſophers called Stoicks, contemned in their learning ſtoutly the grief and diſeaſe of the Body, they were fain a little to ſhrink, when the Gout or any Diſeaſe nipped them, and now my ſtomach nippeth me, which I have favoured as much as any Man in England, and have laden it as light either with Meat or Drink of many years, and ſpecially ſince my coming as any other. And after I ſaw I could get no anſwer from your Grace for a Phyſician, I have left off ſuch ſtudy as I uſed, and given my ſelf to continual walking for exerciſe, and with hope of relief, have delaied any further ſute in that matter till now. And now I ſue enforced, which I do moſt humbly with requeſt, that Impriſonment, being to me, that was never in Priſon before, of it ſelf tedious, be not with ſpecial commandment made more grievous, unleſs I were charged with other offence than I am yet charged with, or in my Conſcience can be. For me ſeemeth I have deſerved thanks of your Grace, and the Realm, for the diſcloſing of the faults of the Paraphraſis, wherein I have written ſome ſpecialties, but not all; and have ſuch to ſhew as I may term that Book at one word, Abomination, both for the malice and untruth of much matter out of Eraſmus Pen, and alſo the arrogant ignorancy of the Tranſlator into Engliſh, conſidering the Book ſhould be Authoriſed by a King, and by the Injunctions charge the Realm for buying rather above twenty Thouſand pound than under, whereof I have made account by eſtimate of the number of Buyers, and the Price of the whole Books: The Tranſlator ſheweth himſelf ignorant,

Your ſtrait keeping is to be doubted, conſidering the Warden of the Fleet was your ſpecial friend.

norant, both in Latin and Engliſh, a Man far unmeet to meddle with ſuch a matter, and not without malice on his part, whereby your Grace may take an Argument, what moved them that counſelled your Grace to Authoriſe ſuch a Book in the Realm. As for my Lord of Canterburies Homily of Salvation, hath as many faults, as I have been weeks in Priſon, which be ſeven, beſides the general that the matter maketh a trouble without neceſſity, and is handled contrary to the teaching of the Parliament.

Finally, In the two Books the matter I have to ſhew is ſome part ſo dangerous, as after I knew it as I know it, the concealment thereof were a great fault, if I did not utter it. As for the manner of mine enterpriſe to utter it, I know not how to have faſhioned it better, than to write to the Council in your abſence, and on my Knees to declare ſome part of it, when I came to them receiving their determination of Impriſonment, I humbly departed from them hither without grudge, and remain here without grudge to any one of them, for they ſhewed no faſhion of any evil mind towards me. And I have learned in the Civil Law that the deed of a number, is no one Mans act, with this alſo, the Authority is to be honoured; which rule I obſerve in thought, Word, and Deed. After which ſort I remain with ſuch ſutes as I have made to your Grace hitherto, and with this alſo that I add, enforced for the relief of my Body, how little ſoever I do, and have cauſe to ſet by it, which I moſt humbly deſire your Grace to conſider, and to ſend me ſome anſwer by this bearer: And I ſhall pray Almighty God for the preſervation of your Graces felicity.

Your Graces humble Bead-man.

Certain additions after theſe Letters above-ſpecified, with Notes and Solutions anſwering to the ſame.

THUS have we ſet out to thee (gentle and ſtudious Reader) an extract of certain Letters of Biſhop Gardiner; not of all that he wrote, but of ſuch as could come to our hands. Neither of theſe alſo that we have, for any good ſtuff, or any great profit therein contained, or that they did clear him or his cauſe any thing, for the which he was moſt worthily condemned. For if there did or might appear any ſuch thing in all his writings, that might clear the ill-favoured doings of that Man, be thou ſure ſuch as were then ſecret about him, and yet his well-wi'lers (their names I leave untouched) having his writings, and being able to ſhew them, as I am privy they are, would not ſo conceal them in covert as they do, being thereto both provoked and occaſioned by us, if they had ſeen any thing in them meet to relieve the perſon, or to remedy this matter. Wherefore think not for any ſuch effect theſe his vain-glorious Letters to be brought in here of us; but only that thou might hereby collect and underſtand by thoſe his foreſaid Epiſtles, and Articles following, not only the whole courſe and ſtory almoſt of all his proceedings from time to time, but alſo might ſee the nature and inward condition of the Man, how vain-glorious, full ſtuft and puſt up with arrogancy, and drowned in his own conceit he was, much like to the perſon, or rather he himſelf, deſcibed in the Latin Comedy, Miles Thraſo glorioſus, having nothing in his mouth, but Emperors, Kings, Counſellors, Protectors, Adviſements, Direction; as though all direction of Realms and Princes did flow out of his Brain, like as it is in the Poets Fables, that Minerva did ſpring out of the head of Jupiter. And yet if this vain-glorious conceit had been alone in him, leſs matter had been againſt him. Now his ſubtil practiſes, and pretenſed purpoſes, and diſſimuling conveyance did not only augment, but alſo exceed all his other evils; as in the Letters above-ſpecified is notorious and evident to be ſeen; wherein though he durſt not apertly gainſay that which he inwardly miſliked, yet how covertly doth he inſinuate himſelf to the Lord Protector, under pretenſe of giving counſel, to bring that to paſs which was for his purpoſe; that is, That no innovation or alteration might be made of Religion, during all the Kings minority, but that all things might ſtand as King Henry left them, and that is the chiefeſt butt in all Letters, whereto he driveth; uſing commonly this argument, which as it is eaſie to recite, ſo neither is it hard to anſwer to; although in the Notes before we have anſwered already ſufficiently.

The ſum and concluſion of all Wincheſter's drift in his Epiſtles before.

THat is chiefly to be feared and avoided of the Lord Protector, and now ſpecially in the Kings minority, that may both bring danger to him, and trouble to the Realm. Argument.

Innovation of Religion from that ſtate, in which King Henry left it, may be and is like to be dangerous to himſelf, and cauſe trouble to the Realm.

Ergo, Innovation of Religion, from the ſtate that the King left it in, is in no wiſe to be attempted.

The Anſwer.

TO anſwer firſt to the vocable Innovation, which he ſtumbleth ſo greatly upon, this I ſay, that Innovation is properly uſed, where a thing is brought in anew which was not before. Forſomuch therefore as in this alteration there is no new Religion brought in, but only the old Religion of the Primitive Church revived; therefore here is to be thought not ſo much an Innovation, as a Renovation or Reformation rather of Religion, which Reformation is oft times ſo neceſſary in Common-weals, that without the ſame all runneth to confuſion. Anſwer.

Secondly, I anſwer to the argument, which I do deny as a Fallax, for there is Fallacia accidentis. Where it is ſaid, That Reformation of Religion gendreth danger to the Protector, and trouble to the Realm; firſt, what will come that is uncertain: and God be hallowed, yet no danger hath come to England for the reformation of Religion. And though there did, yet the cauſe thereof is not to be imputed to Religion Reformed: For ſincere and true Doctrine of his own nature worketh quiet, peace, and tranquillity, with all good order. And if the contrary happen, that is incident by other cauſes, as by the malice of Satan, and wicked adverſaries, not by reaſon of the Doctrine of True Religion. So, after the preaching of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, diſſenſion followed in Common-weals betwixt Father and Son, Brother and Brother, &c. but that is not to be aſcribed to them, but to other.

As concerning the faults found in the Paraphraſe of Eraſmus, this I anſwer and ſay, That this Biſhop belike had over-watched himſelf in this matter. For if it be true which he himſelf affirmeth, That he never read that Book before, and now he never ſlept till he himſelf read it; it happened peradventure, that in the overmuch watching of himſelf, and ſwift reading of the Book, his Judgment was aſleep, whilſt his Eyes were open in reading the ſame. The Paraphraſe of Eraſmus.

Likewiſe touching the Book of Homilies, eſpecially the Homilie of Salvation, wherewith he findeth himſelf ſo much grieved with the Archbiſhop, ſeeing he bringeth forth no proofs, I have nothing to anſwer. In the mean ſeaſon, this I have to think, That if he had been ſo cunning in the knowledge of his own Salvation, as he was in the deſtruction and vexation of Chriſts members, he would never ſo rage againſt that Homily. The Book of Homilie Touching the examination of Ann Askew, if it be miſreported by Mr. Bale, why doth not he note the places which they be, and wherein? And if he had, or were able ſo to do; yet ſeeing the examination was of her own Penning, which Mr. Bale did follow, let every Chriſtian Reader judge, whether is more to be credited of theſe two, ſhe that was perſecuted, or he that was the perſecuter. The examination of Ann Askew ſet forth by Mr. Bale.

And where he ſpeaketh ſo much of quiet and tranquillity; this I anſwer, That quiet and tranquillity in Weals publick, ſo long as they are joyned with right reformed Religion, be much to be imbraced. But when it is otherwiſe; that is, where True Religion lacketh his right, there let the ſecond Table give place to the firſt. Quiet and tranquillity of Realms ought not to ſtop Reformation of Religion

He

KING Edw.6 Preachers, Printers, Players.

He thwarteth also and wrangleth much against Players, Printers, Preachers. And no marvel why. For he seeth these three things to be set up of God, as a triple Bulwark against the triple Crown of the Pope, to bring him down, as God be praised they have done meetly well already.

The Article of Justification.

As touching the Article of free Justification by Faith, which he cannot abide, forasmuch as we have sufficiently declared it in the Notes before, we shall refer the Reader now also unto the same.

And moreover, because in one of his Letters mention is made of a certain Letter sent unto Master Ridley, because we will defraud thee (gentle Reader) of nothing that cometh to our hands, here hast thou the Copy thereof, in effect as followeth:

Here followeth the Copy of the Letter of Stephen Gardiner sent to Mr. Ridley, in the Letters above-mentioned, containing matter and objections against a certain Sermon of the said Mr. Ridley, made at the Court.

The Letter of Winch. sent to Mr. Ridley.

MAster Ridley, after right hearty commendations, it chanced me upon Wednesday last past to be present at your Sermon in the Court, wherein I heard you confirm the Doctrine in Religion, set forth by our late Sovereign Lord and Master, whose Soul God pardon, admonishing your audience that ye would specially travel in the confutation of the Bishop of Romes pretended Authority in Government and usurped Power, and in Pardons, whereby he hath abused himself in Heaven and Earth. Which two matters I note to be plain, and here without controversie. In the other two ye spake of, touching Images and Ceremonies, and as ye touched it, specially for Holy-Water, to drive away Devils, for that you declared your self always desirous to set forth the meer truth, with great desire of unity as ye professed, not extending any your asseveration, beyond your knowledge, but always adding such like words (as far as ye had read) and if any Man could shew you further, ye would hear him (wherein you were much to be commended.) Upon these considerations, and for the desire I have to unity, I have thought my self bound to communicate to you that which I have read in the matter of Images and Holy Water, to the intent you may by your self consider it, and so weigh, before that ye will speak in those two points, as ye may (retaining your own principles) affirm still that ye would affirm, and may indeed be affirmed and maintained, wherein I have seen other forget themselves. First, I send unto you herewith (which I am sure ye have read) That (a) Eusebius writeth of Images, whereby appeareth that Images have been of (b) great Antiquity in Christs Church: and to say we may have Images, or to call on them when they represent Christ or his Saints, be over gross opinions to enter into your learned head, whatsoever the unlearned would tattle. For you know the Text of the Old Law, (c) Non facies tibi sculptile, forbiddeth no more Images now, than another Text forbiddeth to us Puddings. And if omnia be munda mundis to the Belly, there can be no cause why they should be of themselves impura to the Eye, wherein ye can say much more. And then when we have Images, to call them Idols, is a like fault in fond folly, as if a Man would call (Regem) a Tyrant, and then bring in old Writers to prove that Tyrannus signified once a King, like as (Idolum) signified once an Image: but like as Tyrannus was by consent of Men appropriate to signifie an Usurper of that dignity, and an untrue King; so hath Idolum been likewise appropriate to signifie a false representation, and a false Image: insomuch as there was a solemn Anathematization of all those that would call an Image an Idol; as he were worthy to be hanged that would call the King our Master (God save him) our true just King, a Tyrant; and yet in talk he might shew, that a Tyrant signified sometimes a King; but speech is regarded in his present signification, which I doubt not ye can consider right well.

If this Doctrine were plain in K. Edwards time, how chanced it was not so plain with you in Q. Maries time?

I verily think, that for the having of Images ye will say enough, and that also, when we have them, we should not despise them in speech, to call them (d) Idols, ne despise them with deeds, to mangle them or cut them, but at the least suffer them to stand untorn. Wherein Luther (that pulled away all other regard to them) strove stoutly and obtained (as I have seen in divers of the Churches in Germany of his reformation) that they should (as they do) stand still.

(d) Betwixt Images and Idols there is but little difference, but betwixt Images set up in Churches and Idols, there is none at all. Cic. lib. de finib. Imagines quæ idolas vocamus.

All the matter to be feared is excess in worshipping, wherein the Church of Rome hath been very precise; and specially Gregory, writing Episcopo Massilien. Which is contained, De consecratio. Distinct. 3. as followeth:

Perlatum ad nos fuerat, quod inconsiderato zelo succensus sanctorum imagines, sub hac quasi excusatione ne adorari debuissent, confregeris; & quidem eas adorare vetuisse omnino laudamus, fregisse vero reprehendimus. Dic frater, a quo factum esse sacerdote aliquando auditum est, quod feceris? Aliud est enim picturam adorare, aliud per picturam historiam, quid sit adorandum, addiscere. Nam quod legentibus scriptura, hoc & idiotis præstat pictura cernentibus, quia in ipsa ignorantes vident quid sequi debeant, in ipsa legunt qui literas nesciunt, unde & præcipue gentibus pro lectione pictura est.

Duo hic videnda sunt, primum, tempore Gregorii Imagines nondum colebantur, ut hodie apud nos, sed tantum ad historiam adhibebantur. Cujusmodi videtur pictura illa Christi & mulieris fimbriam tangentis, cujus meminit Eusebius in hist. Verum si viveret hodie Gregorius, videretque tanquam in statuis prophanationem, quid tum sensisset ille haud obscurum est. Præterea excusatio illa & defensio picturarum quam affert, præterquam quod justa ratione caret, pugnat etiam manifeste cum Synodo E. lib. Artic. 36. ubi prohibentur in templis picturæ, ne in cultu sit error. Pugnat etiam cum exemplo Epiphan. & Ezech. &c.

Herein is forbidden adoration, and then in Sexta Synodo was declared what manner of adoration is forbidden, that is to say, godly adoration to it being a creature, as is contained in the Chapter Venerabiles imagines, in the same distinction, in this wise.

Venerabiles imagines Christiani non Deos appellant, neq; serviunt eis ut Diis, neque spem salutis ponunt in eis, neque ab eis expectant futurum judicium, sed ad memoriam & recordationem primitivorum venerantur eas & adorant, sed non serviunt eis cultu divino, nec alicui creaturæ.

Idolatry is not excluded, so long as any vertue is sought at their hands.

Vertue is and hath been sought at their hands.

Ergo, Idolatry is not excluded as he saith.

By which Doctrine all Idolatry is plainly excluded in evident words. So as we cannot say that the worshipping of Images had his beginning by Popery; for Gregory forbad it, unless we shall call that Synod Popery, because there were so many Bishops. And yet there is forbidden cultus Divinus, and agreeth with our aforesaid Doctrine, by which we may creep before the Cross on Good Friday, wherein we have the Image of the Crucifix in honour, and use it in a worshipful place, and so earnestly look on it, and conceive that it signifieth, as we kneel (e) and creep before it, whilst it lieth there, and whilst that remembrance is in exercise: with which Cross nevertheless the Sexton when he goeth for a Cross, will not be afraid to be homely, and hold it under his Gown whilst he drinketh a Pot of Ale, a point of homeliness that might be left, but yet it declareth that he esteemed no Divinity in the Image. But ever since I was born, a poor Parishioner, a Lay-man, durst be so bold, at a shift (if he were also Church-warden) to sel to the use of the Church at length, and his own in the mean time, the Silver-Cross on Easter-Munday, (e) What work Winchester maketh to creep to dead Crosses, and to worship blockish Images. But the lively Images of Christ, them he brought to the Cross, and burned cruelly. Therefore it is worthily said of Clement lib. 5. Quia est iste honor Dei, per lapideas & ligneas formas discurrere, atque exanimes figuras venerari, & hominem in quo vera Dei Imago est spernere?

But Winchester was so busied in his Lay mens Books, that he had no leisure to understand learned Books.

(a) Euseb. Cæsar. saith, That he saw the Pictures of Paul and Peter kept with a certain Christian man, but yet he saith not that those Pictures were set up in any Church.

(b) What antiquity Images had in the Church, is declared by the doing and writing of Epiphanius, in his Epistle ad Episc. Hierosol. translated by Hierom. Item, In the Council, called Elibertinum, Artic. 36. it is to be seen how Pictures were forbid in Church-walls. Item, In concilio Constantino. sub Leone Imp. Images were condemned. Item, Carol. Magnus, with the whole Council of Frankfort decreed against Images, abrogating the vain and frivolous acts of Irene in his Council a little before. Briefly, concerning the antiquity of Images, when Bishops began to cease from preaching in Churches, then Images began to be set up. (c) It is not like for Non facies sculptile, that is, Moral; De immundis, is but Ceremonial.

Munday, that was creeped unto on Good-Friday. In specialties there have been special abuses; but generally, Images have been taken for Images, with an (a) office to signifie an holy remembrance of Christ and his Saints. And as the sound of speech uttered by a lively Image, and representing to the understanding, by the sense of hearing godly matter, doth stir up the mind, and therewith the body, to consent in outward gesture of worshipful regard to that sound: (b) so doth the object of the Image, by the Sight work like effect in Man, within and without, wherein is verily worshipped that we understand, and yet reverence and worship also shewed to that whereby we attain that understanding, and is to us in the place of an Instrument: so as it hath no worship of it self, but remaineth in his nature of Stone or Timber, Silver, Copper, or Gold. But when it is in office and worketh a godly remembrance in us, by representation of the thing signified unto us, then we use it worshipfully, and honourably, as many do the (c) Priest at Mass, whom they little regard all the day after. And me thinketh ever, that like as it is an over-gross error to take an Image for God, or to worship it with godly (d) honour; so to grant that we may not have Images of Christ, and that we may do no worship before them, or not use them worshipfully, it is inexplicable. For it is one kind of worship to place them worshipfully. So as if a Man place an Image in the Church, or hang it about his Neck, as (e) all use to do the Image of the Cross, and the Knights of the Order of (f) St. George, this is some piece of worship. And if we may not contemn the Images of Christ and his Saints, when we have them (for that were villany) nor neglect them (for that were to have them without use:) which were inconvenient (quia nec natura nec arte quicquam fit frustra) we must have them in estimation and reputation, which is not without some honour and worship, and at the least in the place where we conveniently use them, as in the Church, as where they serve us, rather than we them; and because their (g) service is worshipful, they be so regarded accordingly for that time of service, and therefore they be called Venerabiles Imagines, and be worshipfully ordered, before whom we kneel, and bow, and cense, not at that the Images be, but at that the Images signifie, which in our kneeling, bowing, and censing we knowledge to understand and read in that fashion of contract-writing, wherein is wrapped up a great many of sentences, suddainly opened with one suddain sight, to him that hath been exercised in reading of them: And me seemeth, after the Faith of Christ received and known, and throughly purged from Heresies, if by chance there were offered a choice, either to retain Painting and Graving and forbear Writing, or chusing Writing to forbear both the other Gifts; it would be a Problem, seeing if Graving were taken away we could have no Printing. And therefore they that pres. so much the words of Non facies tibi sculptile, ever me thinketh they condemn Printed Books, the Original whereof is of Graving to make (h) matrices literarum. Sed hoc est furiosum, & sunt tamen qui putant palmarium. And therefore now it is Englished, Thou shalt make no Graven Images, lest thou worship them. Which (I hear) is newly written in the new Church, I know not the name, but not far from the Old Jury. But to the matter of Images, wherein I have discoursed at large, I think, if ye consider (as I doubt not but that ye will) the Doctrine set forth by our late Sovereign Lord, ye shall in the matter see the truth set forth by such as had that committed unto them under his Highness, amongst whom I was not, nor was I privy unto it till it was done. And yet the Clause in the Book, for discussion of (the Lord) and (our Lord) hath made many think otherwise. But I take our Lord to witness, I was not; and that declaration of (our Lord) was his Highness own device, ex se. For he saw the fond Englishing of (the Lord) disseverd in speech, whom our Lord had congregate. And this I add, lest giving authority to that Book, I should seem to vaunt my self.

KING Edw. 6

Now will I speak somewhat of Holy Water, wherein I send unto you the four and thirtieth Chapter in the Ninth Book of the History Tripartite, where Marcellus the Bishop bade Equitius his Deacon to cast abroad Water by him first hallowed wherewith to drive away the Devil. And it is noted how the Devil could not abide the vertue of the Water, but vanished away. And for my part, it seemeth the History may be true; for we be assured by Scripture, that in the Name of God the Church is able and strong to cast out Devils, according to the Gospel, In nomine meo dæmonia ejicient, &c. So as if the Water were away, by only calling on the Name of God that mastery may be wrought. And the vertue of the effect being only attributed to the Name of God, the question should be only, whether the creature of Water may have the office to convey the effect of the Holiness of the Invocation of Gods Name. And first in Christ, the skirt of his Garment had such an Office to Minister health to the Woman, and Spittle and Clay to the Blind, and St. Peter's Shadow, and St. Paul's Handkerchers. And leaving old Stories, here at home the special Gift of Curation, Ministred by the Kings of this Realm, not of their own strength but by Invocation of the Name of God, hath been used to be distributed in Rings of Gold and Silver. And I think effectually therein the Metal hath only an Office, and the strength is in the Name of God wherein all is wrought. And Eliseus put his Staff in like office. And why the whole Church might not put Water in like office, to convey abroad the Invocation of Gods Name, there is no Scripture to the contrary, but there is Scripture how other inferior Creatures have been promoted to like Dignity, and much Scripture, how Water hath been used in like and greater service. And the Story I send unto you sheweth how Water hath been used in the same service to drive away Devils. In which matter if any shall say, he believeth not the Story, and he is not bound to believe it, being no Scripture; that Man is not to be reasoned with, for the effect of the Kings Cramp Rings. And yet for such effect as they have wrought, when I was in France, I have been my self much honoured; and of all sorts intreated to have them, with offer of as much for them, as they were double worth. Some will say, What are Rings to Holy Water? Marry thus I say, (a) If the Metal of Gold and Silver may do service to carry abroad the Invocation of the Name of God effectually for one purpose, Water may also serve to carry abroad the Invocation of the Name of God, wherewith to drive away Devils. Hereto will be said, Non valet argumentum a posse ad esse. But the Story saith, The Water did that service; and other strangers say and affirm by experience, The Kings Majesties Rings have done the service. And our late Master continued all his life the exercise of that Gift of God, and used Silver and Gold to do that service to carry abroad the strength of the Invocation of the Name of God by him, and he used it amongst us that served him in it, when he had throughly heard and seen what might be said in the matter, and yet he had no Scripture especially for it, that spake of Rings of Silver or Gold, no more than is for the Ashes Ministred a little before ye last preached. And Holy Water. Consecration of Water and Salt to sanctifie the people, is attributed to Alexander the first, but what credit is to be given to those Decrees falsly fathered upon those ancients, may read Sleid. lib. 2. de Monarch. In nomine meo, &c. If the name of Christ only do and can serve to cast out Devils, what should Water do, where Christ only may and should serve to work that mastery?

(a) The Kings Ring giveth Sanation, ergo Holy Water may have also his effect and operation. Resp. Non valet consequentia, for the matching of corporal things with spiritual joyneth in no comparison together, but the very plain answer is this, [illegible] be a-[illegible], and against the Word of God. Winchesters Argument.

(a) If things having the office to signifie and work in us the understanding of Christ and Holy things, are therefore to be worshipped, censed, and crept unto, why then do ye not worship the Preacher, the Bible-Book, the Epistler and Gospeller, which give a much more lively understanding to our minds, of Holy and Heavenly things, than Images do?

(b) The Argument of winchester reverted against himself: for if Gods Word and such other sounds giving a lively understanding to us, yet be not had in such a worshipful regard, that any doth cense them, or creep and offer to them: Ergo, much less should you do the same to these your dead and insensible Images.

(c) One Idol well compared with another.

(d) Because you say that Godly honour, or cultus divinus, is taken away by you from Images. I pray you what could ye do to God, if he were here materially himself, more than ye do to them? to cense them, to candle them, to tabernacle them, to set them up in Churches, to adore and invocate them, to kneel and knock to them, to creep and offer to them, to seek vertue, and to require health at them, to make them your Patrons, and to make your Vows unto them, &c. If this be not Divinus cultus, tell me what give you to God more than this?

(e) All Papists perchance.

(f) Yea, but what Knight of that order kneeleth or prayeth to that George that hangeth about his Neck?

(g) A worshipful service, to dis-worship God, and worship creatures.

You said before they were Lay-mens Book, now ye make them learned Mens Books also, wherein you read (ye say) many things at one opening. And what read you, or see you in those Books, I pray you? nimirum id quod pueri vident in nubibus. And where be you bid to look upon these fantastical Books? Scrutamini Scripturas, saith the Lord: Contemplamini picturas, writeth Winchester. But rather Winchester should have read the Book of Epiphanius, contra Encratitas, where these words be opened to him, Non decet Christianum per oculos suspensum teneri, sed per occupationem mentis, &c.

(h) If ye did see any Printer yet to do worship to his Graven Letters, then might ye well seek thus as ye do, a knot in a Rush.

KING Ed. 6. And as our young Soveraign Lord hath received them reverently, so I trust he shall be advertised, ne negligat gratiam Dei in dono curationum, but follow his Father therein; also not doubting but God will hear him as he hath heard his Father, and other his Progenitors Kings of this Realm, to whose Dignity God addeth this Prerogative, as he doth also to inferior Ministers of his Church, in the effect of their Prayer, when it pleaseth him. A man might find some youngling percase that would say, How worldly, wily, witty Bishops, have inveigled simple Kings heretofore, and, to confirm their Blessings, have also devised how Kings should Bless also, and so Authority to maintain where truth failed; and I have had it objected to me, that I used to prove one piece of mine Argument ever by a King, as when I reasoned thus: If ye allow nothing but Scripture, What say you to the Kings Rings? but they be allowed, Ergo, somewhat is to be allowed besides Scripture. And another, if Images be forbidden, (b) Why doth the King wear S. George on his breast? but he weareth S. George on his breast: Ergo, Images be not forbidden. If Saints be not to be worshipped; why keep (c) we Saint Georges Feast? But we keep St. Georges Feast, Ergo, &c. And in this matter of Holy Water, if the strength of the Invocation of the name of God, to drive away the Devils, cannot be distributed by Water; why can it be distributed in Silver to drive away Diseases, and the dangerous Disease of the Falling Evil? But the Rings hallowed by the Holy Church may do so. Ergo, the Water hallowed by the Church may do like service. These were sore Arguments in his time, and I trust be also yet, and may be conveniently used, to such as would never make an end of talk, but rake up every thing that their dull sight cannot penetrate, wherein me thought ye spake effectually; when ye said, Men must receive the determination of the particular Church, and obey where Gods Law repugneth not expressly. And in this effect to drive away Devils, that Prayer and Invocation of the Church may do it, Scripture maintaineth evidently, and the same Scripture doth authorise us so to pray, and incourageth us to it. So as if, in dicussion of Holy Water, we attribute all the effect of the Holiness which proceedeth from God by Invocation of the Church, and take Water only for a Servant to carry abroad Holiness; there can be no Superstition, where men regard only Prayer, which Scripture authoriseth: and if we shall say that the Water cannot do such service, we shall be convinced, in that it doth a greater service in our Baptism by Gods special (d) Ordinance. So as we cannot say, that Water cannot, or is not apt to do this Service; only the stay is, to have a precise place in the New Testament, to say, Use Water thus in this service, as we do in Holy water, which me thinketh needeth not, where all is ordered to be well used by us: and when the whole Church agreed upon such an use, or any particular Church, or the common Minister of it, and by the Exorcism ordered for it, the thing to be used, purged, there can be but slender matter to improve that custom, wherein God is only honored, and the power of his Name set forth, whereunto all things bow and give place, all natural operation set apart and secluded. And when any man hath denied that water may do service, because Scripture appointeth it not, that (because) driveth away much of the rest which the Church useth, and especially our Gramp-rings. For if water may not serve to carry (e) abroad the effects of Gods Grace, obtained by Invocation from God, by the Common Prayer of the Church: How can the metal of Silver or Gold carry abroad the effect of the Kings Invocation in the Cramp-rings? which manner of reasoning (ad hominem) Christ used with the Jews, when he said, Si ego in Belzebub ejicio Dæmonia, filii vestri, in quo ejiciunt? And by our own Principles we should be enforced to say, that our (f) Cramp-rings be superstition (where Truth inforceth us not so to do) it were a marvellous punishment. Si cæci essemus (as Christ saith) peccatum non haberemus, sed videmus, and this Realm hath Learning in it, and you a good portion thereof, according whereunto I doubt not but you will weigh this matter, non ad popularem trutinam, sed artificis stateram. I mean, that Artificer which teacheth the Church our Mother (as ye fully declared it) and ordered our Mother to give nourishment unto us. In which point speaking of the Church, although ye touched an unknown Church to us, and known to God only, yet you declared the union of that Church in the permixt Church, which God ordereth men to complain unto, and to hear again, wherein the absurdity is taken away of them that would have no Church known, but every man believe as he were inwardly taught himself, whereupon followeth the old Proverb, Σοὶ μὲν ταῦτα δοκεῖντ' ἔστι ἐμοὶ δὲ πάλαι. Which is far from the unity ye so earnestly wished for, whereof (as me thought) ye said Pride is the let, as it is undoubtedly, which fault God amend, and give you Grace so to fashion your words, as ye may agree with them in speech, with whom ye be inclined to agree in opinion. For that is the way to relieve the World. And albeit there hath been between you and me no familiarity, but contrariwise a little disagreement (which I did not hide from you) yet considering the fervent zeal ye professed to teach (g) Peters true Doctrine, that is to say, Christs true Doctrine, whereunto ye thought the Doctrine of Images and Holy-water, to put away Devils, agreed not, I have willingly spent this time to communicate unto you my folly (if it be folly) (h) plainly as it is, whereupon ye may have occasion the more substantially, fully and plainly to open these matters for the relief of such as be faln from the Truth, and confirmation of those that receive and follow it, wherein it hath been ever much commended, to have such regard to Histories of credit, and the continual use of the Church (i) rather to shew how a thing continued from the beginning, as Holy-water and Images have done, may be well used, than to follow the light rash Eloquence, which is ever ad manum, to mock and improve that is established. And yet again, I come to Marcellus that made a Cross in the water, and bad his Deacon cast it abroad (k) cum fide & zelo; after which sort if our Holy-water were used, I doubt not but there be many Marcellus, and many Elizeus, and many at whose prayer God forgiveth sin, if such as will enjoy that Prayer have Faith and Zeal, as Equitius, and were as desirous to drive the Devil out of the Temple of their Body and Soul, as Equitius out of the Temple of Jupiter. So as if holy use were coupled with holy water, there should be more plenty of Holiness than there is; but as men be prophane in their living, so they cannot abide to have any thing effectually holy, not so much as Bread and Water, fearing lest they should take away sin from us, which we love so dearly well. Solus Christus peccata diluit, who sprinkleth his Blood by his Ministers, as he hath taught his Spouse the Church, in which those Ministers be ordered, wherein many ways maketh not many Saviours, as Ignorants do jest, whereof I need not speak further unto you, no more I needed not in the rest in respect of you; but, me thought, ye conjured all Men in your Sermon to say what they thought to you, Id quod hanc mihi expressit epistolam, quam boni consules, Et vale.

Your loving Friend,

Stephen Winchester.

(b) The King would not wear S. George upon his breast if Images were forbidden. The King weareth S. George upon his brest, ergo Images are not forbidden.

Resp. This Argument, besides that it standeth ex puris particularibus, whereby it may be denyed; in the Major also there is a double understanding in this word Images, whether it be taken indefinitely or particularly. If the later part of the Major be taken universally for all Images both in Churches and in private houses, used or worn in Garments, then the first part is false. If particularly for such only as be set up in Churches, then the Conclusion, whether it be universal, maketh a false Argument, ex 4. terminis: Or if it be particular, it may be granted, and hurteth nothing our Doctrine; for we speak only against the Images set up in Churches, not against the other.

(c) S. Georges Feast is kept, Ergo, Saints are to be worshipped.

Resp. A like Argument: Lammas Fair is kept, Ergo, Lambs are to be worshipped.

(d) The Water of Baptism hath an express ordinance, where Holy water hath none.

(e) Christ useth not now in his Church dumb Creatures of Gold and Silver, &c. but Ministers by the lively minstring of his Word to carry abroad his Grace.

(f) Cramp-rings and Holy-water both together in like case of abuse and superstition.

(g) After Peters Doctrine, the blood of Christ only purgeth us from all sins. Ergo, what should Holy-water do?

(h) Plainly as it is, his Pen will not let him lie.

(i) The beginning of Holy-Water came first from the Gentiles, who used to sprinkle aqua lustrali standing at the door upon such as went into the Temple.

(k) Cum fide & zelo, Sorcerers and Conjurers, with such a wrong faith joyned to dumb Creatures, may and do with like reason call up Devils, as Holy-Water may drive them away.

AS I have set forth here (gentle Reader) the cavilling Letter of Winchester against M. Ridleys Sermon; so am I right sorry, that I have not likewise the Answer of the said Ridley again to joyn withal. For I understand, that not only Master Ridley, but also Master Barlow, Bishop of Saint Davids (for Winchester wrote against them both) had written and sent immediately their Answers to the same, refuting the frivolous and unsavory Reasons of this Popish Prelate, as may well appear by a parcel additional of a Letter ſent by the Lord Protector to the ſaid Biſhop in theſe words:

And becauſe we have begun to write to you, we are put in remembrance of a certain Letter or Book which you wrote unto us againſt the Biſhop of Saint David's Sermon, and Doctor Ridley's, to the which anſwer being immediately made, It was by negligence of us forgotten to be ſent. Now we both ſend you that, and alſo the Anſwer which the Biſhop of Saint David's wrote to the ſame Book of yours.

This Article toucheth other mens Acts, who or how they have complained and informed, I cannot throughly tell. For at the time of the Kings Majeſties Viſitation I was in the Fleet, and the morrow after Twelfth day I was delivered at Hampton Court, my Lord of Somerſet, and my Lord of Canterbury then being in Council, with many other Councellors, and was delivered by theſe words: The Kings Majeſty hath granted a General Pardon, and by the benefit thereof I was diſcharged: whereunto I anſwered, That I was learned never to refuſe the Kings Majeſties Pardon, and in ſtrength as that was: And I would and did humbly thank his Majeſty therefore, and then they began with me in an Article of Learning, touching Juſtification, whereunto they willed me to ſay my mind; adding therewith, that becauſe other Learned had agreed to a Form delivered unto me, I ſhould not think I could alter it: which I received of them, and promiſed the Thurſday after to repair to my Lord of Somerſets Houſe at Sheene, with my mind written; which I did, and at that day ſeven night following, appearing before him and other of the Council, was committed to my Houſe for Priſoner, becauſe I refuſed to ſubſcribe to the form of Words and Sentences that other had agreed unto, as they ſaid. In which time of Impriſonment in my Houſe, the Biſhop of Rocheſter then being ſent to me, and after Mr. Smith, and then Mr. Cecil; to which Mr. Cecil, when I had by Learning reſolved my mind in the matter, I delivered it; and he delivering it to my Lords Grace, wrote me, in his name, thanks for it; and then it was within the time of Lent, ere I was diſcharged of that trouble, and ſo went to Wincheſter, as a man clearly out of all travel of buſineſs.

Wincheſter releaſed out of the Fleet by the Kings general Pardon.

The Article of Juſtification put to Wincheſter.

Wincheſter Priſoner in his own Houſe.

Wincheſter denyeth to ſubſcribe to the Articles of Juſtification.

Mr. Cecil ſent to Wincheſter.

Wincheſter again let free.

And within fourteen days after that, or thereabouts, began other travel with me, upon a requeſt made by my Lord of Sommerſet to ſurrender a College in Cambridge, and divers Letters were written between his Grace and me in it. Wherein I might perceive the Secretary with his Pen took occaſion to prick me more, than I truſted my Lords Grace himſelf would have done. And by this trouble was I deduced to an end. Then ſhortly after I received Letters to come to the Council, and by reaſon I alledged my diſeaſe, I was reſpited by other Letters, and three days before Whitſontide received yet other Letters to come, by which it might ſeem unto me, that it was not of all believed that I was diſeaſed. And therefore with all expedition, when I could not ride, I came in an Horſe-litter, and according to my duty preſented my ſelf to my Lords of the Council, who all then entertained me ſecretly among them before the matters were objected unto me, as if I had been in the ſame place with them that I was in our late Sovereign Lords days. Afterwards my Lord of Somerſet's Grace charged me with theſe Matters following, and in this form, having the Articles written in a Paper.

Wincheſter ſent for to the Council.

Wincheſter ſick.

Wincheſter cometh at laſt in a Horſelitter.

First, with diſobedience, that I came not at his ſending for. Whereunto I anſwered, That I had his Letters of Licenſe to ſtay till I might come conveniently. And upon theſe laſt Letters I came incontinently in a Horſe-litter.

Wincheſter charged with diſobedience.

Then it was objected, That I bare Palms, and crept to the Groſs. Whereto I anſwered, That they were miſinformed, and I truſted they would not think I durſt deny it, if I had done it, becauſe Ceremonies had ſuch circumſtances, as I might eaſily be reproved if it were otherwiſe.

Then it was objected, That at Eaſter I had a ſolemn Sepulchre in the Church, and ſuch other Ceremonies. I anſwered, That I had even as many as the Kings Majeſties {KING Ewd.6} jeſties Proclamations commanded me: declaring plainly, That I thought it not expedient to make any alteration, wherein to offend the Kings Majeſties Proclamation; adding, how he that followeth as he is commanded, is very obedient.

Wincheſter charged to deface certain of the Kings Chaplains.

It was then objected unto me, That I went about to deface two of the Kings Majeſties Chaplains, ſent down to be Canons of the Church of Wincheſter. Whereunto I anſwered, declaring the Fact truly as it was, which I am yet able to juſtifie. After this matter thus oft objected and anſwered, I was commanded to go apart, and being called in again, my Lord of Somerſets Grace looking upon a Bill of Articles, ſaid, I had preached how the Apoſtles went from the preſence of the Council, of the Council, of the Council; which matter I denied, adding, That it was not my faſhion of Preaching, ſo to play in iteration of words.

Real Preſence.

After that, it was objected unto me for Preaching of the Sacrament, to ſay, The Body of Chriſt was really preſent, being a fault to uſe the word Really, not compriſed in the Scripture. Whereunto I anſwered, That I did not uſe the word Really, which needeth not. For as I once heard my Lord of Canterbury reaſon againſt one Lambert, in the preſence of the Kings Majeſty that dead is; the words of the Scripture, This is my Body that ſhall be betrayed for you, do plainly and lively expreſs the very Preſence, and ſo did I ſet it forth to the People in my Dioceſs.

And this is the effect of all that was ſaid againſt me at my being at the Council, as I can remember. To whom I declared how much I eſteemed obedience, and told them, I had taught in my Dioceſs how the whole life of a Chriſtian man conſiſteth in ſuffering properly; and therefore we may not do our own will, but the will of God: and among men, we muſt either ſuffer the Rulers will, or their power; their will to order us, and their power to puniſh us. After declaration whereof, my Lord of Somerſet ſaid, Ye muſt tarry in the Town. Whereunto I anſwered, I would be contented at their commandment or pleaſure to tarry; but ſeeing I was no Offender, I deſired them I might not tarry as an Offender: and for declaration thereof, that I might have ſome Houſe in the Country about London, to remove unto for a ſhift. In deviſing whereof, I ſtack much to borrow Aſſhar. My Lord of Somerſet ſaid, if he had any, in faith he would lend me one. And in the end, my Lord of Somerſet deſired me to write what my mind was in Ceremonies, and to ſend it unto him, and with that departed.

Wincheſter commanded to tarry at London.

Wincheſter commanded to write his mind of Ceremonies.

Thus I have truly opened after what ſort I have been complained on, that hath certainly come to my knowledge: Truth it is, that one Philpot in Weſtminſter, whom I accounted altered in his wits (as I have heard) deviſed tales of me, the ſpecialties whereof I never was called to anſwer unto. Players and Minſtrels alſo railed on me, and other made Ballads and Rhymes of me, but never Man had juſt cauſe to complain of any my ſayings, doings, or preachings, or to my knowledge did, otherwiſe than afore. And if any man ſhall put me in remembrance of any other complaint that might in my abſence be made of me, if I have heard it, I will grant ſo. But well aſſured I am, I was never complained on, and called to make anſwer to the complaint, but this one time in all my whole life by any man of any degree. Once the Lord Cromwel, God pardon his Soul and forgive him, cauſed one day and a half to be ſpent in a matter between Sir Francis Brian and me, which was ended, and I declared an honeſt man, which the Kings Majeſty that is dead, God pardon his Soul, ſet forth with his familiarity to me incontinently. And this is all the trouble that I have had in my life, ſaving the ſending to the Fleet, being occaſioned by my own Letter to the Council, upon a zeal that I had, which they allowed not. And finally, this ſending of me to the Tower, which was without calling me before the Council, to hear what I could ſay. I am loth to be forſworn, and therefore I account all the complaints in my whole life made againſt me whereunto I have been made privy.

Mr. Philpot complained upon of Wincheſter.

Wincheſter when and how oft he hath been called to ſworn.

The ſeventh Article.

Item, That after and upon occaſion of thoſe and many other Complaints and Informations, you have been ſundry times admoniſhed, commanded and enjoyned to conform your ſelf, as to your duty appertained.

Wincheſter admoniſhed to conform himſelf.

Wincheſter.

To this ſeventh Article I anſwer, I was never called afore the Council by way of outward Complaint and Information, but only once in all my whole life, which was at my laſt coming to London. Whereunto I anſwered as afore, and have told the form and proceſs of Speech to ſerve for furniture of anſwer to this and that Article: for other than I have before written, I remember not to have done or ſuffered by the higher Powers in all my whole life, till my coming into the Tower, without that I have had any by Admonitions, as a man faulty or negligent at any time, that I remember not, for the obſervation of any thing already made or ſet forth by the Kings Majeſty that now is, but have kept, and cauſed to be kept to my power, the Kings Majeſties Acts, Statutes, Injunctions and Proclamations, inviolably, having for that purpoſe ſuch a Chancellor, as in Orders and Ordinances hath been always himſelf diligent and preciſe, for that time I might have knowledge of his doings.

The eighth Article.

Item, That after the premiſes, and for that thoſe former Admonitions and Commandments notwithſtanding, you did yet ſtill ſhew your ſelf not conformable, and for that alſo others by your example were much animated, and thereby occaſion of much unquietneſs miniſtred among the people, you were called before the Kings Majeſties Council in the month of June, in the ſecond year of his Majeſties Reign, and by them on his Majeſties behalf commanded to Preach a Sermon before his Majeſty, and therein to declare the juſtneſs and godlineſs of his Majeſties Father, in his proceedings upon certain matters partly mentioned in certain Articles to you delivered in Writing, and partly otherwiſe declared unto you.

Wincheſter enjoyned by the Kings Council to Preach the ſecond year of the Kings Reign.

The effect whereof, was, touching the uſurped Power and Authority of the Biſhop of Rome, that the ſame was juſtly and godly taken away in this Realm, and other the Kings Majeſties Dominions, touching the juſt ſuppreſſing and taking away of Monaſteries and Religious Houſes, of Pilgrimages, Relicks, Shrines, Images.

Certain points enjoyned to Wincheſter to Preach upon.

The Superſtitious going about of Saint Nicholas Biſhop, Saint Edmund, Saint Katharine, Saint Clement, and ſuch like; and juſt taking away of Chauntries, Abbies and Colledges, hallowing of Candles, Water, Aſhes, Palm, Holy Bread, Beads, creeping to the Croſs, and ſuch like.

Alſo touching the ſetting forth of the Kings Majeſties Authority in his young years, to be as great as if his Highneſs were of many more years.

That Auricular Confeſſion is indifferent, and of no neceſſity by the Law of God; and touching the Proceſſion and Common Prayer in Engliſh.

Wincheſter.

This Article being of ſo many parts as it is, ſome true, ſome otherwiſe, muſt be anſwered by diviſion of it into divers members, to divide the one from the other, granting that which is true, denying that which is otherwiſe, and opening that which is ambiguous, avoiding that which is captious; ſo as, according to my Oath, I may open directly and plainly the truth, with ſincerity of Conſcience. The motion of Preaching was made unto me in mine own houſe by Mr. Cecil, upon the Duke of Somerſets behalf, after I had been before the Council, as I have before ſaid; from which Council I departed (as before is rehearſed) as no offendor; and therefore when Mr. Cecil ſpake to me of Preaching before the Kings Majeſty, with requeſt to write my Sermon before, I denyed that manner of Preaching, becauſe I ſaid it was to Preach like an Offender, and I was none, but departed from the Council otherwiſe, as I have before ſhewed. And the ſaid Mr. Cecil did not ſay to me that I was moved to Preach, becauſe I was not Conformable; for I had at that time no manner of variance with the Council, but was in all Conformity with them, for any thing that I know, as I will anſwer afore God.

Mr. Cecil.

As for evil Example to any man, I could none give, for I never offended Law, Statute, or Proclamation in this Realm, nor did ever any act to the empairing of due obedience to the Kings Majeſty in all my whole life; but by obſervation of them, and letting Innovations, have done as much as in me lay to maintain obedience.

Wincheſter refuſeth to Preach by other mens Papers and Preſcriptions, and yet he after ward would preſcribe other men by Papers what they ſhould Preach, againſt all conſcience and honeſty.

After Maſter Cecil had ſpoken to me of Preaching, and delivered two Papers containing the Matters whereupon I ſhould entreat, becauſe I refuſed to give my Sermon in Writing (which was to me like an Offender) or to read thoſe Papers of another mans device, as the conception and ſincere manner of uttering of mine own Conſcience (which me thought then and ſince, and yet, a marvellous unreaſonable matter) touching both my conſcience and honeſty. I was then fet to the Duke of Somerſets Graces chamber, and came in at a back door to himſelf alone, ſaving he took to him as Witneſs he ſaid, the Lord now of Wiltſhire, then great Maſter; and after many Words, he ſhewed me certain Articles ſubſcribed by Lawyers, what a Biſhop might command, and what the King might command, and what pain to the Diſobeyer.

Wincheſters anſwer to the Duke of Somerſet.

To whom I ſaid plainly and truly, how thoſe Lawyers ſubſcription could not ſerve in this caſe to command me to utter to the People, for mine own device in words, that which is not indeed ſo; and if I might ſpeak with theſe Lawyers (I ſaid) his Grace ſhould ſoon perceive them to agree with me. My Lord ſaid, I ſhould ſpeak with no man, and I ſhould do as I was bidden, or do worſe, and bad me adviſe me till Dinner was done. And then was I conveyed by the Lord great Maſter to his Chamber, and there left alone to Dine, as was indeed honorably prepared. But I took my ſelf to be in the nature of a Priſoner, and a reſtrained man.

Sir Thomas Smith Secretary.

And about two of the Clock at Afternoon, came unto me Maſter Thomas Smith, then Secretary, unto whom I complained of the unreaſonableneſs of the matter, and ſhewed him certain particularities; who ſaid it was not meant ſo preciſely, but to ſpeak of the matters. To whom I ſaid, I was content to ſpeak of the matters, and then if I ſpeak not according to the truth of them, there ſhould be enough to bear witneſs to my condemnation; and if I ſpeak the truth, then they had their deſire. And I ſaid further, I thought I might with my conſcience ſay ſo as men ought and ſhould be content and ſatisfied. And further, if I thought that in my manner of the uttering of thoſe matters, I ſhould offend the Council, I had rather deny to ſpeak of the thing, and begin the contention ſecretly with them, than to begin with Pulpit, and ſo bring my ſelf in further trouble than needed; and therefore if they would have me Preach, I would Preach as of my ſelf, and of theſe matters, ſo as I thought they ſhould be content.

Whereupon I was brought up to my Lord of Somerſets Chamber, and there the matter ended thus, That my Lord of Somerſet ſaid, he would require no writing of me, but remit it to me, ſo I ſpake of the matters in the Papers delivered me by Maſter Cecil. I told him I would ſpeak of them, ſaving for Childrens toys, of going about of Saint Nicolas, and Saint Clement. If that be now gon (quoth I) and forgotten, if I be too buſie in rehearſal of them, they will ſay I cumber their heads with Ceremonies, and thus they will defame me. When Ceremonies were plenty, they will ſay, I did nothing but preach on them, and now they be gon, I babble of them ſtill. I ſaid I would teach the chief Points, adding, that I would ſpeak of other matters alſo, and with that, being put to my liberty to chooſe the day, departed; and otherwiſe I was not ſpoken with concerning Preaching, ſaving after Mr. Cecil came unto me, whereof I ſhall ſpeak anon.

...beſter ...keth here ſubtilly.

And concerning the matters to be ſpoken of, all ſuch things as be here rehearſed, be named in the Papers delivered unto me, although not altogether after this ſort; ſaving the ſetting forth of the Kings Majeſties Authority in his Minority, whereof there is no word in thoſe Papers, nor was there ever any promiſe made of me to ſpeak of it. Truth it is, that after I had ſignified the day when I would Preach, Maſter Cecil came unto me, making the chief Meſſage to know the day when I would Preach: to whom I had ſent word before, that it ſhould be Saint Peters day, becauſe me thought the Goſpel ſerved well for that purpoſe, and in proceſs of Communication, he told me, That he liked gaily well a word that I had ſaid in another Communication, How a King was as much a King at one year of age, as at an hundred years of age, and if I touched it, he thought it would be well taken. I told him again, every man knew that, and then opened of my ſelf the Matter further. And at his next repair unto me, which was the Monday before I Preached, the ſaid Maſter Cecil brought me Papers of the Kings Majeſties hand, ſhewing me how the Kings Highneſs uſed to note every notable Sentence, and ſpecially if it touched a King; and therefore (quoth he) if ye ſpeak of a King, ye muſt joyn Counſel withal. Whereunto I made no Anſwer, but ſhifted to other matter, without making him any promiſe or denyal, becauſe I would neither bind my ſelf, nor trouble my ſelf to diſcuſs that matter. For albeit it is godly and wiſely done of every Prince to uſe Counſel; yet ſpeaking of a Kings Power by Scripture, I cannot by expreſs Scripture limit the Kings Power by Counſel. And hearing blindly by report ſome ſecret matter, that I will not ſpeak of here, I thought not to meddle with it at all in the Pulpit; and yet to the effect, to have our Sovereign Lord now obeyed, of which mind I was ever, I pointed to our Sovereign Lord there in preſence, and ſaid, He was only to be obeyed, and I would have but one King, and other words to that purpoſe. But for any promiſe to be made by me, I utterly deny it, and tell plainly the cauſe why I ſpake not otherwiſe of it. There was alſo in the Papers delivered unto me, occaſion given me to ſpeak of the Maſs, becauſe of Maſſes ſatisfactory, as ſome underſtand them. And alſo there was occaſion to ſpeak of the Sacrament of the Altar, becauſe of the Proclamation paſſed of the ſame, which to be true, I ſhall juſtifie by the ſaid Papers.

Wincheſters opinion of the Kings minority.

M. Cecils repair again to Wincheſter.

Wincheſter maketh dangerous ſpeaking of the King, to joyn counſel withal.

The ninth Article.

Item, That you receiving the ſame, and promiſing to declare the ſame in a Sermon by you made before His Majeſty for that purpoſe, on the Feaſt of S. Peter, in the ſaid ſecond Year of his Reign, did then and there contemptuouſly and diſobediently omit to declare and ſet forth many of the ſaid matters; and of divers other of the ſaid Articles you ſpake and uttered your mind in ſuch doubtful ſort, as the Juſtneſs and Godlineſs of His Majeſties Fathers, and his Proceedings, was not ſet forth according to the Commandment given unto you, and your own promiſe, to the great offence of the Hearers, and manifeſt contempt of his Majeſty, and dangerous example of others.

Wincheſter.

Touching that Promiſe, I anſwer as afore; and as touching omiſſion of that I ſhould have ſpoken of, by contempt or diſobedience, I anſwer by mine Oath, I did not omit any thing (if I did omit it) by contempt or diſobedience; for I ever minded to ſatisfie the promiſe, to ſpeak of all matters in thoſe Papers according to my former Declaration. And if I did percaſe omit any thing (whereof I can make now no aſſurance, it being two years and a half paſt ſince I Preached) but if I did omit any thing, he who knew my travel in the matter, would not marvel, being troubled with a Letter ſent from the Duke of Somerſet, whereof I ſhall ſpeak after. So as from four of the clock on Thurſday, till I had done my Sermon on the Friday, I did neither drink, eat, ne ſleep, ſo careful was I to paſs over the travel of Preaching without all ſlander of the Truth, and with ſatisfaction of my Promiſe, and diſcharge of my Duty to God and the Kings moſt excellent Majeſty. Wherein, whether any thing were omitted or not, I could have anſwered more preciſely than I can now, if according to my moſt inſtant ſute, and the ſute of my ſervants, the matter had been heard while it was in freſh memory. But becauſe omiſſion may be by infirmity of Nature, in which oblivion is a pain of our Original Sin, in which caſe it is no mortal offence, if a man being put in remembrance will purge it; I therefore, according to the true Teſtimony of mine own conſcience, dare the more boldly deny all contempt and diſobedience, having for my Declaration a general Sentence ſpoken in my Sermon, that I agreed with the upper part in their Laws, Orders and Commandments, or ſuch like words, and found fault only in the lower part. By which Sentence it appeared, how I allowed in the whole that was paſt hitherto, and only diſſented from the doings of them that attempt Innovations of their own preſumption. And furthermore I ſay, That that Saying (Omiſſion) here objected unto me, if it were true, as I know it not to be, may happen two ways, one way by infirmity of Nature, another way of purpoſe. Charity of a Chriſtian man permitteth not to determine the worſt of that which is doubtful and ambiguous to both Parties: as touching doubtfulneſs Objected, I take God to record, I minded to ſpeak ſimply, and to be on the Kings Majeſties ſide only, and not to go inviſible in the World with ambiguities, eſteeming him, &c. The worſt man of all, is he that will make himſelf a lock of words and ſpeech, which is known not to be my faſhion, nor do I think this Life worth that diſſimulation; and how can that be a doubtful Speech in him, that profeſſeth to agree with the Kings Laws, Injunctions and Statutes, which I did expreſly? There be that call in doubt whatſoever ſerveth not their appetite. It is not in the ſpeaker to ſatisfie the hearer, that will doubt where doubt is not. The ſum of my Teaching was, that all viſible Things be ordered to ſerve us, which we may in convenient ſervice uſe. And when we ſerve them, that is an abuſe, and may then, at the Rulers pleaſure, unleſs Scripture appointeth a ſpecial uſe of them, be corrected in that uſe, or taken away for Reformation. And this is a plain Teaching that hath no doubt in it, but a yea and a nay on both ſides, without a mean to make a Doubt. And if any that doubteth cometh unto me, I will reſolve him the Doubt as I can. And if I promiſed to ſpeak plainly, or am commanded to ſpeak plainly, and cannot, then is my fault to Promiſe only in the nature of Folly and Ignorance, whereunto I reſort not for a ſhift, whereof indeed I profeſs the knowledge, but to ſhew how ſometime to my hindrance I am noted Learned, that can ſpeak plainly, and yet ſpeak doubtfully; otherwhiles am rejected as one that underſtandeth not the matter at all. As touching contempt, there can be none manifeſt that proceedeth of a privy Promiſe; if I had broken it, I intended not, but intended to take it as appeareth by my general Sentence, to agree with the Superiors, and only find fault in the Inferior Subjects, who daily tranſgreſs the Kings Majeſties Proclamations, and other, whereof I ſpake then.

Anſwer to the 10. Article. M. Cecil.

To the tenth Article the ſaid Biſhop anſwered, That the Wedneſday at After-noon, next before the Friday when I Preached, Mr. Cecil came to me, and having in all his other Acceſſes ſpoken no word thereof, did then utter and adviſe me from the Duke of Somerſet, that I ſhould not ſpeak of the Sacrament, or of the Maſs, whereby he ſaid I ſhould avoid trouble. And when he ſaw me not to take it well, I mean, quoth he, doubtful matters. I asked him what? he ſaid, Tranſubſtantiation. I told him, He wiſt not what Tranſubſtantiation meant. I will Preach, quoth I, the very Preſence of Chriſts moſt Precious Body and Blood in the Sacrament, which is the Catholick Faith, and no doubtful matter, ne yet in Controverſie, ſaving that certain unlearned ſpeak of it they wot not what. And among the matters, quoth I, whereof I have promiſed to ſpeak, I muſt by ſpecial words ſpeak of the Sacrament, and of the Maſs alſo. And when I ſhall ſo ſpeak of them, I will not forbear to utter my Faith and true belief therein, which I think neceſſary for the Kings Majeſty to know; and therefore, if I wiſt to be hanged when I came down, I would ſpeak it. Which plain zeal of my Conſcience, grounded upon Gods Commandment to do his Meſſage truly, I would not hide but utter ſo, as my Lord ſhould, if he would not have it ſpoken of, not let me to come there as he might have done: whereas elſe, if I had had a deceitful purpoſe, I might have accepted the advice, and without any colour of trouble, have refuſed to follow it as a thing grounded upon Wealth only, as it was then uttered. With this my Anſwer, Maſter Cecil departed, and upon the Thurſday, which was the next Day following, and the Evening before I Preached, between three and four at Afternoon, I received a Letter ſigned with the hand of the Duke of Somerſet, the Copy whereof I am ready to exhibit, and took it then, and eſteemed it ſo now to contain no effectual inhibition, whereunto I might by Gods Law, or the Kings Majeſties Laws, with diſcharge of my Conſcience and Duty obey, although the ſaid Letters had been (as they were not) in ſuch terms framed, as had preciſely forbidden me (as they did not) but only to ſpeak of matters in Controverſie of the Sacrament, which indeed I did not, but only uttered a Truth to my Conſcience moſt certainly perſwaded of the moſt Holy Sacrament, neceſſary to be known to the Kings Majeſty, and to be uttered by me admitted to that place of Preaching, from whence God commandeth his Truth to be uttered, which in this nature of Truth (the undue eſtimation and uſe whereof, Saint Paul threatneth with temporal death) may in no wiſe be omitted. So as I was and am perſwaded, the right eſtimation of the Sacrament to be to acknowledge the very Preſence of the ſame moſt precious Body and Blood preſent in the Sacrament to feed us, that was given to redeem us. If I ſhewed not my Sovereign Lord the truth thereof, I for my part ſuffer him wittingly to fall into that extream danger of Body, which Saint Paul threatneth, whoſe Perſon I am bound by nature, by ſpecial Oaths, and by Gods Laws, to preſerve to my power, as I will do, and muſt do by all ways and means. And if the Kings Majeſty doth vouchſafe to teach his People not to obey his Commandment, where God Commandeth the contrary, I might not take my Lord of Somerſets Letter for an Inhibition to hold my peace, when God biddeth me to ſpeak, as he doth when the Wolf cometh, and not to hide my ſelf in ſilence, which is the moſt ſhameful running away of all. I have much matter to alledge againſt the Letter why I ſhould not credit it, written in his name alone, againſt a common Letter (as I took it) written by him and the Council, and publiſhed in Print the firſt day of the ſaid Month, which maintaineth my Preaching of the Sacrament and Maſs, according to the Proclamation and Injunctions, the violation of which publick Letters, had been a diſorder and contempt, whereas I neither offended in the one nor the other.

Wincheſter wouldne de talk of th Sacrament and of the Maſs.

St. Paul threatneth death to the miſuſers of the Sacrament: Ergo, the real preſence of Chriſt is in the Sacrament. Nego argumentum.

And vvhy vvould not Wincheſter allovv this reaſon in other, in Q. Maries time, ſpeaking the vvord of truth after their conſcience, contrary to his inhibition?

And as for tumult, none could reaſonably be feared of any thing ſpoken agreeable to the Kings Majeſties Laws, as there did follow none, nor the People, nor any Man did offer my perſon any wrong, or make tumult againſt me, notwithſtanding, Players, Jeſters, Rymers, Ballad-makers, did ſignifie me to be of the true Catholick Faith, which I, according to my duty, declared to the Kings Majeſty, from whom I may hide no truth that I think expedient for him to know. And as the name of God cannot be uſed of any Creature againſt God, no more can the Kings name be uſed of any Subject againſt his Highneſs. Wherefore ſeeing the abuſe of this Holy Sacrament hath in it a danger aſſured by Scripture, of Body and Soul; whoſoever is perſwaded in the Catholick Faith, as I am, findeth himſelf ſo burdened to utter that unto his Majeſty, as no worldly loſs can let him to do his duty in that behalf, and much leſs my Lords privat ten without other of the Councils hands.

Anſwer to the II Article. Sir Anthony Wingfield and Sir Ralph Sadler ſent to Wincheſter.

To the eleventh Article; for Anſwer and Declaration thereof, he ſaid, The next day at Afternoon after he had Preached, when he looked for no ſuch matter, came to his Houſe the Right Worſhipful Sir Anthony Wingfield, and Sir Ralph Sadler, Knights, accompanied with a great number of the Guard, and uſed themſelves for their part according to their Worſhips, and (I doubt not) as they were appointed, and Sir Ralph Sadler began thus with me; my Lord, ſaid he, ye Preached yeſterday Obedience, but ye did not obey your ſelf, and went forth with his Meſſage very ſoberly, as he can, and diſcreetly. I asked him wherein I obeyed not. He ſaid, touching my Lord of Somerſets Letter. Mr. Sadler, quoth I, I pray you ſay unto my Lords Grace, I would he never made mention of that Letter for the love I bare him. And yet, quoth I, I have not broken that Letter, and I was minded, quoth I, to have written to my Lord upon the receit of it, and lo, quoth I, ye may ſee how I began, and ſhewed him (becauſe we were then in my Study) the beginning of my Letter, and reaſoned with him for the declaration of my ſelf, and told him therewith, I will not ſpend, quoth I, many words with you, for I cannot alter this determination. And yet in good faith, quoth I, my manner to you, & this declaration may have this effect, that I be gently handled in the Priſon, and for that purpoſe I pray you make ſute on my behalf.

Wincheſter arreſted. Wincheſter committed to the Tower.

Maſter Wingfield laid his hand on my ſhoulder, and Arreſted me in the Kings name for Diſobedience. I asked him, Whither I ſhould? They ſaid, To the Tower. Finally, I deſired them, that I might be ſpoken with ſhortly, and heard what I could ſay for my ſelf, and prayed them to be ſuters in it, and ſo they ſaid they would.

After that I was once in the Tower, until it was within ſix days of one whole year, I could hear no manner word, meſſage, comfort, or relief, ſaving once when I was ſick, and me thought ſome extremity towards me, my Chaplain had leave to come to me once, and then denied again, being anſwered, That my Fever was but a Tertian, which my ſaid Chaplain told me when he came to me at the Eaſter following, and there being with me from the morning until night on Eaſter-day, departed, and for no ſute could I ever have him ſince. To Mr. Lieutenant I made divers ſutes to provoke the Duke of Somerſets Grace to hear me: and if I might have the liberty of an Engliſhman, I would plainly declare I had neither offended Law, Statute, Act, Proclamation, nor his own Letter neither; but all would not help, and I ſhall report me to Mr. Lieutenant, whether in all this time I maligned, grudged, or uſed any unſeemly words, ever demanding Juſtice, and to be heard according to Juſtice. When I had been thus in the Tower one whole year within ſix days or ſeven, as I remember, came to the Tower the Lord Chancellor of England, now being the Lord Treaſurer, and Mr. Secretary Peter, who calling me unto them, as I remember, entred thus; They ſaid, they had brought with them a Book paſſed by the Parliament, which they would I ſhould look on, and ſay my mind to it, and upon my Conformity in it, my Lord of Somerſet would be ſuter to the Kings Majeſty for mercy to be miniſtred to me. Whereunto I anſwered, That I truſted, if I might be heard, the Kings Majeſties Juſtice would relieve me, which I had long ſued for, and could not be heard. And to ſue for Mercy, quoth I, when I have not in my Conſcience offended, and alſo to ſue out of this Place, where asking of Mercy, implieth a further ſuſpition then I would be for all the world touched in, were not expedient; and therefore, quoth I, Not Guilty, is and hath been continually allowed a good Plea for a Priſoner. Then my Lord ſaid, Why, quoth he, Were ye not commanded to Preach of the Kings Authority in his young age, and did not? I told him I was not commanded. Is not, quoth he, that Article in the Papers ye had delivered you? I aſſured him, no.

The Lord Chancellor and Secretary Peter come to Wincheſter in the Tower. KING Edw. 6

Talk between the L. Chancellor and Wincheſter in the Tower.

And after communication of the Kings Majeſties Authority, wherein was no diſagreement; then my Lord Chancellor ſaid, I had diſobeyed my Lords Graces Letter. I told him, I thought not, and if the matter came to judgment, it ſhould appear. And then I ſaid to him, my Lord, how many open Injunctions under Seal and in open Court have been broken in this Realm? the puniſhment whereof hath not been handled after this ſort, and yet I would ſtand in defence that I have not broken his Letter, waying the words of his Letter, wherein I reaſoned with Mr. Secretary Peter what a controverſie was, and ſome part what I could ſay further. But whatſoever I can ſay, quoth I, you muſt judge it, and for the Paſſion of God do it, and then let me ſue for mercy, when the nature of the offence is known, if I will have it. But when I am, quoth I, declared an Offender, I will with humility of ſuffering make amends to the Kings Majeſty, ſo far as I am able; for I ſhould never offend him, and much leſs in his young age.

Wincheſter will acknowledge no offence.

My Lord Chancellor then ſhewed me the beginning of the Act for Common Prayer, how dangerous it was to break the order of it. I told him that it was true, and therefore if I came abroad, I would beware of it. But it is, quoth I, after in the Act, how no man ſhould be troubled for this Act, unleſs he were firſt Indicted, and therefore (quoth I) I may not be kept in Priſon for this Act. Ah (quoth he) I perceive ye know the Law well enough. I told him my Chaplain had brought it unto me the Afternoon before. Then they required me to look on the Book, and to ſay my mind of it; I anſwered, that I thought not meet to yield my ſelf a Scholar to go to School in Priſon, and then ſlander my ſelf as though I redeemed my faults with my Conſcience. As touching the Law which I know, I will honor it like a Subject; and if I keep it not, I will willingly ſuffer the pain of it. And what more Conformity I ſhould ſhew, I cannot tell, for mine Offences be paſt if there be any. If I have not ſuffered enough, I will ſuffer more, if upon examination I be found faulty; and as for this new Law, if I keep it not, puniſh me likewiſe.

Wincheſter will not go to School in Priſon.

Then my Lord Chancellor asked me, Whether I would not deſire the Kings Majeſty to be my good Lord. At which words I ſaid; alas, my Lord, quoth I, do ye think that I have ſo forgotten my ſelf? My duty, quoth I, requireth ſo, and I will on my knees deſire him to be my good Lord, and my Lord Protector alſo, quoth I; that is well ſaid, quoth my Lord Chancellor. And what will ye ſay further, quoth my L. Chancellor? in good faith, quoth I, this, that I thought when I had Preached, that I had not offended at all, and think ſo ſtill, and had it not been for the Article of the Supremacy, I would have rather fained my ſelf ſick, than be occaſion of this that hath followed; but going to the Pulpit, I muſt needs ſay as I ſaid. Well, quoth my Lord Chancellor, let us go to our purpoſe again. Ye will, quoth he, deſire the Kings Majeſty to be your good Lord, and the Lord Protector alſo, and ye ſay ye thought not to have offended. All this I will ſay, quoth I; and ye will (quoth my L. Chancellor) ſubmit your ſelf to be ordered by the L. Protector. Nay, quoth I, by the Law; for my L. Protector, quoth I, hath ſcourged me over ſore this year, to put my matter in his hands now. And in the latter point I varied with my L. Chancellor, when I would not refer my Order to my L. Protector, but to the Law; and ſtaying at this point they were content to grant me of their gentleneſs, to make their ſute to procure me to be heard, and to obtain me liberty to go in the Gallery, and that I ſhould hear of one of them within two days following. I deſired them to remember that I refuſed not the Book by way of contempt, nor in any evil manner, but that I was loth to yield my ſelf a Scholar in the Tower, and to be ſeen to redeem my faults, if I had any, with my Conſcience. My body, I ſaid, ſhould ſerve my Conſcience, but not contrariwiſe. And this is the truth upon my Conſcience and Oath, that was done and ſaid at their coming. There was more ſaid to the purpoſes aforeſaid. And I bind not my ſelf to the preciſe ciſe form of words, but to the ſubſtance of the matter and faſhion of the entreating. So near as I can remember, I have truly diſcharged mine Oath. But I heard no more of my matter in one whole year after almoſt, within fourteen days, notwithſtanding two Letters written by me to the Council, of moſt humble requeſt to be heard according to Juſtice. And then at the end of two years almoſt, came unto me the Duke of Somerſet, with other of the Council; which matter, becauſe it is left out here, I ſhall not touch, but prepare it in a matter apart, for declaration of my behaviour at all times.

To which ſubmiſſion you contemptuouſly refuſed to ſubſcribe.*

Wincheſter.

To the twelfth Article, for anſwer thereunto, he granted, that about the time mentioned in this Article, the Lord Treaſurer, the Earl of Warwick Lord great Maſter, Sir William Herbert, and Mr. Secretary Peter came to the Tower, and called me before them, and delivered unto me the Kings Majeſties Letters, which I have to ſhew, and received them at the hands of the Lord Treaſurer upon my knees, kiſſed them as my duty was, and ſtill upon my knees read them, whereas they gently required me to take more eaſe, and go apart with them, and conſider them: which after that I had throughly read, I much lamented that I ſhould be commanded to ſay of my ſelf as was there written, and to ſay otherwiſe of my ſelf than my Conſcience will ſuffer me, and where I truſt my Deeds will not condemn me, there to condemn my ſelf with my tongue. I ſhould ſooner, (quoth I to them) by commandment, I think if ye would bid me tumble my ſelf deſperately into the Thames.

The Kings Letter delivered to Wincheſter in the Tower.

My Lord of Warwick ſeeing me in that Agony, ſaid, What ſay ye, my Lord, quoth he, to the other Articles? I anſwered, That I was loth to diſobey where I might obey, and not wreſt my Conſcience, deſtroying the comfort of it, as to ſay untruly of my ſelf. Well, quoth my Lord of Warwick, Will ye ſubſcribe to the other Articles? I told him I would. But then, quoth I, the Article that toucheth me muſt be put out. I was anſwered, that needeth not, for I might write on the out-ſide what I would ſay unto it. And then my Lord of Warwick entertained me very gently, and would needs, whiles I ſhould write, have me ſit down by him; and when he ſaw me make ſomewhat ſtrange ſo to do, he pulled me nearer him, and ſaid, we had ere this ſit together, and truſted we ſhould do ſo again. And then having Pen and Ink given me, I wrote, as I remember, on the Article that touched me, theſe words, I cannot with my Conſcience ſay this of my ſelf; or ſuch like words. And there followed an Article of the Kings Majeſties Primacy, and I began to write on the ſide of that, and had made an I, onward, as may appear by the Articles, and they would not have me do ſo, but write only my name after their Articles; which I did. Whereat, becauſe they ſhewed themſelves pleaſed and content, I was bold to tell them merrily, That by this means I had placed my ſubſcription above them all; and thereupon it pleaſed them to entertain me much to my comfort.

Other Articles put to Wincheſter. The Article which touched him, was the firſt Article, preſcribing him to ſubſcribe, which Article he wiſheth here to be put out.

Wincheſter ſubſcribeth to the Kings Articles.

And I was bold to recount unto them merry Tales of my miſery in Priſon, which they ſeemed content to hear; and then I told them alſo (deſiring them not to be miſcontent with that I ſhould ſay) when I remember each of them alone, I could not think otherwiſe but they were my good Lords, and yet when they meet together, I feel no remedy at their hands. I looked (quoth I) when my Lord of Somerſet was here, to go out within two days, and made my farewel Feaſt in the Tower and all, ſince which time there is a month paſt, or thereabout; and I agree with them, and now agree with you, and I may fortune to be forgotten. My Lord Treaſurer ſaid nay, I ſhould hear from them the next day: and ſo by their ſpecial Commandment I came out of the Chamber after them, that they might be ſeen to depart as my good Lords; and ſo was done. By which Proceſs appeareth, how there was in me no contempt, as is ſaid in this Article, but ſuch a Subſcription made as they were content to ſuffer me to make, which I took in my Conſcience for a whole ſatisfaction of the Kings Majeſties Letters, which I deſire may be deemed accordingly. And one thing was ſaid unto me further, That other would have put in many mo Articles, but they would have no more but thoſe.

Wincheſters farewel Feaſt loſt in the Tower.

The thirteenth Article.

Item, That you having eftſoons certain of the Kings Majeſties Honorable Council ſent unto you the twelfth of July, in the ſaid fourth year, with the ſaid ſubmiſſion, and being on his Majeſties behalf required and commanded to conſider again, and better the ſaid Commiſſion, and to ſubſcribe the ſame, ſtood in juſtification of your ſelf, and would in no wiſe ſubſcribe thereunto.

Wincheſter.

To the thirteenth Article he ſaid: The next day after the being in the Tower of the ſaid Lord Treaſurer, the Earl of Warwick, and other, came unto me Sir William Harbert and Mr. Secretary Peter, to deviſe with me how to make ſome acknowledging of my Fault (as they ſaid) becauſe the other Form liked me not. Whereunto I ſaid, I knew my ſelf innocent, and to enter with you to entreat of a device to impair my innocency in any the leaſt point either by Words or Writings, it can have no policy in it. For although I did more eſteem Liberty of Body, than the defamation of my ſelf, yet, quoth I, when I had ſo done with you, I were not ſo aſſured by you to come out. For when I were by own (a) Pen once made a naughty Man, then were I not the more ſure to come out, but had locked my ſelf the more ſurer in; and a ſmall pleaſure were it to me to have my Body at Liberty by your procurement, and to have my Conſcience in perpetual Priſon by mine own act. Many more Words there were, and perſwaſions on their parts; which cauſed me to require of them, for the Paſſion of God, that my matter might take an end by Juſtice; and ſo they departed, there being no Contempt or Faction of Diſobedience ſhewed on my behalf, but only Allegation for my defence of mine own Innocency in the beſt manner I could deviſe, as I truſt they will teſtifie.

Wincheſter ſtill ſtandeth upon reputation of his innocency.

(a) Your putting to your Pen in this matter would not have made you naught, but your naughtineſs would not put to your Pen.

The fourteenth Article.

Item, That after all this, viz. the fourteenth day of July in the ſaid fourth year, the Kings Majeſty ſent yet again unto you certain of his Majeſties Honorable Council, with another Submiſſion, and divers other Articles, willing and commanding you to Subſcribe your name thereunto. Which to do you utterly refuſed.

Wincheſter.

To the fourteenth Article he ſaid, That on the Monday in the Morning following came the Biſhop of London, Sir William Harbert, Mr. Secretary Peter, and another whom I know not, who brought with them a Paper, with certain Articles written in it, which they required me to ſubſcribe. Whereupon I moſt inſtantly required, that my matter might be tried by Juſtice, which although it were more grievous, yet it hath a commodity with it, that it endeth certainly the matter. And I could never yet come to my aſſured ſtay, and therefore refuſed to meddle with any more Articles, or to trouble my ſelf with the reading of them; and yet they deſired me inſtantly to read them, that I was content, and did read, and to ſhew my perfect obedient mind, offered incontinently upon my delivery out of Priſon to make anſwer to them all, ſuch as I would abide by, and ſuffer pain for, if I have deſerved it. I would indeed gladly have been in hand with my Lord of London; but he ſaid he came not to diſpute, and ſaid, It was the hand of God that I was thus in Priſon, becauſe I had ſo troubled other men in my time.

Other Articles offered to Wincheſter.

The Biſhop London's words to Wincheſter.

Finally,

Finally, my requeſt was, That they ſhould in this Form make my anſwer to my Lords of the Council, as followeth: That I moſt humbly thank them of their good will to deliver me by the way of Mercy; but becauſe in reſpect of mine own innocent Conſcience I had rather have juſtice, I deſired them, ſeeing both was in the Kings Majeſties hands, that I might have it; which if it happen to me more grievous, I will impute it to my ſelf, and evermore thank them for their good will; and ſo departed I with them, as I truſt they will teſtifie, and no miſbehavior or miſdemeanor to have been uſed on my behalf.

Win beſter entuleth to be delivered by way of mercy.

The fifteenth Article.

Item, That after all this, viz. the nineteenth day of July, in the ſaid fourth year, you being perſonally called before the Kings Majeſties Privy Council, and having the ſaid Submiſſion and Articles openly and diſtinctly read unto you, and required to ſubſcribe the ſame, refuſed for unjuſt conſiderations by you alledged to ſubſcribe the ſame.

Wincheſter.

{Anno 1550.} To the fifteenth Article I grant, That upon a Saturday at Afternoon, even at ſuch time of the day as they were at Even-ſong in the Chappel of the Court, I was brought thither, and at my coming the Lords of the Council ſaid, They were all my Judges by ſpecial Commiſſion, and intended to proceed thus with me: That I ſhould ſubſcribe certain Articles which were then read, and I muſt directly make anſwer, whether I would ſubſcribe them or no. I anſwered on my knees in this wiſe: For the Paſſion of God, my Lords, be my good Lords, and let me be tried by Juſtice, whether I be faulty or no: and as for theſe Articles, as ſoon as ye deliver me to my liberty, I would make anſwer to them, whether I would ſubſcribe them or no. Then they having further to ſay, I anſwered, Theſe Articles were of divers ſorts; ſome be Laws, which I may not qualifie; ſome be no Laws, but learning and fact, which may have divers underſtandings, and a ſubſcription to them without telling what I mean, were over dangerous. And therefore I offered, for the more declaration of mine obedience to all their Requeſts, That if they would deliver me the Articles into the Priſon with me, I would ſhortly make them particular anſwer, and ſuffer the pains of the Law, that by my Anſwer I might incur into. Whereupon I was commanded to go apart, and they ſent unto me the Lord Treaſurer, and Mr. Secretary Peter, who communed with me of a mean way, and that liked not the Lords. And then I was called forth again, and my abſolute ſubſcription required again: and I again made offer to anſwer particularly, for I could not with my Conſcience ſubſcribe them as they were abſolutely. And theſe my conſiderations I truſt to be juſt, ſeeing no man for any Commandments ought to offend his Conſcience, as I muſt have done in that caſe.

Wincheſter required again to ſubſcribe, refuſeth. Wincheſters reaſons.

The ſixteenth Article.

Item, That for your ſundry and manifold Contempts and Diſobediences in this behalf uſed, the Fruits of your Biſhoprick were then by ſpecial Commiſſion of his Majeſty juſtly and lawfully ſequeſtred.

Wincheſter.

To the ſixteenth Article, I deny Contempts and Diſobedience of parts, and ſay, That my doings cannot ſo be termed, becauſe it is taught in this Realm for a Doctrine of Obedience, That if a King command that which is contrary to the Commandment of God, the Subject may not do as he is commanded, but humbly ſtand to his Conſcience, which is my caſe, who could not with my Conſcience do as I was required. And as touching the Fact of Decree, there was indeed a Decree read, having words ſo placed and framed, as though I were ſuch an Offender, which matter I deny. And in that Decree was mention made of Adminiſtration of Fruits; but whether the former words were of the preſent Tenſe, or elſe to be ſequeſtred, I cannot preciſely tell, but do refer that to the tenor of the Decree.

But this anſwer could not ſtand in Queen Maries days.

{KING Edw. 6}

The ſeventeenth Article.

Item, That after this you had intimation and peremptory monition, with communication, that you ſhould within three months next following the ſaid intimation, reconcile and ſubmit your ſelf, under pain of deprivation.

Wincheſter.

To the ſeventeenth Article I anſwer, that in the ſame Decree of ſequeſtration at the ſame time read, I kneeling from the beginning of the Decree to the latter end, I remember there was an Intimation and three months ſpoken of, and expreſſed alſo, how at every months end I ſhould have Pen and Ink offered to write, if I would yet ſubſcribe; and as I underſtand, it was upon the pain of proceeding further. And I do not remember that I heard the word Deprivation, but therein I refer me to the Acts of the Sentence; which when it was read, I deſired it might be teſtified what mine offer was, to anſwer all thoſe Articles particularly, even remaining in Priſon. And this done, I made ſute for ſome of my Servants abroad to reſort to me to the Tower, partly for my comfort, partly for my neceſſary buſineſs, which could not be obtained. And yet to provoke it, I ſaid to my Lord of Warwick, how for agreeing with my Lord of Somerſet, I had ſome commodity, and for agreeing with him had nothing, and therefore would needs by Interceſſion preſs him, that I might by this means have ſome of my Servants reſorting unto me. He anſwered very gently. And then one ſaid, I ſhould within two or three days have ſome body come to me. And then I was diſmiſſed, with commandment to the Lieutenant, to let me have the ſame liberty I had, but no more.

The eighteenth Article.

Item, That the ſaid three months are now throughly expired and run.

Wincheſter.

To the eighteenth Article he ſaid, There is almoſt ſix months paſſed in time and number of days, but not one month paſt to the effect of the Law, nor ten days neither, becauſe I have been ſo kept in Priſon, that I could not ſeek for remedy in form aboveſaid, nor was there at every month, after the form of the Sentence, offered me Pen, Ink, and liberty given me to conſult and deliberate with other learned Men and Friends, what were beſt to do, or to ſend unto them. And furthermore, the very eighth day after the Decree given, I proteſted before my Servants, whom I had only commodity to uſe as witneſſes of the nullity of the Decree, for the evident and apparent matter in it; but if it were in Law, I appealed to the Kings Majeſty, becauſe my requeſt was not admitted, to have the copy of the Articles to anſwer them particularly, and becauſe it is exceſſive correction, to ſequeſter my Fruits and keep me in Priſon. With other caſes to be deduced where I might have opportunity. Which appellation I proteſted to intimate as ſoon as I could come to any preſence meet therefore, as I did in this Aſſembly at my laſt repair, deſiring therewith the benefit reſtitutionis in integrum, becauſe of mine Impriſonment; and therefore do anſwer this matter with proteſtation of that Appeal, and utterly deny all manner of contempt.

The nineteenth Article.

Item, That you hitherto, according to the ſaid Intimation and monition, have not ſubmitted, reconciled, nor reformed your ſelf, but contemptuouſly yet ſtill remain in your firſt diſobedience.

Wincheſter.

To the nineteenth Article I ſay, That I have been all this while in Priſon ſo kept, as no man could have acceſs to counſel with me, nor any means to write or ſend to any man, having made continual ſute to Maſter Lieutenant and

KING Ewd.6 and Maſter Marſhal, under whoſe Cuſtody I am here, and to make ſute in my name to the Lords of the Council, that I might come to Hearing, or elſe be Bailed upon Surety; which I could not obtain, and ſo have remained under the benefit of my ſaid Appeal to the Kings Majeſty, made, as I might for the time, which I eftſoons deſire I may have liberty to proſecute.

The words of Wincheſter I proteſt expounded. And whereas anſwering to theſe Articles for declaration of the integrity of my Conſcience, I uſe in the ſame places general words: I proteſt I mean not by thoſe words to ſet forth my ſelf otherwiſe more arrogantly than as my direct intent (which excludeth malice) and purpoſe moveth me to ſay, and as my Conſcience beareth witneſs unto me at this time, and therefore will ſay therein with St. Paul, Nihil mihi conſcius ſum, ſed non in hoc juſtificatus ſum. Wherefore if any eſpecially be objected unto me, wherein, by ignorance or overſight and negligence, any offence of mine may appear againſt the Kings Majeſties Laws, Statutes and Injunctions, I ſhall deſire and proteſt that it be not prejudicial to mine Anſwer (for this preſent, Credo, as Lawyers in Civil matters uſe that term) to be true, that is to ſay, ſuch as without any alteration in my Conſcience preſently I may of my ſelf ſay in affirmation or denial, as afore is anſwered. And whereas I ſpake of commandment to be made to me againſt Gods Law, I proteſt not to touch my Sovereign Lords Honor therein, which my duty is by all means to preſerve, but that the commandment given reſolveth to be againſt Gods Law on my part in the obedience to be given, becauſe I may not anſwer or ſay otherwiſe but eſt, eſt; non, non. So as my words and heart may agree together, or elſe I ſhould offend Gods Law, which my Sovereign, if he knew my Conſcience, would not command me.

Wincheſters Credo.

After theſe things thus paſſed, certain of the Council, by the Kings appointment had ſundry days and times acceſs to him in the Tower to perſwade with him; which were theſe, the Duke of Somerſet, the Lord Treaſurer, the Lord Privy Seal, the Lord great Chamberlain, and Maſter Secretary Peter. Who repairing to him the tenth day of June, Anno 1550. he deſired of them to ſee the Kings Book of proceedings; upon the ſight whereof he would make a full Anſwer, ſeeming to be willing in all things to conform himſelf thereunto, and promiſing, that in caſe any thing offended his Conſcience, he would open it to none but to the Council. Whereupon it was agreed, the Book ſhould be ſent him to ſee his Anſwer, that his Caſe might be reſolved upon, and that for the mean time he ſhould have the liberty of the Gallery and Garden in the Tower, when the Duke of Norfolk were abſent.

Wincheſter requireth the ſight of the Kings book of Proceedings.

The King then was lying at Greenwich, at which time the Lieutenant of the Tower was appointed to deliver the Kings Book to the Biſhop of Wincheſter. Who within three days after (which was the thirteenth of June) made Declaration again unto the Council, that the Biſhop having peruſed it, ſaid unto him, He could make no direct anſwer unleſs he were at liberty, and ſo being, he would ſay his Conſcience. Whereupon the Lords, and other that had been with him the other day, were appointed to go to him again to receive a direct Anſwer, that the Council thereupon might determine further order for him.

Wincheſter denieth to make any direct anſwer unto the Book, unleſs he were ſet at liberty.

The Anſwer of the Biſhop being received, through the report of the Lords which had been with him, declaration was made again the eighth day of July, 1550. that his Anſwers were ever doubtful, refuſing while he were in Priſon to make any direct Anſwer. Wherefore it was determined, that he ſhould be directly examined, whether he would ſincerely conform himſelf unto the Kings Majeſties proceedings, or not. For which purpoſe it was agreed, that particular Articles ſhould be drawn, to ſee whether he would ſubſcribe them or not, and a Letter alſo directed unto him from the Kings Highneſs, with the which the Lord Treaſurer, the Lord great Maſter, the Maſter of the Horſe, and Maſter Secretary Peter, ſhould repair unto him; the Tenor of which Letter hereafter inſueth.

Wincheſters anſwers ever doubtful.

The Kings Letter to Wincheſter.

IT is not (we think) unknown unto you, with what Clemency and Favour We, by the advice of our Council, cauſed you to be heard and uſed, upon the ſundry Complaints and Informations that were made to Us and Our ſaid Council of your diſordered Doings and Words, both at the time of our late Viſitation, and otherwiſe. Which notwithſtanding, conſidering that the Favour, both then and many other times miniſtred unto you, wrought rather an Inſolent wilfulneſs in your ſelf, than any obedient Conformity ſuch as would have beſeemed a man of your Vocation, we would not but uſe ſome demonſtration of Juſtice towards you, as well for ſuch notorious and apparent Contempts, and other Inobediencies, as after and contrary to our Commandment were openly known in you, as alſo for ſome example and terrour of ſuch others as by your example ſeemed to take courage, to mutter and grudge againſt our moſt Godly Proceedings, whereof great diſcord and inconvenience at that time might have inſued. For the avoiding whereof, and for your juſt deſervings, you were by our ſaid Council committed to Ward. Where albeit we have ſuffered you to remain a long ſpace, ſending unto you in the mean time at ſundry times divers of the Noble Men, and others of our Privy Council, and travelling by them with Clemency and Favour to have reduced you to the knowledge of your Duty; yet in all this time have you neither knowledged your faults, nor made any ſubmiſſion as might have beſeemed you, nor yet ſhewed any appearance either of Repentance, or of any good Conformity to our Godly Proceedings. Wherewith albeit we both have good cauſe to be offended, and might alſo juſtly, by the order of our Laws, cauſe your former doings to be reformed and puniſhed to the example of others: yet for that We would both the World and your ſelf alſo ſhould know that we delight more in Clemency, than in the ſtraight adminiſtration of Juſtice, We have vouchſafed, not only to addreſs unto you theſe our Letters, but alſo to ſend eftſoons unto you, four of our Privy Council with certain Articles, which being by Us, with the advice of our ſaid Council conſidered, We think requiſite, for ſundry Conſiderations, to be ſubſcribed by you, and therefore Will and Command you to ſubſcribe the ſaid Articles, upon pain of incurring ſuch Puniſhment and Penalties as by our Laws may be put upon you for not doing the ſame.

Notorious contempts in Wincheſter noted.

Given at our Palace of Weſtminſter, the eighth day of July, the fourth Year of our Reign.

With this Letter addreſſed from the King and his Council, theſe Articles alſo were delivered to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, here following.

The Copy of the Articles.

The Biſhops anſwer to this Article in the Margent.

WHereas I, Stephen Biſhop of Wincheſter, have been ſuſpected as one too much favoring the Biſhop of Romes Authority, Decrees and Ordinances, and as one that did not approve or allow the Kings Majeſties proceedings in alteration of certain Rites in Religion, was convented before the Kings Highneſs Council, and admoniſhed thereof; and having certain things appointed for me to do and preach for my Declaration, have not done that as I ought to do, although I promiſed to do the ſame; whereby I have not only incurred the Kings Majeſties indignation, but alſo divers of his Highneſs Subjects, have by my example taken encouragement (as his Graces Council is certainly informed) to repine at his Majeſties moſt Godly Proceedings; I am right ſorry therefore, and acknowledge my ſelf condignly to have been puniſhed, and do moſt heartily thank his Majeſty, that of his great Clemency it hath pleaſed his Highneſs to deal with me, not according to rigor, but mercy. And to the intent it may appear to the World how little I do repine at his Highneſs doings, which be in Religion moſt Godly, and to the Commonwealth moſt profitable, I do affirm and ſay freely of mine own Will, without any Compulſion, as enſueth.

1. That

The Kings Supremacy.

I. That by the Law of God, and the Authority of Scriptures, the Kings Majeſty and his Succeſſors are the Supreme Heads of the Churches of England, and alſo of Ireland.

The Kings authority in diſpenſing with Holy days and Faſting days, or in appointing the ſame.

II. Item, That the appointing of Holy-days and Faſting-days, as Lent, Ember-days, or any ſuch like, or to diſpence therewith, is in the Kings Majeſties Authority and Power: and his Highneſs as Supreme Head of the ſaid Churches of England and Ireland, and Governor thereof, may appoint the manner and time of the Holy-days and Faſting-days, or diſpence therewith, as to his Wiſdom ſhall ſeem moſt convenient for the Honor of God and the Wealth of this Realm.

The Kings Book of proceedings.

III. Item, That the Kings Majeſty hath moſt Chriſtianly and Godly ſet forth, by and with the conſent of the whole Parliament, a devout and Chriſtian Book of Service of the Church, to be frequented by the Church, which Book is to be accepted and allowed of all Biſhops, Paſtors, Curates, and all Miniſters Eccleſiaſtical of the Realm of England, and ſo of him to be declared and commended in all places where he ſhall fortune to preach or ſpeak to the People of it, that it is a Godly and Chriſtian Book and Order, and to be allowed, accepted, and obſerved of all the Kings Majeſties true Subjects.

The Kings full authority in his tender age.

IV. I do acknowledge the Kings Majeſty that now is (whoſe Life God long preſerve) to be my Sovereign Lord, and Supreme Head under Chriſt to me as a Biſhop of this Realm, and natural Subject to his Majeſty, and now in this his young and tender Age to be my full and entire King; and that I, and all other his Highneſs Subjects, are bound to obey all his Majeſties Proclamations, Statutes, Laws and Commandments, made, promulgate, and ſet forth in his Highneſs young Age, as well as though his Highneſs were at this preſent thirty or forty years old.

Abrogation of the ſix Articles.

V. Item, I confeſs and acknowledge, That the Statute, commonly called the Statute of the Six Articles, for juſt cauſes and grounds, is by Authority of Parliament repealed and diſannulled.

The Kings Juriſdiction to alter and correct abuſes Eccleſiaſtical.

VI. Item, That his Majeſty and his Succeſſors have Authority in the ſaid Churches of England, and alſo of Ireland, to alter, reform, correct and amend all Errors and Abuſes, and all Rites and Ceremonies Eccleſiaſtical, as ſhall ſeem from time to time to his Highneſs and his Succeſſors moſt convenient for the edification of his People, ſo that the ſame alteration be not contrary or repugnant to the Scripture and Law of God.

Subſcribed by Stephen Winchester, with the Teſtimonial Hands of the Council to the ſame.

Subſcription of Winchester to the Articles aforeſaid.

To theſe Articles afore ſpecified, although Winchester with his own hand did ſubſcribe, granting and conſenting to the Supremacy of the King as well then being, as of his Succeſſors to come; yet becauſe he ſtuck ſo much in the firſt Point touching his Submiſſion, and would in no caſe ſubſcribe to the ſame, but only made his Anſwer in the Margent (as is above noted) it was therefore thought good to the King, that the Maſter of the Horſe, and Maſter Secretary Peter ſhould repair unto him again with the ſame requeſt of Submiſſion, exhorting him to look better upon it; and in caſe the words ſeemed too ſore, then to refer it unto himſelf, in what ſort and with what words he ſhould deviſe to ſubmit him, that upon the acknowledgement of his fault, the Kings Highneſs might extend his mercy and liberality towards him as it was determined. Which was the eleventh day of June, the year aboveſaid.

Winchester denieth to ſubſcribe to the firſt beginning of theſe Articles.

When the Maſter of the Horſe and Secretary Peter had been with him in the Tower according to their Commiſſion, returning from him again, they declared unto the King and his Council how preciſely the ſaid Biſhop ſtood in juſtification of himſelf, that he had never offended the Kings Majeſty; wherefore he utterly refuſed to make any ſubmiſſion at all. For the more ſurety of which denial, it was agreed, That a new Book of Articles ſhould be deviſed, wherewith the ſaid Maſter of the Horſe, and Maſter Secretary Peter, ſhould repair unto him again; and for the more authentick Proceeding with him, they ſhould have with them a Divine and a Temporal Lawyer, which were the Biſhop of London, and Maſter Goodrick.

KING Edw. 6.

The Copy of the laſt Articles ſent to the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

Winchester again required to ſubmit himſelf.

WHereas I Stephen Biſhop of Wincheſter, have been ſuſpected as one that did not approve or allow the Kings Majeſties Proceedings in alteration of certain Rites in Religion, and was convented before the Kings Highneſs Counſel, and admoniſhed thereof, and having certain things appointed for me to do and preach for my Declaration, have not done therein as I ought to do, whereby I have deſerved his Majeſties diſpleaſure; I am right ſorry therefore. And to the intent it may appear to the World how little I do repine at his Highneſs doings, which be in Religion moſt godly, and to the Commonwealth moſt profitable, I do affirm as followeth.

Good reaſon and ground in ſuppreſſing Houſes of Religion.

I. That the late King, of moſt famous memory, King Henry the Eighth, our late Sovereign Lord, juſtly and of good reaſon and ground hath taken away, and cauſed to be ſuppreſſed and defaced, all Monaſteries and Religious Houſes, and all Conventicles and Convents of Monks, Friers, Nuns, Canons, Bonhoms, and other Perſons called Religious, and that the ſame being ſo diſſolved, the Perſons therein bound and profeſſed to Obedience to a Perſon, Place, Habit, and other ſuperſtitious Rites and Ceremonies, upon that diſſolution and order appointed by the Kings Majeſties Authority as Supreme Head of the Church, are clearly releaſed and acquitted of thoſe Vows and Profeſſions, and at their full liberty, as though thoſe unwitty and ſuperſtitious Vows had never been made.

Marriage permitted by Gods Law, ſtands good without the Popes diſpenſation.

II. Item, That any perſon may lawfully Marry, without any diſpenſation from the Biſhop of Rome, or any other man, with any perſon whom it is not prohibited to contract Matrimony with, by the Law Levitical.

Vows and going on Pilgrimage.

III. Item, That the Vowing and going on Pilgrimage to Images, or the Bones or Reliques of any Saints, hath been ſuperſtitiouſly uſed, and cauſe of much Wickedneſs and Idolatry, and therefore juſtly aboliſhed by the late ſaid King, of famous memory, and the Images and Reliques ſo abuſed have been for great and godly Conſiderations defaced and deſtroyed.

Gadding about with St. Nicholas &c.

IV. Item, That the counterfeiting of St. Nicholas, St. Clement, St. Katharine, and St. Edmund, by Children heretofore brought into the Church, was a meer mockery and fooliſhneſs, and therefore juſtly aboliſhed and taken away.

Scripture to be in the vulgar tongue.

V. Item, It is convenient and godly, that the Scripture of the Old Teſtament and New, that is, the whole Bible, be had in Engliſh and publiſhed, to be read of every man, and that whoſoever doth repel and dehort men from reading thereof, doth evil and damnably.

VI. Item, That the ſaid late King, of juſt ground and reaſon, did receive into his hands the authority and diſpoſition of Chauntries, and ſuch Livings as were given for the maintenance of private Maſſes, and did well change divers of them to other uſes.

Chantry Maſſes well put down.

VII. Alſo the Kings Majeſty that now is, by the advice and conſent of the Parliament, did upon juſt ground and reaſon, ſuppreſs, aboliſh, and take away the ſaid Chauntries, and ſuch other Livings as were uſed and occupied for maintenance of private Maſſes, and Maſſes ſatisfactory for the Souls of them that are dead, or finding of Obites, Lights, or other like things: The Maſs that was wont to be ſaid of Prieſts was full of abuſes, and had very few things of Chriſts Inſtitution, beſides the Epiſtle, Goſpel, the Lords Prayer, and the words of the Lords Supper; the reſt, for the more part, were invented and deviſed by Biſhops of Rome, and by other men of the ſame ſort, and therefore juſtly taken away by the Statutes and Laws of this Realm; and the Communion which is placed inſtead thereof, is very Godly, and agreeable to the Scriptures.

The Maſs full of abuſes, and well changed to the Communion.

Sacrament in both kinds.

VIII. Item, That it is moſt convenient and fit, and according to the firſt Inſtitution, that all Chriſtian men ſhould receive the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt in both the kinds, that is, in Bread and Wine.

Maſs the Popes Ordinance.

IX. And the Maſs, wherein only the Prieſt receiveth, and the other do but look on, is but the invention of Man, and the Ordinance of the Biſhop of Romes Church, not agreeable to Scripture.

The Sacrament not to be adored.

X. Item, That upon good and godly conſiderations it is ordered in the ſaid Book and Order, that the Sacrament ſhould not be lifted up, and ſhewed to the People to be adored, but to KING Ed. 6. to be with godly Devotion received, as it was first instituted.

XI. Item, That it is well, politickly and godly done, that the Kings Majesty by Act of Parliament, hath commanded all Images which have stood in Churches and Chappels, to be clearly abolished and defaced, lest hereafter at any time they should give occasion of Idolatry, or be abused, as many of them heretofore have been, with Pilgrimages, and such Idolatrous Worshipping.

All Images abolished.

Mass-Books Grails, &c. defaced.

XII. And also for that like godly and good considerations, by the same Authority of Parliament, all Mass-Books, Cowchers, Grails, and other Books of the Service in Latine, heretofore used, should be abolished and defaced, as well for certain Superstitions in them contained, as also to avoid dissension: And that the said Service in the Church should be through the whole Realm in one uniform Conformity, and no occasion through those old Books to the contrary.

Vowed chastity of Priests hath no commandment of God.

XIII. That Bishops, Priests and Deacons, have no commandment of the Law of God, either to vow Chastity, or to abstain continually from Marriage.

XIV. Item, That all Canons, Constitutions, Laws positive, and Ordinances of Man, which do prohibit or forbid Marriage to any Bishop, Priest or Deacon, be justly, and upon godly grounds and considerations taken away and abolished by Authority of Parliament.

Homilies to be read in the Church.

XV. The Homilies lately commanded and set forth by the Kings Majesty, to be read in the Congregation of England, are godly and wholsome, and do teach such Doctrine as ought to be embraced of all men.

The Kings book of Orders.

XVI. The Book set forth by the Kings Majesty, by Authority of Parliament, containing the form and manner of making and consecrating of Arch-bishops, Bishops, Priests and Deacons, is godly, and in no point contrary to the wholesome Doctrine of the Gospel, and therefore ought to be received and approved of all the faithful Members of the Church of England, and namely the Ministers of Gods Word, and by them commended to the People.

Orders of Subdeacon, Benet and Colet, needless in the Church.

XVII. That the Orders of Sub-deacon, Benet and Colet, and such others as were commonly called, Minores Ordines, be not necessary by the Word of God to be reckoned in the Church, and be justly left out in the said Book of Orders.

Doctrine of our salvation sufficiently contained in the Scripture.

XVIII. That the Holy Scriptures contain sufficiently all Doctrine required of necessity for Eternal Salvation through Faith in Jesus Christ, and that nothing is to be taught as required of necessity to Eternal Salvation, but that which may be concluded and proved by the Holy Scriptures.

Paraphrases of Erasmus.

XIX. That upon good and godly considerations it was and is commanded by the Kings Majesties Injunctions, That the Paraphrases of Erasmus in English, should be set up in some convenient place in every Parish Church of this Realm, whereas the Parishioners may most commodiously resort to read the same.

XX. And because these Articles aforesaid, do contain only such Matters as be already published and openly set forth by the Kings Majesties Authority, by the Advice of his Highness Council, for many great and godly Considerations; and amongst others, for the common Tranquillity and Unity of the Realm; His Majesties pleasure, by the Advice aforesaid, is,

Winchester required to subscribe to these Articles.

That you the Bishop of Winchester, shall not only affirm these Articles with subscription of your Hand, but also declare and profess your Self well contented, willing and ready to Publish and Preach the same at such Times and Places, and before such Audience, as to his Majesty from time to time shall seem convenient and requisite, upon pain of incurring such Penalties and Punishments as for not doing the same, may by his Majesties Laws be inflicted upon you.

These Articles were sent the fifteenth of July.

The Bishop of Winchester receiving and perusing these Articles, made this Answer again: That first, Touching the Article of Submission, he would in no wise consent, affirming, as he had done before, that he had never offended the Kings Majesty in any such sort as should give him cause thus to submit himself; praying earnestly to be brought unto his Trial; wherein he refused the Kings mercy, and desired nothing but "Justice. And for the rest of the Articles, he answered, That after he were past his Trial in the first point, and were at liberty, then it should appear what he would do in them; if not being (as he said) reasonable, that he should subscribe them in Prison. Ann. 1550

Of this Answer, when the King and his Council had intelligence by the foresaid Master of the Horse, Secretary Peter, the Bishop of London, and Mr. Goodrick, who had been with him, it was agreed that he should be sent for before the whole Council, and peremptorily examined once again, whether he would stand at this Point or no; which if he did, then to denounce unto him the Sequestration of his Benefice, and consequently the Intimation, in case he were not reformed within three Months, as in the day of his appearance shall appear. The tenor and words of which Sequestration, with the Intimation, followeth.

The words of the Sequestration, with the Intimation to the Bishop of Winchester.

The tenor of the Sequestration read to Winchester.

Forasmuch as the Kings Majesty, our most Gracious Sovereign Lord, understandeth, and it is also manifestly known and notorious unto us, That the clemency and long-sufferance of His Majesty, worketh not in you that good effect, and humbleness, and conformity, that is requisite in a good Subject; and for that your Disobediences, Contempts, and other Misbehaviours, for the which you were by His Majesties Authority justly committed to Ward, have since your said committing daily more and more increased in you, in such sort as a great Slander and Offence is thereof risen in many parts of the Realm, whereby also much Slander, Dissention, Trouble and Unquietness, is very like more to ensue, if your foresaid Offences, being as they be, openly known, should pass unpunished: We let you wit, That having special and express Commission and Commandment from His Majesty, as well for your Contumacies and Contempts so long continued, and yet daily more increasing, as also for the exchange of the Slander and Offence of the People, which by your said ill Demeanors are risen, and for that also the Church of Winchester may be in the mean time provided of a good Minister, that may and will see all things done and quietly executed according to the Laws and common Orders of this Realm, and for sundry other great and urgent Causes, We do by these Presence sequester all the Fruits, Revenues, Lands, and Possessions of your Bishoprick of Winchester, and discern, deem and judge the same to be committed to the several Receit, Collection and Custody of such person or persons as His Majesty shall appoint for that purpose. And because your former Disobediences and Contempts so long continued, so many times doubled, renewed and aggravated, do manifestly Declare you to be a Person, without all hope of recovery, and plainly incorrigible; We eftsoons admonish and require you to obey His Majesties said Commandment, and that you do declare your self, by Subscription of your Hand, both willing and well contented to accept, allow, preach and teach to others the said Articles, and all such other matters as be or shall be set forth by His Majesties Authority of Supreme Head of this Church of England, on this side and within the term of three Months, whereof we appoint one Month for the first monition, one Month for the second monition and warning, and one Month for the third and peremptory monition.

The causes why this Sequestration was laid against Winchester.

Winchester sequestred from his Bishoprick.

Within which time as you may yet declare your Conformity, and shall have Paper, Pen and Ink, when you shall call for them for that purpose; so if you wilfully forbear and refuse to declare your self obedient and conformable as is aforesaid, we intimate unto you, That His Majesty, who like a good Governor, desireth to keep both his Commonwealth quiet, and to purge the same of evil men (especially Ministers) intendeth to proceed against you as an incorrigible person, and unmeet Minister of this Church, unto the deprivation of your said Bishoprick.

Intimation given to Winchester.

Nevertheless, upon divers good Considerations, and specially in hope he might within his time be yet reconciled, it was agreed, That the said Bishops House and Servants should be maintained in their present Estate, until the time that this Injunction should expire, and the matter for the mean time to be kept secret.

After

[a] So ye might fortune to have turned your Altar to a Halter.

{Ann, 1550} After this Sequeſtration, the ſaid Biſhop was convented unto Lambeth before the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, and other the Kings Commiſſioners, by vertue of the Kings ſpecial Letters ſent unto the ſaid Commiſſioners, to wit, the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, Nicholas Biſhop of London, Thomas Biſhop of Ely, Henry Biſhop of Lincoln, Secretary Peter, Sir James Hales Knight, Dr. Leyſon, Dr. Oliver, Lawyers, and John Goſnold Eſquire, &c. before them, and by them to be examined, by whom were objected againſt him nineteen ſpecial Articles, in order and form here following.

The names of the Commiſſioners Delegate in the cauſe of Stephen Gardiner.

Articles and Poſitions miniſtred joyntly, and ſeverally objected to the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

Articles miniſtred againſt Wincheſter by the Commiſſioners.

IN primis, That the Kings Majeſty, juſtly and rightfully is, and by the Laws of God ought to be, the Spream Head in Earth of the Church of England and Ireland, and ſo is by the Clergy of this Realm in their Convocation, and by the Act of Parliament juſtly, and according to the Laws of God recognized.

II. Item, That His Majeſty as Supream Head of the ſaid Churches, hath full power and authority to make and ſet ſuch Laws, Injunctions and Ordinances for and concerning Religion, and Orders in the ſaid Churches, for the increaſe of Virtue, and repreſſing of all Errors, Hereſies, and other Enormities and Abuſes.

III. Item, That all and every his Graces Subjects are bound by the Laws of God to obey all his Highneſs ſaid Laws, Injunctions and Proceedings, concerning Religion, and Orders in the ſaid Churches.

Wincheſter ſworn to the Kings Supremacy.

IV. Item, That you Stephen Biſhop of Wincheſter have ſworn obedience unto his Majeſty, as Supream Head of this Church of England, and alſo of Ireland.

V. Item, That all and every his Graces Subjects that diſobey any of his Majeſties Laws, Injunctions, Ordinances and Proceedings already ſet fortlr and publiſhed, and hereafter to be ſet forth and publiſhed, ought worthily to be puniſhed according to his Graces Eccleſiaſtical Laws uſed within this his Realm.

Winchester after his Oath found diſobedient to the King and his proceedings.

VI. Item, That you the ſaid Biſhop, as well in the Kings Majeſties late Viſitation within your Dioceſs, as at ſundry other times, have been complained upon, and ſundry Informations made againſt you for your doings, ſayings and preachings againſt ſundry Injunctions, Orders and other Proceedings of his Majeſty ſet forth for the Reformation of Errors, Superſtitions, and other Abuſes in Religion.

VII. Item, That after and upon the occaſion of thoſe and other many Complaints and Informations you have been ſundry times admoniſhed, commanded and enjoyned to conform your ſelf, as to your duty appertaineth.

The manifold tranſgreſſions of Wincheſter worthy of puniſhment.

VIII. Item, That after the Premiſes, and that for thoſe former Admonitions and Commandments notwithſtanding, you did yet ſtill ſhew your ſelf not Conformable; and for that alſo your example, the people were much animated, and thereby occaſion of much unquietneſs miniſtred, you were called before the Kings Majeſties Council in the Month of June, the ſecond Year of his Majeſties Reign, and by them on his Highneſs behalf commanded to preach a Sermon before his Majeſty, and therein to declare, the juſtneſs and godlineſs of his Majeſties Father and his proceedings, upon certain matters partly mentioned in certain Articles to you delivered in Writing, and partly otherwiſe declared unto you. The effect whereof was, touching the uſurped Authority of the Biſhop of Rome, and that his pretenſed authority was juſtly and godly taken away in this Realm, and other the Kings Majeſties Dominions, touching the firſt ſuppreſſion and taking away of Monaſteries, Religious Houſes, Pilgrimages, Reliques, Shrines and Images, the ſuperſtitious going about of S. Nicholas Biſhop of S. Edmund, S. Katherine, S. Clement, and ſuch like, for taking away of Chantries, Obites and Colleges, touching hallowing of Candles, Water, Aſhes, Palm, holy Bread, Beads, creeping to the Croſs, &c. touching the ſetting forth of the Kings Majeſties Authority in his young years, to be as great as if his Highneſs were of many more years, touching Auricular Confeſſion, touching the Proceſſion and Common Prayer in Engliſh, and that things done in General Councils againſt the Word of God, may be juſtly revoked in particular Councils.

IX. Item, That you receiving the ſame, and promiſing to declare them in a Sermon by you made before his Majeſty for that purpoſe, on the Feaſt of St. Peter, in the ſaid ſecond year of his Highneſs Reign, did then and there contemptuouſly and diſobediently omit to declare and ſet forth many of the ſaid matters, to the great contempt of his Majeſty, and dangerous example of others.

X. Item, That you being alſo commanded, and on his Majeſties behalf, for the avoiding of tumult, and for other great Conſiderations, inhibited to treat of any matter in Controverſie concerning the Maſs of the Communion (then commonly called the Sacrament of the Altar) did contrary to the ſaid Commandment and Inhibition, declare divers your Judgments and Opinions in the ſame, in manifeſt contempt of his Majeſties ſaid Inhibition, to the great offence of the Hearers, and diſturbance of the common Quiet and Unity of the Realm.

Say*, and Tho. Argal) time and reſpite was aſſigned unto him to anſwer to the ſaid Articles in Writing. But he ſo cavelled and dallied from day to day to anſwer directly, although he was ſufficiently labored and perſwaded to the ſame by ſundry Callings and Acts, and alſo abundantly Convicted by Depoſitions and Witneſſes, eſpecially by matter induced by the Lord Paget and Andrew Beynton, and Maſter Chaloner, pag. 816. KING Edw. 6 from them (reputing them to not to be competent and indifferent Judges to hear and determine his cause) unto the Kings Royal Person; notwithstanding by protestation always reserving to himself the benefit of his Appellation; and so proceeded he to the answering of the foresaid Articles, but in such crafty and obstinate manner, as before he had been accustomed, and as at large, to them that be desirous to understand the process thereof, in the first Book of the Acts and Monuments of the Church aforesaid may appear.

But briefly to conclude, such exceptions he used against the witnesses produced against him, and he himself produced such a number of witnesses in his defence, and used so many delays and cavillations, that in the end the Commissioners, seeing his stubbornness, proceeded to the sentence definitive against him, as hereunder followeth.

Sentence definitive against Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester.

The final sentence for deprivation of the Bishop of Winchester.

IN the Name of God Amen. By authority of a Commission by the high and mighty Prince our most gracious Sovereign Lord, Edward the Sixth, by the Grace of God King of England, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, and of the Church of England, and also of Ireland, in earth the supream Head, the tenour whereof hereafter ensueth; Edward the Sixth, &c. We Thomas by the sufferance of God Archbishop of Canterbury, Primat of all England, and Metropolitane, with the Right Reverend Fathers in God, Nicholas Bishop of London, Thomas Bishop of Ely, and Henry Bishop of Lincoln, Sir William Peter Knight, one of our said Sovereign Lords two principal Secretaries, Sir James Hales Knight, one of our said Sovereign Lords Justices of his Common Pleas, Griffith Leison, and John Oliver Doctors in the Civil Law, Richard Goodrick, and John Gosnold Esquires, Delegates and Judges assigned and appointed, rightfully and lawfully proceeding according to the form and tenour of the said Commission, for the hearing, examination, debating, and final determination of the causes and matters in the said Commission mentioned and contained, and upon the contents of the same, and certain Articles objected of office against you Stephen Bishop of Winchester, as more plainly and fully is mentioned and declared in the said Commission and Articles, all which we repute and take here to be expressed; and after sundry judicial assemblies, examinations and debatings of the said cause and matters, with all incidents, emergents and circumstances to the same or any of them belonging, and the same also being by us, oft heard, seen, and well understood, and with good and mature examination and deliberation debated, considered, and fully weighed and pondered, observing all such order and other things as by the laws, equity, and the said Commission ought, or needed herein to be observed, in the presence of you Stephen Bishop of Winchester, do proceed to the giving of our final judgment and sentence definitive in this manner following.

Ann. 1551

Forasmuch as by the Acts inacted, Exhibits and Allegations proposed, deduced and alledged, and by sufficient proofs with your own confession in the causes aforesaid, had and made, we do evidently find and perceive that you Stephen Bishop of Winchester, have not only transgressed the commandments mentioned in the same, but also have of long time, notwithstanding many admonitions and commandments given unto you to the contrary, remained a person much grudging, speaking and repugning against the godly Reformations of abuses in Religion, set forth by the Kings Highness authority within this his Realm; and forasmuch as we do also find you a notable, open and contemptucus disobeyer of sundry godly and just commandments given unto you by our said Sovereign Lord and by his authority, in divers great and weighty causes touching and concerning his Princely Office, and the state and common quietness of this Realm; and forasmuch as you have and yet do contemptuously refuse to recognize your notorious negligences, and misbehaviours, contempts and disobediences, remaining still, after a great number of several admonitions, always more and more indurate, incorrigible, and without all hope of amendment, contrary both to your Oath sworn, obedience, promise, and also your bounden duty of Allegiance; and for that great slander and offence of the people arise in many parts of the Realm, through your wilful doings, sayings and preachings, contrary to the common order of the Realm, and for sundry other great causes by the acts, Exhibits, your own confession, and proofs of this process more fully appearing; considering withal that nothing effectually hath been on your behalf alledged, proposed and proved, ne by any other means appeareth, which doth or may empair or take away the proofs made against you, upon the said matters and other the premisses.

Winchester found to be a Transgressor.

Therefore we Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, Primat of all England, and Metropolitan, Judge Delegate aforesaid, having God before our eyes, with express consent and assent of Nicholas Bishop of London, Thomas Bishop of Ely, Henry Bishop of Lincoln, Sir William Peter Knight, Sir James Hales Knight, Griffith Leison and John Oliver Doctors of the Civil Law, Richard Goodrick and John Gosnold, Esquires, Judges and Colleagues with us in the matters aforesaid, and with the counsel of divers learned men in the Laws, with whom we have conferred in and upon the premisses, do judge and determine you Stephen Bishop of Winchester, to be deprived and removed from the Bishoprick of Winchester, and from all the rites, authority, emoluments, commodities, and other appurtenances to the said Bishoprick in any wise belonging, whatsoever they be, and by these presents we do deprive and remove you from your said Bishoprick, and all rites and other commodities aforesaid; and further pronounce and declare the said Bishoprick of Winchester, to all effects and purposes, to be void by this our sentence definitive, which we give, pronounce and declare in these writings.

Steph. Gardiner Bishop of Winch. deprived of his Bishoprick.

This sentence definitive being given, the said Bishop of Winchester, under his former Protestations, dissented from the giving and reading thereof, and from the same, as unjust, and of no efficacy or effect in law; and in that the same containeth excessive punishment, and for other causes expressed in his appellation aforesaid, he did then and there apud acta, immediately after the pronouncing of the sentence, by word of mouth appeal to the Kings Royal Majesty first, secondly and thirdly, instantly, more instantly, most instantly; and asked Apostles, or Letters dismissorials to be given and granted unto him: And also, under Protestation not to recede from the former appellation, asked a Copy of the said sentence; the Judges declaring that they would first know the Kings pleasure and his Council therein. Upon the reading and giving of which sentence, the promoters willed William Say and Thomas Argal to make a publick Instrument, and the witnesses then and there present to bear testimony thereunto, &c.

S. Gardiner appealeth from the sentence to the King.

And thus have you the whole Discourse and Process of Stephen Gardiner late Bishop of Winchester, unto whom the Papistical Clergy doth so much lean, as to a mighty Atlas, and upholder of their ruinous Religion. And although I have not herewithal so fully expressed all his Letters, Answers, Preachings, Examinations, Defensions, Exhibits and Attestations, with the Depositions of all such witnesses as he could and did produce for the most advantage of his own cause, with such notes also and collections gathered upon the same, as here I might, and as before I have done, I must intreat the Reader to consider first the greatness of this Volume, which would not well bear the tedious tractation thereof; and secondly, to content himself in resorting to our first History, where not only he may perúse the whole discourse of this Bishops doings set forth at large, but also may briefly read in a few summary notes collected the whole discourse of his doctrine and judgment, touching what points of Religion he did consent and agree, or not agree unto, Page 862.

The end of Winchester's story.

The notes and collections here of read in the first Edition, fol. 862.

And thus an end of Winchester for a while, till we come to talk of his death hereafter. Whom as we number amongst good Lawyers, so is he to be reckoned amongst ignorant and gross Divines, proud Prelates, and bloudy Persecutors, as both by his cruel life and Pharisaical Doctrine may appear, especially in the Article of the Sacrament, and of our Justification, and Images, and also in crying out of the Paraphraſe, not conſidering in whoſe perſon the things be ſpoken, but what the Paraphraſt uttereth in the perſon of Chriſt, or of the Evangeliſt, and not in his own, that he wreſteth unto the Author, and maketh thereof Hereſie and abomination.

Winch. a good Lawyer, yet but a naughty Divine, and a worse Bishop.

The like impudency and quarrelling alſo he uſed againſt Bucer, Luther, Peter Martyr, Cranmer, and almoſt againſt all other true Interpreters of the Goſpel; ſo blind was his judgment, or elſe ſo wilful was his mind in the truth of Chriſts Doctrine, that it is hard to ſay, whether in him unskilfulneſs or wilfulneſs had greater predominati-on. But againſt this Doctor Gardiner we will now ſet and match on the contrary ſide Doctor Redman, forſomuch as he departing this tranſitory life the ſame preſent year 1551. cometh now by courſe of Hiſtory here to be mentioned; who for his ſingular life and profound knowledge, being inferiour in no reſpect to the ſaid Gardiner, ſhall ſtand as great a friend in promoting the Goſpels cauſe, as the other ſeemeth an enemy by all manner of ways to impair and deface the ſame. For the more aſſured declaration whereof we will hereto adjoyn (the Lord willing) the learned communication between the ſaid Dr. Redman lying on his Death-bed, and Maſter Wilkes, Maſter Alexander Nowel, Doctor Young, and other Witneſſes more. Whereof the ſaid Mr. Wilkes thus recordeth, ſpeaking in his own perſon, and his own words, as followeth.

Wincheſt. as unskilful as wilful.

Dr. Redman ſet to match S. Gardiner.

A note of the communication that I Richard Wilkes had with Maſter Doctor Redman, being ſick at Weſtminſter, but of good memory, the 2d day of November, 1551. in the preſence of Mr. Young and another whom I did not know, and two of Maſter Doctor Redman's ſervants, the one called Ellis, and the other unknown.

The communication and confeſſion of Dr. Redman in his Death-bed.

THe foreſaid Richard Wilkes coming to Doctor Redman lying ſick at Weſtminſter, and firſt ſaluting him after my ordinary duty, wiſhed him health both in ſoul and body; not doubting moreover but he did practice the godly counſel in himſelf, which he was wont to give to other being in his caſe; and thanks be to God (ſaid I) who had given him ſtuff of knowledge to comfort himſelf withal. To whom he anſwering again, ſaid in this wiſe, God of all comfort give me grace to have comfort in him, and to have my mind wholly fixed in him. Maſter Young and I ſaid Amen. Then I communed with him of his ſickneſs, and of the weakneſs of his body, and ſaid, that though he were brought never ſo low, ye he, if it were his pleaſure, that raiſed up Lazarus, could reſtore him to health again. No, no, ſaith he, that is paſt, and I deſire it not, but the will of God be fulfilled.

After this or a little other like communication, I asked if I might be ſo bold, not troubling him, to know his mind for my learning in ſome matters and points of Religion. He ſaid, yea, and that he was as glad to commune with me in ſuch matters, as with any man. And then I ſaid to his ſervants, I truſted I ſhould not trouble him. No, ſaid Ellis his ſervant, my Lord of London, Maſter Nowel and other have communed with him, and he was glad of it: Then ſaid Mr. Redman, No, you ſhall not trouble me. I pray God ever give me grace to ſpeak the truth, and his truth, and that which ſhall redound to his Glory, and ſend us unity in his Church, and we ſaid Amen.

Communication touching the Sacrament of the Lords body and bloud.

I ſaid, He ſhould do much good in declaring his Faith, and I would be glad to know his mind as touching the Sacrament of the Body and Bloud of Chriſt.

He ſaid, As man is made of two parts, of the body and the ſoul, ſo Chriſt would feed the whole man; but what (ſaith he) be the words of the Text? Let us take the words of the Scripture; and he rehearſed the Text himſelf thus, Accepit Jeſus panem, Chriſt took Bread. Wherein his will was to inſtitute a Sacrament. Accipite, comedite. Take, eat. Here he told the uſe of it. What did he give to them? Hoc eſt corpus meum, he calleth it his body.

Then I asked him of the preſence of Chriſt.

He ſaid, Chriſt was preſent with his Sacrament, and in thoſe that received it as they ought. And there was Mira unitio, a wonderful union (for that word was named betwixt Chriſt and us) as St. Paul ſaith, Vos eſtis os ex oſſibus ejus, & caro ex carne ejus, Ye be bone of his bone, and fleſh of his fleſh. The which union was ineffable.

KING Edw. Queſtion. Whether Chriſt be preſent in the Sacrament. Unitio.

Then I asked him what he thought of the opinion, that Chriſt was there corporally, naturally, and really.

Queſtion. Whether Chriſt be preſent corporally, naturally, and really in the Sacrament. Corporally, that is truly: ſo Chriſt is there; otherwiſe not

He anſwered, If you mean by corporally, naturally and really, that he is there preſent vere, I grant.

Then I asked how he thought of that which was wont commonly to be ſpoken, that Chriſt was there fleſh, bloud and bone, as I have heard the Stewards in the Leets give charge when the ſix Articles ſtood in effect, and charge the Inqueſt to inquire, that if there were any that would deny that Chriſt was preſent in the Sacrament of the Altar, in fleſh, bloud and bone; they ſhould apprehend them.

Q. Whether Chriſt be there fleſh, bloud and bone.

He ſaid that it was too groſs, and could not well be excuſed from the opinion of the Capernaites.

Then I asked him, Inaſmuch as Chriſt was there vere, how do we receive him? in our minds and ſpiritual parts, or with our mouths, and into our bodies, or both?

Q. Whether Chriſt be received in mind and ſpirit, or with mouth and body, or with both?

He ſaid, We receive him in our minds and ſouls by faith.

Then in as much as he was much in this point, that there was Mira unitio, a marvellous union betwixt us and Chriſt, in that we were Caro ex carne ejus, & os ex oſſibus ejus, Bone of his bone, and fleſh of his fleſh; I deſired to know his opinion whether we received the very body of Chriſt with our mouths, and into our bodies, or no?

Q. Whether Chriſts very body be received into our very bodies or no?

Here he pauſed and held his peace a little ſpace, and ſhortly after he ſpake, ſaying, I will not ſay ſo, I cannot tell, it is a hard queſtion; but ſurely, ſaith he, we receive Chriſt in our ſoul by faith. When you do ſpeak of it otherways, it ſoundeth groſly, and ſavoureth of the Capernaites.

Then I asked him what he thought of that which the Prieſt was wont to lift up and ſhew the people betwixt his hands?

Q. Whether that be to be worſhipped which the Prieſt ſheweth to the people betwixt his hands.

He ſaid, It is the Sacrament. Then ſaid I, they were wont to worſhip that which was lifted up. Yea, ſaith he, but we muſt worſhip Chriſt in Heaven; Chriſt is neither lifted up nor down. I am glad, ſaid I, Maſter Doctor, to hear you ſay ſo much. I would not ſpeak of the holy Sacrament otherwiſe than reverently, but I fear leſt that Sacrament, and the little white piece of Bread ſo lifted up, hath robbed Chriſt of a great part of his honour.

Q. Whether the carrying about of the Sacrament is to be allowed.

Then ſaid he, looking up and praying, God grant us grace that we may have the true underſtanding of his Word, whereby we may come to the true uſe of his Sacraments; and ſaid, he would never allow the carrying about of the Sacrament, and other fond abuſes about the ſame.

Then after a little while pauſing, ſaid I, Maſter Doctor, if I ſhould not trouble you, I would pray you to know your mind in Tranſubſtantiation. Jeſus, Maſter Wilkes, quoth he, will you ask me that? Sir, (ſaid I) not if I ſhould trouble you. No, no, I will tell you, ſaid he. Becauſe I found the opinion of Tranſubſtantiation received in the Church, when I heard it ſpoken againſt, I ſearched the ancient Doctors diligently, and went about to eſtabliſh it by them, becauſe it was received. And when I had read many of them, I found little for it, and could not be ſatisfied. Then I went to the School Doctors, and namely to Gabriel, and weighed his reaſons. The which when I had done, and perceived they were no pythier, Langueſcabat opinio mea de Tranſubſtantiatione, My opinion of Tranſubſtantiation waxed feeble: and then, ſaith he, I returned again to Tertullian and Irenæus, and when I had obſerved their ſayings, mine opinion that there ſhould be Tranſubſtantiation prorſus erat abolita, was quite daſhed.

Tranſubſtantiation.

Tranſubſtantiation not to be found in the Doctors.

Then, ſaid I, You know that the School Doctors did hold, That panis non remanebat poſt conſecrationem, That bread remained not after the conſecration, as they called it.

The School Doctors (ſaith he) did not know what Conſecratio meaneth; and here he pauſed awhile. I pray you (ſaid I) ſay you what Conſecratio means? Saith he, It is Tota actio, in miniſtring the Sacrament as Chriſt did inſtitute it. All the whole thing done in the miniſtry,

The School Doctors deceived in the word Conſecration. What is Conſecration?

{KING Edw 6} miniſtry, as Chriſt ordained it, that is Conſecratio, and what (ſaid he) need we to doubt that bread remaineth? Scripture calleth it bread, and certain good Authors that be of the later time, be of that opinion.

After that I had communed with Mr. Redman, and taken my leave of him, Maſter Young came forth into the next Chamber with me, to whom I ſaid that I was glad to ſee Maſter Doctor Redman ſo well minded. Then ſaid Maſter Young to me, I am ſure he will not deny it; I enſure you, ſaith he, Maſter Doctor hath ſo moved me, that whereas I was of that opinion before in certain things, that I would have burned and loſt my life for them; now (ſaith Maſter Young) I doubt of them. But I ſee, ſaith he, a man ſhall know more and more by proceſs of time, and reading and hearing of other, and Maſter Doctor Redman's ſaying ſhall cauſe me to look more diligently for them.

{Anno 1550} Talk about Dr. Redman.

Dr. Young ſtayed by Dr. Redman from his Popiſh opinion.

Alſo Ellis, Maſter Dr. Redman's Servant ſhewed me, that he did know that his Maſter had declared to K. Henry the 8*th* his Majeſty, That Faith only juſtifieth; but that Doctrine, as he thought, was not to be taught the people, leſt they ſhould be negligent to do good works.

The opinion of Dr. Redman touching juſtification by faith.

The ſaid Mr. Young hath reported (the which alſo I heard) that Maſter Dr. Redman ſhould ſay, that conſenſus Eccleſiæ, the conſent of the Church was but a weak Staff to lean to, but did exhort him to read the Scriptures, for there was that which ſhould comfort him when he ſhould be in ſuch caſe as he was then.

Conſenſus Eccleſiæ is but a weak ſtaff to lean to.

Works merit not eternal life.

Item, That Works had their crown and reward, but that they did not deſerve eternal life, and the Kingdom of God, no not the works of Grace; Nam donum Dei vita æterna; For everlaſting life is the gift of God.

Although theſe teſtimonies above alledged may ſuffice for a declaration touching the honeſt life, ſound Doctrine, and ſincere judgment of Dr. Redman: yet (velut ex abundanti) I thought not to cut off in this place the teſtimonial Letter or Epiſtle of Dr. Young, written to Maſter Cheke, ſpecially concerning the premiſſes. Which Epiſtle of Doctor Young, as I received it written by his own hand in the Latin Tongue, the Copy which he himſelf neither hath nor can deny to be his own, and is extant to be read in the former Book of Acts and Monuments, ſo I have here exhibited the ſame faithfully tranſlated into the Engliſh Tongue, the tenor whereof followeth.

The Letter of Maſter Young to Maſter Cheke concerning Doctor Redman, tranſlated out of Latine into Engliſh.

Mr. Youngs letter to M. Cheke concerning Dr. Redman.

ALthough, right Worſhipful, I am ſtricken into no little damp and dolour of mind for the unripe (but that it otherwiſe pleaſed Almighty God) and lamentable death of that moſt bleſſed and learned man Doctor Redman, inſomuch that, all aſtonied with weeping and lamenting, I cannot tell what to do or think, yet nevertheleſs, perceiving it to be your Worſhips will and pleaſure, that ſo I ſhould do, I gladly call my wits together, and purpoſe, by Gods grace, here in theſe my Letters ſincerely, and truly to open and declare what I heard that worthy learned man ſpeak and confeſs at the hour of his death, as touching the controverſies of Religion, wherewith the Spouſe of Chriſt is in theſe our days moſt miſerably troubled and tormented.

Commendation of Dr. Redman.

This Doctor Redman, being continually by the ſpace of twenty years, or ſomewhat more, exerciſed in the reading of the holy Scripture, with ſuch induſtry, labour, modeſty, magnanimity and prayers to Almighty God, tried and weighed the controverſies of Religion, that in all his doings, as he would not ſeem to approve that which was either falſe or ſuperſtitious; ſo he would never improve that which he thought to ſtand with the true worſhip of God. And albeit in certain Points and Articles of his Faith, he ſeemed to divers, which were altogether ignorant of that his ſingular Gravity, either for ſoftneſs, fear, or lack of ſtomach to change his mind and belief, yet they, to whom his former life and converſation, by familiar acquaintance with him was throughly known (with them alſo which were preſent at his departure) may eaſily perceive and underſtand, how in grave and weighty matters, not raſhly and unadviſedly, but with conſtant judgment and unfeigned conſcience, he deſcended into that manner of belief, which at that time of his going out of this world he openly profeſſed.

I give your wiſdom to underſtand, that when death drew near, he caſting away all hope of recovery, attended and talked of no other thing (as we which were preſent heard) but of Heaven and heavenly matters, of the later day, of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, with whom moſt fervently he deſired to be; whoſe incredible love towards us miſerable ſinners moſt worthily, and not without tears, he oftentimes uſed to extol and ſpeak of: and us which were there preſent he earneſtly moved and exhorted to prepare our ſelves to Chriſt, to love one another, and to beware of this moſt wretched and corrupt world. And beſides that he promiſed (calling God to witneſs thereunto, to whom he truſted ſhortly to come) if any would demand any queſtion, that he would anſwer him what he thought in his judgment to be the truth. At what time there were preſent Mr. Alexander Nowel, a man earneſtly bent to the true worſhipping of God, and one that had alway ſingularly well loved the ſaid Mr. Redman, to whom he ſpake on this wiſe.

{KING Edw. 6.} Exhortation of Dr. Redman to them that were about him.

Mr. Alexander Nowel, ſince Dean of Paul's.

Your excellent learning, and purity of life, I have ever both highly favoured, and had in admiration; and for no other cauſe (God be my judge) I do aſk theſe things of you which I ſhall propound, but that I might learn and know of you what is your opinion and belief touching thoſe troublous controverſies which are in theſe our days; and I ſhall receive and approve your words as Oracles ſent from Heaven.

To whom when Doctor Redman had given leave to demand what he would, and had promiſed that he would faithfully and ſincerely anſwer (all affection ſet aſide) what he thought to be the truth, Mr. Nowel ſaid, I would (quoth he) right gladly, but that I fear by my talk and communication, I ſhall be unto you, ſo feeble and now almoſt ſpent, a trouble and grief. Then ſaid Doctor Redman, replying, What ſhall I ſpare my Carkas (quoth he) which hath ſo ſhort a time here to remain? Go to, go to, (ſaid he) propound what you will. Then Maſter Nowel put forth certain queſtions, which in order I will here declare; whereunto the ſaid Dr. Redman ſeverally anſwered, as hereafter followeth.

The See of Rome a ſink of all ſin.

The firſt queſtion that he asked of him was, What he thought of the Biſhop of Rome. Unto whom Doctor Redman anſwered, That the See of Rome in theſe our later days had much ſwarved from the true Religion and worſhipping of God, and is with horrible vices ſtained and polluted; which I therefore (quoth he) pronounce to be the ſink of all evil, and ſhortly will come to utter ruine by the ſcourge of God, except it do fall the ſooner to repentance; wherewith he briefly complained of the filthy abuſe of our Engliſh Church.

Purgatory.

Being then asked, what his opinion was concerning Purgatory, and what the Schoolmen judged thereof, he anſwered, That the ſubtil reaſons of the Schoolmen concerning Purgatory, ſeemed to him to be no leſs vain and frivolous, than diſagreeing from the truth; adding thereunto, That when we be rapt to the Clouds to meet Chriſt coming to judgment with a great number of Angels in all glory and majeſty, then every one ſhall be purged with fire, as it is written, The fire ſhall go before him, and ſhall flame round about his enemies, and the fire ſhall burn in his ſight, and round about him ſhall be a great tempeſt, ſaying, That divers of the old Writers approved this his ſentence concerning Purgatory. Pſal. 97. 50.

The wicked eat not the fleſh of Chriſt.

When he was asked whether wicked and ungodly people in the holy Communion did eat the body of Chriſt, and drink his bloud; he anſwered, That ſuch kind of men did not eat Chriſts moſt bleſſed fleſh, but only took the Sacrament to their own damnation; ſaying, That Chriſt would not give his moſt pure and holy fleſh to be eaten of ſuch naughty and impure perſons, but would withdraw himſelf from them. And that (quoth he) that is objected by St. Auguſtine, That Judas received the ſelf ſame thing which Peter received, that I think to be underſtood of the external Sacrament. And the like kind of phraſe of ſpeaking (ſaid he) we may uſe concerning the Baptiſm of Magus; That Simon Magus received that which the Apoſtles did receive. Indeed as concerning the Sacrament of the external Baptiſm, Simon Magus received that which the Apoſtles did; but that internal grace wherewith the Apoſtles were endued, and that holy Spirit wherewith by Baptiſm they were inſpired, he lacked. And ſo (quoth he) the wicked and forſaken people, which raſhly preſume to come to the holy Table of the Lord, do receive the Sacrament and the ſelf ſame which good and godly men receive; but the body of Chriſt they do not receive, for Chriſt doth not vouchſafe to deliver it them. And thus, he ſaid, was his opinion and belief, although he knew others to be of a contrary judgment.

Being

{KING Edw.6}

How Christ is present in the Sacrament.

Being then after this demanded, whether he thought Chriſts preſence to be in the Sacrament, or no; he anſwered, That Chriſt did give and offer to faithful and Chriſtian men his very real body and bloud verily and really, under Sacraments of Bread and Wine; inſomuch that they which devoutly come to be partakers of that holy food, are by the benefit thereof united and made one with Chriſt in his fleſh and body. And therefore he ſaid that Chriſt did diſtribute his body ſpiritually, that he gave it truly, yet not ſo nevertheleſs, that by theſe and the like words we ſhould conceive any groſs and carnal intelligence, ſuch as the Capernaites once dreamed of, but that (quoth he) we might labour and endeavour to expreſs by ſome kind of words the ineffable Majeſty of this Myſtery. For the manner whereby Chriſt is there preſent, and miniſtreth to the faithful his fleſh, is altogether inexplicable; but we muſt believe (quoth he) and think, that by Gods mighty power, and the holy operation of his Spirit, this ſo notable a Myſtery was made; and that Heaven and Earth was joined together in that moment, as the bleſſed man S. Gregory ſaith, The loweſt parts are joined with the higheſt; by which is underſtood that holy food whereby they which be regenerate by the Holy Ghoſt in Baptiſm, are nouriſhed to immortality. And further he ſaid, That Chriſts body was received in the ſaid Sacrament by faith; which being received, both body and ſoul were quickened to everlaſting life.

The Capernaites groſs errour of Chriſts bodily preſence in the Sacrament.

Tranſubſtantiation.

Being then required to ſay his mind about Tranſubſtantiation, he gave anſwer, That he had much travelled in that point, and that he firſt much favoured and inclined to that part which maintained Tranſubſtantiation; in ſearching the verity whereof moſt ſtudiouſly he had been no little while occupied, and found to ariſe thereabout infinite and almoſt inexplicable abſurdities. In confuting whereof, when he had but ſmally contented himſelf, he ſaid he took in hand the Schoolmens works, and peruſed Gabriel and other Writers of that ſort, for that by their help and aid he hoped that all inconveniences which did ſpring and ariſe by maintenance of Tranſubſtantiation might be clean convinced and wiped away. Of which his hope he was utterly fruſtrate (ſaid he) for that he did find in thoſe Books many fond and phantaſtical things, which were both too fooliſh to be recorded in writing, and alſo to be alledged about ſuch a Myſtery, and truly (ſaid he) ever after the reading of them, my former zeal and opinion touching the maintenance of Tranſubſtantiation, did every day more and more decreaſe, and therefore in concluſion he perſwaded himſelf to think that there was no ſuch Tranſubſtantiation as the Schoolmen imagined and feigned to be; ſaying that indeed the ancient Writers were plainly againſt the maintenance thereof; amongſt whom he recited by name, Juſtine, Irene, and Tertullian, notorious adverſaries to the ſame. Furthermore he added hereunto, That the whole School underſtood not what this word Conſecratio was, which he defined to be the full entire action of the whole Communion.

Conſecration what it meaneth.

Being demanded alſo, whether we ought to worſhip Chriſt preſent in his holy Supper; he told us, that we are bound ſo to do, and that it was moſt agreeing to piety and godly Religion. Likewiſe being asked, whether he would have the viſible Sacrament to be worſhipped, which we ſee with our eyes, and is lifted up between the Prieſts hands; he anſwered, That nothing which was viſible, and to be ſeen with the eye, is to be adored or worſhipped, nor would Chriſt be elevated into any higher, nor pulled down into any lower place, and that he can neither be lifted up higher, nor pulled down lower.

Nothing to be worſhipped that may be ſeen.

The Sacrament not to be carried about.

Again, being asked his opinion about the cuſtom and manner in carrying about the Sacrament in ſolemn Pomps, Proceſſions, and otherwiſe; he ſaid, that he always miſliked and reproved that order; inſomuch that about ſixteen years agone, openly in the Pulpit at Cambridge, he ſpake againſt that abuſe, and diſallowed that Ceremony; ſhewing that Chriſt had expreſſed by plain and evident words a very fruitful and right uſe of this Sacrament, when he ſaid, Take ye (by which phraſe, quoth he, he doth expreſs that he will give a gift:) Eat ye (by which words he doth declare the proper uſe and order of that his precious gift:) This is my body, (whereby he doth evidently and plainly ſhew what by that gift they ſhould receive, and how royal and precious a gift he would give them:) and therefore he judged ſuch pompous and ſuperſtitious oſtentations utterly to be condemned and taken as plain mockeries and counterfeit viſors.

His judgment alſo being asked about the commemoration of the dead, and the remembrance of them in Oriſons, whether he thought it profitable or no; He anſwered, That it ſeemed to him to be no leſs profitable than religious and godly; and that might be well proved out of the Books of Macchabees. The which Books although S. Hierome adjudging as not authentick, thought good to be read in the Temples only for the edifying of the Church, and not for the aſſertion of opinions; yet with me the opinions of the other Writers, to whom thoſe Books are allowed as Canons, prevail, which he in that point thinketh good to be read.

In this point the judgment of Dr. Redman is not to be followed.

Being furthermore required to ſhew his mind about Trental Maſſes, and Maſſes of Scala cæli; he ſhewed them that they were altogether unprofitable, ſuperſtitious and irreligious, flowing out of the filthy and impure fountain of ſuperſtition, not yielding the fruit which they promiſed to bring forth. The ſacrifice of the Supper of the Lord (the Euchariſt I mean) that Sacrifice, he ſaid, could not be offered for the ſins of the quick and the dead.

Trental Maſſes diſproved.

Sacrifice of the Maſs diſproved.

Finally, of his own voluntary will, and no man (as far as I can call to remembrance) demanding of him, he ſhewed his opinion concerning juſtification by Chriſt. I lament (ſaid he) and repent, beſeeching God forgiveneſs of the ſame, that too ſeriouſly and earneſtly I have withſtood this propoſition, That only faith doth juſtifie; but I always feared that it ſhould be taken to the liberty of the fleſh, and ſo ſhould defile the innocency of life which is in Chriſt. But that propoſition, That only faith doth juſtifie, is true, (quoth he) ſweet, and full of ſpiritual comfort, if it be truly taken, and rightly underſtood. And when he was demanded what he thought to be the true and very ſenſe thereof, I underſtand (quoth he) that to be the lively faith which reſteth in our only Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, and embraceth him; ſo that in our only Saviour Jeſus Chriſt all the hope and truſt of our ſalvation be ſurely fixed. And as concerning good works, ſaith he, they have their crown and merit, and are not deſtitute of their rewards; yet nevertheleſs, they do not merit the Kingdom of Heaven. For no works (ſaid he) could purchaſe and obtain that bleſſed, happy and everlaſting immortality; no nor yet thoſe things which we do under grace, by the motion of the Holy Ghoſt. For that bleſſed and immortal glory is given and beſtowed upon us mortal men of the heavenly Father for his Son our Saviour Chriſts ſake, as S. Paul teſtifieth, The gift of God is eternal life. Rom. 6.

Faith only juſtifieth.

Works do not merit ſalvation.

And theſe be the reſolutions which I heard him give to the queſtions of Maſter Nowel propoſed. From which his ſentence and judgment ſo heard by me, and of him uttered (as I remember) he never declined or varied. I beſeech our Lord Jeſus Chriſt to ceaſe theſe troublous ſtorms wherewith the Church is toſſed, and vouchſafe for his holy Names ſake tenderly to behold and look upon his poor wretched flock ſo miſerably ſcattered and diſperſed; beſeeching him alſo of his goodneſs to preſerve your Worſhip.

The judgment of Dr. Yong about the controverſies of Religion.

At London the third of November.

Here followeth the Hiſtory, no leſs lamentable than notable, of William Gardiner an Engliſhman, ſuffering moſt conſtantly in Portugal, for the teſtimony of Gods Truth.

{Ann. 1552}

The ſtory of W. Gardiner moſt cruelly martyred at Lubon in Portugal.

COming now to the next year following, 1552, we will ſomewhat ſtep aſide, and borrow a little leave, coaſting the Seas into Portugal, amongſt the Popiſh Merchants there, whither a certain Country-man of ours doth call me, named William Gardiner, a man verily in my judgment not only to be compared with the moſt principal and chief Martyrs of theſe our days, but alſo ſuch a one as the ancient Churches in the time of the firſt Perſecutions cannot ſhew a more famous, whether we do behold the force of his faith, his firm and ſtedfaſt conſtantneſs, the invincible ſtrength of his ſpirit, or the cruel and horrible torments; the report only and hearing whereof were enough to put any man in horrour or fear. Yet notwithſtanding, ſo far off it was that the ſame did diſcourage him, that it may be doubted, whether the pain of his body, or the courage of his mind were the greater; when as indeed both appeared to be very great.

W. Gardiner comparable with the Martyrs in the Primitive Church.

What duty is to be given of Chriſtians to the bleſſed Martyrs paſt.

Wherefore if any praiſe or dignity amongſt men, as reaſon is, be due unto the Martyrs of Chriſt for their valiant acts, this one man amongſt many ſeemeth worthy to be numbred, and alſo to be celebrate in the Church with Ignátius, Laurentius, Ciriatius, Creſcentius and Gordianus. And if the Church of Chriſt do receive ſo great and manifold benefits by theſe Martyrs, with whoſe bloud it is watered, by whoſe aſhes it is inlarged, by whoſe conſtancy it is confirmed, by whoſe teſtimony it is witneſſed, and finally, through whoſe agonies and victories the truth of the Goſpel doth glorioully triumph; let not us then think it any great matter to requite them again with our duty, by committing them to memory, as a perpetual token of our good will towards them. Albeit they themſelves receive no glory at our hands, and much leſs challenge the ſame, but referring it wholly unto the Lord Chriſt, from whom it came, whatſoever great or notable thing there was in them. Notwithſtanding, forſomuch as Chriſt himſelf is glorified in his Saints, we cannot ſhew our ſelves thankful unto him, except we alſo ſhew our ſelves dutiful unto thoſe by whom his glory doth increaſe.

The memory of Chriſts Martyrs not to be forgotten.

Hovv it came to paſs that the Primitive Church had yearly commemorations of Martyrs.

Hereupon I think it came to paſs that the ancient Chriſtians in the time of the firſt Perſecutions, thought good to celebrate yearly commemorations of the Martyrdom of thoſe holy men, not ſo much to honour them, as to glorifie God in his ſouldiers, unto whom all glory and praiſe doth worthily belong; and moreover, that we being inſtructed by their example might be the more prompt and ready in the policies of thoſe Wars, to ſtand more ſtoutly in battel againſt our adverſaries, and learn the more eaſily to contemn and deſpiſe this world.

Superſtition in honouring Martyrs.

What profit cometh by memory of Martyrs to us.

For in conſidering the end and death of theſe men, who will greatly long or luſt after this life, which is ſo many ways miſerable, through ſo many afflictions dolorous, through ſo many caſualties ruinous, wherein conſiſteth ſo little conſtancy, and leſs ſafety, being never free from ſome hard calamity one or other? What good man would have this world in reputation, wherein he ſeeth ſo many good men ſo cruelly oppreſſed, and wherein no man can live in quietneſs except he be wicked? Wherefore I do not a little marvel, that in this great ſlaughter of good men, with ſo many ſpectacles and examples of cruel torment, Chriſtians do yet live as it were drowned in the fooliſh deſires of this world, ſeeing daily before their eyes ſo many holy and innocent men yield up their Spirits under the hands of ſuch tormentors, to ly in filthy Priſons, in bonds, darkneſs and tears, and in the end to be conſumed with fire. We ſee ſo many Prophets of God, even Chriſt himſelf the Son of God, to be ſo cruelly and many ways afflicted in this world, turmoiled, ſcourged and crucified; and yet we laugh, drink, and give our ſelves unto all looſneſs of life, and all laſciviouſneſs. For honour and great poſſeſſions we contend; we build; we ſtudy and labour by all means to make our ſelves rich. Unto whom it doth not ſuffice, that we with ſafety and freedom from their afflictions, Racks, Wheels, Scourges, Irons red hot, Gridirons, Fleſh-hooks, Mallets, and other kind of torments, may ſerve our Chriſt in peace and quiet; but being herewith not content, will give over our ſelves to all kind of wickedneſs, to be led away at the will and pleaſure of Satan.

The World giveth quietneſs to the vvicked eſpecially.

Good men moſt afflicted in this World.

The ſufferings of Martyrs be leſſons to us, to pluck us from this World.

But what do we think in ſo doing? Either we muſt reckon thoſe men to be moſt miſerable in this life, or elſe our ſelves to be moſt unhappy. But if their bleſſedneſs be moſt certain and ſure, then let us direct the courſe of our life to the ſame felicity. Theſe men have forſaken this life, which they might have enjoyed. But if we cannot willingly put off this life, yet let us not be ſlow to correct and amend the ſame; and though we cannot dy with them in like Martyrdom, yet let us mortifie the worldly and prophane affections of the fleſh, which ſtrive againſt the Spirit, and at the leaſt let us not run thus headlong into the licentious deſires of the world, as we do. As the life of Chriſtian men is now, I pray thee, what do theſe bonds, Priſons, theſe wounds and ſcarrs, theſe great fires, and other horrible torments of Martyrs, than upbraid unto us our ſlothful ſluggiſhneſs, and worthily make us aſhamed thereof? Which Martyrs, if in their lives they lived ſo innocently, and in their death continued ſo conſtant, what then is to be deemed of us which ſuffer nothing for Chriſt, and will not take upon us the ſmall conflict againſt vices and our own affections? How would

The great difference betvveen Chriſts Martyrs that have been, and the life of Chriſtians vvhich novv is.

we ſuffer the cruel looks of Tyrants, the fearful kinds of Torments, or the violent aſſaults of the Tormentors in any quarrel of godlineſs, if in peace and quietneſs we are, and that with every ſmall breath or wind of temptation, blown away from God, ſo faint-hearted without any reſiſtance, that we are carried headlong into all kind of wickedneſs and miſchief? one ſingeth Songs of love, another watcheth all the night at Dice, ſome ſpend their life and time day by day in hawking and hunting, ſome tipple ſo at Taverns that they come home reeling. Others, whatſoever deſire of revenge doth put into their heads, that by and by they ſeek to put in practice. Some gape after riches; ſome ſwell with ambition; ſome think they are born for no other purpoſe but for pleaſure and paſtime. All the world is full of injury and perjury, nay rather it is ſo rare a thing patiently to ſuffer injuries done unto us, that except we have the ſlight to do injury to others, we think our ſelves ſcarce men. There is no love almoſt nor charity among men; neither is there any man that reguardeth the good name or fame of his neighbour.

KING Edw. 6.

But amongſt all the reſt, unſatiable covetouſneſs and avarice ſo reigneth, that no man almoſt is contented with any tolerable eſtate of life, either that will preſcribe himſelf any meaſure in having that he poſſeſſeth; or in proſing for that which he lacketh; never quiet, but always toyling; never ſatisfied, but always unſatiable. Whereby it ſo cometh to paſs, that the minds of men which profeſs themſelves to be good Chriſtians being occupied in ſuch worldly carks and cares, can ſcarcely find any vacant leiſure to think upon heavenly things; and yet notwithſtanding, with theſe minds, we will needs ſeem Chriſtians. But now ſetting apart theſe complaints ſpent in vain, we will proſecute our purpoſed ſtory touching good William Gardiner.

The firſt bringing up and Trade of W. Gardiner.

And firſt as concerning his kindred, he was of an honeſt ſtock, born at Briſtow, a Town of Merchandiſe on the Sea Coaſt of England, honeſtly brought up, and by nature given unto gravity, of a mean ſtature of body, of a comely and pleaſant countenance, but in no part ſo excellent as in the inward qualities of the mind, which he always from his Childhood preſerved without ſpot of reprehenſion. Alſo his handſome and indifferent learning, did not a little commend and beautifie his other ornaments. When he grew unto thoſe years at which young men are accuſtomed to ſettle their minds to ſome kind of life, it happened that he gave himſelf to the Trade of Merchandiſe, under the conduct and guiding of a certain Merchant of Briſtow called Maſter Paget, by whom he was at the laſt (being of the age of twenty ſix years or thereabout) ſent into Spain, and by chance the Ship arriving at Lisbon (which is the chief City of Portugal) he tarried there about his Merchandiſe, where at the laſt he having gotten underſtanding of the language, and being accuſtomed to their manners, became a profitable ſervant both unto his Maſter and others, in ſuch things as pertained unto the Trade of that Vocation. Whereunto he did ſo apply himſelf, that nevertheleſs, he in that Popiſh Country, reſerving ſtill the Religion of his own Country of England, ever kept himſelf ſound and undefiled from the Portugals Superſtition. There were alſo beſides him divers other good men in the ſame City. Neither did he lack good books; or the conference of good and honeſt men, unto whom he would oftentimes bewail his imbecility and weakneſs, that he was neither ſufficiently touched with the hatred of his ſins, neither yet inflamed with the love of godlineſs.

W. Gardiner followed the Trade of Merchandiſe.

The godly diſpoſed mind of W. Gardiner.

Whilſt he was there abiding, it happened that there ſhould be a ſolemn Marriage celebrate the firſt of September in the year aboveſaid, betwixt two Princes, that is to ſay, the Son of the King of Portugal, and the Spaniſh Kings daughter. The Marriage day being come, there was great reſort of the Nobility and Eſtates. There lacked no Biſhops with Miters, nor Cardinals with Hats, to ſet out this royal Wedding. To be ſhort, they went forward to the Wedding with great pomp, where a great recourſe of people reſorted, ſome of good will, ſome for ſervice ſake, and ſome (as the manner is) to gaze and look. Great preparation of all parties was there throughout the whole City, as in ſuch caſes is accuſtomed, and all places were filled with mirth and gladneſs. In this great aſſembly of the whole Kingdom, W. Gardiner, who albeit he did not greatly eſteem

A Popiſh celebration of a Marriage.

The hour being come, they flocked into the Church with great ſolemnity and pomp; the King firſt, and then every eſtate in order; the greater perſons, the more Ceremonies were about them. After all things were ſet in order, they went forward to the celebrating of their Maſſes; for that alone ſerveth for all purpoſes. The Cardinal did execute, with much ſinging and Organ-playing. The people ſtood with great devotion and ſilence, praying, looking, kneeling, and knocking, their minds being fully bent and ſet, as it is the manner, upon the external Sacrament. How grievouſly theſe things did prick and move this young mans mind, it cannot be expreſſed, partly to behold the miſerable abſurdity of thoſe things, and partly to ſee the folly of the common people, and not only of the common people, but eſpecially to ſee the King himſelf and his Council, with ſo many ſage and wiſe men as they ſeemed, to be ſeduced with like Idolatry as the common people were; inſomuch that it lacked very little, but that he would even that preſent day have done ſome notable thing in the Kings ſight and preſence, but that the great preſs and throng that was about him letted that he could not come unto the Altar. What need many words, when the Ceremonies were ended, he cometh home very ſad and heavy in his mind, inſomuch that all his fellows marvelled greatly at him. Who albeit upon divers conjectures they conceived the cauſe of his ſadneſs, notwithſtanding they did not fully underſtand that thoſe matters did ſo much trouble his godly mind; neither yet did he declare it unto any man, but ſeeking ſolitarineſs and ſecret places, falling down proſtrate before God, with manifold tears he bewailed the neglecting of his duty, deliberating with himſelf how he might revoke that people from their impiety and ſuperſtition.

The godly zeal of W. Gardiner in ſeeing the Idolatry of the people, and the great diſworſhip of God.

W. Gardiner cleareth his Books of Accounts.

In this deliberation and advice his mind being fully ſetled, and thinking that the matter ought not to be any longer deferred, he renounced the world, making up all his accounts ſo exactly (as well of that which was due unto him, as that which he owed unto others) as no man could juſtly ask ſo much as one farthing. Which thing done, he continued night and day in prayer, calling upon God, and continual meditation of the Scriptures, that ſcarcely he would take any meat by day, or ſleep by night, or at the moſt above one hour or two of reſt in the night, as Pendigrace his fellow companion both at bed and board, being yet alive can teſtifie.

W. Gardiners adviſed preparation to this accompliſhment of his purpoſe.

The Sunday came again to be celebrate either with like pomp and ſolemnity, or not much leſs, whereas the ſaid William was preſent early in the morning, very cleanly apparelled even of purpoſe, that he might ſtand near the Altar without repulſe. Within a while after cometh the King with all his Nobles. Then Gardiner ſetteth himſelf as near the Altar as he might, having a Teſtament in his hand, the which he diligently read upon, and prayed, until the time was come that he had appointed to work his feat. The Maſs began, which was then ſolemnized by a Cardinal. Yet he ſat ſtill. He which ſaid Maſs, proceeded, he conſecrated, ſacrificed, lifted up on high, ſhewed his god unto the people, all the people gave great reverence, and as yet he ſtirred nothing. At the laſt they came unto that place of the Maſs, whereas they uſe to take the Ceremonial Hoſt, and toſs it to and fro round about the Chalice, making certain circles and ſemicircles. Then the ſaid William Gardiner, being not able to ſuffer any longer, ran ſpeedily unto the Cardinal: and (which is uncredible to be ſpoken) even in the preſence of the King and all his Nobles and Citizens, with the one hand he ſnatched away the Cake from the Prieſt, and trode it under his feet, and with the other hand overthrew the Chalice. This matter at the firſt made them all abaſhed, but by and by there aroſe a great tumult, and the people began to cry out. The Nobles and the common people ran together, amongſt whom one drawing out his Dagger gave him a great wound in his ſhoulder, and as he was about to ſtrike him again to have ſlain him, the King twice commanded to have him ſaved. So by that means they abſtained from murther.

W. Gardiner brought before the King.

After the tumult was ceaſed, he was brought to the King; by whom he was demanded what Countryman he was, and how he durſt be ſo bold to work ſuch a contumely againſt his Majeſty, and the Sacraments of the Church? He anſwered, Moſt noble King, I am not aſhamed of my Country, which am an Engliſh man both by birth and religion, and am come hither only for traffick of Merchandiſe. And when I ſaw in this famous aſſembly ſo great Idolatry committed, my conſcience neither ought, neither could any longer ſuffer, but that I muſt needs do that which you have ſeen me preſently do. Which thing (moſt noble Prince) was not done nor thought of me for any contumely or reproach of your preſence, but only for this purpoſe (as before God I do clearly confeſs) to ſeek the ſalvation of this people.

The Oration of W. Gardiner before the King.

When they heard that he was an Engliſh man, and called to remembrance how the Religion was reſtored by King Edward, they were by and by brought in ſuſpition, that he had been ſuborned by Engliſh men thus to do, to mock and deride their Religion. Wherefore they were the more earneſt upon him to know who was the author and procurer that he ſhould commit that act. Unto whom he anſwered, deſiring them that they would conceive no ſuch ſuſpition of him, forſomuch as he was not moved thereunto by any man, but only by his own conſcience. For otherwiſe there was no man under the Heaven, for whoſe ſake he would put himſelf into ſo manifeſt danger; but that he ought this ſervice firſt unto God, and ſecondarily unto their ſalvation: wherefore if he had done any thing which were diſpleaſant unto them, they ought to impute it unto no man, but unto themſelves, who ſo unreverently uſed the holy Supper of the Lord unto ſo great Idolatry, not without great ignominy unto the Church, violation of the Sacrament, and the peril of their own ſouls, except they repented.

The ſuſpition of the Portugals upon the fact of W. Gardiner.

The anſwer of W. Gardiner to the falſe ſuſpition of the Portugals.

Whileſt that he ſpake theſe with many other things more unto this effect very gravely and ſtoutly, the blood ran abundantly out of the wound, ſo that he was ready to faint. Whereupon Surgeons were ſent for, whereby he might be cured if it were poſſible, and be reſerved for further examination, and more grievous torment. For they were fully perſwaded that this deed had divers abettors and ſetters on: which was the cauſe that all the other Engliſh men alſo in the ſame City came into ſuſpition, and were commanded to ſafe cuſtody. Amongſt whom Pendigrace, becauſe he was his Bedfellow, was grievouſly tormented and examined more than the reſidue, and ſcarcely was delivered after two years impriſonment. The other were much ſooner ſet at liberty at the interceſſion of a certain Duke. Notwithſtanding their ſuſpition could not yet be thus ſatisfied, but they came into his Chamber to ſeek if there were any Letters, to underſtand and find out the author of this enterpriſe. And when as they could find nothing there, they came again unto him being grievouſly wounded, with torments to extort of him the author of this fact, and to accuſe him as guilty of moſt grievous hereſie. Of both which points, with ſuch dexterity as he could, he cleared himſelf. Wherein albeit he ſpake in the Spaniſh Tongue well, yet he uſed the Latin Tongue much more exactly.

Pendigrace Bedfellow to W. Gardiner, impriſoned upon ſuſpition.

W. Gardiners Chamber ſearched.

But they not being therewith ſatisfied, added another ſtrange kind of torment, which (as I ſuppoſe) paſſeth the Bull of Phalaris. Becauſe there ſhould no kind of extreme cruelty be left unaſſayed, they cauſed a linnen cloth to be ſowed round like a Ball, the which they with violence put down his throat unto the bottom of his ſtomack, tyed with a ſmall ſtring which they held in their hands, and when it was down, they pulled it up again with violence, ſo plucking it to and fro through the meat pipe, in ſuch ſort as that with much leſs grief they might have rid him out of his life at once.

The Bull of Phalaris a certain Tyrant was a kind of torment made of Braſs like a Bull with fire under it to torment, ſuch as were put into it, to make them to roar like a Bull.

Thus at the laſt, when all torments and tormentors were wearied, and that it did nothing at all prevail to go this way to work, they asked him whether he did not repent his wicked and ſeditious deed? As touching the deed, he anſwered, that it was ſo far off that he did repent, that if it were to do again, he thought he ſhould do the ſame. But as touching the manner of the deed, he was not a little ſorry that it was done in the Kings preſence, to the diſquietneſs of his mind. Howbeit, that was not to be imputed unto him, which neither interpriſed nor thought upon any ſuch matter, but was rather to be aſcribed unto the King, in that he having power would not prohibit ſo great Idolatry uſed among his people. This he ſpake with great fervency. After

W. Gardiner not repenting his fact.

The right hand of W. Gardiner cut off in the Veſtry. The left hand of W. Gardiner cut off in the Market-place.

After that they had uſed all kind of torments, and ſaw that there could nothing more be gathered of him, and alſo that through his wounds and pains he could not long live, they brought him three days after to execution. And firſt of all, bringing him into the Veſtry, they cut off his right hand, which he taking up with his left hand, kiſſed. Then he was brought into the Market-place, whereas his other hand alſo was cut off; which he kneeling down upon the ground, alſo kiſſed. Theſe things thus done, after the manner and faſhion of Spain, his arms being bound behind him, and his feet under the horſe-belly, he was carried to the place of execution.

There was in that place a certain Engine, from the which a great Rope coming down by a Pulley was faſtened about the middle of this Chriſtian Martyr, which firſt pulled him up. Then was there a great pile of wood ſet on fire underneath him, into the which he was by little and little let down, not with the whole body, but ſo that his feet only felt the fire. Then was he hoiſed up, and ſo let down again into the fire, and thus oftentimes pulled up and down. In which great torment for all that he continued with a conſtant ſpirit, and the more terribly he burned, the more vehemently he prayed.

{KING Edw. 6}

The wretched cruelty of the Portugals in burning a Chriſtian Martyr.

The cruell handling of William Gardiner an Engliſh Merchant, in Portugall.

W. Gardiner at his burning willed again to repent.

At the laſt when his feet were conſumed, the Tormentors asked him whether he did not yet repent him of his deed, and exhorted him to call upon our Lady and the Saints. Whereunto he anſwered, That as he had done nothing whereof he did repent him, ſo he had the leſs need of the help of our Lady or any other Saint; and what external torments ſoever they uſed, the Truth (he ſaid) remaineth always one and like unto it ſelf; the which as he had before confeſſed in his life, ſo would he not now deny it at his death: deſiring them to leave off ſuch vanities and folly. For when as Chriſt did ceaſe any more to be our Advocate, then he would pray to our Lady to be his Advocate, and ſaid, O eternal God, Father of all mercies, I beſeech thee look down upon thy ſervant, &c. And when as they ſought by all means poſſible to ſtop or hinder his praying, and prailing God in this ſort, he cried out with a loud voice, rehearling the three and fortieth Pſalm, Judica me Deus, & diſcerne cauſam meam de gente non ſancta. Judg me, O God, and defend my cauſe againſt the unmerciful people.

W. Gardiner would not pray to our Lady, ſo long as he had Chriſt to be his Advocate.

The prayer of W. Gardiner out of Pſal. 43.

He was not come unto the later end of the Pſalm, when as they pulling him up and down in the fire for the more torment; the rope being burnt aſunder, he fell down into the midſt thereof; whereas giving his body for a ſacrifice, he changed his temporal pains for perpetual reſt and quietneſs.

A leſſon for the Portugals.

The juſt hand of God upon executors.

Thus it ſeemed good in the ſight of God, by this meſſenger to provoke the Portugals to the ſincere knowledg of him; and therefore they ought the more to have acknowledged the great love and kindneſs of God offered unto them, and alſo the more to be mindful of their own duty and thankfulneſs towards him. And if it be ſo great an offence to violate the ordinances of mans Law, and to contemn the Ambaſſadors of Kings and Princes, let the Portugals and all others look well unto it, what it is ſo cruelly to handle the heavenly meſſenger of the high God. Neither was this their cruelty altogether unrevenged by the mighty hand of God, when as not only the very ſame night, amongſt divers of the Kings ſhips which were in the next Haven ready to ſail, one was burned, being ſet on fire by a ſparkle of Gardiners fire driven thither with the wind, but alſo the Kings Son which then was married, died within half a year, and in the next year after the King himſelf alſo died, and ſo both within one year after the tormenting of this bleſſed Martyr.

It is reported that that ſparkle lighted among Gunpowder.

Thus the body of the ſaid Gardiner being conſumed, yet the rage and fury of the common people ſo ceaſed not, but they were as cruel againſt him being dead, as they were when he was alive, and with their tongues tormented this Martyr, when they could do no more with their hands; yea for very madneſs they would ſcarce tarry until he were burned, but every man as they could catch any piece of him half burned, threw it into the Sea.

The blind and miſerable cruelty of the Portugals againſt a poor Engliſhman.

This ſacrifice thus ended, the Clergy to pacifie Gods wrath which they feared for the violating of their Altar, appointed a certain Faſt of certain days, for penance to purge that fact, which fact rather ſhould have taught them to purge themſelves, and to put away their filthy Idolatry; and much rather they ſhould have faſted and repented for that their extreme cruelty they had ſhewed unto the lively member of Chriſt.

A Popiſh faſt for pacifying the wrath of their God of the Altar.

Albeit this death of William Gardiner ſeemeth to have profited very many of them little or nothing; yet for all that there are ſome (as I have heard divers report) out of whoſe minds the remembrance of this conſtant Martyr can never be pulled, and is ſo freſh yet amongſt them, as if it were now lately done; and finally, albeit it be a good while ſince he was put to death, yet the memory of his death, as fruitful ſeed, hath taken ſuch root in ſome, that even {KING Edw 6} even unto this present day he is a lively and diligent Preacher unto them against Superstition and Idolatry used in their Churches. Ex testimonio N. Fildi, Pendegrace, & aliorum, qui rei gestæ interfuerunt.

The Tragical History of the worthy Lord Edward Duke of Somerset, Lord Protector, with the whole cause of his troubles and handling.

{Anno 1552.} The story of the Lord Protector Duke of Somerset.

AFter so many troublous matters in this History afore-passed, coming now to the lamentable and tragical Narration of the Lord Edward Duke of Somerset, the Kings Uncle, and Protector of his person, and of his Realm, I could not well enter into the story of him without some premonition, first to all Noble Personages, of what honour or calling soever within this Realm, by way of History briefly to admonish them, no man to plant any trust or assurance upon the brickle pillars of worldly prosperity how high soever it seemeth, considering that there is no state so high, but it hath his ruin; no wisdom so circumspect, but it may be circumvented; no virtue so perfect, but it may be envied; neither any mans trade so simple, but it may be beguiled. And therefore seeing the condition of mortal things is so, that no man can always stand in this so ruinous a world; the surest way is for every man to chuse his standing so, that his fall may be the easier. But because my purpose is (as I have said in the stories before) to abridg and make short, I will here stay, referring thee to the secret consideration of that which remaineth further by me in this matter to be uttered; and so falling into the story of the Lord Protector Duke of Somerset, we will (the Lord willing) declare in order the original and whole occasion of his trouble and decay, even from the beginning.

Worldly prosperity not to be trusted unto

King Edward, after that both his Father and Mother were dead, had three Uncles left him by his Mothers side, Edward, Thomas, and Henry Semer, of the which two first, one was made Protector of the Realm, and the other High Admiral of the same. These two Brethren, so long as they were knit and joyned together in amity and concord, preserved both themselves, the King their Nephew, and the whole Commonwealth, from the violence and fear of all danger. But the subtil old Serpent always envying mans felicity, through slanderous tongues sought to sow matter, first of discord between them, then of suspition, and last of all extreme hatred; insomuch that the Protector suffered his Brother being accused (whether truly or falsely the Lord knoweth) to be condemned, and to lose his head. Whereby it came to pass (whether by the correction of Gods judgment upon him, or whether that he after the death of his Brother, and the King being yet but young and tender of age, was the less able to shift for himself) that not long after he was overmatched and overthrown of his enemies, and so cast into the Tower, and at last lost his head also, to the great lamentation of many good men, as in the sequel of this History followeth to be declared. For the better Introduction of which History, first to begin with the foresaid Brother of the Lord Protector, namely Sir Thomas Semer High Admiral of England, and the Kings Uncle, here is to be understood that he had married Queen Katharine late wife to King Henry the Eighth, of whom ye heard before. Now it happened (upon what occasion I know not) that there fell a displeasure betwixt the said Queen and the Dutchess of Somerset, and thereupon also in the behalf of their wives, displeasure and grudg began between the Brethren. Which albeit through perswasion of friends it was for a time appeased between them; yet in short space after (perchance not without the privy setting forward of some which were back-friends to the Gospel) it brake out again, both to the trouble of the Realm, and specially to the confusion of them both, as after it proved. First to the Lord Admirals charge it was laid, that he purposed to destroy the young King, and translate the Crown unto himself, and for the same being attainted and condemned, he did suffer at Tower-hill the twentieth of March 1549. As many there were which reported that the Dutchess of Somerset had wrought his death; so many moe there were, who misdoubting the long standing of the Lord Protector in his state and dignity, thought and affirmed no less, but that the fall of the one Brother would be the ruin of the other; the experiment whereof as it hath often been proved, so in these also erstoons it insued.

En quo discordia fratres perducit miseros.

It was not long after the beheading of the Lord Admiral, but Insurrections began to kindle the same year in divers quarters of the Realm, as is above storied. By the occasion whereof the Lord Russel, Lord Privy Seal was sent to the West parts, and the Lord Dudley Earl of Warwick was sent with an Army into Northfolk; where both he himself, and a great number of Gentlemen that were with him, meeting with the Rebels, were in great danger: notwithstanding, in the end the overthrow was given to the Rebels, which was about the beginning of September 1549. After this victory atchieved, in the next month following, which was October, how the matter fell out between the Lord Protector and certain other Lords, I know not, but at the return of the Earl of Warwick aforesaid, great working and consultation there was among the Lords, assembling themselves in the house of Mr. York, and at Bainards-Castle, and in the Lord Mayors house at London, against the Lord Protector, remaining then with the King at Hampton-Court. Of the which business and trouble thus the Lord Protector writeth in his Letters to the Lord Russel in the West Country as followeth.

AFter our right hearty commendations to your good Lordship, here hath of late risen such a conspiracy against the Kings Majesty and us, as never hath been seen, the which they cannot maintain but with such vain Letters and false tales surmised, as was never meant nor intended of us. They pretend and say, that we have sold Bulloign to the French, and that we do withhold wages from the Soldiers, and other such Tales and Letters they do spread abroad (of the which if any one thing were true, we would not wish to live) the matter now being brought to a marvellous extremity, such as we would never have thought it could have come unto, specially of these men towards the Kings Majesty and us, of whom we have deserved no such thing, but rather much favour and love. But the case being as it is, this is to require and pray you to hasten you hither to the defence of the Kings Majesty, with such force and power as you may, to shew the part of a true Gentleman, and of a very friend: the which thing we trust God shall reward and the Kings Majesty in time to come, and we shall never be unmindful of it too. We are sure you shall have other Letters from them: but as you tender your duty to the Kings Majesty, we require you to make no stay, but immediately repair with such force as ye have to his Highness Castle of Windsor, and cause the rest of such force as ye may make to follow you. And so we bid you right heartily farewell. From Hampton-Court the sixth of October.

Your Lordships assured loving Friend, Edward Somerset.

An Answer to the Lord Protectors Letter.

The effect of the Lord Russels Letter answering to the Lord Protector.

TO this Letter of the Lord Protector sent the sixth of October, the Lord Russel returning answer again upon the eighth of the said month, first lamenteth the heavy dissention faln between the Nobility and him, which he taketh for such a Plague, as a greater could not be sent of Almighty God upon this Realm, being the next way, saith he, to make of us Conquerors, slaves, and like to induce upon the whole Realm an universal calamity and thraldom, unless the merciful goodness of the Lord do help, and some wise order be taken in staying these great extremities. And as touching the Dukes request in his Letters; forsomuch as he heard before of this broil of the Lords, and fearing lest some conspiracy had been meant against the Kings person, he hasted forward with such ſuch company as he could make for the ſurety of the King, as to him appertained. Now perceiving by the Lords Letters ſent unto him the ſame ſixth day of October theſe tumults to riſe upon private cauſes between him and them, he therefore thought it expedient that a convenient power ſhould be levied, to be in a readineſs to withſtand the worſt (what perils ſoever might enſue) for the preſervation both of the King and ſtate of the Realm from the invaſion of foreign enemies, and alſo for the ſtaying of bloodſhed, if any ſuch thing ſhould be intended between the parts in the heat of this faction. And this he thinking beſt for diſcharge of his Allegiance humbly beſeecheth his Grace to have the ſame alſo in ſpecial regard and conſideration, firſt that the Kings Majeſty be put in no fear; and that if there be any ſuch thing wherein he hath given juſt cauſe to them thus to proceed, he will ſo conform himſelf as no ſuch private quarrels do redound to the publick diſturbance of the Realm; certifying moreover the Duke, that if it were true which he underſtandeth by the Letters of the Lords, that he ſhould ſend about Proclamations and Letters for raiſing up of the Commons, he liked not the ſame. Notwithſtanding he truſted well that his wiſdom would take ſuch a way as no effuſion of blood ſhould follow.

The Contents of the ſecond Anſwer of the L. Ruſſel to the L. Protector.

And thus much being contained in his former Letters of the eighth of October, in his next Letters again, written the eleventh day of October, the ſaid Lord Ruſſel rejoycing to hear of the moſt reaſonable offers of the Lord Protector made unto the Lords, writeth unto him, and promiſeth to do what in the uttermoſt power of him (and likewiſe of Sir William Harbert joyned together with him) doth lie, to work ſome honourable reconciliation between him and them; ſo as his ſaid offers being accepted and ſatisfied, ſome good concluſion might enſue, according to their good hope and expectation: ſignifying moreover, that as touching the levying of men, they had reſolved to have the ſame in readineſs for the benefit of the Realm, to occur all inconvenience whatſoever (either by foreign invaſion or otherwiſe) might happen, and ſo having their power at hand, to draw near, whereby they might have the better opportunity to be ſollicitors, and a means for this reformation on both parties, &c.

The good L. Ruſſel a ſollicitor for peace between the L. Protector and the Lords.

And thus much for anſwer of the Lord Ruſſel to the Lord Protectors Letters.

The Lords of the Council aſſembled againſt the L. Protector.

But now to the matter again of the Lords, who together with the Earl of Warwick (upon what occaſion God knoweth) being aſſembled at London, as ye heard againſt the Lord Protector; when the King with his Council at Hampton-Court heard thereof, firſt Secretary Peter with the Kings meſſage was ſent unto them, whom the Lords notwithſtanding detained ſtill with them, making as yet no anſwer to the meſſage. Whereupon the Lord Protector writeth to them in this manner as followeth.

A Letter of the Lord Protector to the Council at London.

The L. Protectors Letter to the Lords of the Council at London.

MY Lords, we commend us moſt heartily unto you, and whereas the Kings Majeſty was informed that you were aſſembled in ſuch ſort as you do now alſo remain, and was adviſed by us and ſuch other of his Council as were then here about his perſon, to ſend Mr. Secretary Peter unto you, with ſuch meſſage as whereby might have enſued the ſurety of his Majeſties perſon, with preſervation of his Realm and Subjects, and the quiet both of us and your ſelves, as Mr. Secretary can well declare to you: his Majeſty and we of his Council here do not a little marvel that you ſtay ſtill with you the ſaid Mr. Secretary, and have not as it were vouchſafed to ſend anſwer to his Majeſty, neither by him nor any other. And for our ſelves we do much more marvel and are right ſorry, as both we and you have good cauſe to be, to ſee the manner of your doings bent with violence, to bring the Kings Majeſty and us to theſe extremities. Which as we do intend, if you will take no other way but violence, to defend as nature and our allegiance doth bind us, to extremity of death, and and to put all to Gods hand, who giveth victory as it pleaſeth him: ſo that if any reaſonable conditions and offers would take place (as hitherto none have been ſignified unto us from you, nor do we underſtand what you do require or ſeek, or what you do mean) and that you do ſeek no hurt to the Kings Majeſties perſon; as touching all other private matters, to avoid the effuſion of Chriſtian blood, and to preſerve the Kings Majeſties perſon, his Realm and Subjects, you ſhall find us agreeable to any reaſonable condition that you will require. For we do eſteem the Kings wealth and tranquillity of the Realm, more than all other worldly things; yea more than our own life. Thus praying you to ſend your determinate anſwer herein by Maſter Secretary Peter, or if you will not let him go, by this Bearer; We beſeech God to give both you and us grace to determine this matter, as may be to Gods honour, the preſervation of the King, and the quiet of us all, which may be, if the fault be not in you. And ſo we bid you moſt heartily farewell.

{KING Edw. 6}

No word hitherto ſent from the Lords to the Lord Protector, what they required of him to do. Reaſonable conditions offered by the Lord Protector.

From the Kings Majeſties Caſtle of Windſor, the ſeventh of October, 1549.

Your Lordſhips Loving Friend, E. Somerſet.

After theſe Letters received, and the reaſonable conditions of the Lord Protector, and yet not much regarded of the Lords, they perſiſting ſtill in their pretenſed purpoſe, took this advice, firſt to keep themſelves in the City of London, as ſtrong as they might; and therefore calling upon the Mayor and the Aldermen, they willed them in any caſe to provide a good and ſubſtantial Watch by night, and a good Ward by day, for the ſafeguard of their City, and the Ports and Gates thereof; which was conſented unto, and the Companies of London in their turns warned to watch and ward accordingly.

A ſolemn Watch commanded in London.

Then the ſaid Lords and Counſellors demanded of the Lord Mayor and his Brethren five hundred men to aid them to fetch the Lord Protector out of Windſor from the King; but thereunto the Mayor anſwered, That he could grant none aid without the aſſent of Common-Council of the City: Whereupon the next day a Common-Council was warned. But in the mean time the ſaid Lords of the Council aſſembled themſelves at the Lord Mayors Houſe of London, who then was Sir Henry Amcottes Fiſhmonger, and William Lock Mercer, and Sir John Aileph Sheriffs of the ſaid City, and there the ſaid Council did agree and publiſh a Proclamation forthwith againſt the Lord Protector, the effect of which Proclamation was as followeth:

The City of London preſſed with 500 men to fetch the L. Protector. The anſwer of the Lord Mayor to the Lords. The Lords aſſembled in the Lord Mayors houſe.

The effect of the Proclamation ſet out againſt the L. Protector.

First, That the Lord Protector, by his malicious and evil Government, was the occaſion of all the ſedition that of late happened within the Realm.

2. The loſs of the Kings Pieces in France.

3. That he was ambitious and ſought his own glory, as appeareth by building of moſt ſumptuous and coſtly Houſes in the time of the Kings Wars.

4. That he eſteemed nothing the grave counſel of the Counſellors.

5. That he ſowed diviſion between the Nobles, the Gentlemen and Commons.

6. That the Nobles aſſembled themſelves together at London for none other purpoſe, but to have cauſed the Protector to have lived within limits, and to have put ſuch order for the ſurety of the Kings Majeſty as appertained, whatſoever the Protectors doings were; which they ſaid were unnatural, ungrate and trayterous.

7. That the Protector ſlandered the Council to the King, and did what in him lay, to cauſe variance between the King and the Nobles.

8. That he was a great Traytor, and therefore the Lords deſired the City and Commons to aid them, to take him from the King.

And in witneſs and teſtimony of the Contents of the ſaid Proclamation, the Lords ſubſcribed their names, which were theſe:

{Ann. 1552}

The Lord Rich, Lord Chancellor.
The Lord Saint John, Lord great Maſter, and Preſident of the Council.
The Lord Marqueſs of Northampton.

The Lords coming into Guildhall.

After the aforeſaid Proclamation was proclaimed, the Lords or the moſt part of them, continuing and lying in London, came the next day to the Guildhall, during the time that the Lord Mayor and his Brethren ſat in their Court or inward Chamber, and entred and communed a long while with the Mayor: and at the laſt the Mayor and his Brethren came forth unto the Common-Council, where was read the Kings Letter ſent to the Mayor and Citizens, commanding them to aid him with a Thouſand well appointed men out of their City, and to ſend the ſame with all ſpeed to his Caſtle at Windſor.

This Letter by name was directed to Sir Henry Amcottes Knight, Lord Mayor, to Sir Rowland Hill Knight, Mayor Elect, and to the Aldermen and Common-Council of the City of London. The day and date of the Letter was the ſixth of October, in the third year of his Reign, being ſigned with the hand of the King, and the Lord Protector; the Contents of which Letter, for the ſatisfaction of the Reader, are here to be ſeen in manner and form as followeth.

TRuſty and Welbeloved, We Greet you well. We charge and command you moſt earneſtly to give order with all ſpeed for the defence and preſervation of that our City of London for us, and to levy out of hand, and to put in order as many as conveniently you may, well weaponed and arrayed, keeping good watch at the Gates, and to ſend us hither, for the defence of our perſon, one thouſand of that our City, of truſty and faithful men, to attend upon us and our moſt entirely beloved Uncle Edward Duke of Somerſet, Governour of our Perſon, and Protector of our Realms, Dominions and Subjects, well harneſſed, and with good and convenient weapon; ſo that they do make their repair hither unto us this night, if it be poſſible, or at the leaſt to morrow before noon, and in the mean time to do what appertaineth unto your duty for ours and our ſaid Uncles defence againſt all ſuch as attempt any conſpiracy or enterpriſe of violence againſt us and our ſaid Uncle; as you know beſt for our preſervation and defence at this preſent. Given under our Signet at our Mannor of Hampton-Court, the ſixth of October, the third year of our Reign.

You ſhall further give credit to our truſty and welbeloved Owen Cleydon, the Bearer hereof, in all ſuch things as he ſhall further declare unto you on the behalf of us and our ſaid Uncle the Lord Protector.

EDWARD SOMERSET.

This Letter of the King and of the Lord Protector was not ſo ſecretly deviſed, nor ſo ſpeedily ſent, but the Lords keeping at London had knowledg immediately thereof (by the means, as ſome ſuppoſe, of the Lord Paget, who was then with the King and the Protector, but the truth the Lord knoweth) being there ready furniſhed with their own bands of Serving-men, and other Souldiers and men of Arms.

Who forthwith upon the ſame addreſſed their Letters in ſemblable wiſe to the ſaid Lord Mayor and Aldermen in the Kings name, not only for a ſupportation of Armed men to ſerve their purpoſes, and for a ſufficient Watch to fortifie their City, but alſo that they ſhould not obey any ſuch Letters, Proclamations, or Injunctions ſent to them from the Duke. Which Letter of the Lords at the ſame inſtant came likewiſe to the Lord Mayor and his Brethren, the ſixth day of the ſaid month of October. The tenour and Copy of which Letter here enſueth.

To our very good Lord, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens of London.

The Letter of the Lords ſent to the Lord Mayor and Council of London againſt the Lord Protector.

AFter our hearty commendations unto your good Lordſhip; knowing your hearty favour and earneſt zeals to the preſervation of the Kings Majeſty, and of this Realm, and other his Majeſties Realms and Dominions, we have thought good to advertiſe you, that notwithſtanding all the good advice and counſel that we could give to the Duke of Somerſet, to ſtay himſelf within reaſonable limits, and to uſe his Government now in the tender age of his Majeſty, in ſuch ſort as might tend to his Highneſs ſurety, to the conſervation of his eſtate, and to his honour; the ſaid Duke nevertheleſs ſtill continuing in his pride, covetouſneſs, and ambition, ceaſeth not daily, by all the ways and means he can deviſe, to enrich himſelf without meaſure, and to impoveriſh his Majeſty.

He buildeth in four or five places moſt ſumptuouſly, and leaveth the poor Souldiers unpayed of their wages, unvictualed, and in all things ſo unfurniſhed, as the loſſes lately ſuſtained, to the greateſt diſhonour that ever came to the King and this Realm, do declare. He ſoweth daily diviſion between the Nobles and Gentlemen, and Commons. He rewardeth and entertaineth a number of thoſe that were Captains of the Commons in theſe late inſurrections; and finally in ſuch wiſe ſubverteth all Laws, Juſtice and good order (as it is evident) that putting his truſt in the Commons, and perceiving that the Nobles and Gentlemen ſhould be an impediment to him in his Devilliſh purpoſes, he laboureth firſt to have them deſtroyed, and thinketh after eaſily enough to atchieve his deſire, which it appeareth plainly, is to occupy the Kings Majeſties place. For his doings, whoſoever liſt to behold them, do manifeſtly declare, that he mindeth never to render account to his Majeſty of his proceedings.

Crimes laid to the Lord Protector by the Lords.

Juſte judicate filii hominum.

Theſe things with many moe too long to recite, conſidered, we pondered with our ſelves, that either we muſt travel for ſome reformation, or we muſt in effect as it were conſent with him to the deſtruction of our Sovereign Lord and Country. Whereupon laying apart all reſpects, and reſting only upon our duties, we joined in counſel, and thought quietly to have treated the matter with him. Who perceiving that we joyned for the King, and would have ſuch order as might be for the ſurety of his Majeſties perſon, and the Commonwealth, ſtraight put himſelf in force, and reſteth at plain point (as it appeareth) either to go through with his deteſtable purpoſe in ſuch ſort as he hath done, or to try it by the ſword.

Now forſomuch as we ſee preſently, that unleſs there be a reformation, the perſon of the Kings Majeſty is in moſt certain danger, and this Realm our natural Country like to be deſtroyed with all our poſterities; like as we have again fully reſolved with Gods help, either to deliver the Kings Majeſty and the Realm from this extreme ruin and deſtruction, or to ſpend our lives for the declaration of our faithful hearts and duties; ſo knowing your hearty good wills and truth to his Majeſty, and therefore nothing doubting of your readineſs to joyn with us in our godly purpoſe, we thought good to let you know the very troth of our enterpriſe, and in the Kings Majeſties behalf to require you not only to put good and ſubſtantial order for watch and ward, but alſo to have an earneſt continual regard to the preſervation, within your City, of all Harneſs, Weapons, and Munitions, ſo as none be ſuffered to be conveyed to the ſaid Duke, nor any others attending about him; and beſides, beſides, that you from henceforth obey no Letters, Proclamations, nor other Commandments to be ſent from the ſaid Duke. And thus we bid your Lordſhip moſt heartily farewell.

From London, the ſixth of October.

The City of London urged with two contrary Letters at one inſtant.

After the receiving of theſe two Letters above mentioned, the one from the King, the other from the Lords, which came both at one inſtant, with contrary commandment to the Lord Mayor and Citizens of London, the caſe ſeemed hard to them, and very doubtful (as it was indeed) what way to take, and what were beſt for the Citizens of London to do. On the one ſide the name and authority of the King was much, on the other ſide the power and Garriſons of the Lords, lying then in London, was not little, which ſeemed then to be ſuch as would have no repulſe.

The Recorder ſpeaketh for the Lords.

The caſe thus ſtanding perplexedly, firſt by the mouth of the Recorder it was requeſted, that the Citizens would grant their aid rather unto the Lords, for that the Protector had abuſed both the Kings Majeſty and the whole Realm, and that without he were taken from the King, and made to underſtand his folly, this Realm was in great hazard, and therefore required that the Citizens would willingly aſſent to aid the Lords with five hundred men.

Hereunto of a great part in the Common-Council was no other anſwer made but ſilence. But the Recorder (who at that time was Mr. Brook) ſtill reſted upon them for anſwer. At the laſt ſtepped up a wiſe and good Citizen named George Stadlow, and ſaid:

The grave Oration of a diſcreet Citizen ſpeaking for the King, whoſe name was George Stadlow a Parliament-man.

"In this caſe it is good for us to think of things paſt, "to avoid the danger of things to come. I remember, ſaith "he, in a ſtory written in Fabians Chronicle, of the War "between the King and his Barons, which was in the time "of King Henry the Third, and the ſame time the Barons "(as our Lords do now) demanded aid of the Mayor and "City of London, and that in a rightful cauſe for the Com-"monwealth, which was for the execution of divers good "Laws againſt the King, which would not ſuffer thoſe "Laws to be put in execution; and the City did aid them, "and it came to an open Battel, and the Lords prevailed "againſt the King, and took the King and his Son priſon-"ers, and upon certain conditions the Lords reſtored the "King and his Son again to their liberties, and among all "other conditions this was one, that the King ſhould not "only grant his pardon to the Lords, but alſo to the Citi-"zens of London; the which was granted, yea and the "ſame was ratified by Act of Parliament. But what fol-"lowed of it? Was it forgotten? no ſurely, nor forgi-"ven neither, during the Kings life. The Liberties of the "City were taken away, ſtrangers appointed to be our "Heads and Governours, the Citizens given away body "and goods, and from one perſecution to another were "moſt miſerably afflicted. Such a thing is it to enter into "the wrath of a Prince, as Solomon ſaith, The wrath and "indignation of a Prince is death. Wherefore, foraſmuch "as this aid is required of the Kings Majeſty, whoſe voice "we ought to hearken unto (for he is our high Shepherd) "rather than unto the Lords, and yet I would not wiſh "the Lords to be clearly ſhaken off; my counſel is, that "they with us, and we with them may joyn in ſuit, and "make our moſt humble Petition to the Kings Majeſty, "that it would pleaſe his Highneſs to hear ſuch complaint "againſt the Government of the Lord Protector, as may "be juſtly alledged and proved, and I doubt not but this "matter will be ſo pacified, that neither ſhall the King nor "yet the Lords have cauſe to ſeek for further aid, neither "we to offend any of them both.

Diviſion between the Lords and King Henry the Third.

The wrath of a King not raſhly to be provoked.

{KING Edw 6}

After this tale the Commons ſtayed, and the Lord Mayor and his Brethren for that time brake up, till they had further communed with the Lords. To make ſhort, I let paſs what order by the City was taken. But the concluſion was, that the Lords (upon what occaſion I know not) ſat the next day in Council in the Star-Chamber, and from thence ſent Sir Philip Hobbie with the Letter of credence to the Kings Majeſty, beſeeching and requeſting his Majeſty to give credit to that which the ſaid Sir Philip ſhould declare unto his Majeſty in their names; and the King gave him liberty to ſpeak, and moſt gently heard all that he had to ſay. Who ſo handled the matter, declaring his meſſage in the name of the Lords, that in the end the Lord Protector was commanded from the Kings preſence, and ſhortly was committed to ward in a Tower within the Caſtle of Windſor, called Beauchamp Tower, and ſoon after were ſtayed Sir Thomas Smith, Mr. Whalley, Mr. Fiſher, and many other Gentlemen that attended upon the Lord Protector. The ſame day the Lords of the Council reſorted to the King, and the next day they brought from thence the Lord Protector, and the other that were there ſtayed, and conveyed them through the City of London unto the Tower, and there left them.

{Anno 1552} Here is to be noted that the city levied 500 men, but they were not ſent.

The L. Protector committed to priſon in Windſor-Caſtle.

Shortly after the Lords reſorted unto the Tower, and there charged the Lord Protector with ſundry Articles, which follow.

The Lord Protector committed to the Tower.

Articles objected againſt the Lord Protector.

Articles objected againſt the L. Protector.

IN*primis*, You took upon you the Office of Protector and Governour, upon condition expreſsly and ſpecially that you would do nothing in the Kings affairs, publickly or privately, but by the aſſent of the late Kings Executors.

2. Alſo you, contrary to the ſaid condition, of your own authority did ſtay and let Juſtice, and ſubverted the Laws, as well by your Letters, as by your Commandments.

3. Alſo you cauſed divers perſons being arreſted and impriſoned for Treaſon, Murder, Manſlaughter, and Felony, to be diſcharged and ſet at large, againſt the Kings Laws and Statutes of this Realm.

4. Alſo you have made and ordained Lieutenants for the Kings Armies, and other weighty affairs, under your own writing and ſeal.

5. Alſo you have communed with the Embaſſadors of other Realms, diſcourſing alone with them the weighty cauſes of this Realm.

6. Alſo you have ſometime rebuked, checked, and taunted, as well privately as openly, divers of the Kings moſt Honourable Councellors, for ſhewing and declaring their adviſes and opinions againſt your purpoſes in the Kings weighty affairs, ſaying ſometimes to them, that you need not to open matters unto them, and would therefore be otherwiſe adviſed, and that you would, if they were not agreeable to your opinion, put them out, and take other at your pleaſure.

7. Alſo you had and held againſt the Law, in your own houſe, a Court of Requeſts, and thereby did inforce divers the Kings ſubjects to anſwer for their Freeholds and Goods, and determined the ſame to the ſubverſion of the ſame Laws.

8. Alſo, you being no Officer, without the advice of the Council, or the more part of them, did diſpoſe of the Offices of the Kings gift for money, and granted Leaſes and Wards of the Kings, and gave Preſentations to the Kings Benefices, and Biſhopricks, having no authority ſo to do. And further, you did meddle with the ſelling of the Kings lands.

9. Alſo you commanded Multiplication and Alcumiſtry to be practiſed, to abuſe the Kings Coyn.

10. Alſo you cauſed a Proclamation to be made concerning Incloſures, whereby the common people have made divers Inſurrections, and levied open War, and diſtrained and ſpoiled divers of the Kings ſubjects, which Proclamation went forth againſt the will of the whole Council.

11. Alſo

{KING Edw.6}

11. Alſo, you have cauſed a Commiſſion, with certain Articles thereunto annexed, to be made out concerning incloſures of Commons, High-ways, decaying of Cottages, and divers other things, giving the Commiſſioners authority to hear and determine the ſame cauſes, to the ſubverſion of the Laws and Statutes of this Realm; whereby much Sedition, Inſurrection, and Rebellion have riſen and grown amongſt the Kings Subjects.

12. Alſo, you have ſuffered the Rebels and Traitors to aſſemble and to lie in Camp and Armor againſt the King, his Nobles and Gentlemen, without any ſpeedy ſubduing or repreſſing of them.

13. Alſo, you did comfort and incourage divers of the ſaid Rebels, by giving of them divers ſums of your own Money, and by promiſing to divers of them, fees, rewards and ſervices.

{Anno 1552}

14. Alſo, you in favour of the ſaid Rebels did, againſt the Laws, cauſe a Proclamation to be made, that none of the ſaid Rebels or Traitors ſhould be ſued or vexed by any perſon for any their offences in the ſaid Rebellion, to the clear ſubverſion of the Law.

15. Alſo you have ſaid in the time of the Rebellion, that you liked well the doings and proceedings of the ſaid Rebels and Traitors; and ſaid, That the covetouſneſs of the Gentlemen gave occaſion to the common people to riſe, ſaying alſo, That better it were for the Commons to die, than periſh for lack of living.

16. Alſo you ſaid, that the Lords of the Parliament were loth to incline themſelves to reformation of incloſures and other things, therefore the people had good cauſe to reform the things themſelves.

17. Alſo you, after the report and declaration of the defaults and lacks reported to you by ſuch as did ſurvey Bulleign and the Pieces there, would never amend the ſame defaults.

18. Alſo you would not ſuffer the Kings Pieces beyond the Seas, called New-haven and Black-neſt, to be furniſhed with men and victuals, although you were advertiſed of the defaults therein by the Captains of the ſame Pieces and others, and were thereto advertiſed by the Kings Council; whereby the French King, being the Kings open Enemy, was encouraged and comforted to invade and win the Pieces, to the Kings great loſs, and diſhonour of his Realm.

19. Alſo you declared and publiſhed untruly, as well to the Kings Majeſty, as to other the young Lords attendant upon his Graces perſon, that the Lords of the Council at London minded to deſtroy the King, and you required the King never to forget it, but to revenge it: and likewiſe you required the young Lords to put the King in remembrance thereof, to the intent to make ſedition and diſcord between the King and his Lords.

20. Alſo where the Kings Majeſties Privy Council, of their love and zeal that they did bear unto the King and his Realm, did conſult at London, to have communed with you, to the intent to move you, charitably to amend your doings and miſgovernment, you, hearing of their ſaid aſſembly, cauſed to be declared by Letters in divers places, the ſaid Lords to be high Traitors to the King, to the great diſturbance of the Realm.

The merciful working of the Lord for the L. Protector.

AND thus much hitherto concerning the firſt trouble of the Lord Protector Duke of Somerſet, with the Crimes and Articles objected againſt him, with his priſonment alſo in the Tower, and the terrible Proclamation given out againſt him. All which purpoſes of man, though they ſeemed fully to intend no leſs than the ſpilling of his blood; yet the Lord above, the only diſpoſer of all mens purpoſes, ſo ordered the matter by the means of the King labouring for his Uncle, that in ſhort while after he was let out of the Tower, and that Proclamation which before had made him a Traitor, within three days after was called in again, (a Domino factum eſt illud) with commandment given, none of them to be ſold. And ſo the Duke of Somerſet, graciouſly eſcaping this adverſity, was again reſtored, though not to the former office, yet unto liberty, wherein he continued the ſpace of two years and two days.

The Lord Protector delivered out of the Tower.

The 2. trouble of the Duke of Somerſet.

After the which time of reſpite being expired, the ſaid Duke of Somerſet was apprehended and committed again to the Tower, and with him alſo Sir Michael Stanhop, Sir Ralfe Vane, Sir Myles Partridge, and other, &c. At length the time being come of his arraignment, the aforeſaid good Duke being brought from the Tower, was conveyed through London with the Ax of the Tower before him, and with great preparance of Bills, Halberds, Pikes, and Polaxes in moſt forcible wiſe; a Watch alſo ſet and appointed before every mans Door through the high ſtreet of London, and ſo was he brought into Weſtminſter Hall, where the Lords of the Council ſitting as his Judges in the middle of the Hall, upon a new Scaffold, he was there before them arraigned and charged both with Treaſon and Felony.

The D. of Somerſet again brought to the Tower.

In the which judgment, I paſs over the unſeemly ſpeech, the vile taunts and deſpiteful rebukes, without all modeſty or honeſty, uſed by certain of the Sergeants and Juſtices, and ſome other ſitting there. All which notwithſtanding he patiently and quietly did ſuffer, neither ſtorming inwardly in ſtomach, nor reviling them with words again; but like a Lamb, following the true Lamb and example of all meekneſs, was contented to take all things at their hands, and with no leſs patience to bear now their ungentle and cruel railings, than he did before their glavering words and flatterings in time of his high eſtate and proſperity. And as the patience of this good Duke was marvelous in forbearing his enemies, ſo alſo was his diſcretion and temperance no leſs ſeen in anſwering for himſelf to the Articles to him objected; whereunto he wiſely and ſubſtantially replied, putting himſelf in the end to be tried by his Peers. Who then at length, after conſultation had, did frame and temper their verdict thus; That as concerning the caſe of Treaſon, wherewith he was charged, they diſcharged him, but they accounted him guilty of Felony. When the people (which were there preſent to a great number) heard the Lords ſay, Not guilty, (meaning by the caſe of Treaſon) ſuppoſing no leſs but that he had bin clearly acquitted by theſe words, and eſpecially ſeeing the Ax of the Tower to be carried away, for great joy and gladneſs they made an outcry, well declaring their loving affection and hearty favour unto the Duke, whoſe life they greatly deſired. But this opinion of the people was deceived, and the innocent Duke condemned to die for Felony. Which Act of Felony had been made a little before againſt the Rebels and unlawful aſſemblies, ſuch as ſhould ſeek or procure the death of any Councellor, ſo that every ſuch attempt and procurement, according to the Act, ſhould be adjudged Felony. By the vertue of which Act the Duke being accuſed, with certain other his Complices, to intend and purpoſe the death of the Duke of Northumberland, and of certain beſide, was therefore caſt and condemned of Felony, and ſo was returned toward the Tower again.

The vile taunts of certain Juſtices and others ſitting in judgment againſt the good D. of Somerſet.

The great patience of the D. of Somerſet in taking rebukes.

The diſcreet behaviour of the Duke in anſwering for himſelf.

The hearty affection of the people toward the Duke of Somerſet.

The D. of Somerſet condemned of Felony. Stat. an. 5. reg. Edw. 6.

The D. of Somerſet accuſed for ſeeking the death of the D. of Northumberland

At whoſe paſſage through the City great exclamations and outcries were made again of the people, ſome rejoycing that he was acquitted, ſome bewailing that he was condemned.

Thus the good Duke paſſing through a great part of the City, landing at the Crane of the Vinetree, was conveied to the Tower, where he indured till the 22 of January. Upon the which day, at the coming down of the Letter of execution from the King and the Council, the foreſaid Duke and Uncle to the King being found no Traitor, only being caſt by the Act of Felony, was delivered unto the Sheriffs, and ſo brought to the place of execution.

Touching which execution a few words here would be beſtowed, in deſcribing the wonderful order and manner thereof, as it hath faithfully been ſuggeſted to us upon the credit of a certain Noble Perſonage, who not only was there preſent at the deed doing, but alſo in a manner next unto him upon the Scaffold, beholding the order of all things with his eyes, and with his pen alſo reporting the ſame in order and manner as here followeth.

In the year of our Lord, 1552, the two and twentieth of January, in the ſixth year of the Reign of King Edward the Sixth, he being yet under age and governance of Tutors, the noble Duke of Somerſet, Uncle to King Edward, was brought out of the Tower of London, and according to the manner delivered to the Sheriffs of the City, and compaſſed round about with a great number of armed men both of the Guard and others, he was brought unto the Scaffold on Tower Hill, where he nothing changing either voice or countenance, but in a manner with the ſame geſture which he commonly uſed at home, kneeling down upon both his knees, and lifting up his hands, commended himſelf unto God.

The cheerful countenance of the Duke of Somerſet at his death.

After that he had ended a few ſhort Prayers, ſtanding up again, and turning himſelf toward the Eaſt ſide of the Scaffold, nothing at all abaſhed (as it ſeemed to me ſtanding about the midſt of the Scaffold, and diligently marking all things) either with the ſight of the Ax, or yet of the Hangman, or of preſent death; but with the like alacrity and cheerfulneſs of mind and countenance as before times he was accuſtomed to hear the cauſes and ſupplication of other, and eſpecially the Poor (towards whom, as it were with a certain Fatherly love to his Children, he always ſhewed himſelf moſt attentive) he uttered theſe words to the people.

The words of the Duke of Somerſet to the people at his death.

Dearly beloved Friends, I am brought hither to ſuffer death, albeit that I never offended againſt the King neither by word nor deed, and have been always as faithful and true unto this Realm as any man hath been. But forſomuch as I am by a Law condemned to die, I do acknowledge my ſelf as well as others to be ſubject thereunto. Wherefore to teſtifie my obedience which I owe unto the Laws, I am come hither to ſuffer death; wherefore I willingly offer my ſelf, with moſt hearty thanks unto God, that hath given me this time of repentance, who might through ſudden death have taken away my life, that neither I ſhould have acknowledged him nor my ſelf.

The care of the Duke of Somerſet in ſetting forth true Religion.

Moreover, dearly beloved Friends, there is yet ſomewhat that I muſt put you in mind of, as touching Chriſtian Religion; which ſo long as I was in Authority I always diligently ſet forth and furthered to my power. Neither do I repent me of my doings, but rejoyce therein, ſith that now the ſtate of Chriſtian Religion cometh moſt near unto the form and order of the Primitive Church. Which thing I eſteem as a great beneſit given of God both unto you and me; moſt heartily exhorting you all, that this which is moſt purely ſet forth unto you, you will with like thankfulneſs accept and embrace, and ſet out the ſame in your living. Which thing if you do not, without doubt greater miſchief and calamity will follow.

A ſudden noiſe and fear of the people at the death of the Duke of Somerſet.

When he had ſpoken theſe words, ſuddenly there was a terrible noiſe heard; whereupon there came a great fear upon all men. This noiſe was as it had been the noiſe of ſome great ſtorm or Tempeſt, which unto ſome ſeemed to be heard from above; like as if a great deal of Gunpowder being incloſed in an Armory, and having caught fire, had violently broken out. But unto ſome again it ſeemed as though it had been a great multitude of Horſemen running together, or coming upon them. Such a noiſe then was in the ears of all men, albeit they ſaw nothing. Whereby it happened that all the people being amazed without any evident cauſe, without any violence or ſtroke ſtricken, or any man ſeen, they ran away, ſome into the Ditches and Puddles, and ſome into the Houſes thereabouts; otherſome, being afraid of the horror and noiſe, fell down groveling unto the ground, with their Polaxes and Halberds; and moſt of them cried out, Jeſus ſave us, Jeſus ſave us. Thoſe which tarried ſtill in their places, for fear knew not where they were; and I my ſelf which was there preſent among the reſt, being alſo afraid in this hurly burly, ſtood ſtill altogether amazed, looking when any man would knock me on the head. It happened here, as the Evangeliſts write it did unto Chriſt, when as the Officers of the high Prieſts and Phariſees, coming with Weapons to take him, being aſtonied ran backwards and fell to the ground.

The like ſtory you ſhall read of Caius Marius in Maximus the 2d Book and 5. Chap.

The great favour of the people to the Duke of Somerſet.

In the mean time, whileſt theſe things were thus in doing, the people by chance ſpied one Sir Anthony Brown riding under the Scaffold; which was the occaſion of a new noiſe, For when they ſaw him coming, they conjectured that which was not true, but notwithſtanding which they all wiſhed for, That the King by that Meſſenger had ſent his Uncle pardon; and therefore with great rejoycing and caſting up their Caps, they cried out Pardon, Pardon is come; God ſave the King. Thus this good Duke, although he was deſtitute of all mans help, yet he ſaw before his departure, in how great love and favour he was with all men. And truly I do not think that in ſo great ſlaughter of Dukes as hath been in Enlgand within theſe few years, there were ſo many weeping eyes at one time; and not without cauſe. For all men did ſee in the decay of this Duke the publick ruine of all England, except ſuch as indeed did perceive nothing. {KING Edw.6}

But now to return from whence we have ſtrayed; the Duke in the mean time ſtanding ſtill in the ſame place, modeſtly and with a grave countenance made a ſign to the people with his hand, that they would keep themſelves quiet. Which thing being done, and ſilence obtained, he ſpake unto them in this manner.

The words of the Duke again to the people.

Dearly beloved Friends, there is no ſuch matter here in hand as you vainly hope or believe. It ſeemeth thus good unto Almighty God, whoſe ordinance it is meet and neceſſary that we all be obedient unto. Wherefore I pray you all to be quiet, and to be contented with my death, which I am moſt willing to ſuffer; and let us now joyn in Prayer unto the Lord for the preſervation of the Kings Majeſty, unto whom hitherto I have always ſhewed my ſelf a moſt faithful and true Subject. I have always been moſt diligent about his Majeſty in his affairs both at home and abroad, and no leſs diligent in ſeeking the common commodity of the whole Realm. At which words all the people cried out and ſaid, it was moſt true.

Teſtimony of the people with the Duke of Somerſet.

Then the Duke proceeding, ſaid, Unto whoſe Majeſty I wiſh continual health, with all fecility and all proſperous ſucceſs. Whereunto the people again cried out, Amen.

Moreover, I do wiſh unto all his Counſellors the grace and favour of God, whereby they may rule in all things uprightly with juſtice. Unto whom I exhort you all in the Lord to ſhew your ſelves obedient, as it is your bounden duty, under the pain of condemnation, and alſo moſt profitable for the preſervation and ſafeguard of the Kings Majeſty.

The confeſſion of the Duke of Somerſet.

Moreover, forſomuch as heretofore I have had oftentimes affairs with divers men, and hard it is to pleaſe every man, therefore if there be any that hath been offended and injured by me, I moſt humbly require and ask him forgiveneſs, but eſpecially Almighty God, whom throughout all my life I have moſt grievouſly offended; and all other whatſoever they be that have offended me, I do with my whole heart forgive them. Now I once again require you dearly beloved in the Lord, that you will keep your ſelves quiet and ſtill, leſt through your tumult you might trouble me. For albeit the ſpirit be willing and ready, the fleſh is frail and wavering, and through your quietneſs I ſhall be much more quieter. Moreover, I deſire you all to bear me witneſs that I die here in the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt; deſiring you to help me with your Prayers, that I may perſevere conſtant in the ſame unto my lives end.

The Duke of Somerſet dieth in the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt.

D. Cox, his ghoſtly Father.

After this, he turning himſelf again about like a meek Lamb, kneeled down upon his knees. Then Doctor Cox, which was there preſent to counſel and advertiſe him, delivered a certain Scroll into his hand, wherein was contained a brief confeſſion unto God. Which being read, he ſtood up again upon his feet, without any trouble of mind (as it appeared) and firſt bad the Sheriffs farewel, then the Lieutenant of the Tower, and other, taking them all by the hands which were upon the Scaffold with him. Then he gave the Hangman certain Money. Which done, he put off his Gown, and kneeling down again in the ſtraw, untied his Shirt-ſtrings. After that, the Hangman coming unto him turned down his Collar round about his neck, and all other things which did let or hinder him. Then lifting up his eyes to Heaven, where is only hope remained, and covering his face with his own handkercher, he laid himſelf down along, ſhewing no manner of token of trouble or fear, neither did his countenance change, but that before his eyes were covered there began to appear a red colour in the midſt of his cheeks.

The godly end of the Duke of Somerſet.

Thus this moſt meek and gentle Duke lying along, and looking for the ſtroke, becauſe his Doublet covered his neck, he was commanded to riſe up and put it off; and then laying himſelf down again upon the block, and calling thrice upon the name of Jeſus ſaying, Lord Jeſus ſave me, as he was the third time repeating the ſame, even as

the {KING Edw.6} the name of Jeſus was in uttering, in a moment he was bereft both of head and life, and ſlept in the Lord Jeſus, being taken away from all dangers and evils of this life, and reſting now in the peace of God; in the preferment of whoſe truth and Goſpel he always ſhewed himſelf an excellent inſtrument and member, and therefore hath received the reward of his labours. Thus, gentle Reader, thou haſt here the true Hiſtory of this worthy and noble Duke, and if any man report it otherwiſe, let it be counted as a lie.

The vertues of the Duke of Somerſet.

As touching the manners, diſpoſition, life and converſation of the ſaid Duke and the Kings Uncle, what ſhall we need to ſpeak, when as he cannot be ſufficiently commended, according to the dignity of his vertues? There was always in him great humanity, and ſuch meekneſs and gentleneſs, as is rare to be found in ſo high Eſtate. He was prone and ready to give ear unto the complaints and ſupplications of the poor, and no leſs attentive unto the affairs of the Commonwealth. Which if he had lived together with King Edward, he was like to do much good in reforming many miſorders within this Realm. He was utterly ignorant of all craft and deceit, and as far void of all pride and ambition, as he was from doing of injury, being indeed utterly void of both. He was of a gentle diſpoſition, not coveting to be revenged; more apt and ready to be deceived, than to deceive. His ancient love and zeal of the Goſpel and of Religion he brought with him to the ſtate of this his Dignity. The proof whereof ſufficiently was ſeen in his conſtant ſtanding to Gods truth, and zealous defence thereof, againſt the Biſhops of Chicheſter, Norwich, Lincoln, London, and others moe, in the conſultation had at Windſor, the firſt year of the Kings Reign.

The zealous ſtanding of the D. of Somerſet in defence of the truth againſt the Biſhops at Windſor.

A compariſon between Duke Humfrey Uncle to K. Henry the fifth and the Duke of Somerſet Uncle to K. Edward the fixth.

Briefly, conſidering the nature and vertues of this Duke, I may (as ſeemeth) not unaptly compare and reſemble him unto Duke Humfrey, the good Duke of Gloceſter. Who likewiſe being Uncle unto King Henry the ſixth and Protector of the Realm (as this was alſo to King Edward the ſixth) yet he wanted not his Enemies and privy enviers, eſpecially Henry Beauford Cardinal, Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Lord Chancellor of England; who, at that time diſdaining and envying the rule and authority of this Duke, procured much trouble againſt him, and great diviſion in the whole Realm, inſomuch that all the Shops within the City of London were ſhut in for fear of the favourers of theſe two great perſonages; for each part had aſſembled no ſmall number of people Touching the troubles of the Duke of Gloceſter read before.

For pacifying whereof the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and the Duke of Quinber, called the Prince of Portugal, rode eight times in one day between the two adverſaries. Such were when the troubles of this tumultuous diviſion within the Realm, between theſe two, as is before expreſſed; not much unlike to the troubleſome diſcord betwixt parties in this Protectors days. And as in their afflictions and troubles theſe two Dukes ſeemed not much unlike, ſo in matters of Religion, and in diſcerning truth from falſhood, their zeals ſeemed not much diſcrepant. Although the light of the Goſpel did not ſo fully then ſhine out, as in the time of this later Duke, (the Lord be praiſed therefore) yet the wiſdom and towardneſs of the other Duke alſo touching the ſame was not utterly unworthy of his commendation. For the more manifeſt declaration whereof, amongſt many other his godly doings, we may take for example the prudent and famous Act of that noble Duke, in diſcerning and trying out the falſe lying miracle and Popiſh Hypocriſie of the blind Begger at Saint Albans, mentioned in his ſtory before. For the which cauſe, and for his diligent ſtudy in reforming that and ſuch other blind abuſes of fained Religion, he was the more hated of the Spiritualty, and ſuch as Wincheſter then was.

A falſe miracle detected by D. Humfrey of Gloceſter.

The Teſtimony of M. Wil. Tindal of good D. Humfrey.

Finally as this Lord Protector Duke of Somerſet the Kings Uncle, by certain of the Council was then accuſed, arraigned and condemned for the treſpaſs (as it was given forth) of Felony (although I never heard he murdered or robbed any) ſo the other Uncle of King Henry the ſixth was made away. Of whoſe deceaſe thus writeth M. Tindal in his practiſe of Prelates; at the laſt they found the means to contrive a drift to bring their matters to paſs, and made a Parliament far from the Citizens of London, where was ſlain the ſaid good Duke and the only wealth of the Realm, and the mighty Shield which ſo long had kept it from the ſorrow, which ſhortly after his death fell upon them by heaps. But the Chronicles (ſaith he) cannot tell wherefore he died, nor by what means. Nevertheleſs, this they teſtifie, that he was a vertuous man, godly and good to the Commonwealth.

The happy ſucceſs of the Duke of Somerſet in his victory.

But to leave Duke Humfrey, and to return to the manners and vertues of the Duke of Somerſet, which before we were about to deſcribe; as he was a gentle and courteous Duke at home, ſo was he no leſs fortunate a Captain in warfare abroad. Under whoſe government and guiding not only divers rebellious commotions were happily ſuppreſſed here at home; but alſo abroad, in the expedition of Scotland, ſuch a Victory was given him of God, that with the loſs ſcarce of ſix hundred of his own men, there were of the enemies as good or little leſs than ten thouſand ſlain and put to flight, and even the very ſame day and time in the which all the Idolatrous Images were here burnt at London. And yet all theſe Wars notwithſtanding, whereunto he was againſt his will compelled, he was a man of nature ſingularly given to peace, as may be ſeen by the ſweet and peaceable exhortation by him ſet forth in Print before, and ſent to the Realm of Scotland.

Gods chaſtiſement upon the D. of Somerſet.

But as there is nothing in this world ſo perfect in all reſpects, which is not blotted or darkned with ſome ſpot of vice adjoyned withal; ſo amongſt the manifold commendations of this Duke, one thing there was too, which both diſtained his honour and eſtimation much, and alſo more empaired and hindered his own life and ſafety; which was, that he in condeſcending to the death of his Brother, followed too raſhly the perſwaſion of certain whoſoever they were; for that matter lacked not perchance ſome ſingular fetch and policy of ſome, more craftily than godly diſpoſed perſons, as many good men have ſuppoſed.

But whatſoever of that matter is to be deemed, credible it is that the ſaid Duke, in ſuffering or procuring the death of his Brother, not only endamaged himſelf, and weakened his own power, but alſo provoked the chaſtiſement of Gods ſcourge and Rod, which did ſo light upon him.

The be. heading of the Earl of Surrey.

Furthermore, as touching the death and decay of the Lord Henry Earl of Surrey, who ſuffered alſo at the Tower next before the Lord Admiral, the Lord Protectors Brother, becauſe the caſting of him was ſo near to the death of King Henry, as I know not upon whom or what cauſe the ſame did proceed; I paſs it over and leave it to the Lord. Notwithſtanding, as for the Duke of Somerſet, whatſoever his other vices and vertues were, this is certain, that his end (the Lord ſo working with him) was conſtant in Chriſts truth, as his life was before a great maintenance of the ſame.

Sir Ralph Vane, Sir Miles Partridge, Sir Mic. Stanhop and Sir Tho. Arundel ſuffered at Tower-hill.

Moreover, on the 26. day of February, in the ſame year was Sir Ralph Vane, Sir Miles Partridge both Hanged at the Tower-hill; and Sir Michael Stanhop, and Sir Thomas Arundel beheaded upon the Scaffold, all which four were condemned by the ſaid Act of unlawful aſſembly, and as acceſſaries unto the Duke of Somerſet.

Religion hindred by diſcord.

Not long after the death of the Duke of Somerſet, in the next year following, deceaſed the King himſelf about the Month of June, whereof more ſhall be ſaid (the Lord granting) in his due order and courſe hereafter. In the mean ſeaſon, before we come to cloſe up the later end and ſtory of this good King, the place here preſent ſeemeth not unfit to intermit by the way a few other things before happening within the time of his Reign, namely, concerning matters incident of the Church, and of Religion. Which ſtate of Religion began well to grow, and to come happily forward during this Kings days, had not the unhappy troubles of the outward ſtate, among the Lords not agreeing within themſelves, diſquieted the good towardneſs of things begun. But the malice of the Devil how ſubtilly worketh it, if men could ſee it? So long as the Lords agreed in concord among themſelves, Wincheſter and Bonner with all that Faction was cut ſhort, and began to condeſcend to good conformity. But afterward perceiving the States and Nobles of the Realm to be among themſelves divided, and the Lord Protector the Kings Uncle diſplaced, and his Brother the Admiral before beheaded, and the young King now left in that caſe, they began upon ſome hope to take more heart to them, till at laſt it came to paſs as they themſelves deſired. And thus though nothing elſe will lead us, yet experience may teach us what diſcord worketh in publick weals; and contrarily, what a neceſſary thing concord is to the advancement eſpecially of Gods matters appertaining to his Church. Examples whereof in this Kings days be not far to ſeek. For as touching the ſucceſs of the Goſpel of peace, while publick peace and the Goſpel did joyn together, marvelous it was how Error and Popery were in themſelves confounded, and aſhamed almoſt to ſhew their faces. Inſomuch that then both Doctor Smith, Chadſey, Standiſh, Yong, Ogleſthorpe, with many moe recanted their former ignorance, whoſe recantations I have to ſhew. Bonner then with his own hand ſubſcribed unto the Kings Supremacy, and promoted his Injunctions.

Diſcord what decay it worketh in a commonwealth.

D. Smith, Chadſey, Standiſh, Yong, Ogleſthorp, reclaimed from their errors.

The ſame alſo did Stephen Gardiner, ſubſcribing with his own hand to the firſt Book of the Kings proceedings, and no doubt had done leſs to the ſecond Book alſo ſo ſet forth by the King, had not the unfortunate diſcord fallen amongſt the Nobles in time ſo unfortunate, as then it did. Briefly, during all that time of peace and concord, what Papiſt was found in all the Realm, which for the Popes devotion would or did once put his neck in the Halter to die a Martyr for his ſake?

The Goſpel how it flouriſhed ſo long as peace continued.

I ſhewed before how in theſe peaceable days of King Edward, Peter Martyr, Martin Bucer, Paulus Phagius, with other learned men moe, were entertained, placed, and provided for in the two Univerſities of this Realm, Oxford and Cambridge, who there with their diligent induſtry did much good. The learned and fruitful diſputations of whom I have likewiſe preſent in my hands here to inſert, but that the bigneſs of this Volume driveth me to make ſhort, eſpecially ſeeing their diſputations to be ſo long and prolix as they be, and alſo in Latin, and require of themſelves a whole Volume to comprehend them.

Peter Martyr, Martin Bucer, and Paulus Phagius placed in the Univerſities.

Firſt, Peter Martyr, being called by the King to the publick reading of the Divinity Lecture in Oxford, amongſt his other learned exerciſes did ſet up in the publick Schools three concluſions of Divinity to be diſputed and tried by Argument. At which diſputations were preſent the Kings Viſitors, to wit, Henry Biſhop of Lincoln, Doctor Cox Chancellor of that Univerſity, D. Hains Dean of Exceter, Maſter Richard Moriſon Eſquire, Chriſtopher Nevinſon Doctor of Civil Law. The concluſions propounded were theſe.

The Kings Viſitors at the diſputation in Oxford.

The concluſions to be diſputed in Oxford.

1. In the Sacrament of thankſgiving there is no Tranſubſtantiation of bread and wine into the body and blood of Chriſt.

2. The body and blood of Chriſt is not carnally or corporally in the Bread and Wine, nor, as other uſe to ſay, under the kinds of bread and wine.

3. The body and blood of Chriſt be united to bread and wine ſacramentally.

They which were the chief diſputers againſt him on the contrary ſide, were Doctor Treſham, Doctor Chadſey, and Morgan. The reaſons and principal Arguments of Peter Martyr hereunder follow.

Diſputers of the contrary part againſt Peter Martyr.

The Arguments of Peter Martyr upon the firſt concluſion.

The Scriptures moſt plainly do name and acknowledge bread and wine. In the Evangeliſts we read that the Lord Jeſus took bread, bleſſed it, brake it, and gave it to his Diſcilpes. Saint Paul likewiſe doth oft times make mention of bread.

The 1. Argument of Peter Martyr againſt Tranſubſtantiation.

Ergo, We alſo with the Scriptures ought not to exclude Bread from the nature of the Sacrament.

Cyprianus.

As in the perſon of Chriſt, his humanity was ſeen outwardly, and his Divinity was ſecret within: ſo in the viſible Sacrament the Divinity inſerteth it ſelf in ſuch ſort as cannot be uttered, that our devotion about the Sacraments might be the more religious.

Cypri. in ſerm. De cœna Dom.

Ergo, As in the perſon of Chriſt, ſo in the Sacrament, both the natures ought ſtill to remain.

{KING Edw. 6}

Gelaſius.

The Sacraments which we receive of the body and blood of Chriſt are a divine matter; by reaſon whereof, we are made partakers by the ſame of his divine nature, and yet it ceaſeth not ſtill to be the ſubſtance of bread and wine. And certes the repreſentation and ſimilitude of the body and blood of Chriſt be celebrated in the action of the myſteries, &c.

Gelaſius contra Eutych.

Auguſtinus.

As the perſon of Chriſt conſiſteth of God and Man, when as he is true God, and true Man. For every thing containeth in it ſelf the nature and verity of thoſe things whereof it is made. Now the Sacrament of the Church is made of two things, that is, of the Sacrament that ſignifieth, and of the matter of the Sacrament that is ſignified, &c.

Aug. de con. ſec. diſt. 2. ex ſententiis Proſperi.

Theodoretus.

Theſe viſible myſteries which are ſeen he hath honoured with the name of his body and blood, not changing the nature, but adding grace unto nature, &c. And the ſame Theodoretus again ſaith.

Theod. Dial. 1 contra Eutich.

Thoſe myſtical Sacraments after ſanctification do not paſs out of their own proper nature, but remain ſtill in their former ſubſtance, figure, and ſhape, &c.

Theod. Dial. 2. contra Eutich.

Ergo, Like as the body of Chriſt remained in him, and was not changed into his Divinity; ſo in the Sacrament, the bread is not changed into the body, but both the ſubſtances remain whole.

Origen.

If whatſoever entreth into the mouth goeth down into the belly, and ſo paſſeth through a man; even that meat alſo which is ſanctified by the Word of God, and by Prayer, as touching that part which it hath material within it, paſſeth into the belly, and ſo voideth through a man. But through prayer, which is adjoyned to it, according to the meaſure of Faith, it is profitable and effectual, &c. And he addeth moreover, For it is not the outward matter of bread, but the word that is ſpoken upon it, that profiteth him which eateth it worthily, &c.

Orig. in Mat. cap. 15.

Irenæus.

Jeſus taking bread of the ſame condition which is after us, (that is, taking bread of the ſame nature and kind which we uſe commonly to eat) did confeſs it to be his body. And taking likewiſe the cup, which is of the ſame creature which is after us (that is, which we commonly uſe to drink) confeſſed it to be his blood, &c.

Irenæus l. 4. contr. hæreſ.

Item, lib. 4. Like as bread which is of the earth, receiving the word and calling of God, is now not common bread, but the Euchariſt, conſiſting of two things, the one earthly, the other heavenly; ſo our bodies receiving the ſacred Euchariſt, be now not corruptible, having hope of Reſurrection, &c.

Iren. lib. ead.

Argument.

Ba. The bread in the Sacrament is ſo changed into the body, as our bodies are changed when they are made uncorruptible by hope.

ro. But our bodies are not made incorruptible by changing their ſubſtance;

co. Ergo, No more is the bread changed into the ſubſtance of the body.

Gregory.

Notwithſtanding whether we take leavened or unleavened bread, we are all one body of our Lord and Saviour, &c.

Greg. in Reg.

Argument.

{KING Edw.6}

Argument.

Da- Where bread leavened or unleavened is taken, there is ſubſtance of bread, and not accidents only.
ri- In the Sacrament bread is received either leavened or unleavened;
i. Ergo, In the Sacrament is ſubſtance of bread, and not accidents only.

Argument.

Ba- The body of Chriſt is named of that which is proportioned round, and is unſenſible in operation.
ro- Accidents only of bread have no figure of roundneſs.
co. Ergo, The body of Chriſt is not named of accidents, but of very bread ſubſtantial.

Argument.

The words of the Evangeliſt ſpeaking of that which Chriſt took, bleſſed, brake, and gave, do import it to be bread, and nothing elſe but bread.

Ergo, The ſubſtance of bread is not to be excluded out of the Sacrament.

Chryſoſtome.

Chryſ. 1. Cor. 11. Homili. 27. Chriſt in giving Bread and Wine, ſaid, Do this in remembrance of me.

Cyrillus.

Cyril. in Joan. lib. 4. cap. 14. He gave to them pieces or fragments of bread.

Alſo the ſame Cyril ſaith, In bread we receive his precious body, and his blood in wine.

Ergo, By theſe Doctors it remaineth bread after the conſecration.

Ambroſe.

Before the bleſſing of the heavenly words it is called another kind of thing. After conſecration the body of Chriſt is ſignified.

Arguments of Peter Martyr diſputing with Maſter Chadſey upon the firſt queſtion.

Da- The Analogy and reſemblance between the Sacrament and the thing ſignified muſt ever be kept in all Sacraments.
ti- In the Sacrament of the Lords body this Analogy or reſemblance cannot be kept, if bread be Tranſubſtantiated:
ſi. Ergo, The ſubſtance of bread muſt needs remain in the Sacrament.

The Major or this Argument is certain by Saint Auguſtine, Lib. de Catechiſandis rudibus, & Epiſt. ad Dardanum. Where he ſaith, Sacraments muſt needs bear a ſimilitude of thoſe things whereof they are Sacraments, or elſe they can be no Sacraments.

Aug. Epiſt. ad Dardanum.

The Minor is thus proved.

Argument.

Analogy or proportion between the outward nouriſhing of bread in our bodies, and the inward nouriſhing of Chriſts bodily death in our ſouls.

Ba- The reſemblance between the Sacrament and the body of Chriſt is this, that as the properties of bread and wine do nouriſh outwardly, ſo the properties of the body of Chriſt do nouriſh ſpiritually.
rg- Without the ſubſtance of bread and wine there is no reſemblance of nouriſhing.
co. Ergo, Without the ſubſtance of bread and wine the Analogy cannot hold.

Argument.

Ba- Again, another reſemblance and ſimilitude or analogy of this Sacrament is this, That as one loaf of bread and one cup of wine containeth many Corns and many Grapes; for the myſtical Congregation containeth many Members, and yet maketh but one body.
ro- Without the ſubſtance of bread and wine no ſuch reſemblance or ſimilitude of conjunction can be repreſented.
co. Ergo, Without the ſubſtance of bread and wine, the Analogy of this ſpiritual conjunction cannot hold.

Another Argument.

Ba- Every Sacrament conſiſteth in two things, that is, in the thing ſignifying, and the thing ſignified.
ro- Without the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine there is nothing that ſignifieth in the Sacrament.
co. Ergo, The ſubſtance of bread and wine in the Sacrament can in no wiſe be Tranſubſtantiate from their natures. The Minor is thus to be proved.
Feſ- There is no ſignification in any Sacrament without the element.
ti- The ſubſtance of bread and wine is the element of this Sacrament.
no. Ergo, Without the ſubſtance of bread and Wine there is no ſimilitude nor ſignification in this Sacrament.

Three cauſes proving that theſe words of Chriſt, Hoc eſt corpus meum, are not to be taken literally, but ſpiritually.

And forſomuch as the adverſaries ground their Tranſubſtantiation ſo much upon theſe words of Chriſt, This is my body, which they expound only after the literal ſenſe, without Trope or figure; now that this their expoſition is falſe, and that the ſaid words are to be taken figuratively and ſpiritually, by three cauſes it is to be proved.

1. Firſt by the words of the Scripture. 2. By the nature of a Sacrament. 3. By the teſtimonies of the Fathers.

Places of ſcripture making againſt Tranſubſtantiation.

1. Firſt, By theſe words of the Scripture, where he ſaith, Do this in remembrance of me, forſomuch as remembrance properly ſerveth not for things corporally preſent, but for things rather being abſent.

2. Secondly, Where he ſaith, Until I come, which words were vain, if he were already come by conſecration.

3. Thirdly, Where St. Paul ſaith, The breaking of bread, is it not the communion of the body of Chriſt? Which words of breaking in no caſe can be verified upon the body of Chriſt, which for the glory thereof is unpaſſible.

4. Furthermore whereas the Lord biddeth them to take and eat, it is evident that the ſame cannot be underſtood ſimply of the body of Chriſt without a Trope, forſomuch as he cannot be eaten and chewed with Teeth, as we uſe properly in eating other meats to do.

5. The words moreover of Luke and Paul, ſpoken of the Cup, do argue likewiſe that the other words ſpoken of the Bread muſt needs be taken myſtically. As where it is ſaid, This cup is the New Teſtament, which words muſt needs be expounded thus; this Cup doth ſignifie the New Teſtament.

6. Item, Theſe words of St. John, Chap. 6. My words be ſpirit and life. The fleſh profiteth nothing, &c.

7. Item, Where in the the ſame place of Saint John, Chriſt, to refel the carnal underſtanding of the Capernaits of eating his body, maketh mention of his Aſcenſion, &c.

The ſecond cauſe, the nature of a Sacrament.

The ſecond cauſe why the words of Chriſt, This is my body, cannot be literally expounded without a Trope, is the nature of a Sacrament; whoſe nature and property is to bear a ſign or ſignification of a thing to be remembred, which thing after the ſubſtantial and real preſence is abſent. As touching which nature of a Sacrament ſufficiently hath been ſaid before.

The third cauſe, the teſtimony of the Fathers.

The third cauſe, why the words of conſecration are figuratively to be taken, is the teſtimony of the ancient Doctors.

Tertullianus.

Tertul. contra Marc. lib. 4. This is my body; that is to say, This is a figure of my body.

Aug. Psal. 3. Auguſt. Pſal. 3.

Aug. con. Adamantum. cap. 12. Chriſt gave a figure of his body.

Auguſt. contra Adamantum Manichæum.

He did not doubt to say; This is my body, when he gave a ſign of his body.

Hieronymus. Hieronymus.

Chriſt repreſented unto us his body.

Auguſt.

Aug. de Doctrina Chriſtiana, lib. Auguſtine in his Book De Doctrina Chriſtiana declareth expreſly, that this ſpeech of eating the body of Chriſt is a figurative ſpeech.

Ambroſius.

Ambroſ. de ſacr. l. 4. c. 4. As thou haſt received the ſimilitude of his death; ſo thou drinkeſt the ſimilitude of his precious blood.

Argument.

Fe- The death of Chriſt is not preſent really in the Sacrament, but by ſimilitude.
ri- The precious blood of Chriſt is preſent in the Sacrament as his death is preſent.
o- Ergo, the precious blood of Chriſt is not preſent really in the Sacrament.

The Minor of this Argument is proved before by the words of Ambroſe.

The ſecond concluſion. The ſecond Queſtion, Whether the Body and Blood of Chriſt be in the Bread and Wine, or under the forms of Bread and Wine carnally and corporally.

Argument.

Di- The true natural body of Chriſt is placed in Heaven.
ſa- The true natural body of Man can be but in one place at once, where he is.
mis. Ergo, the true natural body of Chriſt can be in no place at once, but in Heaven where he is.

The Major is plain by the Scriptures, Jeſus was taken up to heaven, and ſitteth at the right hand of God. Mat. 26. The poor ye have always with you, but me you ſhall not always have, John 12. I leave the world and go to my Father. John 16. Many ſhall ſay in that day; Lo here is Chriſt, and there is Chriſt, believe them not. Mat. 24. Whom the heavens muſt receive for a time, until the reſtitution of all, Acts 3. Seek thoſe things that are above, where Chriſt is ſitting at the right hand of God, &c. Col. 3.

Mat. 26. Joh. 12. Joh. 16. Mat. 24. Acts 3. Col. 3.

The Minor likewiſe is evident by Saint Auſtin, who, ſpeaking of the glorified body of Chriſt, affirmeth the ſame to be in one certain place, Propter veri corporis modum, that is, for the manner of a true body.

Aug. ad Dardanum.

Argument.

Da- Every true natural body requireth one certain place.

Auguſtine.

ri- Chriſts body is a true natural body.
o. Ergo, Chriſts body requireth one certain place.

KING Edw. 6.

Argument.

Auguſtine giveth not to the ſoul of Chriſt to be in moe places at once but one. Auguſt. ad Dardanum.

Ergo, much leſs is it to be given to the body of Chriſt, to be in moe places at once, but one. Comparatio a Majori.

Argument.

The nature of the Angels is not to be in divers places, but they are limited to occupy one certain place at once. Baſilius de Spirit. ſanct. cap. 22. Comparison between Angels and the body of Chriſt.

Ergo, The body of Chriſt being the true natural body of a Man, cannot fill divers places at one time.

Argument.

Ba- Whatſoever is in many and divers places at once, is God.
ro- The body of Chriſt is not God, but a Creature.
co. Ergo, The body of Chriſt cannot be in moe places together.

Argument.

Feſ- We muſt not ſo defend the Divinity of Chriſt, that we deſtroy his humanity. Auguſt.
ti- If we aſſign to the body of Chriſt plurality of places, we deſtroy his humanity.
no. Ergo, we muſt not aſſign to the body of Chriſt plurality of places.

Argument.

Feſ- Whatſoever thing is circumſcribed, that is to ſay, contained in the limits of any peculiar place, cannot be diſperſed in moe places at once.
ti- The body of Chriſt is a thing circumſcribed.
no. Ergo, The body of Chriſt is not diſperſed in moe places at one time.

Argument.

Da- Every quantity, that is, every body having magnitude, length, and other dimenſions, is circumſcribed in one peculiar place.
ti- The body of Chriſt hath his dimenſions, and is a quantity.
i. Ergo, The body of Chriſt is circumſcribed.

Cyrillus.

The Major is proved by Cyrillus. Whatſoever is underſtood to be a body, the ſame is verily in a place, and in magnitude and in quantity. And if it be in quantity, it cannot avoid circumſcription, that is, to have his place. Cyril. de Trin. lib. 2. pag. 245.

Argument.

Ba- If Chriſt had given his body ſubſtantially and carnally in the ſupper, then was that body either paſſible or impaſſible.
ro- But neither can you ſay that body to be paſſible or impaſſible, which he gave at ſupper.
co. Ergo, he did not give his body ſubſtantially and carnally at ſupper.

Auguſtine.

The Minor is proved thus. For if ye ſay it was paſſible, Auguſtine is againſt it, which ſaith, Ye ſhall not eat this body which you ſee, nor drink the ſame blood which they ſhall ſhed that ſhall crucifieme, &c. And if ye ſay it was impaſſible, that may not be admitted by the words of the Evangeliſt, which ſaith, Eat, this is my body which ſhall be given for you; So that, that body was paſſible, and not impaſſible, wherein Chriſt was given. Aug. in Pſal. 98.

Vigilius.

KING Edw. 6.

Vigilius.

Vig. contra Eutichen l. 4

One Creature cannot receive in it ſelf two contrary or divers things together. But theſe two things be divers and far unlike, that is to ſay, to be contained in a place, and to be every where. For the word is every where, but the fleſh is not every where.

Argument.

Fe- Bodies organical without quantity be no bodies.
ri- The Popes Doctrine maketh the body of Chriſt in the Sacrament to be without quantity.
o. Ergo, The Popes Doctrine maketh the body of Chriſt in the Sacrament to be no body.

Argument.

Da- All things which may be divided, have quantity.
ri- The body in the Popes Sacrament is divided in three parts.
i. Ergo, The body in the Popes Sacrament hath quantity, which is againſt their own Doctrine.

Argument.

Fe- No natural body can receive in it ſelf, and at one time contrary or divers qualities. Vigilius.
ri- To be in one place local, and in another place not local; to be in one place with quantity, and in another place without quantity; in one place circumſcript, in another place incircumſpect, is for a natural body to receive contrary qualities.
o. Ergo, The body of Chriſt cannot be in one place local, and in another not local; in one place with quantity, and in another without quantity, as our adverſaries do affirm.

Argument.

Fe- The wicked receive not the body of Chriſt.
ri- The wicked do receive the body of Chriſt, if Tranſubſtantiation be granted.
ſon. Ergo, Tranſubſtantiation is not to be granted in the Sacrament.

Argument for probation of the Major.

Ca- To eat Chriſt, is for a man to have Chriſt dwelling and abiding in him. Auguſtine.
meſ- The wicked have not Chriſt dwelling in them.
tres. Ergo, the wicked eat not the body of the Lord.

Cyprian.

Cypr. de cœna Dom.

Cyprianus, de Cœna Dom. The eating of Chriſt is our abiding in him.

Argument.

Bo- The Holy Ghoſt could not come, if the body of Chriſt were really preſent. car- That the Holy Ghoſt is come it is moſt certain.
do. Ergo, it cannot be that Chriſt himſelf ſhould be here really preſent.

For proof of the Major, John the ſixteenth, Unleſs I go from you the Holy Ghoſt ſhall not come: It is expedient for you that I go hence. Joh. 16.

Argument of Peter Martyr.

Ba- If the wicked and infidels do receive the body of Chriſt, they receive him either with ſenſe, or reaſon, or with faith.
ro- But they receive him neither with ſenſe, reaſon, nor with faith.
co. Ergo, wicked men and infidels receive in no wiſe the body of Chriſt.

Declaration of the Major.

For declaration of the Major, if ye ſay, they receive him with ſenſe, that is againſt their own lore, for the body of Chriſt in the bleſſed Sacrament (ſay they) is not ſenſible, nor to be perceived by any ſenſe; neither with reaſon can they receive him, by their own learning, for ſo much as this Sacrament exceedeth all reaſon; nec fides habet meritum, ubi ratio præbet experimentum. And if ye ſay, that they receive him with faith, how can that be, ſeeing infidels have no faith?

What it is to eat the body of Chriſt by the Papiſts.

What it is to eat the body of Chriſt by Scripture and Doctors.

What it is to eat the body of Chriſt the teaching of the Papiſts herein is ſtrange, and differeth from the old Doctors. For where they teach that wicked perſons and infidels, albeit they receive not the effect of the Sacrament, yet the matter of the Sacrament which is the very body of Chriſt, they receive with their mouth, and with their ſenſe the accidents of bread, and thus imagine a certain body of Chriſt, ſuch as evil men and infidels may eat, and yet being eaten, it giveth them no nouriſhment nor life, nor maketh them partakers of his ſpirit and grace; both Scripture and the ancient Expoſitors of the Scripture do teach much otherwiſe. For the Scripture knoweth no ſuch kind of eating Chriſts body, but only that which is fruitful, wholeſome, and effectual. He that eateth my fleſh and drinketh my blood, abideth in me and I in him, &c. John 6. And therefore it may appear, that the Scripture meaneth by eating Chriſts fleſh, to believe in Chriſts Paſſion, which none can do but only the faithful. And to the ſame ſenſe ſound all the old Doctors.

Cyprianus.

Cypr. de cœna Domini.

That we ſhould know that eating is our dwelling in him, and our drinking is, as it were, a certain incorporation in him.

The wicked and infidels do not eat the body of Chriſt.

Item, The ſame Cyprian, The eating therefore of his fleſh is a certain deſire to abide in him; and ſaith moreover, that none eateth of this Lamb, but ſuch as be true Iſraelites, that is, true Chriſtian men, without colour or diſſimulation.

And again he ſaith, That as meat is to the fleſh, the ſame is faith to the ſoul, the ſame is the word to the ſpirit.

Moreover, And therefore (ſaith he) doing this we whet not our teeth to bite, but with pure Faith we break the holy Bread and diſtribute it, &c.

Auguſtinus.

Aug. de Civit. lib. 21. cap. 15.

It may not be ſaid, that any ſuch do eat the body of Chriſt, becauſe they are accounted amongſt the Members of Chriſt. Neither can they be both Members of Chriſt, John 6. and Members of an Harlot, &c. Furthermore, when Chriſt ſaith, He that eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him; he ſheweth what it is, not Sacramentally, but indeed to eat his body and drink his blood, which is, when a man ſo dwelleth in Chriſt, that Chriſt dwelleth in him. For ſo Chriſt ſpake thoſe words, as if he ſhould ſay; he that dwelleth not in me, and in whom I dwell not, let him not ſay nor think, that he eateth my body, or drinketh my blood.

Alſo in other places the ſaid Auſtin affirmeth, that to drink is to live; And ſaith moreover, Why preparеſt thou thy belly and thy teeth? Believe and thou haſt eaten, &c.

All which kinds of eating cannot be ſaid of the wicked and infidels, but only of the godly and faithful.

And thus briefly we have run over all the Arguments, and Authorities of Peter Martyr in that diſputation at Oxford, with Doctor Treſham, Chedſay, and Morgan, before the Kings Viſitors, above named, An. 1549.

Furthermore who ſo liſteth more fully to be ſatisfied and reſolved in all the points and occurrents, touching the matter of this Sacrament, let him read the Books firſt of the Archbiſhop Cranmer againſt Wincheſter; Secondly, the tractation of Peter Martyr made in Oxford, tranſlated and extant in Engliſh; and thirdly, the Book of Biſhop Ridley made in priſon, called A brief Declaration of the Lords Supper.

The like diſputation alſo about the ſame time was appointed and commenced at Cambridge, concerning the ſame matter of the Sacrament, the Kings Viſitors being directed down for the ſame purpoſe by the King. The names of which Viſitors were theſe, Nicholas Ridley Biſhop shop of Rocheſter, Thomas Biſhop of Ely, Maſter John Cheke the Kings Schoolmaſter, Doctor May Civilian, and Thomas Wendy the Kings Phyſitian. The concluſions in that diſputation propounded were theſe.

The firſt diſputation holden at Cambridge the twentieth day of June Anno 1549. before the Kings Majaſties Commiſſioners, by Doctor Madew reſpondent, whoſe firſt concluſion was this.

Tranſubſtantiation cannot be proved by the plain and manifeſt words of Scripture, nor can thereof be neceſſarily collected, nor yet confirmed by the conſents of the ancient Fathers for theſe thouſand years paſt. D. Glin. M. Langdale, M. Segewick, M. Yong, opponents.

Doctor Madew.

FIrſt of all (quoth he) I am very ſorry and do not a little lament the ſhortneſs of time, to declare and diſcuſs ſuch weighty matters of Religion in, as theſe be. But that notwithſtanding if I had had more plenty of time indeed; yet you ſhall underſtand how that I have ever both in heart and mind (if otherwiſe I could have avoided it) abhorred all *Scholaſtical diſputations, and ſubtil ſophiſtications. In conſideration whereof, I beſeech thoſe that are to diſpute, not to alledge or bring forth any diſmembred, or curtalled ſentences, or wreſted, as happeneth many times, but the whole and full ſentences either of the Scriptures, or of the ancient Doctors; yea, and to avouch ſuch Authors ſayings, as are not ſuſpected, or fained, but ſuch as be their own very ſayings indeed; which if they do, there is no doubt, but the clear light of this our diſputation ſhall the ſooner appear, and be manifeſt to this auditory. And for a further declaration of my part, you ſhall underſtand, that this my Preface in my ſaid former moſt Catholick and godly concluſion ſhall conſiſt in three principal points. 1. Firſt, What thing it was that Chriſt gave to his Diſciples. 2. Secondly, What ſeaſon or time this Tranſubſtantiation did begin. 3. Thirdly, How many devilliſh abominations have enſued upon that horrible and peſtilent invention. As concerning the firſt, that is, what thing Chriſt gave to his Diſciples, that may very well appear even by our own natural ſenſes, as namely, by the ſight, by the touching, by the taſting, which cannot be deceived of their natural judgment. For the eye ſeeth nothing but Bread and Wine, the taſting ſavouring nothing elſe; and the hands touch nothing elſe. He gave alſo to their underſtanding not only his holy and ſacred Doctrine, but alſo a ſpecial gift and pledge of his love. He gave the only material Bread and Wine ſanctified, as the rude and plain elements or principles to allure them withal; but he gave them the gift of his Grace and heavenly Doctrine, as the very things ſignified by the ſenſible elements: which thing plainly appeareth by the words of Chriſt our Saviour, Non bibam, &c. I will not drink hereafter of the Fruit of this Vine, until I drink it new with you in the Kingdom of God. Now this fruit or juyce of the Vine is nothing elſe but Wine, as Chryſoſtome ſaith. And moreover, to prove the ſame true, if it be reſerved after the conſecration for a time, it becometh ſowre and tart, therefore it is but Wine. And as touching the Bread Saint Paul ſaith thus; Is not the Bread which we break the Communion, or participation of Chriſts Body? He brake Bread, therefore it was but Bread which he gave them: for the Body of Chriſt is not broken, as the Scripture ſaith of the ſame, Os non comminuetis ex eo, you ſhall not break a bone of him. Alſo he ſaid, this is my Body, not that the Bread was his Body, and the Wine his blood, but he ſpake thoſe words to and of his own mortal Body, there ſitting amongſt them at Supper; or he ſpake yet doubtfully as thus; this ſignifieth my Body, It is one thing which is ſeen, but it is another thing which is underſtood: for that which is ſeen hath a bodily form, but that which is underſtood thereby hath a ſpiritual Fruit. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, Let the Word have acceſs to the element ſo is it made a Sacrament; mark he ſaith, Let the Word have acceſs, and not ſucceſs. Now the thing that hath acceſs to another thing doth not quence the thing that it cometh to, no more doth it here, Ergo, it is Bread and Wine ſtill as before, howbeit ſacred and holy. What ſaw you yeſterday (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) upon the Altar? Truly Bread and Wine, which your own Eyes can witneſs, ſaid he. What plainer teſtimony can be had of ſo ancient a Father as he was, and of ſo rare knowledge in the Scriptures of God? Seeing then that our Eyes do behold nothing but Bread and Wine, it muſt needs follow that it is ſo indeed, or elſe our ſenſes be deceived in their own proper object, which cannot be by any reaſon or natural Philſophy. And yet notwithſtanding ſome Papiſts dream and phantaſie ſuch a corporal, real, and groſs preſence of Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, as they affirm it to be there even as verily as it was upon the Croſs. Indeed the Bread is changed after a certain manner into Chriſts Body: for Chriſt gave not his own natural Body to his Diſciples at his laſt Supper, but only a ſign or figure thereof. Chriſts Body is there with the Bread; our ſenſes cannot be deceived about the ſubſtance of Bread, but they do judge there to be but one Body, that is of Bread, Ergo, ſo it is. Alſo the very definition of a Sacrament doth plainly repugn unto Tranſubſtantiation. Bread nouriſheth the ſubſtance of Chriſts Body, but the accidents do not ſo; Ergo, the ſubſtance doth remain of the Bread that nouriſheth: it is alſo called Bread in the Acts, and in divers other places of the Scriptures, wherefore it is ſo, but indeed after a ſort more holy then before. What gave he in the Supper? Bread, which is the Body, that is to ſay, an holy ſign of his Body, as Auguſtine doth witneſs, ſaying; He doubted not to ſay, This is my Body, when it was but a ſign of his Body. The unleavened Bread was but a bare and naked ſign of Chriſts Body, and ſo is this Bread the ſame Body even as Baptiſm, is. Now indeed there be two manner of ſigns, One that ſignifieth only, the other that doth exhibite the thing it ſelf. The firſt is applied to the old Law chiefly, the other to the Law of Grace. The old ancient and learned Fathers did never uſe to ſpeak of the ſubſtantial change, becauſe that all the mutation is but accidental, not ſubſtantial; nor do we deem the bodily ſubſtance Sacramentally, but yet we ſay that this Propoſition (this is my body) is but a figurative ſpeech, and no proper ſpeech, as ſome do deem. But it is as much to ſay as, This ſignifieth my Body; or elſe thus, This is a Sacrament of my Body; for the bodily Bread and Chriſts Body are not contained in place locally, but myſtically.

This portenteous and monſtrous Tranſubſtantiation began firſt to enter, when the Popiſh Prelates and Prieſts began firſt to underſtand this ſaid propoſition (This is my body) of the carnal and real preſence of Chriſts Body, as Hugo de ſancto victore, Gratian, Peter Lombard, and Innocent the third, the very peſtilent poiſon of all Chriſtian Religion, unto whom we have of long ſeaſon, yea alas too long, given credit. Under the which Innocent the ſaid deviliſh term or vocable of Tranſubſtantion began, the year one thouſand three hundred fifteen. And Boniface after him Biſhop of Rome made the ſaid mad blind Tranſubſtantiation to be the third Article of the Faith, full wiſely no doubt; whereas another Biſhop of Rome after him affirmed plainly againſt Neſtor the Heretick, that Bread remaineth ſtill, whoſe name was Gelaſius the third. Now as touching the moſt ſhameful and deteſtable inconveniences which muſt needs follow this deviliſh term or vocable of Tranſubſtantiation, you ſhall underſtand the firſt is, That then ſuch Papiſts will have Chriſts Body ſtill proſtituted and received even of the wicked and naughty people, which is clean contrary to that place of our Saviour Chriſt, where he ſaith, Whoſoever eateth my fleſh and drinketh my blood dwelleth in me, and I in him. Now it is plain, that evil perſons dwell not in Chriſt, nor Chriſt in them, wherefore they receive not his Body therein at all. For Saint Auguſtine, Tractat. 8. ſuper Johan. ſaith, it is but Bread which is ſeen after the conſecration, Ergo, the ſubſtance of Bread is there ſtill. 2. The ſecond inconvenience that groweth hereof, is the fond and ſuperſtitious reſervation of the Sacrament in pixes, boxes, and ſuch like, with vain Tabernacles over the Altar, where oftentimes it did putrifie for all their fooliſh honour; which began in {KING Edw. 6} Honorius his days, the third of that name, Biſhop of Rome: Which corruption declareth it to be but only Bread, ſay all the Papiſts what they liſt. 3. The third inconvenience that muſt needs follow Tranſubſtantiation, is Adoration, which is too plain Idolatry, as the Papiſts do know themſelves, if they liſt: but they are ſo ſtiffnecked that they will not know it, and ſo both have, and yet alſo will keep the World in blindneſs ſtill, if they might be ſuffered. But to be ſhort with you, even as we are changed into Chriſt by receiving the Sacrament, ſo the Bread is changed into the Body of Chriſt. But our ſubſtance is not changed into Chriſts ſubſtance, Ergò, the ſubſtance of the Bread is not changed into Chriſts Body. And to be ſhort and plain with you, moſt honourable Audience, the whole univerſal World hath been, and yet is ſore deceived and deluded about the eſtimation of this Sacrament: Therefore this is moſt true, when we do receive the ſaid Sacrament worthily, then are we joyned by Faith ſpiritually to Chriſt our Saviour. And thus much have I ſaid in this firſt matter.

Hono-

The ſecond matter to be diſputed of is this:

That in the Lords Supper is none other Oblation or Sacrifice, than one only remembrance of Chriſts death, and of thankſgiving.

IN this concluſion I will be much ſhorter, and more compendious than in the firſt. In conſideration whereof, you ſhall underſtand that the ſame is a very godly, and true Catholick propoſition. For to offer Chriſt, and to exhibit the ſame, is all one thing; for in that he is offered, he is ſet forth to eat, there is no difference at all between the maker of the ſacrifice, or offerer, and the thing that was offered, which both were one Chriſt. The Lord did command ſaying, Do this in remembrance of me; he made mention of the remembrance only, wherefore it can be none other ſacrifice but only that. The Apoſtle doth declare the manner of the thing doing, ſaying thus, He took Bread in his hands, he bleſſed it, he brake it, and gave it to his Diſciples. What gave he to them? Forſooth Bread, which was the Sacrament, and not his Body. No earthly Creature nor heavenly did ever offer up Chriſt at any time, but he himſelf once for all upon the Croſs, Ergo, he cannot nor ought not to be many times, and often, though that Pighius with all the blind rabble of Papiſts ſay the contrary. For truly in this point eſpecially they know not what they ſay, being ſo led by the old Phariſaical blindneſs. But to the purpoſe: you ſhall underſtand, good Auditors, that the pure and clean oblation and ſacrifice, ſpoken of by the Prophet Malachy, is nothing elſe but devout and faithful prayer and thankſgiving, as Tertullian ſaith in his third Book contra Marcionem, expounding the Pſalm, where it is ſaid thus, The ſacrifice of laud and praiſe ſhall honour me. So doth Saint Jerom, Ireneus, and Saint Auſtin ſay alſo upon Malachy. Where alſo they deny that Chriſt is eſſentially in the Sacrament. Yea and Saint Auſtin Epiſt. 95. ad Paulinum witneſſeth, that the mortifying of our earthly Members is our true Sacrifice that be Chriſtians. And all the ancient Fathers do call Prayers by the name of Sacrifices. And for this purpoſe, whoſoever liſt to read that moſt excellent and famous Clerk Zwinglius, cap. 18. de articulis, ſhall find the ſame confirmed of him by moſt grounded reaſons, whatſoever the Papiſts do bark againſt it. Thus I have declared my mind in both matters now diſputable. And if my further declaration be required through the vehemency of Arguments, I will perform the ſame in my anſwer thereunto.

There diſputed againſt this Defendant, Doctor Glin, M. Langdale, M. Segewick, and M. Yong, Students in Divinity.

Glin.

Notwithſtanding, Right worſhipful M. Doctor, that you have ſo exquiſitely declared your mind and opinion in every one of theſe matters now in contention, before this honourable and learned Audience, and alſo though juſt occaſion be miniſtred to me to infringe your poſitions in both concluſions, yet I will not invade the ſame as now indirectly, with contrarious and vain words to occupy the ſmall time which is appointed us for the trial of the ſame, but we will go forthwith to the thing it ſelf, which containeth in it matter enough. It is but folly to uſe many words, where few will ſerve our purpoſe, as ſaith the Maſter of the Sentences. All words may ſignifie at pleaſure, and commonly there be moe things than vocables. Like as ſometimes there was variance amongſt learned Men of the Unity of two ſubſtances in one perſonage of Chriſt God and Man: So is there now in our days variance of Tranſubſtantiation of Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of Chriſt. Wherefore I do require you firſt to ſhew me here openly what the ſaid Tranſubſtantiation is, that we go not from the thing it ſelf, which is our firſt and chiefeſt ground.

Madew.

As for that, I need not to ſhew you; for every man knoweth it.

Glin.

Peradventure it is not ſo, good Maſter Doctor. And I am perfectly aſſured that every man doth not know it indeed; for it is not ſo light a matter as you make it to be.

Madew.

Forſooth you know it your ſelf, and ſo do all men elſe.

Glin.

Well, yet I pray you ſhew me what thing Chriſt did demonſtrate and ſhew forth by that Article of the Neuter Gender, where he ſaid, This is my body? What did he point at in that Article This? For if he meant by that, the Bread, then Chriſt in the Sacrament is not only of two natures, but of three natures, as of the nature of Bread, of the nature of Man, and of the Divine nature, which to ſay were blaſphemy. The argument is good, and doth hold by that Text, He ſpake the word, and it was done; he commanded, and they were created. Moreover, if he ſhould mean by that Article of the Neuter Gender (this) the material Bread, then he would have ſaid, This bread is my body, ſo making the Article of the Neuter Gender: or elſe he would have ſaid thus, Here with this bread is my body, to have avoided ever after all Hereſies, Errors and Schiſms. But he ſaid not ſo, but ſpake the Article of the Neuter Gender ſaying, This is my body, that is to ſay, the thing or ſubſtance contained under the form and kind of Bread, which you ſee not with your bodily eies, is my body, according to my promiſe made to you before, that I would give you my very Fleſh to eat, John 6. In like manner when he gave the cup of his Blood, he ſaid not This in the Neuter Gender, as he would have done if he had meant the material Creature of Wine to have remained, but he ſaid then in the Maſculine Gender, This is my blood, that is to ſay, the thing contained under the form of Wine, which you ſee not with your bodily eies, is my blood. For truly the Holy Ghoſt came down to lead us into all truth and verity, and not to deceive us in ſo notable a point of our Faith. But out of doubt he ſhould have deceived in this matter, if ſo be he had given us only material Bread and Wine, inſtead of his Body and Blood, and not have fulfilled his promiſe made John 6. where he promiſed thus, The bread which I will give is my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the world. Here be two things ſpoken of, with two relatives, whereof the firſt with his relative muſt needs be refered to his gift in the laſt Supper, and the ſecond giving of the ſame Fleſh of his, with his relative, muſt be applied of neceſſity unto his giving of his Body upon the Croſs. Nor do we find in the whole Scripture, where Chriſt did fulfil his ſaid promiſe made in the ſixth of John, but at thoſe ſaid two times. Wherefore if we be deceived in this matter of Tranſubſtantiation, we may well ſay, O Lord thou haſt deceived us. But God forbid that we ſhould once think ſuch wickedneſs of him. He muſt alſo be unjuſt juſt of his promiſe if it be not performed at any ſeaſon, as it is not indeed, if it were not at both the ſaid times. Then if it were performed (as the Catholick Church of Chriſt doth hold, determine, and believe) then muſt it needs be granted, that he gave at his laſt Supper his own body and fleſh indeed and verily, which he gave upon the Croſs for the life of the world, though not in ſo fleſhly a manner and bloody, yet the very ſame fleſh and blood really after an unbloody ſort, and ſpiritually. He ſaid not, This Bread is my body, nor yet, here with the Bread is my Body, but, This is my body which ſhall be given for you. Neither ſaid he, This wine is my blood, nor with this wine is my blood, which circumſtance of plain ſpeech he would have uſe, if the pure creatures ſhould have remained, but he ſaid, This is my blood which is ſhed for you and for many, for the remiſſion of ſins, that is to ſay, the ſubſtance hidden under theſe viſible forms of bread and wine, are my very proper fleſh and blood. I pray you where do you find in the whole body of the Scripture expreſſed, or juſtly underſtood, that Chriſt gave but only a bare and naked ſign, figure, or Sacrament? Or where find you that he gave his body with bread, it remaining bread ſtill? And if you think to find it, I pray you ſhew me here, whether that body that he gave with material bread were his true body or not? If not, then it was phantaſtical; if it were his true body, (as you do grant) then muſt there needs be two very true bodies in one place together.

Now that it was his very true body and blood, it is certain by the plain words of the Text ſaying thus, Which is betraied or given, and which is ſhed for you and for many. But I will let all this paſs over, and I do require of you this one queſtion, Whether that the Sacraments of the old Law and of the new Law be all one?

Madew.

The Sacraments of the old Law and new Law, how they differ.

If you do conſider the things themſelves, they be all one, but if you reſpect the only ſigns, figures, and Sacraments outwardly, then they be divers.

Glin.

I do perceive your anſwer very well; then further to our purpoſe, Was Chriſt then after the ſame manner in the bread that came from Heaven, in the Paſchal Lamb, and in Iſaac, as he is in this Sacrament? Which if you do grant me, then theſe propoſitions were true, for Chriſt to ſay, this Manna is my body, this Lamb is my body, this Iſaac is my body. Moreover, if the Sacraments of the old Law, and of the Law of Grace be all one in very deed and effect, (as you ſeem to graut) then what difference is between the Shew-Bread in Moſes Law, and the bread that we do break, that St. Paul ſpeaketh of? They then had that bread, which ſignifieth Chriſt, and ſo doth ours (as you ſay;) that was bread ſo is ours; and ſo by your reaſon there is no difference between them: yea their Manna, becauſe it came from Heaven, was better than this earthly bread, that cometh from beneath, which is contrary to the Truth; for Saint John ſaith, That the Law was given by Moſes, but the verity was given by Jeſus Chriſt. Wherefore that which Chriſt gave was not only a ſign, but alſo the verity, that is to ſay, the living bread that came down from Heaven, the true Lamb that taketh away the ſins of the World, and Iſaac himſelf which is Chriſt, or elſe you muſt grant me that we Chriſtians do receive leſs than the Jews did. For they received the bread called Manna from Heaven, and we only a poor morſel of bread from the Earth. Theirs was called Angels food, and ours is, as you hold, little better than common bread. Me ſeemeth that you do diſtruſt the Doctrine of the Faith of Chriſtendom for theſe 500 years, even as though Chriſt had forſaken his Catholick Church after 1000 years, but that is not ſo; for he promiſed his holy Spirit to aſſiſt his Spouſe the Church, and to lead her continually into all truth from time to time, as need ſhould require. As I remember, you ſaid that adoration did follow upon Tranſubſtantiation; but the Fathers for one thouſand years paſt do grant Adoration of the Sacrament, therefore Tranſubſtantiation alſo. The Minor I prove by the moſt clear teſtimonies of S. Auſtin, S. Ambroſe, S. Deniſe, S. Baſil, and Saint Chryſoſtom.

Adoration of the Sacrament maintained by Glin.

Madew.

I deny Maſter Doctor, that I ſaid any ſuch thing; and therewith I ſay that the Fathers do underſtand by Adoration a certain reverent manner, that we ſhould receive the Lords Supper with, which may be called a certain Veneration, but no Adoration.

Glin.

No may? Saint Auſtin (De Civitate Dei) witneſſeth that the Ethniks and Paynims do eſteem the Chriſtians to worſhip and adore the Gods of Wheat and Barly called Ceres, and the God of Wine called Bacchus. And again St. Auſtin ſaith thus, Lo, no Man eateth of that bread except he firſt adore and worſhip it.

Madew.

By your patience Saint Auſtin in that place ſpeaketh of the honouring of Chriſts body now ſitting in Heaven.

Glin.

Yea Maſter Doctor, think you ſo? And why not alſo of his bleſſed body in the Sacrament? Seeing that he ſaith it is there, This is my body which is given for you, ſaith he. More plainly he needeth not to ſpeak for the real preſence of his bleſſed body, being both able and willing to verifie his word. For if a cunning Lapidary ſhould ſay to you or me, this is a true right Diamond, a perfect Carbuncle, Saphyre, Emrald, or any ſuch precious Stone, we would believe him, though we were ignorant of their natures. Wherefore we ought much more to believe our Saviour Chriſt, God and Man, in that he ſaith, This is my body. And why then ought we not to honour it in the Sacrament? Or how many bodies hath Chriſt, ſeeing you do grant his body in Heaven to be honoured, but not his body here in the Sacrament?

Mat. 26. Mar. 14.

Real preſence defended by the Papiſts.

Madew.

Forſooth he hath but one very body, and no moe, but the ſame is Sacramentally in the Sacrament, and ſubſtantially in Heaven; here by faith, and there in deed.

Argument.

Glin.

Well yet once again to you thus. The very true body of Chriſt is to be honoured, but the ſame very true body is in the Sacrament, Ergo, the body of Chriſt in the Sacrament is to be honoured.

Biſhop Ridley repelleth.

Rocheſter.

Welbeloved friends and brethren in our Saviour Chriſt, you muſt underſtand that this Diſputation, with other that ſhall be after this, are appointed to ſearch for the plain truth of the holy Scriptures in theſe matters of Religion, which of a long ſeaſon have bin hidden from us by the falſe Gloſſes of that great Antichriſt and his Miniſters of Rome, and now in our days muſt be revealed to us Engliſhmen, through the great mercy of God principally, and ſecondarily through the moſt gentle Clemency of our natural Sovereign Lord the Kings Majeſty, whom the living Lord long preſerve to reign over us in health, wealth, and godlineſs, to the maintenance of Gods holy Word, and to the extirpation of all blind Gloſſes of men that go about to ſubvert the truth. Becauſe therefore that I am one that doth love the truth, and have profeſſed the ſame amongſt you, therefore I ſay, becauſe of conferring my mind with yours, I will here gladly declare what I think in this point now in controverſie. Not becauſe this worſhipful Doctor hath any need of my help in diſſolving of Arguments propoſed againſt him, for as me ſeemeth he hath anſwered hitherto very well and Clarkly according to the truth of Gods Word. But now to the purpoſe, I do grant unto you (Mr. Opponent) that the old ancient Fathers do record and witneſs a certain honour and adoration to be due unto Chriſts body, but they ſpeak not of it in the Sacrament, but

{KING Edw.6} but of it in Heaven at the right hand of the Father, as holy Chryſoſtom ſaith, Honour thou it, and then eat it: but that honour may not be given to the outward ſign, but to the body of Chriſt it ſelf in Heaven. For that body is there only in a ſign vertually, by grace, in the exhibition of it in ſpirit, effect, and faith, to the worthy receiver of it. For we receive vertually only Chriſts body in the Sacrament.

Chriſt to be honoured in Heaven not in the Sacrament.

Glin.

How then (if it pleaſe your good Lordſhip) doth Baptiſm differ from this Sacrament? For in that we receive Chriſt alſo by grace and vertually.

Rocheſter.

Chriſt is preſent after another ſort in Baptiſm than in this Sacrament; for in that he purgeth and waſheth the Infant from all kind of ſin, but here he doth feed ſpiritually the receiver in Faith with all the merits of his bleſſed death and paſſion, And yet he is in Heaven ſtill really and ſubſtantially. As for example, The Kings Majeſty our Lord and Maſter, is but in one place, whereſoever that this Royal perſon is abiding for the time, and yet his mighty Power and Authority is every where in his Realms and Dominions: So Chriſts real perſon is only in Heaven ſubſtantially placed, but his Might is in all things created effectually. For Chriſts fleſh may be underſtood for the power or inward Might of his fleſh.

Chriſt worketh otherwiſe in Baptiſm, than in the Sacramental bread.

Glin.

If it pleaſe your Fatherhood, Saint Ambroſe and Saint Auguſtine do ſay, that before the conſecration it is but very bread, and after the conſecration it is called the very body of Chriſt.

Object.

Madew.

Indeed it is the very body of Chriſt Sacramentally after the conſecration, whereas before it is nothing but common bread, and yet after that it is the Lords bread, and thus muſt St. Ambroſe and St. Auguſtin be underſtood.

Anſwer.

¶ Here the Proctors commmanded the Opponent to divert the ſecond concluſion, but he requeſted them that they would permit him as long in this matter, as they would in the ſecond, and ſo he ſtill proſecuted the firſt matter as followeth.

Glin.

THe bread after conſecration doth feed the ſoul, Ergo, the ſubſtance of common bread doth not remain. The Argument is good, for S. Ambroſe De Sacramentis ſaith thus, After the conſecration there is not the thing that nature did form, but that which the bleſſing doth conſecrate. And if the benediction of the Prophet Elias did turn the nature of Water, how much more then doth the benediction of Chriſt here both God and Man?

Well cavilled and like a Papiſt.

Madew.

That of Book S. Ambroſe is ſuſpected to be none of his works.

Rocheſter.

So all the Fathers ſay.

Glin.

I do marvel at that, for S. Auſtin in his Book of Retractations maketh plain that that was his own very work.

Rocheſter.

He ſpeaketh indeed of ſuch a Book ſo intituled, to Saint Ambroſe, but yet we do lack the ſame Book indeed.

Glin.

Well, let it then paſs to other Mens judgments. What then ſay you to holy S. Cyprian 1200 years paſt? Who ſaith That the bread, which our Lord gave to his Diſciples, was not changed in form, or quality; but in very nature, and by the Almighty word was made fleſh. Cyprian.

Madew.

I do anſwer thus, That this word fleſh may be taken two ways, either for the ſubſtance it ſelf, or elſe for a natural property of a fleſhly thing. So that Cyprian there did mean of a natural property, and not of fleſhly ſubſtance. And contrariwiſe in the Rod of Aaron, where both the ſubſtance and alſo the property was changed.

Glin.

Holy Saint Ambroſe ſaith, the body there made by the mighty power of Gods Word is the body of the Virgin Mary Ambroſe.

Rocheſter.

That is to ſay, that by the Word of God the thing hath a being, that it had not before, and we do conſecrate the body, that we may receive the grace and power of the body of Chriſt in Heaven by this Sacramental body.

Glin.

By your patience (my Lord) if it be a body of the Virgin (as S. Ambroſe ſaith) which we do conſecrate as Miniſters by Gods holy Word, then muſt it needs be more than a ſacramental, or ſpiritual body; yea a very body of Chriſt indeed, yea the ſame that is ſtill in Heaven without all moving from place to place, unſpeakably, and far paſſing our natural reaſon, which is in this myſtery ſo captivate, that it cannot conceive how it is there, without a lively Faith to Gods Word. But let this paſs. You do grant that this bread both quicken or give life, which if it do, then it is not a natural bread, but a ſuperſubſtantial bread.

Rocheſter.

So doth the effectual and lively Word of God, which for that it nouriſheth the ſoul, it doth give life; for the Divine eſſence infuſeth it ſelf unſpeakably into the faithful receiver of the Sacrament.

Glin.

How then ſay you to holy Damaſcene a Greek Author, who, as one Tritenitus ſaith, flouriſhed one thouſand years paſt; he ſaith thus, The body that is of the Holy Virgin Mary is joyned to the Divinity after the conſecration in verity, and indeed: not ſo as the body once aſſumpted into Heaven, and ſitting on the Fathers right Hand, doth remove from thence and cometh down at the conſecration time, but that the ſame bread and wine are ſubſtantially tranſumpted into the very body and blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. If (ſaith he) thou doſt not know the manner how it is brought to paſs, let it be enough to thee to believe that it is done by the operation of the Holy Ghoſt, and we do know no more but that the living Word of God is working and Almighty, but the very manner how, is inſcrutable to us: and no great marvel, ſaith he, for we cannot well expreſs how the material bread, wine, or water are tranſumpted naturally into the ſame body and blood of the receiver, and be become another body than they were before. So ſaith this great ancient Clerk, alſo this Shewbred with wine and water are changed, by the coming of the Holy Ghoſt, into Chriſts body and blood, and they be not two bodies there, but very one (of Chriſt) and the ſame. Damaſcene

Rocheſter.

Roche ſter.

Damaſcene. expounded.

First I deny (Maſter Doctor) that Damaſcene was one thouſand years paſt; Secondarily, I ſay that he is not to be holden as an ancient Father, for that he maintaineth in his works evil and damnable Doctrine, as the worſhipping of Images and ſuch like. Thirdly, I ſay that indeed God by his holy Spirit is the worker of that which is done in the Sacrament. Alſo I grant that there is a mutation of the common Bread and Wine ſpiritually into the Lords Bread and Wine, by the ſanctifying of them in the Lords Word. But I deny that there is any mutation of the ſubſtances; for there is no other change there indeed, than there is in us, which when we do receive the Sacrament worthily, then are we changed into Chriſts Body, Bones and Blood, not in nature, but ſpiritually, and by grace, much like as Iſaiah ſaw the burning Coal, even ſo we ſee not there the very ſimple Bread as it was before the Conſecration; for an Union cannot be but of two very things. Wherefore if we be joyned to Chriſt receiving the Sacrament, then there is no adnihilation of Bread, which is, when it is reduced to nothing, as it is in your feigned Tranſubſtantiation.

A ſpiritual mutation of the bread and wine, but no mutation of the ſubſtance.

Glin.

So I perceive you would have me to grant that the Sacrament is but a figure, which Theophylactus doth deny.

Roche ſter.

Theophylact expounded.

You ſay truth, he denieth it indeed to be a figure, but he meaneth that it is not only a figure.

Glin.

Whereas Saint Paul ſaith, That we being many are one Bread, he ſpeaketh not, nor meaneth one material Bread, as you do here, Ergo, he ſpeaketh of heavenly Bread. And holy Chryſoſtome upon Matthew ſaith, That the Paſchal Lamb was a figure, but the myſtery is the verity. For the Diſciples would not have been offended to have drunk a figure of Chriſts Blood, being well accuſtomed to figures. For Chriſt did not inſtitute a figue for a figure, but the clear verity inſtead of the figure, as Saint John ſaith, Grace and verity was given by Chriſt. Doſt thou ſee Bread? (ſaith Chryſoſtome) doth it avoid or paſs as other meats do which we receive? God forbid. Ergo, &c.

The Paſchal Lamb a figure.

Madew.

The material parts of the Sacrament iſſue out as other meats do.

That ancient Clerk Origen upon the 15. of St. Matth. ſaith thus, As touching that which is material in the Sacrament, it deſcendeth and iſſueth out as other nutriments do, but as concerning that which is celeſtial, it doth not ſo.

Glin.

Chryſoſtome, Homily 83. upon Matthew ſaith, That we cannot be deceived of Chriſts Word, but our natural ſenſes may be deceived in this point very ſoon and eaſily; his ſaid words cannot be falſe, but our ſenſes be many times beguiled of their judgments. Becauſe therefore that Chriſt ſaid, This is my body, let us not at any hand doubt (ſaith he) but let us believe it, and well perceive it with the eyes of our underſtanding. And within a little after in that place he ſaith thus, It was not enough that he was become man, and afterwards was ſcourged for us, but alſo he did reduce and bring us to be as one body with him, not through Faith only, but in very deed alſo he maketh us his Body. And after that he ſaith, that theſe works are not of mans power. But the ſame things that he wrought in his laſt Supper, he now worketh alſo by his Precept to his right Miniſters, and we do occupy the place of the ſame Miniſters, but he it is that doth ſanctifie and tranſumpt the creatures, he performeth ſtill the ſame.

Roche ſter.

M. Doctor, you muſt underſtand, that in that place S. Chryſoſtome ſheweth us that Chriſt delivered to us no ſenſible thing at his laſt Supper.

Glin.

Honourable Sir, by your patience I grant that he gave to his Diſciples no ſenſible thing in ſubſtance, but a thing inſenſible, his own precious Body and Blood, under the only kinds of creatures. And truly, as it ſeemeth, Theophylactus beſt knew the meaning of Chryſoſtome, becauſe all Authors accept him as a faithful Interpreter of him. And he hath theſe ſame plain words tranſelemented and transformed. Alſo Theophylactus Alexandrinus ſuper Marcum, Cyrillus, and Saint Auguſtine ſaith, That before the Conſecration it is Bread, but afterwards it is Chriſts very Body. In like manner Saint Auguſtine upon the 33. Pſalm ſaith, that in the laſt Supper Chriſt did bear himſelf in his own hands. Now every man may bear the figure of his body in his own hands, but Saint Auſtin ſaith it there for a miracle. Irenæus in his Fifth Book is of the ſame mind. And Saint Auſtin ſaith, I do remember my words, &c. The Law and Figures were by Moſes, but the Verity and Body came by Chriſt.

Roche ſter.

Well, ſay what you liſt, it is but a figurative ſpeech, like to this, If you will receive, and underſtand he is Elias, for a property, but indeed he was not Elias, but John the Baptiſt. And ſo in this place Chriſt calleth it his Body, when it was very Bread. But better then the common Bread, becauſe it was ſanctified by the word of Chriſt.

¶ Here Maſter Langdale replied to Doctor Madew.

Langdale.

Two things noted in M. Madews poſition.

Right worſhipful Maſter Doctor, by your patience I have noted two things that you affirmed in your Poſition, even now before this honourable Audience, the which, as me ſeemeth, are not conſonant to the truth of Gods Word. The firſt is as touching Chriſts ſaying, I will not from henceforth drink any more of the Fruit of the Vine, until I drink it new with you, &c. Which place of the Scripture you did, as I think, underſtand, and interpret as though nothing elſe remained after the Conſecration, but very Wine ſtill. Whereof I do not a little marvel; ſeeing that moſt famous Clerk Eraſmus, whoſe authority and ſentence you refuſe at this preſent only, yet nevertheleſs is very worthy, in this matter, of far better eſtimation amongſt learned men. Wherefore I truſt I ſhall not offend to alledge him before this learned and honourable Auditory. He plainly affirmeth that for all his great labour in ſearching the Scriptures, he could never find either in the Evangeliſts or yet in the Apoſtolical Doctrine, that it might be, or was called Wine, after the Conſecration. And therefore I cannot but marvel, if the thing be ſo open and plain, as in your declaration you ſeem to make it, that ſuch a profound Clerk as he was, could not find it out. For that ſaid place he intreated of in his Paraphraſes, in his Annotations, and in others of his Lucubrations, and yet he plainly denyeth that ſame very thing to be found of him, which you here openly affirmed, that it is Wine, or may be ſo called after the Conſecration duely performed by a right Miniſter. I beſeech you not to be offended, though I credit not your ſaying in this ſo weighty a matter of Chriſtian Religion, as I do his.

The ſaying of Eraſmus of the Lords Supper.

Madew.

No forſooth, I will not be offended one jot with you. But to content your mind in this point; It is moſt conſtant and ſure, that Eraſmus was of that mind and opinion, that it was enough for a Chriſtian to believe Chriſts Body and Blood to be in the Sacrament in what manner or condition ſoever it were.

{KING Edw.6}

Langdale.

Eraſmus his opinion of the Sacrament.

By your licence, good Maſter Doctor, theſe be Eraſmus words. The Church of Chriſt hath determined very lately Tranſubſtantiation in the Sacrament. It was of a long ſeaſon enough to believe Chriſts body to be either under the bread conſecrated, or elſe to be preſent after any other manner. But yet, ſaith he, after that the ſaid Church had pondered and weighed the thing more pithily with greater judgment, then ſhe made a more certain determination of the ſame. In the which place, 1 Cor. 7. Eraſmus ſaith, That the proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt equally from the Father and the Son, was alſo determined of the ſame Church. But let this paſs. And as touching the ſecond point which I noted in your ſo eloquent declaration, which was, that you did wreſt and wring the ſaying of Tertullian from the verity of his mind; for you ſaid, that he doth interpret the Prophet Malachy, ſpeaking of our daily Sacrifice in the New Law, to mean nothing elſe by that Sacrifice in that place, but prayer and thankſgiving. But the ſaid ancient Clerk Tertullian hath not thoſe words that you do alledge of him, that is to ſay (Nothing elſe.) And yet though that Oecolampadius doth ſo interpret that place, yet (as me ſeemeth) the judgment of the whole Chriſtian Church is to be preferred in ſuch a matter of Religion. But I will paſs over this point, and return to the matter it ſelf. And firſt I do require of your Maſterſhip, whether that this ſentence, This is my body, be ſpoken of Chriſt figuratively or not.

Tertullian his interpretation upon Malachy.

Madew.

After the mind of the common Gloſs of Cyprian and Origen, it is ſo taken in very deed.

Langdale

That cannot be by your patience, for it is taken there ſubſtantially; Ergo, not figuratively.

Madew.

I deny your Argument.

Langdale.

I prove my Argument good, thus; This word ſubſtance doth plainly repugn, and is contrary to this word figure; Ergo, ſubſtantially and figuratively do alſo repugn. Moreover I ask of you, whether that this be a true propoſition or not; Bread is Chriſts body.

Madew.

A true propoſition, bread is Chriſts body.

Yea forſooth, it is a true propoſition.

Langdale.

Then thus to you, Chriſts body was given for us, but you ſay, that Bread is Chriſts body; Ergo, Bread was given for us.

Rocheſter.

Not ſo Sir, for your former propoſition is of double underſtanding.

Langdale.

Well, yet you Mr. Doctor do grant that Chriſt is ſubſtantially in the Sacrament.

Madew.

No I deny that I ſaid ſo ever.

Langdale.

Yea? do you ſo? Well, I paſs not thereupon greatly, for I will prove it by another means. Chriſt did ſuffer his moſt glorious paſſion for us, really and ſubſtantially; Ergo, he is alſo in the Sacrament ſubſtantially. The Argument is good, becauſe that it is the ſame here that was there crucified for us, howbeit here inviſibly, indeed ſpiritually and ſacramentally, but there viſibly, and after a mortal and moſt bloudy manner.

Chriſt not ſubſtantially in the Sacrament. Chriſts body in the Sacrament ſacramentally, and on the Croſs after a mortal and bloudy ſort. Chriſt crucified ſubſtantially, but yet is in the Sacrament figuratively.

Rocheſter.

Maſter Langdale, your Argument doth well conclude, in caſe that his body were here in the Sacrament after ſuch a ſort as it was when he was betrayed. But that is not ſo, for he was betrayed and crucified in his natural body ſubſtantially and really in very deed; but in the Sacrament he is not ſo, but ſpiritually and figuratively only.

Langdale.

By your good Lordſhips favour that is not ſo, for he is there not figuratively, but verily and indeed by the power of his mighty Word, yea even his very own natural Body under the Sacrament duly performed by the lawful Miniſter.

Madew.

O ſay not ſo, for you ſpeak blaſphemy.

Langdale.

No, no, Maſter Doctor, God forbid that either I or any man elſe ſhould be noted of blaſphemy, ſaying nothing but the very plain truth, as in my conſcience and learning I do no leſs.

Rocheſter.

O Mr. Langdale, I wis it becometh you not here to have ſuch words.

Langdale.

If it like your good Lordſhip, I gave not the firſt occaſion of them, but only did refute that which I was unjuſtly burthened withal, as reaſon doth require, and it grieved me to hear it. He ſaith, if it pleaſe your Lordſhip, that there is a mutation or change of the bread after it is conſecrated; which if it be ſo, as I grant no leſs, then I would require of him, whether it be changed in the ſubſtance, or in the accidents, or elſe in both, or in nothing? No man can juſtly ſay, that there is a change into nothing. And all ancient Fathers do agree, that the ſame accidents are there ſtill after, that were before; nor doth any Doctor ſay, That there is any mutation both of the ſubſtance and accidents alſo; Ergo, the ſubſtance of bread is changed into ſome other thing that is there really preſent under the forms of bread and wine, which by Chriſts words muſt needs be his own bleſſed body.

A queſtion whether the bread be changed in accidents or ſubſtance.

Rocheſter.

Sir, you are deceived greatly, for there is no change either of the ſubſtances, or of the accidents; but in very deed there do come unto the bread other accidents, inſomuch that whereas the bread and wine were not ſanctified before, nor holy, yet afterwards they be ſanctified, and ſo do receive then another ſort or kind of vertue which they had not before.

No change of the ſubſtance, nor yet of the accidents in the Sacrament.

¶ Here is to be noted, That Peter Martyr in his anſwer at Oxford, did grant a change in the ſubſtances of bread and wine, which in Cambridge, by the Biſhop Dr. Ridley was denied.

Langdale.

By your patience, reverend Father, by ſuch means a man may eaſily avoid all the Myſteries of our Chriſtian faith. As where it is ſaid thus of God the Father, This is my beloved Son, &c. A man may alſo wring that to be underſtood thus, This is the image of my welbeloved Son; or, This is the vertue of my welbeloved Son; yea, much more juſtly than your good Lordſhip doth the other; becauſe St. Paul to the Hebrews doth call the Son the image of the Father, and in another place he calleth him the power or vertue of God, and Gods Wiſdom. Now though he be ſo called in Scripture, God forbid that we ſhould call him only Gods image or Gods vertue, and not God himſelf.

How Scripture may be abuſed to any purpoſe, as commonly the Papiſts uſe it.

Rocheſter.

A figurative ſpeech ſometimes hurtful, ſomewhere not.

O gentle Maſter Langdale, you ought not to reaſon after ſuch a ſort as you do now, becauſe that a trope or figurative ſpeech is nocive ſomewhere, but not every where, nor in this matter.

Langdale.

A fond reaſon wherefore this is my body, ſhould ſeem no figurative ſpeech.

Yet by your licence, honourable Father, it doth appear to me no trope at all in theſe words of Chriſt, This is my body which is given for you, and that for this reaſon; Chriſt did exhibite or give again the very ſame things at his laſt Supper, by the which things he was joyned to us; but he was joyned or knit unto us by his own natural fleſh and bloud; Ergo, he did exhibite to us at his laſt Supper no leſs again. My former propoſition I prove by the teſtimony of Saint Chryſoſtome, whoſe words in Chriſts perſon are theſe; I would be your Brother, I took upon me common fleſh and bloud for your ſakes, and even by the ſame things that I am joyned to you, the very ſame I have exhibited to you again, &c.

℄ Here the Proctors commanded Langdale to give place to another.

Rocheſter.

We are not joyned by natural fleſh, but do receive his fleſh ſpiritually from above.

℄ Here Mr. Segewick replied.

{Anno 1549.} Whether the Article of the neuter Gender (this) be referred to the bread, or to the body.

Right worſhipful maſter Doctor, I do alſo ask of you firſt of all, whether the Greek Article (this) of the neuter Gender, be referred to the word (bread) or to the word (body:) if it be referred to the word (bread) then Chriſt would not have ſaid (this) in the neuter Gender, but rather (this) in the maſculine Gender.

Rocheſter.

Forſooth that Article is referred to neither of both, but may ſignifie unto us any other kind of thing.

Segewick.

Bread taken diverſly in the Scripture.

No forſooth, but it doth note unto us ſome excellent great thing determinately, and not ſo confuſedly as you ſay. For ſuch a great heap of Articles, in the Greek, doth notifie unto us a great and weighty thing to be in the Sacrament determinately, if we may credit the ancient Fathers. Moreover this word (bread) is not always in the Scriptures taken after one ſort: Wherefore I deſire you to ſhew me how it is taken in this place of St. Paul, We that are many, are one bread, &c.

Madew.

Forſooth of the very wheaten bread.

Segewick.

Then, after your mind, we are all very wheaten bread.

Rocheſter.

How we are bread, and how not.

Forſooth we are bread, not for the nature of bread, but for the fellowſhip and unity that is noted by the coagulati-

{KING Edw. 6}

Segewick.

Well let that paſs, then thus. It is the body, Ergo, no figure; becauſe there is a perpetual contrariety between the Law of Moſes and the Law of Grace. Therein were figures and ſhadows, and herein is the verity indeed.

Rocheſter.

How the bread is Chriſts body.

I do grant it to be Chriſts true body and fleſh, by a property of the nature aſſumpted to the Godhead, yea, and we do really eat and drink his fleſh and bloud after a certain real property.

Segewick.

It is not the figurative Paſchal Lamb, it is not the figurative Manna, nor yet the figurative ſhew-bread, &c. Ergo, It is no figure.

Madew.

I deny your Argument.

Segewick.

I maintain my Argument thus. All the ſhadows are wholly paſt; Ergo, ſo alſo be the figures; for every figure is a ſhadow: if then it be but a figure, all the figures are not paſt as yet; but that is falſe; Ergo, ſo is the other.

Rocheſter.

The bread but a figure, and how.

It is nothing but a figure or token of the true body of Chriſt; as it is ſaid of John the Baptiſt, he is Elias, not that he was ſo in deed or perſon, but in property and vertue he repreſented Elias.

Segewick.

So: But moſt learned Father, when Chriſt ſaid, I am the way, the truth, and the life, may it be underſtood as you do the other place thus, I am the vertue of the way, verity and the life? But now to the matter it ſelf. It is verily meat, Ergo, it is not figuratively.

Madew.

This Verb or word (is) in this place is taken for that that ſignifieth.

Here he was commanded to reply in the ſecond matter.

Segewick.

NOw as touching our ſecond Concluſion, this I ſay. Whereſoever Chriſt is, there is a Sacrifice propitiatory; but in the Lords Supper is Chriſt; Ergo, in the Lords Supper is a Sacrifice propitiatory.

Madew.

Chriſt not offered, but received in ſpirit.

Chriſt is not offered in the Lords Supper, but is received ſpiritually.

Segewick.

The Prieſthood and the Sacrifice be correſpondent together; but Chriſts Prieſthood after the order of Melchiſedech is perpetual; Ergo, alſo ſo is his Sacrifice.

Rocheſter.

Chriſts Sacrifice offered once for all, is only ſufficient without any other. Chriſts Sacrifice an end of all Sacrifices.

Chriſt is a Prieſt for ever, that is to ſay, his Prieſthood, and Sacrifice, offered once for all, is available for ever, ſo that no other ſhall ſucceed him.

Segewick

KIN Edw. 6

Segewick.

Where there is no oblation, there is no Sacrifice; Ergo, if Christ be not perpetually offered, there is no perpetual Sacrifice. Item, the same bloudy Sacrifice of Christ upon the Cross was the very fine and end of all the bloudy Sacrifices figured in the Law after the order of Aarons Priesthood. Wherefore you must needs grant that he offered himself also at his last Supper after the order of Melchisedech, under the forms of bread and wine; or else you must shew the Scripture where he did so, which I cannot perceive to be done, but at his last Supper only, after an unbloudy manner. Item, He is offered for the remission of sins daily; Ergo, he is a Sacrifice propitiatory still in the new Law, as Saint Augustine saith, expounding these words of the Psalm, Thou hast not willed to have sacrifice and oblation, but, &c.

Rocheſter.

Saint Cyprian speaketh much like that sort, where he saith thus, It is the Lords Passion, which we do offer, &c.

Segewick.

In the old law there were many Sacrifices propitiatory; Ergo, There be also in the new Law; or else you must grant that God is not so beneficial now to us, as then he was to them, seeing that we be as frail and as needy as ever were they, which must be especially the most pure daily Sacrifice of Christs body and bloud, that holy Malachy speaketh of.

Madew.

What Sacrifice it is that Malachy speaketh of.

As touching the place of Malachy the Prophet, I answer, That it is nothing to your purpose for the offering of Christ daily in the Sacrament. For that Sacrifice there spoken of, is nothing else but the sincere and most pure preaching of Gods holy Word, of prayer, and of thanksgiving to God the Father through Jesus Christ.

Here Mr. Segewick was commanded to cease to Mr. Young.

Young.

WOrshipful Master Doctor, although you have learnedly and clerkly defended these your Conclusions this day; yet seeing that I am now placed to impugn them in place of a better, I do begin thus with you. It hath pleased Christ to make us partakers of his holy Spirit, and that in very deed, by receiving of the Christian faith, hope and charity; Ergo, much more of his own blessed body and bloud, spiritually and in very deed, in the Lords Supper. Item, the Angels food was altogether holy from above, and heavenly, called Manna; Ergo, also this celestial and heavenly food can be justly esteemed to be of no less excellency than that, but without comparison better; and so no very Wheat, after due Consecration of it. Item, the words of holy Scripture are evermore effectual and working, Ergo, they must perform the thing indeed that they do promise. For he that might create, might also change at his pleasure the natures and substances of creatures, as appeareth that Christ did by changing Water into Wine at a Marriage in Galilee. But Christ in the Scripture did promise, John 6. that the bread that he would give is his flesh indeed, which promise was never fulfilled till in his last Supper, when he took bread, gave thanks, blessed it, and gave it to his Disciples, saying, Take, eat, this is my body. Which bread then was his flesh indeed, as doth well appear in the said place, and next promise depending upon the same, thus, which flesh I will give for the life of the world. This last promise was fulfilled by him upon the Cross; Ergo, the first was likewise at his last Supper. So that it was but one and the same flesh, first and last promised and performed.

The words of Scripture ever effectual.

Rocheſter.

Indeed the words of holy Scripture do work their effects potentially and throughly by the mighty operation of the Spirit of God.

Young.

If it please your Lordship, man is fed and nourished with Christs bloud, Ergo, then it is his bloud indeed, though it do not so appear to our outward senses, which be deceived; for Christ saith, This is my bloud; And also, My bloud is drink indeed. And because that we should not abhor his blessed bloud in his natural kind, or his flesh if they should be so ministred unto us; of his most excellent mercy and goodness, condescending to our weak infirmities, he hath appointed them to be given us, under the sensible kinds of his convenient creatures, that is to say, of bread and wine. Also our body is fed with Christs body, which is meat indeed, but it cannot be nourished with that that is not there present; Ergo, Christs body that feedeth us must needs be present in very deed in the Sacrament. Item, the nature of bread is changed; but the nature of the bread, and the substance of it, is one and the same thing; Ergo, the substance also is changed. My first proposition is S. Cyprians de cæna Domini, saying, that the bread in figure is not changed, but in nature.

Man is nourished by the force of Christ his bloud by faith, but not by drinking it really in the Cup.

Rocheſter.

Cyprian there doth take this word nature for a property of nature only, and not for the natural substance.

Cyprian expounded.

Young.

That is a strange acception, that I have not read in any Author before this time; but yet, by your leave, the communion of Christs body cannot be there where his body is not; but the communion of Christs body is in the Sacrament: Ergo, Christs body is there present in very deed.

Rocheſter.

Grace is there communicated to us by the benefit of Christs body sitting in Heaven.

Young.

Not so only, for we are members of his flesh, and bones of his bones.

Rocheſter.

We be not consubstantial with Christ, God forbid that, but we are joyned to his mystical body through his holy Spirit, and the Communion of his flesh is communicated to us spiritually through the benefit of his flesh in Heaven.

We be not consubstantial with Christ, but joyned to him by his holy spirit.

Young.

Well, I am contented, and do most humbly beseech your good Lordship, to pardon me of my great rudeness and imbecility, which I have here shewed.

Here ended the first Disputation, holden at Cambridge the 20th of June, 1549.

¶ The second Disputation holden at Cambridge the 24th day of June 1549.

Dr. Glin in his first Conclusion.

THe Mysteries of Faith (as Augustine witnesseth) may very profitably be believed, but they cannot be searched forth, as saith the Scripture, I believed, fore I spake; and he that confesseth me before m will I confeß before my Father which is in Heaven. We believe every man in his Art, therefore much more Chriſt our Saviour in his Word. Marvel not moſt honourable Lords and worſhipful Doctors that I ſpeak thus now, for once you your ſelves ſpake the ſame. But peradventure ſome will ſay, Believe not every ſpirit. I anſwer, Charity believeth all things, but not in all things. If thoſe things which I ſhall utter be convinced as falſe, I ſhall deſire you to take them as not ſpoken at all. But theſe are the words of truth, Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my body; Chriſt ſpake them, therefore I dare not ſay, This bread is my body, for ſo Chriſt ſaid not, Chriſt ſaid thus, This is my body, and therefore I, but duſt and aſhes, yea a worm before him, dare not ſay, this is a figure of his body; Heaven and Earth, ſaith he, ſhall paß, but my Word ſhall not paß. Whatſoever our old Father Adam called every creature, that is his name to this day; the new Adam Chriſt Jeſus ſaid, This is my body, and is it not ſo? He never ſaid, This is a figure of my body, nor Eat you this figure or ſign of my body. And therefore when the Paſchal Lamb was ſet before him, he ſaid not, this is my body. Wherefore if at the day of Judgment Chriſt ſhould ſay to me, Why haſt thou believed that this is my body? I would anſwer him, becauſe thou haſt ſo called it. I believed it not to be a figure, becauſe thou ſaidſt not that it was a figure. Other reaſons to avouch I know not. Of the word it ſelf I contend not, but the thing it ſelf I defend, for we muſt ſpeak regularly. Thus Chriſt, thus the Apoſtles, thus all the ancient Fathers have ſpoken, our Fathers had but only figures and ſhadows; but the Church of God hath the truth it ſelf with the ſigns. Tertullian ſaith, one figure containeth not another; but Melchizedech was a figure; Ergo, this is the body. The Sacraments of the Jews were ſigns and tokens; but ours be both the ſigns and the thing ſignified alſo. Luther himſelf confeſſed, That the body was preſent with the bread, and could not deny it. Oecolampadius took it for a figure only. Chryſoſtome demanding wherefore Chriſt gave his body before his paſſion, rather than at any other time; anſwereth, That he might tie the truth to the figure, ſaying, Take, eat, this is my body, not a figure of my body. And the ſame Chryſoſtome ſaith again, If it were but bare bread, or but a figure, wherefore ſhould his Diſciples have been offended in eating a figure. Again, in his eighty third Homily upon Matthew, They are not any human works which he did work at his laſt Supper, he it is that worketh, he maketh perfect, we are his Miniſters, but it is he that ſanctifieth and changeth the elements of bread and wine into his body and bloud. Again, Doſt thou ſee bread and wine? Do they paſs into the Privy like other meats? God forbid, &c. Theophilus Alexandrinus upon theſe words of Mark the Evangeliſt, This is my body, ſaith, This which I give, and which you receive, is not only bread, or a figure of Chriſts body, but the truth it ſelf; for if it ſhould appear, as it is, in form of fleſh and bloud, we ſhould loath it, and therefore the Lord, condeſcending to our weakneſs, retaineth the forms of bread and wine, and yet converteth the ſame into the truth of his body and bloud. Theophylactus ſaith, the bread and the wine is the very body and bloud of Chriſt, and not a figure only. If you ſtand in ſuſpence of the Author, or approve him not, yet know you that he is counted and taken amongſt all the learned for a moſt faithful interpreter of Chryſoſtome; The bread (ſaith he) is tranſelementate, and tranſmuted into another ſubſtance than it was before. Auguſtine ſaith there was great heed taken in the Primitive Church, leſt any part of the Sacrament ſhould fall down to the ground, &c. Cyrillus ſaith, Leſt we ſhould abhor fleſh and bloud in the Sacrament of the Altar, God humbleth himſelf to our weakneſs, pouring and infuſing the force of life into it, and making it the very truth of his own bleſſed body and bloud. Damaſcene calleth it a Divine body, or a body deified. Origene, Irenæus, Euſebius, Hieronymus, with all the reſt of the ancient Catholick Fathers, are of the ſame opinion with me, all which to produce it were too long.

Mysteries may better

As Chriſt called not the bread a figure, ſo he ſpeaking figuratively at other times, called them not plain figures, though they were ſo.

The Sacraments of the Jews were ſigns of Chriſt to come; ours of Chriſt already come.

The declaration of Doctor Glin upon his ſecond Concluſion.

THe Sacrifice and offering up of Chriſts body in the Sacrament of the Altar (right honourable and worſhipful) I will defend even to the effuſion of bloud, as a thing conſonant to Scripture, whereof Paul ſpeaketh to the Hebrews. But perchance ſome will object, Chriſt offered up himſelf; Ergo, you ought not to offer him. I anſwer, yea, becauſe he offered himſelf, therefore I offer him, for except he had offered himſelf, I could not have offered him. But you will ſay, Chriſts death is ſufficient, and therefore you ought not to offer him again. I anſwer, ſo may we ſay, we need neither to faſt nor pray, for Chriſt hath done both ſufficiently for us. Again, you will object, if you offer him up again, you crucifie him anew. I anſwer not ſo, for many have offered him that have not crucified him, as Abraham, Iſaac, Moſes, the Levites, Anna, Samuel. We offer Chriſt, but not to the death, but in commemoration of his death, there being not only a commemoration thereof, but alſo the very preſence of Chriſts body and bloud. Irenæus ſaith, Chriſt counſelled his Diſciples to offer the firſt fruits of all their Goods to God, not that he needed any of them, but for that they ſhould not ſhew themſelves fruitleſs or ungrateful, and therefore Chriſt took the creature of bread, gave thanks, and ſaid, This is my body, and likewiſe the creature of the Cup, and confeſſed, ſaying, This is my bloud of the New Teſtament. Thus Chriſt hath taught a new kind of oblation, which the Church receiving from the Apoſtles, offereth to God throughout all the whole world, who only giveth unto us all kind of food, and the firſt fruits of his gracious gifts in the New Teſtament, whereof Malachy thus ſaith, I have no pleaſure in you, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, I will not receive any ſacrifices at your hands, becauſe my name is glorified amongſt the Nations from the Eaſt to the Weſt, ſaith the Lord, and in every place is incenſe and pure ſacrifice offered to my Name.

But here it may be objected, Chriſt is the only ſacrifice for ſin, and without him there is no more. I anſwer, notwithſtanding we have this Commandment, Do this in remembrance of me, and although I deny not that it is a commemoration, yet I deny that it is an only commemoration; I deny his abſence, and I affirm his preſence.

Chriſt hath offered himſelf; Ergo no man ought to offer him.

Chriſt only true ſacrifice for ſin, and without him there is no more.

Here endeth the Declaration of Dr. Glin.

Maſter Perne.

WHereas you ſay (moſt reverend Maſter Doctor) in your propoſition, I believed, and therefore I ſpake, and we believe, and therefore do ſpeak, our Conſciences ſuggeſting the ſame unto us; and again, that Myſteries are not to be ſearched, and the like; it ſeemeth you go about to reſtrain the ſearching of holy Scriptures, whereas Chriſt ſaith Scrutamini Scripturas, Search the Scriptures. Moreover, you have cited the Fathers confuſedly, and without order; you left Tranſubſtantiation, and endeavour your ſelf to prove the real preſence in the Sacrament, whereas we deny nothing leſs than his corporal preſence, or the abſence of his ſubſtance in the bread.

The Papiſts reſtrain the uſe of Scriptures.

Glin.

You inveigh wonderfully you know not againſt what; for neither I, nor yet Auguſtine do deny the ſearching of the Scriptures, but I ſaid out of Auguſtine, Myſteries are not to be ſearched; it is another thing to ſearch Myſteries, than it is to ſearch the Scriptures; whereas you require of me a regular order of citing the Doctors, I had not (as all men know) the liberty of time ſo to do; but if you deſire me ſo earneſtly to perform that, if time may be granted me, I will eaſily fulfil your requeſt.

Perne.

I pray you, let me ask you, what is a Sacrament?

Glin.

{KING Edw.6}

Glin.

A Sacrament is a viſible ſign of an inviſible grace.

Perne.

Auguſtine againſt Maximinus the Arian Biſhop, maketh this definition of a Sacrament. A Sacrament is a thing ſignifying one thing, and ſhewing another thing.

Glin.

I refuſe not his reaſon.

Perne.

What is the thing figured by the Sacrament?

Glin.

The thing figured is twofold, to wit, the thing contained and ſignified, and the thing ſignified and yet not contained. For there be three things contained, the true body of Chriſt, the myſtical body, and the fruit or benefit of the Sacrament.

Perne.

The forms and ſigns of bread nouriſh not; Ergo, ſomewhat elſe beſides the bare ſign of bread doth remain, which nouriſheth, that is the ſubſtance of bread; for in every Sacrament there is a ſimilitude between the ſign and the thing ſignified; but betwixt the body of Chriſt, and the form or kind of bread, there is no ſimilitude; Ergo, the nature of a Sacrament is taken away.

Glin.

I deny your Minor Mr. Doctor.

Perne.

The forms nouriſh not; but the body nouriſheth; Ergo, there is no ſimilitude betwixt them, and ſo is the nature of a Sacrament clean deſtroyed.

Glin.

It is ſufficient to ſimilitudes that the bread which was doth nouriſh; and yet certain Doctors do affirm, that the Forms do nouriſh miraculouſly.

Rocheſter.

Whoſoever taketh away all the ſimilitude of ſubſtances, conſequently he taketh away the Sacrament; for a ſimilitude is threefold, namely, of nutrition, of unity and converſion. But by a contrary ſimilitude, he is not changed into our ſubſtance, but we into his; for in nutrition this is the ſimilitude, that as our bloud nouriſheth our bodies, ſo the bloud of Chriſt doth nouriſh us, but after a wonderful manner, to wit, by turning us into himſelf.

Glin.

{Anno 1549} I have anſwered your reaſon (moſt reverend Father) in that I ſaid that the forms do nouriſh miraculouſly, as certain learned men do affirm.

Perne.

By what authority can you ſay that bread doth not remain?

Glin.

By authority of Chriſt, who ſaith, This is my body.

Perne.

By the ſame reaſon may we ſay that bread ſtill remaineth; for Saint Paul calleth it bread ſundry times in his Epiſtles.

Glin.

I deny not that it is bread, but that it is material bread; for Paul always addeth this Article (which) betokening (as all men hold) ſome chief thing.

Perne.

We are changed into a new creature.

Glin.

Not ſubſtantially, but actually.

Rocheſter.

This is that bread which came down from Heaven Ergo, it is not Chriſts body, for his body came not from Heaven.

Glin.

We may ſay that Chriſt, God and Man, came down from Heaven, for the unity of his perſon, or elſe for the mutual community of the ſame his two natures in one; for his human nature I know came not from Heaven. Chriſts body came not from heaven.

Rocheſter.

The bread is his human nature; but that human nature of his came not from Heaven; Ergo, neither the bread.

Glin.

It is true that the bread came not from Heaven as bread ſimply, but as celeſtial and heavenly bread. But I will anſwer to that, whereas you hold that the body of Chriſt came not from Heaven; I by the body and fleſh of Chriſt do underſtand whole Chriſt, neither ſeparating his ſoul, nor yet his Deity, although his Humanity is not turned into his Divinity by confuſion of ſubſtance, but is one by unity of both. Or elſe thus I may reaſon, the God of glory is crucified, and the Son of Mary created the World, &c.

Rocheſter.

So it is. But he is called a Rock and a Vine, and ſo after your judgment he is both a material Rock, and alſo a material Vine. Chriſt is called a Rock, a Vine, but in a figure.

Glin.

The circumſtances there ſhew plainly that there is a trope or figure; for it followeth, I am the Vine, you are the branches; but here is no trope. For after theſe words, This is my body, he addeth, which is given for you.

Rocheſter.

Your judgment herein is very groſs, and far diſcrepant from the truth. The judgment of the Papiſts very groſs.

Glin.

If my judgment in this be groſs (moſt revered Father) then are all the ancient Fathers as groſs in judgment as I in this point, and the Catholick Church alſo.

Perne.

Shew us one place, or one Doctor, who ſaith that it remaineth not bread after the Conſecration.

Glin.

I wonder that you are not aſhamed to ask that of me; for have you not had almoſt infinite places and Doctors alledged to you in my former declarations, proving as much as you requeſt at my hands?

Perne.

Chriſt took bread, and gave bread. He took bread, he brake bread; ergo, it is bread.

Glin.

I have anſwered often hereunto, and I grant it is bread, but not only, or material.

Perne.

A Sacrament conſiſteth of a double matter. Irenæus affirmeth that a Sacrament conſiſteth of a double matter, of an earthly matter, and of a heavenly; ergo, the bread remaineth.

Glin.

Irenæus in that place by the earthly matter, meaneth the Humanity of Chriſt, and by the heavenly matter the Deity of Chriſt.

Rocheſter.

The Humanity and the Divinity of Chriſt make not a Sacrament, which conſiſteth of a viſible and an inviſible nature; and I deny that Irenæus can be ſo underſtood: Therefore we deſire the learned Auditory to ſearch Irenæus at home, as opportunity will ſerve for this matter.

Glin.

I wiſh them ſo to do alſo with all my heart.

Here Maſter Grindal beginneth to diſpute.

Grindal.

Grindal replieth. WHereas you ſay (worſhipful Mr. Doctor) that we ſpeak not now as ſometimes we thought and judged in this matter, peradventure you alſo judge not ſo now all things as you have done heretofore. But what we have once been it forceth not, God reſpecteth no mans perſon. And whereas you ſay, that you dare not contrary to Chriſt call it a ſign or a figure, Auguſtine notwithſtanding dareth to call it a figure, and Tertullian likewiſe, with many more.

Aug. Tertul with many more call it a figure.

Glin.

True it is, but they called it not a ſign or a figure only; but prove you, if you can, that after the Conſecration remaineth any other ſubſtance than the real body of Chriſt.

Grindal.

What the forms of bread and wine do nouriſh. If the forms do nouriſh, as you contend, they nouriſh the natural and humane body, for they be both as one, and are nouriſhed alike.

Glin.

Your reaſon is meer phyſical, and therefore to be rejected in matters of faith; but I grant they nouriſh, but miraculouſly.

Grindal.

If you grant that the forms do nouriſh, then you grant that bread remaineth.

Glin.

I ſaid even now that it is true, but the nature of it is changed, and that miraculouſly.

Grindal.

It remaineth bread and wine after the Conſecration. If it be the real and ſubſtantial body of Chriſt, becauſe Chriſt ſaid, This is my body; ergo, becauſe the Lord ſaid, I will not drink of the fruit of the Vine, and Paul calleth it bread after the Conſecration, it is therefore bread and wine.

Glin.

How it is called bread, and in what reſpect. Truly Sir, You muſt bring better Arguments, or elſe you will prove nothing for your purpoſe. For to your reaſons thus I anſwer, Chryſoſtome ſaith, Chriſt did drink of the bloud, but whether this ſentence, I will not drink of the fruit of the Vine, be ſpoken of the bloud, it is not certain. And truly Eraſmus denieth that it is to be found in all the whole Scripture, that it is called bread after the Conſecration. Or elſe thus I may anſwer you. Even as it is called bread for the form and kind, and accidents which remain; ſo for the form and ſimilitude which it hath, it may be called the fruit of the Vine, after the Conſecration. And whereas Chryſoſtome ſaith, That the fruit of the Vine is nothing elſe but Wine; Ergo, Chriſt gave them Wine, and drank Wine himſelf alſo, and not bloud.

Chriſt calleth it wine not bloud. {Ann. 1549}

Glin.

Chriſt ſaid twice, I will not drink of the fruit of the Vine; once at the eating of the Paſchal Lamb (as Luke ſaith) and then was it Wine indeed: And again, after the Conſecration of his body and bloud he ſaid the like, and then it was not Wine, which methink I can prove by the plain words of Luke, if we compare him with Matth. For if it were Wine as they both affirm, then the words of Chriſt cannot well ſtand, becauſe firſt (as Luke ſheweth) he ſaid at his legal Supper, I will not drink of the fruit of this Vine, &c. And again in Matthew, after the Conſecration of his body and bloud, he drank; it followeth therefore, that that which he drank was not Wine by nature, for then muſt Chriſt needs be a lyer, which were blaſphemy to ſay.

Rocheſter.

Two places aſſoiled. Auguſtine doth thus reconcile thoſe places, ſaying, it is ſpoken by a figure which we call Hyſteron proteron.

Glin.

I know that Auguſtine ſaith ſo; but methink that which I have ſaid ſeemeth to be the true meaning of the places.

Rocheſter.

Auguſtine ſeeketh no ſtarting holes, nor yet any indirect ſhifts to obſcure the truth.

Glin.

Say your Fatherhood what you will of Auguſtine, I think not ſo.

Grindal.

In theſe words, This is my body, is a Trope. This Cup is the New Teſtament in my bloud; but here is a Trope; Ergo, in theſe words of Chriſt, This is my body, is a Trope alſo.

Glin.

I deny your Argument; for whereas Luke ſaith this Cup, Matthew ſaith, this is my Bloud, and therefore as Auguſtine

{KING Ed. 6.} guſtine ſaith, places that be dark are to be expounded by other that be light.

Rocheſter.

All of your ſide deny that Chriſt ever uſed any Trope in the inſtituting of Sacraments.

Glin.

For my part I hold no opinion but the truth, whereof you your ſelf alſo do pretend the like.

Rocheſter.

A queſtion wherein conſiſteth the ſtrength of the Sacrament.

What underſtand you by this word (hoc, this) and in what words ſtandeth the force or ſtrength of the Sacrament? In this Pronoun (Hoc, this) or in this Verb (Eſt, is) — elſe in this whole ſentence, This is my Body?

Glin.

It is not made the true body except all the words be ſpoken, as in Baptiſm, I baptize thee in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. For neither doth Baptiſm conſiſt in this word Ego, I, or in baptiſe, or in this word, Te, thee; or in theſe words, In nomine, In the Name, &c. but in all the words ſpoken in order.

Grindal.

To eat the Body of Chriſt a figurative ſpeech.

If to eat the Body of Chriſt be a figurative ſpeech, as Auguſtine ſaith it is, ergo, then theſe words, This is my Body, is a figurative ſpeech alſo.

Glin.

It is a figurative ſpeech, becauſe we eat not the Body of Chriſt after the ſame manner that we do other meats, &c.

Grindal.

Cyprian explained.

Cyprian underſtandeth this of thoſe that come unworthily, and make no difference of the Lords Body, ſpeaking of the dijudication of the Sacraments, and not of the Body of Chriſt.

Glin.

Truly he ſpeaketh of the true Body of Chriſt.

Rocheſter.

They receive unworthily who neither judg themſelves, nor yet Sacraments, taking them as other common bread.

Grindal.

Auguſtine upon the Thirty third Pſalm ſaith, Chriſt bare himſelf in his own hands after a ſort, not indeed or truly, &c.

Glin.

You omit many other things which Auguſtine ſaith, and I confeſs that he carried himſelf in his own hands after a ſort, but Auguſtine delivereth this unto us as a great miracle. And you know it was no great miracle to carry a figure of his Body in his hands. And whereas you ſay that Chriſt carried himſelf after a ſort in his own hands. For Chriſt in the viſible figure bore himſelf inviſibly.

Grindal.

Tertullian calleth it a figure, Ergo, it is ſo.

Glin.

It is, as I have ſaid, a figure, but not a figure only. But hear what Tertullian ſaith, he took bread and made it his Body, ſaying, This is my Body, &c.

Grindal.

Hear what Chryſoſtome ſaith upon Matthew, Homil. 11. ſuper Cap. 5. If Veſſels ſanctified to holy uſes, &c. Chryſ. ſuper Mat. hom. 11 cap. 5.

Glin.

That works is received not as Chryſoſtomes, but ſome mans elſe as you know; or thus I anſwer, It is not the true Body in proper and viſible form.

Here Mr. Geſt Diſputed.

THE Bread is not changed before the Conſecration; Ergo, not after it neither.

Glin.

I deny your Argument, Mr. Geſt.

Geſt.

Chriſt gave earthly bread, Ergo, there is no Tranſubſtantiation.

Glin.

I deny your Antecedent.

Geſt.

That which Chriſt took he bleſſed, that which he bleſſed he brake, what he brake he gave; Ergo, he receiving earthly bread gave the ſame bread.

Glin.

Your order in reaſoning ſtandeth not; for by the ſame reaſon may you gather, that God took a rib of man, and thereof built a rib and brought it unto Adam; Ergo, what he received he brought; but he received a rib, Ergo, brought a rib.

Geſt.

How is the Body of Chriſt in Heaven, and how in the Sacrament, whether circumſcriptively or definitively?

Glin.

The Body of Chriſt is in Heaven circumſcriptively, but not in the Sacrament. The Angels alſo are contained definitively. But I have learned that the Body of Chriſt is in the Sacrament, but not locally, nor circumſcriptively, but after an unſpeakable manner unknown to man.

Rocheſter.

Ah, know you not?

Glin.

Neither in other myſteries of Faith do we know the mean how, although this may partly be proved by reaſon. For as my ſoul is wholly in my head, and wholly in my foot, and wholly in my finger, and ſo in other parts of my body; and as there is one voice or ſound which all men hearing do underſtand; ſo the Body of Chriſt being one and the ſame is wholly in the Altar, and in many places elſe. For if God could do this in my ſoul, how much more in his own Body?

Rocheſter.

{Ann. 1549}

Rocheſter.

I beſeech you ſhew us what difference is betwixt theſe two, to be in a place circumſcriptively and definitively.

Glin.

Your Lordſhip knoweth very well: but yet if any would know the difference, let him read Auguſt. ad Voluſianum, & ad Dardanum, &c.

Geſt.

The bread not changed

If the Bread be changed, it is made the Body of Chriſt; but that is not ſo; Ergo, it is not changed.

Glin.

I deny your Minor.

Geſt.

It is not generate or begot: Ergo, it is not the Body.

Glin.

That followeth not; as though to be made and to be generate or begot were all one thing; or as though there were no other mutation than a generation, and ſo you impugn a thing that you know not. But what call you the generation?

Geſt.

The generation is the production of the accidents.

Glin.

A new definition of a new Philoſopher.

Geſt.

That which he took he bleſſed; that which he bleſſed he brake, and gave it unto them: Ergo, &c.

Glin.

Chriſt took bread, brake bread, and gave his Body, that is, the ſubſtance of his Body: ſaying, This is my Body.

Geſt.

The bread is not changed into the Blood of Chriſt: Ergo, not into his Body neither.

Glin.

I deny your Antecedent.

Geſt.

The Maſter of the Sentences ſaith it.

Glin.

You underſtand him not; for the bread is changed into the Body of Chriſt by the power of Gods word.

Rocheſter.

s of ub- ation.

Ye dream of a real preſence of Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, by the force of the words ſpoken; which the Holy Scripture doth impugn.

Glin.

We ſay that not only by the power of the word, but alſo by the ſpirit and ſecret vertue in the words it is brought to paſs; for there is no power in one word alone, as before in Baptiſm, but in all the words duly prolated according to the cuſtom of the ancient Catholick Church. {KING Edw.

Geſt.

If there were any Tranſubſtantiation, the accidents ſhould not remain ſtill, for they have no matter whereto they may lean or cleave; but the accidents remain not themſelves alone; Ergo, &c.

Glin.

I confeſs accidents cannot ſtand themſelves alone by their own nature without a ſubject, but by the power of God they may, not after the opinion of Philoſophers, but of the Scriptures; although I could ſhew out of the Scriptures the accidents to have been without the ſubject; as in Geneſis, the light was made without a ſubject, whereas the ſubject of the light was made the fourth day after, as Baſil beareth me record. If there were Tranſubſtantiation there ſhould remain no accidents.

Here Maſter Pilkington Diſputed.

Pilkington.

THIS one thing I deſire of you, moſt worſhipful Mr. Doctor, that you will anſwer me with like brevity as I ſhall propound. And thus I reaſon: the Body of Chriſt that was broken on the Croſs is a full ſatisfaction for the ſins of the whole world; but the Sacrament is not the ſatisfaction of the whole world; Ergo, the Sacrament is not the Body of Chriſt.

Glin.

I deny your Argument.

Pilkington.

It is a Syllogiſm.

Glin.

It is not ſo; for there be four termines. Touching this word Sacrament it is manifold; but thus I anſwer. If you take the Sacrament for the matter of the Sacrament, that is, the Body of Chriſt, then is your Minor Propoſition true, and the matter of the Sacrament is the ſatisfaction for the ſins of the whole world, but if you take the Sacrament for the ſign, which we call a Sacrament, then is your Minor Propoſition falſe.

Pilkington.

The Body of Chriſt hath ſatisfied for the ſins of the whole world; but the Sacrament hath not ſatisfied; Ergo, the Sacrament is not the Body of Chriſt.

Glin.

I deny your Minor, underſtanding the Sacrament for the matter of the Sacrament.

Pilkington.

The Sacrament only profiteth him that receiveth it; but many were ſaved before the inſtitution of the Sacrament was begun; Ergo, the Sacrament is not the Body of Chriſt.

Glin.

If you mean of the bare ſign, only it profiteth nothing; but if you mean the thing ſignified, then what is ſpoken of the Body of Chriſt is ſpoken alſo of the thing of the Sacrament it ſelf.

Pilking-

Pilkington.

Tranſubſtantiation is not a Sacrament; but that which I mean is a Sacrament; Ergo, that which I mean is not tranſubſtantiated.

Glin.

I mean not that Tranſubſtantiation is a Sacrament, neither do I ſay that the Sacrament is tranſubſtantiate, but the bread.

Pilkington.

The Body of Chriſt is reſiant in Heaven, and the Body of Chriſt is in the Sacrament; Ergo, the Sacrament is in Heaven.

Glin.

A goodly reaſon forſooth; but I anſwer, he is after one ſort in Heaven, and after another ſort in the Sacrament; for in heaven he is locally, in the Sacrament not ſo; in heaven viſibly and circumſpectively, but in the Sacrament inviſibly and Sacramentally.

Rocheſter.

Saint Auguſtine ſaith, Take away the ſpaces from the bodies and they ſhall be no where, and that which is no where is not at all; ſo whileſt you take away the ſpaces and dimenſions from the Body of Chriſt in the Sacrament, you bring to paſs that it is not there at all.

Glin.

In that place Auguſtine ſpeaketh of natural bodies, not of ſupernatural; otherwiſe I could deny that Chriſt had a true body, when he entred in to his Diſciples, the Gates being ſhut.

Rocheſter.

Of the Gates being ſhut a divers and doubtful meaning may be gathered; for it may be he entred in before the Gates were ſhut, and afterward opened them being ſhut, &c.

Glin.

Then it could be no miracle; but the Evangeliſts and all ſound Interpreters ſay and affirm this to be a miracle of our Saviour Chriſt.

Rocheſter.

Whether Chriſt entred in miraculouſly, the Gates being ſhut, or elſe open, the Scripture ſetteth not down.

Glin.

As Chriſt (the womb of the Virgin being ſhut up) was born into the world without violation of her pure virginity, or apertion of her womb (for ſo he might have been polluted) ſo entred he through the doors to his Diſciples miraculouſly.

Pilkington.

In the Body of Chriſt which was given for us there are no accidents of bread; but in the Sacrament there be accidents of bread; Ergo, in the Sacrament there is not the Body of Chriſt.

Glin.

In the matter of the Sacrament, that is, in the Body of Chriſt, are no accidents of bread, but accidents are the very Sacrament it ſelf.

Pilkington.

I beſeech you, what do we eat, the ſubſtance or the accidents?

Glin.

Both as when we eat wholeſome and unwholeſome meats together, ſo we eat the ſubſtance of Chriſts body, and yet not without the accidents of bread.

Pilkington.

I prove that the accidents are eaten, for whatſoever entreth in by the mouth, goeth into the Privie; but the accidents go in by the mouth, Ergo, into the Privie.

Glin.

This ſentence, Whatſoever entereth in by the mouth, &c. is not meant of all kind of meats, as not of that which Chriſt eat after his Reſurrection.

Pilkington.

You ſhall not eat his Body which you ſee.

Glin.

That is, not after that manner as you ſee it now, not after the ſame viſible form.

Pilkington.

Whereſoever Chriſt is, there be his Miniſters alſo; (for ſo he promiſed) But Chriſt as you hold is in the Sacrament, Ergo, his Miniſters are there alſo.

Where Chriſt is, there be his Miniſters.

Glin.

To be with Chriſt is ſpoken divers ways, as in heart, in mind and place, and ſometimes both; or to be with Chriſt is to miniſter unto him, and to do his will; &c.

The third Diſputation holden at Cambridge as before.

Maſter Perne.

CHRIST at his laſt Supper took bread, brake bread, diſtributed bread; Ergo, not his body, but a Sacrament of his body; for the bones of Chriſt could no man break, as witneſſeth the Prophet ſaying, Os non comminuetis ex eo, that is, You ſhall not break a bone of him. This cup is the cup of the New Teſtament in my blood. In this ſentence there is a Trope by their own confeſſion; wherefore there is in the other alſo, This is my Body; for the holy Scripture is a perfect rule not only of doing, but alſo of ſpeaking. Paul calleth it bread three times, Ergo, it is bread, &c. And whereas they urge ſo much this Pronoun (illum) it is not in the Greek Canon which hath Panem, bread, not Panem illum, that bread. There was no Tranſubſtantiation in the Manna; Ergo, nor in the Sacrament; for there is this particle, eſt, if that can prove Tranſubſtantiation, as they ſuppoſe. And if Manna were a figure, ſay they, then this is not. This myſtery or Sacrament we hold to be true bread, and true meat. Manna gave life unto them, as this doth unto us; yet was it but a figure. In every Sacrament there ought to be a certain analogy, both of the intern and extern thing of the Sacrament, as Auguſtine ſaith, writing to Bonifacius; but betwixt the forms of Bread and Wine, and the Body of Chriſt there is no analogy at all, Ergo, they make not a ſacrament. As of many grains, &c. This ſimilitude of Paul is ſpoken of the ſubſtance of bread, not of the form thereof, otherwiſe Paul ſhould in vain compare us to bread. As in Baptiſm

There ought to be a certain analogy in every Sacrament between the thing that ſignifieth, and the thing that is ſignified.

Anno 1549.

tiſm there is material water; ſo in the Sacrament of the Euchariſt is material bread. Dionyſius called the Sacrament of Chriſts body no otherwiſe than bread. Euſebius in Eccleſiaſtica Hiſtoria doth the ſame. Tertullian, Lib. 4. againſt Marcion, ſaith thus, He gave his Body, that is, ſaith he, a figure or type of his body. Cyprian ſaith, in his laſt Supper he gave bread and wine, and his body upon the Croſs. The ſame Cyprian, Epiſt. 6. Lib. 1. and Epiſt. 3. Lib. 2. ſaith, Chriſt drank wine at his laſt Supper, becauſe he would root out the hereſie of certain who only uſed water in the miniſtration thereof. Chryſoſtome Hom. 13. upon Matthew ſaith, That only bread remaineth, &c. Theodoretus ſaith in his firſt Dialogue, bread remaineth ſtill in his firſt nature as before. Auguſtine ſaith, The bread doth not loſe his firſt nature after the conſecration, but receiveth another quality, whereby it differeth from common bread. The ſame Auguſtine, Lib. 3. againſt Maximinus ſaith, Sacraments are figures, being one thing indeed, and ſhewing forth another thing; he ſpeaketh of no Tranſubſtantiation here. Again, writing to Bonifacius he ſaith, The Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt is the Body of Chriſt, and ſo is the Sacrament of Wine alſo, &c. The Sacraments of the old and new Law are all one in ſubſtance of matter, notwithſtanding they be divers in ſigns: which Sacraments why ſhould they not be one, when as they ſignifie all one thing? The body of Chriſt when it was on the earth was not in heaven; ſo now it being in heaven is not on the earth. Whereby it may appear that Tranſubſtantiation is a moſt blaſphemous, ſacrilegious and damnable error, and a moſt vain, unſavoury, and Devilliſh Papiſtical invention, defended and maintained only by the Papiſts, the profeſſed and ſworn enemies of all truth. Thoſe who impugn the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation are no new upſtarts, as the enemies of the truth the Papiſts bear the world in hand. But contrarily thoſe who maintain this Devilliſh Doctrine are new ſprung up Cockatrices, as Manicheus, Eutiches, and others. Gelaſius ſaith, the Sacraments which we receive are Divine things; yet ceaſe they not to be bread and wine in nature. Out of this puddle of Tranſubſtantiation hath ſprung up adoration of the Sacrament, and inducing men to believe that Chriſt hath many bodies.

Cyprian, Ep. 6. li. 1. Epiſ. 3. li. 2.

Auguſt. 1. contra Maximinum.

Tranſubſtantiation a moſt blaſphemous error.

The Declaration of the ſaid Maſter Perne in the ſecond concluſion.

Matthew, Mark, Luke, and the Apoſtle Paul, call it a commemoration or remembrance of Chriſts body and blood, and Paul to the Hebrews ſaith, By one only oblation once offered are we made perfect to eternal ſalvation, &c. By him therefore do we offer up the ſacrifice of laud and praiſe to God, that is the fruit of the lips, &c. It is called the Euchariſt, becauſe we offer to God praiſe and thankſgiving, with devout minds; and it is called the cup of thankſgiving, becauſe we give thanks to God thereby alſo. You ſhall preach forth the Lords death, &c. That is, you ſhall give thanks and be mindful of his death, &c. Give your bodies a quick and living ſacrifice, &c. The ſacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving ſhall honour me, &c. Chryſoſtome ſaith, The wiſe men offered three kinds of ſacrifices, Gold, Frankincenſe and Myrrh; ſo we do alſo, namely Vertue, Prayer, and Almeſdeeds: Theſe be the ſacrifices wherewith Chriſt is pleaſed. And Auguſtine ſaith there are no other ſacrifices than Prayer, Praiſe, and Thankſgiving, &c. Chryſoſtome, Homil. 46. upon John ſaith, To be converted or turned into Chriſt, is to be made partaker of his body and blood.

Why it is called the Euchariſt.

No other Sacrifice, but only praiſe and thankſgiving.

There diſputed againſt him Maſter Parker, Maſter Pollard, Maſter Vaviſor, and Maſter Young.

Parker.

CHRIST, whoſe words are to be believed, ſaid, This is my Body; he ſaid not, this bread is my body, or with this bread, or under this bread, or by this bread, but ſaid plainly, This is my Body. And this he proved by theſe reaſons: Firſt, for that it was prefigured before. Secondly, for that it was promiſed. Thirdly, for that it was given. The tranſubſtantiation of the bread was prefigured by the Manna which came down from heaven; all that bread was heavenly, and without any earthly matter or ſubſtance annexed. Secondly, it was promiſed in thoſe words of Chriſt, The bread that I will give is my fleſh, &c. Thirdly, it was given by Chriſt, and exhibited in his laſt Supper, ſaying, Take, eat, this is my Body.

Three vain reaſons to prove the bread to be tranſubſtantiate.

KING Edw. 6.

Here they were forced to break off through want of time, yet Parker replied thus againſt Doctor Perne.

WE give thee thanks moſt holy Father, that thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent and haſt revealed them to babes; for pride is the root of all hereſies whatſoever. And on the other ſide, to acknowledg our own infirmity and imperfection is the firſt ſtep to the true underſtanding of the truth. Neſtorius the Heretick affirmed, that there were two Perſons in Chriſt, one that was man, another that was God; therefore he ſaid that in the Euchariſt was contained true fleſh, but only of his pure manhood. Againſt him did the Council of Epheſus conclude, ſaying, That there was the real fleſh of the Son of God, &c. this he proved by the words of Chriſt, My fleſh is meat indeed: and what fleſh that is, he teacheth upon the ſixth of John, That is, quoth he, the fleſh united to the Deity, and quickned by the Holy Ghoſt, &c. Now that that fleſh is in the Sacrament, it is plain by Hilar. l. 8. de Trinitate; he proved the ſame alſo out of Chryſoſtome, Homil. 45. upon John, We are one body with him, members of his fleſh, and bones of his bones, &c. Again in the ſame Homily, We are joyned to his fleſh, not only by faith and love, but alſo in very deed and truly. And again, it pleaſed me to become your brother, and by the ſame things wherein I was joyned to you, have I given my ſelf again unto you, &c.

Hilarius li. 8. de Trinitate.

Chryſoſt. ho. 45.

Perne.

I grant unto you that Chriſt is in the Sacrament truly, wholly, and verily, after a certain property and manner: I deny not his preſence, but his real and corporal preſence I utterly deny; for doubtleſs his true and natural body is in heaven, and not in the Sacrament: notwithſtanding he dwelleth with us, and in us, after a certain unity. And alſo in the ſixth Chapter of John he ſpeaketh not of the fleſh of Chriſt crucfied, &c.

Chriſt is in the Sacrament really after a ſort.

Parker.

The fleſh of Chriſt, as it is in the Sacrament, is quick, and giveth life; Ergo, his real and ſubſtantial fleſh is in the Sacrament.

How Chriſts fleſh giveth life.

Perne.

The fleſh of Chriſt in that it is united unto the Deity, doth vivifie, and giveth life, but not otherwiſe.

Rocheſter.

Chriſt dwelleth in us by faith, and by faith we receive Chriſt both God and man, both in ſpirit and fleſh; that is, this Sacramental eating is the mean and way whereby we attain to the ſpiritual eating, and indeed for the ſtrengthening of us to the eating of this ſpiritual food was this Sacrament ordained. And theſe words, This is my Body, are meant thus, By grace it is my true body, but not my fleſhly body, as ſome of you ſuppoſe.

How theſe words, This is my Body, are meant.

Parker.

We are joyned to Chriſt, not only by faith, but alſo in very deed, Ergo, &c.

There is a unity between man and woman yet no Tranſubſtantiation of either.

Rocheſter.

We are joyned to Chriſt, that is, we are made partakers of his fleſh and of immortality. And ſo in like caſe is there a union between man and woman; yet is there no tranſubſtantiation of either, or both, &c.

Pollard.

The Sacrament is not bare bread, and nothing elſe, only becauſe it is called bread ſo often in the Scriptures, and that

I prove

{KING Ed. 6.} I prove by three reaſons. Firſt, it is called bread becauſe of the ſimilitude. Secondly, becauſe of the mutation. Thirdly, for the matter whereof it is made and compact, as the Angels are called men, the Holy Ghoſt a Tongue, the Rod of Aaron a Serpent, and ſuch like. The words of Chriſt do teach the ſame thing, as appeareth in the healing of the woman of Canaans Daughter, Jairus Son, and many others, &c. Ergo, &c. Then he proved againſt Rocheſter, that ſomewhat elſe was in the Sacrament beſides power and grace, by this reaſon, The evil receive the Body of Chriſt, as is plain out of Auguſtine, Homil. 21. de verbis domini; but the evil and wicked receive not the vertue, or grace; Ergo, there is not only grace and vertue in the Sacrament.

Rocheſter.

The evil receive not the Lord in the Sacrament. The evil do not receive the Lord in the Sacrament, but the Sacrament of the Lord, as Judas; who in deed ate not the true Body of the Lord.

Pollard.

In the Sacrament be three things, to wit, an outward ſign, the matter of the Sacrament, and the fruit of the ſame: the evil receive the outward ſign, and the ſubject of the Sacrament, but not the fruit of the Sacrament: Ergo, there is ſomewhat elſe in the Sacrament than only Grace. Alſo every Sacrament ought to have a certain ſimilitude with the matter of the Sacrament; but the material bread hath no ſuch ſimilitude with the Body of Chriſt, which is the matter of the Sacrament: Ergo, Material bread is not a Sacrament.

Perne.

I deny your Minor: for material bread doth ſo nouriſh the body, as the fleſh of Chriſt doth the ſoul.

Here he being requeſted gave place to others.

Mr. Vaviſor.

THrough the ſhortneſs of time I am ſo conſtrained, that neither I can ſpeak without loſs of my reputation, nor yet hold my peace without offence to God. For in ſpeaking (as I do) without great premeditation before this honourable, worſhipful, and learned Audience, I ſhall but ſhew forth my childiſhneſs herein, and if I ſhould hold my peace, I might be thought to betray the truth of Gods cauſe. And therefore whileſt I can neither ſpeak for the brevity of time, nor yet hold my peace, Gods truth being in controverſie, I have determined, (although with the impairing of my good name) to render a reaſon of my faith, which if I cannot afford probably in words, yet will I not fault in ſaying nothing at all. For it ſeemeth better that I be eſteemed altogether fooliſh and unlearned amongſt ſo many grave learned Fathers and Doctors, than to forſake the juſt defence of the Truth, which every good Chriſtian man throughout the world hath ever holden inviolable. For whoſo forſaketh the manifeſt known truth, had never any true faith therein. Which thing that I may

Incertainty amongſt the Doctors overpaſs in Berengarius, Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, and many others, who are certainly known to be at no leſs variance amongſt themſelves, than uncertain of their faith what to believe. Zuinglius writeth thus of himſelf: Although this thing which I mean to entreat of doth like me very well, yet notwithſtanding I dare define nothing, but only ſhew my poor judgment abroad to others, that if it pleaſe the Lord, others may be thereby inſtructed by the Spirit of God, which teacheth all good things. In vain do I ſpend many words; you ſee plainly he dare not define any thing certainly, but doubteth whether it pleaſe God or not. Oecolampadius writing to a certain Brother of his, ſaith thus, Peace be with thee. As far as I can conjecture out of the learned Fathers, the words, Joh. 6. and, This is my Body, be figurative locutions, &c. You ſee hereby how uncertain they be of their opinions; they lean not to the Scriptures, to Doctors, nor yet to the Truth, but to ſuppoſals and conjectures: Who therefore hereafter will cleave unto them? But now I come to your Oration, whoſe beginning pleaſeth me very well, and whoſe progreſs therein offended me not, but in the end you concluded in ſuch ſort, that you left the whole matter to me, as it were confirming my parts by the ſame. And herein you framed a ſyllogiſm after this manner: What Chriſt took, that he bleſſed; what he bleſſed, that he brake; what he brake, that he gave: Ergo, what he received he gave, &c. Whereto I anſwer with a like ſyllogiſm out of Geneſis; God took a rib out of Adams ſide; what he took he built; what he built he brought; what he brought he gave to Adam to be his wife; but he took a rib, Ergo, he gave a rib to Adam to wife, &c. Alſo in your ſaid Oration you ſhoot much at thoſe words of Paul where he calleth it bread ſo often, &c. But the Scripture in another place calleth it water, when indeed it was wine; a rod when it was a plain ſerpent. {Ann. 1549}

An unfavory compact for.

Rocheſter.

You have pretended great zeal and words enough, but what pith or ſubſtance your reaſons will afford we ſhall ſee hereafter.

Vaviſor.

Aug. ſuper Pſal. 98. Chriſt gave the ſame fleſh to us which he received of the Virgin; but he took true and natural fleſh of her: Ergo, he gave us true and natural fleſh. My Major I prove by Auguſtine upon the 98 Pſalm.

Rocheſter.

Mr. Vaviſor, you are in a wrong Box; for the place maketh altogether for maintenance of adoration, if it make for any thing.

Vaviſor.

I know it very well, and therefore I alledg it as the ground of my reaſon. Theſe be Auguſtines words, Chriſt of the earth received earth, and of the fleſh of Mary he received fleſh; acknowledg his ſubſtance therefore.

Rocheſter.

I acknowledg it.

Vaviſor.

And in the very ſame fleſh he walked here upon the earth; acknowledg his ſubſtance.

Rocheſter.

I acknowledg it.

Vaviſor.

And the very ſame fleſh he gave us to eat; acknowledg his ſubſtance.

Rocheſter.

I acknowledg not his real ſubſtance to be there, but the property of his ſubſtance.

Vaviſor.

Then Vaviſor recited the place, to the end he might prove that his real ſubſtance ought to be acknowledged as well in the laſt place, as in the firſt and ſecond; affirming it out of St. Auguſtine, who ſaith thus, The Diſciples of Chriſt approaching the Lords Table, by faith drank the ſame blood which the tormentors moſt cruelly ſpilt, &c. but the tormentors ſpilt no figure of blood: Ergo, &c. This place will not permit the other ſo to be illuded.

Rocheſter.

It is no illuſion, good Mr. Vaviſor, but ſurely you would move a Saint with your impertinent reaſons.

Vaviſor.

I beſeech your Fatherhood to pardon my rudeneſs, for ſurely I cannot otherwiſe ſpeak without breach of conſcience.

Perne.

That place of Auguſtine is to be underſtood of a ſpiritual kind of eating.

Vaviſor.

I demand whether the faithful may receive ſpiritually, ſo as they need not to receive Sacramentally.

Perne.

They may.

Vaviſor.

Then thus to you: to the ſpiritual eating there is no need to come to the Lords Table, for ſo it is the meat of the ſoul, not of the teeth; but the faithful come to the Lords Table; Ergo, that place is to be underſtood of a Sacramental eating. And again, Auguſtine ſaith that he carried himſelf in his hands.

Rocheſter.

{Ann. 1549}

Rochester.

Augustine sheweth a little after what he meaneth thereby, where he saith, he carried himself in his own hands after a certain sort or manner.

Vaviſor.

True it is, that after one manner he sat at the Table, and after another manner was in the Sacrament.

Master Young here disputeth against Perne as followeth.

Young.

I Understand the meaning of this word Proprietas, propriety, well enough; for in Hilary and Eusebius it signifieth not the vertue or power of any substance or being, but rather a natural being or substance.

Rochester.

I commend your great diligence in searching of Authors, but in Divinity the matter standeth not so; for the propriety of essence in the Deity is the very essence, and whatsoever is in God is God.

Young.

True it is (most reverend Father) that this word Proprietas, propriety, in Hilary in his eighth Book de Trinitate, entreating there of the Divinity of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is so meant and taken; but the same Hilary almost in the same place speaketh of our communion and unity with Christ, &c. Tertullian also writing of the Resurrection of the flesh, affirmeth that the flesh of our Saviour is that whereof our soul is allied to God, that is, it which causeth that our souls are joyned to him, but our flesh is made clean, that the soul may be purged; our flesh is anointed, that the soul may be made holy, the flesh is sealed, that the soul may be comforted; the flesh is shadowed with the imposition of the hands, that our soul may be lightened with the glory of the Spirit; Our flesh is clothed with a body and blood, that the soul may be fed and nourished of God.

Rochester.

When our bodies be fed with the Body and Blood of Christ.

The flesh indeed is fed with the Body and the Blood of the Lord, when our bodies by mortification are made like to his body. And our body is nourished, when the vertue and power of the Body of Christ doth feed us. The same Tertullian is not afraid to call it flesh and blood, but he meaneth a figure of the same.

Young.

Then by your leave it should follow by good consequence, that where any mortification is, there must needs be a Sacramental communion, which cannot be; Ergo, &c

Here ended the third and last Disputation holden at Cambridge, 1549.

Answerers and Disputers in those Disputations at Cambridge.

This Disputation continued three days. In the first did answer Dr. Madew: against whom disputed Dr. Glin, Mr. Langdale, Mr. Segewick, Mr. Young.

In the second Disputation did answer Dr. Glin: Against whom disputed Mr. Grindal, Mr. Perne, Mr. Gest, Mr. Pilkington.

In the third Disputation answered Mr. Perne: Against whom disputed one Mr. Parker, (not Dr. Matthew Parker) Mr. Pollard, Mr. Vaviſor, Mr. Young.

At length the Disputations ended, the Bishop of Rochester, Dr. Nicolas Ridley, after the manner of Schools, made this determination upon the foresaid Conclusions, as here followeth.

The Determination of Dr. Nicolas Ridley, Bishop of Rochester, upon the Conclusions above prefixed.

The determination of Dr. Nicolas Ridley upon the disputation.

THERE hath been an ancient custom amongst you, that after Disputations had in your common Schools there should be some determination made of the matters so disputed and debated, especially touching Christian Religion. Becaufe therefore it hath seemed good unto these worshipful Assistants joyned with me in Commission from the Kings Majesty, that I should perform the same at this time; I will by your favourable patience declare, both what I do think and believe my self, and what also other ought to think of the same. Which thing I would that afterward ye did with diligence weigh and ponder, every man at home severally by himself.

{KING Edw. 6}

The principal grounds or rather head-springs of this matter are specially five.

Five principal grounds to take away Transubstantiation.

The first is the authority, majesty, and verity of Holy Scripture.

The second is the most certain testimonies of the ancient Catholick Fathers, who after my judgment do sufficiently declare this matter.

The third is the definition of a Sacrament.

The fourth is the abominable Heresie of Eutiches, that may ensue of Transubstantion.

The fifth is the most sure belief of the Article of our Faith: He ascended into Heaven.

The first Ground.

Transubstantiation against the Scriptures.

This Transubstantiation is clean against the words of the Scripture, and consent of the ancient Catholick Fathers. The Scripture saith, I will not drink hereafter of this fruit of the Vine, &c. Now the fruit of this Vine is Wine. And it is manifest that Christ spake these words after the Supper was finished, as it appeareth both in Matthew, Mark, and also in Luke, if they be well understood. There be not many places of Scripture that do confirm this thing, neither is it greatly material: For it is enough if there be any one plain testimony for the same. Neither ought it to be measured by the number of Scriptures, but by the authority, and by the verity of the same. And the Majesty of this verity is as ample in one short sentence of the Scripture as in a thousand.

Scripture to be measured not by number but by authority.

Moreover, Christ took bread, he gave bread. In the Acts Luke calleth it bread. So Paul calleth it bread after the sanctification. Both of them speak of breaking, which belongeth to the substance of bread, and in no wise to Christs Body, for the Scripture saith, Ye shall not break a bone of him. Exod.

Christ saith, Do ye this in my remembrance. St. Paul also saith, Do ye this in my remembrance. And again, As often as ye shall drink of this cup, do it in remembrance of me. 1 Cor. 11

And our Saviour Christ in the sixth of John, speaking against the Capernaites, saith, Labour for the meat that perisheth not. Joh. 6.

And when they asked, What shall we do that we may work the works of God? He answered them thus, This is the work of God, that ye believe in him whom he hath sent. Joh. 6.

You see how he exhorteth them to faith, For faith is that work of God. Again, This is the bread which came down from Heaven. But Christs Body came not down from Heaven. Moreover, He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him. My flesh (saith he) is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. When they heard this, they were offended. And whilest they were offended, he said unto them, What if ye shall see the Son of man ascend up where he was before? Whereby he went about to draw them from the gross and carnal eating. This Body, saith he, shall ascend up into heaven, meaning altogether, as St. Augustine saith. It is the spirit that quickneth, the flesh profiteth nothing. The words that I speak unto you, are spirit and life, and must be spiritually understood. These be the reasons which perswade me to incline to this sentence and judgment.

The second Ground.

The second ground against Transubstantiation.

Now my second ground against this Transubstantiation are the ancient Fathers a thousand years past. And so far off is it that they do confirm this opinion of Transubstantiation, that plain they seem unto me, both to think and to speak the contrary.

Dionysius in many places calleth it bread. The places are so manifest and plain, that it needeth not to recite them. Dionys. de Eccl. Hierar.

Ignatius to the Philadelphians saith, I beseech you Brethren cleave fast unto one Faith, and to one kind of Preaching, using together one manner of thanksgiving; for the flesh of the Lord Jesus is one, and his blood is one which was shed for us: There is also one bread broken for us, and one Cup of the whole Church. Ignatius ad Philadelph.

Irenæus

{KING Edw.6} Irenæus writeth thus; Even as the Bread that cometh of the Earth receiving Gods vocation is now no more common bread, but Sacramental Bread, consisting of two natures, Earthly and Heavenly, even so our bodies receiving the Eucharist, are now no more corruptible, having hope of the Resurrection.

Irenæus lib. 4. Cap. 34.

Tertullianus

Tertullian is very plain, for he calleth it a figure of his body, &c.

Chrysost. ad Cæsarium.

Chrysostom writeth to Cæsarius the Monk, albeit he be not received of divers, yet will I read the place to fasten it more deeply in your minds; for it seemeth to shew plainly the substance of bread to remain. The words are these.

Before the Bread is sanctified, we name it Bread: but by the grace of God sanctifying the same, through the ministry of the Priest, it is, delivered from the name of bread, and is counted worthy to bear the name of the Lords body, although the very substance of Bread notwithstanding do still remain therein, and now is taken not to be two bodies, but one body of the Son, &c.

Cyprian lib. 1. Epist. 6.

Cyprian saith, Bread is made of many Grains. And is that Natural Bread, and made of Wheat? Yea it is so indeed.

Theodoretus.

The Book of Theodoret in Greek was lately printed at Rome, which if it had not been his, it should not have been set forth there, especially seeing it is directly against Transubstantiation; For he saith plainly, that bread still remaineth after the sanctification.

Gelasius in Epist. de duabus naturis in Christo.

Gelasius also is very plain in this manner, The Sacrament (saith he) which we receive of the body and blood of Christ, is a Divine matter: By reason whereof we are made partakers by the same of the Divine Nature, and yet it ceaseth not still to be the substance of Bread and Wine. And certes, the representation and similitude of the body and blood of Christ be celebrated in the action of the misteries, &c.

Lyra. lib. cap. 8. Bertram.

After this he recited certain places out of Augustine and Cyrill which were not noted.

Isichus also confesseth that it is Bread.

Also the judgment of Bertram in this matter is very plain and manifest. And thus much for the second ground.

The third Ground.

The third ground. Cyprian. Three things in a Sacrament. 1. Unity.

The third ground is the nature of the Sacrament, which consisteth of three things, that is, Unity, Nutrition, and Conversion.

As touching Unity, Cyprian thus writeth; Even as of many grains is made one Bread, so are we one mystical Body of Christ. Wherefore Bread must still needs remain, or else we destroy the nature of a Sacament.

2. Nutrition.

Also they that take away Nutrition, which cometh by Bread, do take away likewise the nature of a Sacrament. For as the body of Christ nourisheth the soul, even so doth Bread likewise nourish the body of man.

Therefore they that take away the grains or the union of the Grains in the Bread, and deny the Nutrition or Substance thereof, in my judgment are Sacramentaries: For they take away the similitude between the Bread and the body of Christ. For they which affirm Transubstantiation are indeed right Sacramentaries and Capernaits.

3. Conversion.

As touching Conversion (that like as the Bread which we receive is turned into our substance, so are we turned into Christs Body) Rabanus and Chrysostom are witnesses sufficient.

The fourth Ground.

4. Ground. The real presence in the Sacrament standeth not with the truth of Christs humanity.

They which say that Christ is carnally present in the Eucharist, do take from him the verity of mans nature. Eutiches granted the Divine nature in Christ, but his humane nature he denyed. So they that defend Transubstantiation ascribe that to the humane nature which only belongeth to the Divine nature.

The fifth Ground.

The fifth ground is the certain perswasion of this Article of Faith, He ascended into Heaven, and sitteth at the right hand, &c.

Augustine saith, The Lord is above, even to the end of the World: but yet the verity of the Lord is here also. For his Body wherein he rose again must needs be in one place, but his Verity is spread abroad every where. August. super Joan. tract. 30. tract. 50.

Also in another place he saith, Let the godly also receive that Sacrament, but let them not be careful (speaking there of the presence of his Body.) For as touching his Majesty, his Providence, his invisible and unspeakable Grace, these words are fulfilled which he spake, I am with you unto the end of the World. But according to the flesh which he took upon him, according to that which was born of the Virgin, was apprehended of the Jews, was fastened to a Tree, taken down again from the Cross, lapped in Linen Clothes, was buried and rose again, and appeared after his Resurrection, so you shall not have me always with you, and why? because that as concerning his flesh he was conversant with his Disciples forty days, and they accompanying him, seeing him, but not following him, he went up into Heaven, and is not here, for he sitteth at the right hand of his Father, and yet he is here, because he is not departed hence, as concerning the presence of his Divine Majesty. Mat. 28.

Mark and consider well what St. Augustine saith, He is ascended into Heaven, and is not here, saith he. Believe not them therefore which say that he is here still in the Earth.

Moreover, Doubt not (saith the same Augustine) but that Jesus Christ, as concerning the nature of his Manhood, is there from whence he shall come. And remember well and believe the profession of a Christian Man, that he arose from death, ascended into Heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of his Father, and from that place and none other (not from the Altars) shall he come to judge the quick and the dead, and he shall come as the Angel said, as he was seen to go into Heaven; that is to say, in the same form and substance, unto the which he gave immortality, but changed not Nature. After this form (meaning his Human Nature) we may think that it is every where. Aug. Epist. 57.

And in the same Epistle he saith, Take away from the bodies limitation of places, and they shall be no where; and because they are no where, they shall not be at all. August. ibid.

Vigilius saith, If the Word and the Flesh be both of one Nature, seeing that the Word is every where, why then is not the Flesh also every where? For when it was in Earth, then verily it was not in Heaven; and now when it is in Heaven, it is not surely in Earth. And it is so certain, that it is not in Earth, that as concerning the same we look for him from Heaven, whom, as concerning the Word, we believe to be with us in Earth. Vigilius contra Eutich. lib. 4.

Also the same Vigilius saith, Which things seeing they be so, the course of the Scripture must be searched of us, and many testimonies must be gathered, to shew plainly what a wickedness and sacriledge it is to refer those things to the property of the Divine Nature, which do only belong to the Nature of the Flesh: and contrariwise, to apply those things to the Nature of the Flesh, which do properly belong to the Divine Nature. Which thing the transubstantiators do, whilst they affirm Christs Body not to be contained in any one place, and ascribe that to his Humanity, which properly belongeth to his Divinity, as they do which will have Christs Body to be in no one certain place limited.

The Third Conclusion

Now in the later Conclusion concerning the Sacrifice, because it dependeth upon the first, I will in few words declare what I think. For if we did once agree in that, the whole controversie in the other would soon be at an end. Two things there be which do perswade me that this Conclusion is true; that is, certain places of the Scripture, and also certain testimonies of the Fathers. St. Paul saith, Hebrews the Ninth, Christ being become an high Priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect Tabernacle not made with hands, that is, not of this building, neither by the Blood of Goats and Calves, but by his own Blood, entred once into the Holy place, Hebr. 9. Sacrifice of Christs Body.

and obtained for us eternal Redemption, &c. And now in the end of the World he hath appeared once to put away ſin by the Sacrifice of himſelf.

And again, Chriſt was once offered to take away the ſins of many.

Heb. 10. Moreover he ſaith, With one Offering hath he made perfect for ever thoſe that are Sanctified.

Chriſt never offered but once. Theſe Scriptures do perſwade me to believe that there is no other Oblation of Chriſt (albeit I am not ignorant there are many Sacrifices) but that which was once made upon the Croſs.

In theſe three propoſitions againſt Bucer diſputed Mr. Segewick, Young, and Pern. Which Diſputations becauſe they are long here to be recited, I mind (the Lord willing) to reſerve them to ſome other convenient place. In the mean ſeaſon, becauſe great controverſie hath been and is yet amongſt the learned, and much effuſion of Chriſtian Blood about the words and meaning of the Sacrament; to the intent that the Verity thereof more openly may be explained, and all doubtful ſcruples diſcuſſed, it ſhall not be out of place to adjoyn to the former Diſcourſes of Peter Martyr, and of Dr. Ridley above-mentioned, another certain learned Treatiſe in form of a Dialogue, as appertaining to the ſame Argument, compiled (as it ſeemed) out of the tractations of Peter Martyr, and other Authors, by a certain learned and reverend perſon of this Realm; who, under the perſons of Cuſtom and Verity, manifeſtly layeth before our Eyes, and teacheth all Men not to meaſure Religion by Cuſtom, but to try Cuſtom by Truth and the Word of God; for elſe Cuſtom may ſoon deceive, but the Word of God abideth for ever.

CUSTOM. VERITY.

A Dialogue between Cuſtom and Verity. Cuſtom. I marvel much what madneſs is cropen into thoſe Mens hearts, which now adays are not aſhamed ſo violently to tread down the lively Word of God, yea and impudently to deny God himſelf.

Verity. God forbid there ſhould be any ſuch. Indeed I remember that the Romiſh Biſhop was wont to have the Bible for his footſtool, and ſo to tread down Gods Word evermore when he ſtood at his Maſs. But thanks be to God he is now detected, and his abominations be opened and blown throughout all the World. And I hear of no more that oppreſs Gods Word.

Cuſtom. No more ſay you? Yes doubtleſs there are an hundred thouſand more, and your part it is Verity to withſtand them. {KING Edw. 6}

Verity. As touching my part, you know it agreeth not with my nature to ſtand with fallſhood. But what are they? Diſcloſe them if you will have them reproved.

Cuſtom. What, are you ſo great a ſtranger in theſe quarters? Hear you not how that Men do daily ſpeak againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, denying it to be the real Body of Chriſt?

Verity. In good ſooth I have been a great while abroad, and returned but of late into this Country. Wherefore you muſt pardon me if my anſwer be to ſeek in ſuch queſtions. But go forth in your tale. You have been longer here, and are better acquainted than I. What ſay they more than this?

Cuſtom. Than this? Why, what can they poſſibly ſay more?

Verity. Yes, there are many things worſe than this: for this ſeemeth in ſome part to be tolerable.

Cuſtom. What? me thinketh you dally with me. Seemeth it tolerable to deny the Sacrament?

Verity. They deny it not, ſo much as I can gather by your words.

Cuſtom. Nay then fare you well: I perceive you will take their part.

Verity. I am not partial, but indifferent to all parties: For I never go further than the Truth.

Cuſtom. I can ſcarcely believe you. But what is more true than Chriſt, which is Truth it ſelf? Or who ever was ſo hardy before this time to charge Chriſt with a lie for ſaying theſe words: This is my Body? The words are evident and plain: There is in them not ſo much as one obſcure or dark Letter, there is no cauſe for any Man to cavil. And yet that notwithſtanding, whereas Chriſt himſelf affirmed it to be his Body, Men now adays are not aſhamed to ſay, Chriſt lied, it is not his Body. The Evangeliſts agree all in one, the old Writers ſtand of our ſide, the Univerſal and Catholick Church hath been in this mind theſe fifteen hundred years and more. And ſhall we think that Chriſt himſelf, his Evangeliſts, all the whole Catholick Church hath been ſo long deceived, and the truth now at length begotten and born in theſe days?

Mat. 26. Chriſts Words.

The Evangeliſts. The old Writers. The Catholick Church.

Verity. You have moved a matter of great force and weight, and whereto without many words I can make no full anſwer. Notwithſtanding becauſe you provoke me thereto, if you will give me licenſe, I will take part with them of whom you have made falſe report, for none of them ever reproved Chriſt of any lie. But contrariwiſe, they ſay, That many Men of late days, not underſtanding Chriſts Words, have builded and ſet up many fond lies upon his Name. Wherefore, firſt I will declare the meaning of theſe words, This is my Body, and next in what ſenſe the Church and the old Fathers have evermore taken them. Firſt therefore you ſhall underſtand, That Scripture is not ſo to be taken always as the Letter ſoundeth, but as the intent and purpoſe of the Holy Ghoſt was, by whom the Scripture was uttered. For if you follow the bare words, you will ſoon ſhake down and overthrow the greateſt part of the Chriſtian Faith. What is plainer than theſe words, Pater major me eſt, My Father is greater than I am? Of thoſe plain words ſprang up the Hereſie of the Arians, which denied Chriſt to be equal with his Father. What is more evident than this ſaying, I and my Father are both one? Thereof aroſe the Hereſie of them that denied three diſtinct perſons. They all had one ſoul and one heart, was ſpoken by the Apoſtle: yet had each of them a Soul and Heart peculiar to himſelf. They are now not two, but one fleſh, is ſpoken by the Man and his Wife; yet hath both the Man and the Wife his ſeveral Body. He is our very fleſh, ſaid Ruben by Joſeph his Brother, which notwithſtanding was not their real Fleſh. I am bread, ſaid Chriſt, yet was he Fleſh and no Bread. Chriſt was the ſtone, ſaith Paul, and was indeed no material Stone. Melchiſedech had neither father nor mother, and yet indeed he had both. Behold the Lamb of God, ſaith John Baptiſt by Chriſt, notwithſtanding Chriſt was a Man, and not a Lamb. Circumciſion was called the Covenant, whereas it was but a token of the Covenant. The Lamb named the Paſſover, and yet was it eaten in remembrance {KING Edw. 6} brance only of the Paſſover. Jacob raiſed up an Altar, and called it, being made but of lime ſtone, The mighty God of Iſrael. Moſes, when he had conquered the Amalekites, ſet up an Altar, and called it by the names of God, Jehova and Tetragramatum. We are all one loaf of bread, 1 Cor. 10. ſaith Paul, yet were they not thereby turned into a loaf of bread. Chriſt hanging upon the Croſs appointed S. John to his Mother, ſaying, Lo there is thy Son, and yet was he not her Son. So many as be baptized into Chriſt, ſaith Gal. 3. Rom. 6. Paul, have put on Chriſt, and ſo many as are baptized into Chriſt, are waſhed with the blood of Chriſt: Notwithſtanding no man took the Font water to be the natural blood of Chriſt. The cup is the New Teſtament, ſaith Paul, and yet is not the Cup indeed the very New Teſtament. You ſee therefore that it is not ſtrange, nor a thing unwont in the Scriptures, to call one thing by anothers name. So that you can no more of neceſſity inforce the changing of the {Anno 1550.} bread into Chriſts body in the Sacrament, becauſe the words be plain, This is my body, the Wives fleſh to be the natural and real body and fleſh of the husband, becauſe it is written, They are not two but one fleſh; or the Altar of ſtone to be very God, becauſe Moſes with evident and plain words pronounced it to be the mighty God of Iſrael. Notwithſtanding, if you will needs cleave to the letter, you make for me, and hinder your own cauſe. For thus I will reaſon, and uſe your own weapon againſt you. The Scripture calleth it bread. The Evangeliſts agree in the ſame. Paul nameth it ſo five times in one place; the holy Ghoſt may not be ſet to ſchool to learn to ſpeak. Wherefore I conclude by your own argument, that we ought not only to ſay, but alſo to believe that in the Sacrament there remaineth bread.

Cuſtom. Me thinketh your anſwer is reaſonable, yet can I not be ſatisfied. Declare you therefore more at large, what moveth you to think this of the Sacrament. For I think you would not withſtand a doctrine ſo long holden and taught, unleſs you were inforced by ſome ſtrong and likely reaſons.

The meaning of Chriſts words expounded.

Verity. Firſt, In examining the words of Chriſt, I get me to the meaning and purpoſe for which they were ſpoken. And in this behalf I ſee that Chriſt meant to have his death and paſſion kept in remembrance. For men of themſelves be and evermore were forgetful of the benefits of God. And therefore it was behooveful that they ſhould be admoniſhed and ſtirred up with ſome viſible and outward tokens, as with the Paſsover Lamb, the Brazen Serpent, and othe like. For the Braſen Serpent was a token, that when the Jews were ſtinged and wounded with Serpents, God reſtored them and made them whole. The Paſſover Lamb was a memory of the great benefit of God, which, when he deſtroyed the Egyptians, ſaved the Jews, whoſe doors were ſprinkled with the blood of a Lamb. So likewiſe Chriſt left us a memorial and remembrance of his Death and Paſſion in outward tokens, that when the child ſhould demand of his father, what the breaking of the bread and drinking of the Cup meaneth, he might anſwer him, that like as the bread is broken, ſo Chriſt was broken and rent upon the Croſs, to redeem the ſoul of man. And likewiſe as wine foſtereth and comforteth the body, ſo doth the blood of Chriſt cheriſh and relieve the ſoul. And this do I gather by the words of Chriſt, and by the inſtitution and order of the Sacrament. For Chriſt charged the Apoſtles to do this in the remembrance of him. Whereupon thus I conclude.

Feſti- Nothing is done in remembrance of it ſelf.
ti- But the Sacrament is uſed in the remembrance of Chriſt.
no- Therefore the Sacrament is not Chriſt.

Feſti- Chriſt never devoured himſelf.
ti- Chriſt did eat the Sacrament with his Apoſtles.
ſon. Ergo, the Sacrament is not Chriſt himſelf.

Beſides this, I ſee that Chriſt ordained not his body, but a Sacrament of his body. A Sacrament (as S. Auſtin declareth) is an outward ſign of an inviſible Grace. His words are Sacramentum eſt inviſibilis gratiæ viſibile ſignum. Out of which words I gather two arguments. The firſt is this; the token of the body of Chriſt is not the thing tokned, wherefore they are not one. The ſecond is this.

Fe- One thing cannot be both viſible and inviſible.
ri- But the Sacrament is viſible, and the body of Chriſt inviſible.
ſon. Therefore they are not one.

Which thing S. Auguſtin openeth very well by theſe words, Aliud eſt Sacramentum, aliud res ſacramenti. Sacramentum eſt quod in corpus vadit: res autem Sacramenti eſt corpus Domini noſtri Jeſu Chriſti. Moreover, I remember that Chriſt miniſtred this Sacrament not to great and deep Philoſphers, but to a ſort of ignorant and unlearned Fiſhers, which notwithſtanding underſtood Chriſts meaning right well, and delivered it even as they took it at Chriſts hand, to the vulgar and lay people, and fully declared unto them the meaning thereof. But the lay nor ſcarſely the Apoſtles themſelves could underſtand what is meant by Tranſubſtantiation, Impanatign, Dimenſions, qualitates, quantitates, accidens ſine ſubjecto, terminus a quo, & terminus ad quem, per modum quanti. This is no learning for the unlearned and rude people, wherefore it is likely that Chriſt meant ſome other thing than hath been taught of late days. Furthermore, Chriſts body is food, not for the body but for the ſoul, and therefore it muſt be received with the inſtrument of the ſoul, which is Faith. For as ye receive ſuſtenance for your bodily mouth, ſo the food of your ſoul muſt be receeived by Faith, which is the mouth of the ſoul. And for that S. Auguſtin ſharply rebuketh them that think to eat Chriſt with their mouth, ſaying, Quid paras dentem & ventrem? crede & manducaſti. (i.) Whey makeſt thou ready thy tooth and thy belly? believe and thou haſt eaten Chriſt. Likewiſe ſpeaking of eating the ſelf ſame body, he ſaith to the Capernaites which took him groſly as men do now adays, The words that I ſpeak are ſpirit and life. It is the ſpirit that quickneth, the fleſh profiteth nothing. John 6. And S. Auguſtin upon theſe words of Chriſt ſaith, † Non hoc corpus quod videtis munducaturi eſtis, neque bibituri ſanguinem, quem effuſuri ſunt qui me crucifigent. Sacramentum aliquod vobis trado. Id ſpiritualiter acceptum vivificat: caro autem non prodeſt quicquam. Auguſt. Quinquagent. 2. Pſal. 98.

Chriſt is no food for the body, but for the ſoul.

Aug. in Joh. tract. 25.

† That is to ſay: You ſhall not eat the body which you ſee, and drink that blood which they ſhall ſhed that ſhall crucifie me. I have commended to you a Sacrament, underſtand it ſpiritually and it ſhall give you life: the fleſh profiteth nothing.

Cuſtom. What mean you by this ſpirit, and by ſpiritual eating? I pray you utter your mind more plainly. For I know well that Chriſt hath a body, and therefore muſt be eaten (as I think) with the mouth of the body. For the ſpirit and the ſoul as it hath no body and fleſh, ſo it hath no mouth.

Verity. You muſt underſtand, that a man is ſhaped of two parts, of the body and of the ſoul. And each of them hath his life and his death, his mouth, his teeth, his food, and abſtinence. For like as the body is nouriſhed and ſoſtred with bodily meats, or elſe cannot endure; ſo muſt the ſoul have his cheriſhing, otherwiſe it will decay and pine away. And therefore we do and may juſtly ſay that the Turks, Jews, and heathen be dead, becauſe they lack the lively food of the ſoul. But how then, or by what mean will you find the ſoul? Doubtleſs not by the inſtrument of the body but of the ſoul. For that which is received into the body, hath no paſſage from thence into the ſoul: For Chriſt ſaith, That whatſoever entreth into the belly, is conveyed into the draught. And whereas you ſay that the ſpirit hath no mouth, like as it hath no body or bones, you are deceived. For the ſpirit hath a mouth in his kind, or elſe how could a man eat and drink juſtice? For undoubtedly his bodily mouth is no fit inſtrument for it. Yet Chriſt ſaith, that he is bleſſed that hungreth and thirſteth for juſtice. If he hunger and thirſt for juſtice, belike he both eateth and drinketh it, for otherwiſe he neither abateth his hunger, nor quencheth his thirſt. Now if a man may eat and drink righteouſneſs with his ſpirit, no doubt his ſpirit hath a mouth. Whereof I will reaſon thus.

Matth. 5. What it is to hunger and eat righteouſneſs.

Argument.

Da- Of whatſoever ſort the mouth is, ſuch is his food.
ti- But the mouth of the ſpirit is ſpiritual, not bodily.
ſt. Therefore it receiveth Chriſts body ſpiritually not bodily.

And in like manner Chriſt, ſpeaking of the eating of his body, nameth himſelf the Bread, not for the body, but of Life, for the Soul, and ſaith, He that cometh to me ſhall not hunger, and he that believeth in me ſhall never thirſt. Wherefore whoſoever will be relieved by the body of Chriſt, muſt receive him as he will be received, with the inſtrument of Faith appointed thereunto, not with his teeth or mouth. And whereas I ſay that Chriſts Body muſt be received and taken with Faith, I mean not that you ſhall pluck down Chriſt from Heaven, and put him in your Faith, as in a viſible place; but that you muſt with your Faith riſe and ſpring up to him, and leaving this world dwell above in heaven, putting all your truſt, comfort, and conſolation in him, which ſuffered grievous bondage to ſet you at liberty and to make you free, creeping into his wounds, which were ſo cruelly pierced and dented for your ſake. So ſhall you feed on the Body of Chriſt, ſo ſhall you ſuck the Blood that was poured out and ſhed for you. This is the ſpiritual, the very true, the only eating of Chriſts Body. And therefore S. Gregory calleth it, Cibum mentis non ventris, (i. e.) The food of the mind, and not of the belly. And S. Cyprian ſaith likewiſe, Non acuimus dentem, nec ventrem paramus. i. e. We ſharpen not our tooth, nor prepare our belly.

Joh. 6. How Chriſts body is taken by Faith.

Gregory.

Cyprian.

Now to return to our former purpoſe, ſeeing it is plain that Chriſts body is meat for our ſpirit, and hath nothing to do with our body, I will gather thereof this reaſon. The Sacrament is bodily food and increaſeth the body; Ergo, the Sacrament is not the very body of Chriſt. That it nouriſheth the body it is evident; For Chriſt calleth it the fruit of the Vine, whoſe duty is to nouriſh. And for a proof, if you conſecrate a whole loaf, it will feed you ſo well as your table bread. And if a little Mouſe get an Hoſt, he will crave no more meat to his Dinner. But you will ſay theſe are worldly reaſons. What then if the old Fathers record the ſame? Irenæus ſaith, Quando mixtus calix, & fractus panis percipit verbum Dei, fit Euchariſtia corporis & ſanguinis Domini, ex quibus augetur & conſiſtit carnis noſtræ ſubſtantia. Beda witneſſeth the ſame by theſe words, Quia panis carnem confirmat, & vinum ſanguinem operatur in carne, hic ad corpus Chriſti myſtice, illud ad ſanguinem refertur. Wherefore as I ſaid before, ſeeing that Chriſts body is ſpiritual meat, and the bread of the Sacrament bodily, I may conclude that the Sacrament is not Chriſts body. Beſide this, where it was forbidden in the old Law that any man ſhould eat or drink Blood, the Apoſtles notwithſtanding took the Cup at Chriſts hands, and drank of it, and never ſtaggered, or ſhrank at the matter; whereby it may be gathered, that they took it for a miſtery, for a token, and a remembrance, far otherwiſe than it hath of late been taken.

Irenaus lib. 5. contra Valentinum. Beda ſupra Lucam. Chriſts body is ſpiritual meat.

Drinking mans blood againſt the Law.

Again, when the Sacrament was dealt, none of them all crouched down, and took it for his God, forgetting him that ſate there preſent before their eyes; but took it, and eat it, knowing that it was a Sacrament and remembrance of Chriſts Body. Yea, the old Councils commanded that no man ſhould kneel down at the time of the communion, fearing that it ſhould be an occaſion of Idolatry. And long after the Apoſtles time, as Tertullian writeth, Women were ſuffered to take it home with them, and lap it up in their Cheſts. And the Prieſts many times ſent it to ſick perſons by a Child, which no doubt would have given more reverence thereto, if they had taken it for their God. But a great while after, about 300 years agon, Honorius the Third, Biſhop of Rome took him and hanged him up, and cauſed men to kneel and crouch down, and all to begod him.

Kneeling to the Sacrament forbidden in old Councils.

The Sacrament carried home in Napkins.

Pope Honorius the third, firſt author of worſhipping the Sacrament. Anno 1220.

Furthermore, if the bread be turned and altered into the body of Chriſt, doubtleſs it is the greateſt miracle that ever God wrought. But the Apoſtles ſaw no miracle in it. Nazianzenus an old Writer, and Auguſtin intreating of all the miracles that are in the Scripture, number the Sacrament for none. As for the Apoſtles, it appeareth well that they had it for no marvel, for they never muſed at it, neither demanded how it might be; whereas in other things they evermore were full of queſtions. As touching S. Auguſtin, he not only over skipped it as no wonder, but by plain and expreſs words teſtifieth that there is no marvel in it. For ſpeaking of the Lords Supper, and of the other Sacraments, he ſaith theſe words, Hic Sacramenta honorem ut religioſa habere poſſunt, ſtuporem autem ut mira non poſſunt.* Moreover a little before the inſtitution of the Sacrament, Chriſt ſpake of his aſcenſion, ſaying, I leave the world: I tarry but a little while with you. Let not your hearts be troubled, becauſe I go from you, I tell you truth, it is for your profit that I go from you, for if I go not, the Spirit of comfort cannot come to you, Jo. 14. with many other like warnings of his departure. S. Stephen ſaw him ſitting at the right hand of his Father, and thought it a ſpecial revelation of God; but he never ſaid that he ſaw him at the Communion, or that he made him every day himſelf. And in the Acts of the Apoſtles S. Peter ſaith, That Chriſt muſt needs keep the heaven till all be ended. Eſaiah, Solomon, and S. Stephen ſay, That God dwelleth not in Temples made with mans hand. S. Paul wiſheth that he were diſſolved and dead, and were with Chriſt; not in the Altar doubtleſs where he might be daily, but in heaven. And to be brief, it is in our Credo, and we do conſtantly believe, that Chriſt is aſcended into heaven, and ſitteth at his Fathers right hand; and no promiſe have we that he will come jumping down at every Prieſts calling. Hereof I gather this reaſon.

* That is to ſay, Sacraments here may have their honour as things religious, but they are not to be wondred at as miracles.

Chriſts body cannot both be gone, and be here.
But he is gone, and hath left the world.
Therefore it is folly to ſeek him in the world.

Cuſtom. Fy, you be far deceived, I can in no wiſe brook theſe words. You ſhut up Chriſt too ſtraitly, and impriſon him in one corner of heaven, not ſuffering him to go at large. No doubtleſs, he hath deſerved more gentleneſs at your hand, than to be tyed up ſo ſhort.

Verity. I do neither lock up, neither Impriſon Chriſt in heaven, but according to the Scriptures declare that he hath choſen a Bleſſed place, and moſt worthy to receive his Majeſty; in which place whoſo is incloſed, thinketh not himſelf (as I ſuppoſe) to be a Priſoner: But if you take it for ſo hanious a thing that Chriſt ſhould ſit reſident in heaven in the glory of his Father, what think you of them that impriſon him in a little Box, yea and keep him in captivity ſo long, until he be mouldy and over-grown with vermine, and when he is paſt mens meat, be not contented to hang him till he ſtink, but will have him to a new execution, and burn him too? This is wonderful and extreme cruel impriſoning. But to return to the matter, we are certainly perſwaded by the word of God, that Chriſt the very Son of God vouchſafed to take upon him the body and ſhape of man, and that he walked and was converſant amongſt men in that ſame one, and not in many bodies, and that he ſuffered death, roſe again, and aſcended to heaven in the ſelf ſame body, and that he ſitteth at his Fathers right hand in his manhood, in the nature and ſubſtance of the ſaid one body. This is our belief, this is the very word of God. Wherefore they are far deceived, which leaving heaven will grope for Chriſts body upon the earth.

Cuſtom. Nay Sir, but I ſee now you are far out of the way. For Chriſt hath not ſo groſs and fleſhly a body as you think, but a ſpiritual and ghoſtly body, and therefore without repugnance it may be in many places at once.

Verity. You ſay right well, and do grant that Chriſts body is ſpiritual. But I pray you anſwer me by the way, can any other body than that which is ſpiritual be at one time in ſundry places?

Cuſtom. No truly.

Verity. Have we that ſelf ſame Sacrament that Chriſt gave to his diſciples, at his Maundy, or no?

Cuſtom. Doubtleſs we have the ſame.

Verity. When was Chriſts body ſpiritual? was it ſo even from his birth?

Cuſtom. No: For doubtleſs before he aroſe from death his body was earthly, as other mens bodies are.

Verity. Well, but when gave Chriſt the Sacrament to his Diſciples? Before he roſe from death or after?

Cuſtom. You know your ſelf he gave it before his Reſurrection, the night before he ſuffered his Paſſion.

Verity.

{KING Edw.6} The Popes doctrine repugnant to it ſelf.

Verity. Why then me thinketh he gave the Sacrament at that time when his body was not ſpiritual.

Cuſtom. Even ſo.

Verity. And was every portion of the Sacrament dealt to the Apoſtles, and received they into their mouths the very real and ſubſtantial body of Chriſt?

Cuſtom. Yea doubtleſs.

Verity. Mark well what ye have ſaid, for you have granted me great repugnance. Firſt, you ſay, That no body being not ſpiritual can be in ſundry places at once. Then ſay you, That at the Maundy Chriſts body was not ſpiritual; and yet hold you, that he was there preſent viſibly before the Apoſtles eyes, and in each of their hands and mouths all at one time; which grants of yours are not agreeable. But I will gather a better and a more formal reaſon of your words in this ſort.

Fe- No body being real, natural, and organical, and not ſpiritual, can be in many places at once.
ri- Chriſts body in the Sacrament was in the Apoſtles hands and mouths at one time, which were many places.
ſon. Ergo, Chriſts body in the Sacrament was not a real, natural, and organical body, but ſpiritual.

The Papiſts though they be convicted, yet they will not believe.

Cuſtom. Indeed you have driven me into the ſtraits before I was ware of you; and I know not how I may eſcape your hands honeſtly. But the beſt refuge that I have is this, that I will not believe you.

Verity. I deſire you not to give credence to me, believe the word of God, yea believe your own belief; for they both witneſs againſt you, that Chriſts body is taken up into Heaven, and there ſhall remain until he come to judge.

Cuſtom. Tuſh, what ſpeak you of the word of God? there be many dark ſayings therein which every man cannot attain to.

Verity. I grant you there be certain obſcure places in the Scripture, yet not ſo obſcure but that a man with the grace of God may perceive; for it was written not for Angels, but for men. But, as I underſtand, Cuſtom meddleth but little with the Scripture. How ſay you by S. Auguſtine, S. Hierom, S. Ambroſe, what if they ſtand on our ſide?

Cuſtom meddleth but little with Scripture.

Cuſtom. No, no, I know them well enough

Verity. So well as you know them, for all old acquaintance, if they be called to witneſs, they will give evidence againſt you. For S. Auſtin commonly in every of his Books, but chiefly in an Epiſtle to his friend Dardanus, declareth that Chriſts body is placed in one room. I marvel you be not nearer of his Counſel. His words are theſe, Noli dubitare ibi nunc eſſe hominem Chriſtum Jeſum, unde venturus eſt. Memoriterque recole & fideliter crede Chriſtianam confeſſionem; quoniam reſurrexit, aſcendit in cœlum, ſedet a dextris Dei patris, nec aliunde quam inde venturus eſt, ad vivos mortuoſque judicandos. Et venturus eſt in eadem corporis ſubſtantia, cui immortalitatem dedit, naturam non abſtulit. Secundum hanc formam non eſt putandus ubique diffuſus. Cavendum enim eſt ne ira divinitatem aſtruamus hominis ut humanitatem mittamus Dei. i. Do not doubt the man Jeſus Chriſt to be there, from whence he ſhall come. And remember well, and faithfully believe the Chriſtian confeſſion, that he is riſen, aſcended into Heaven, ſitteth at the right hand of God the Father, and from thence he ſhall come and from no other place, to judge the quick and the dead. And ſhall come in the ſame ſubſtance of body, to the which he gave immortality, and took not the nature from it. After this form he is to be thought not to be diſperſed in all places; for we muſt beware ſo to defend his Divinity that we deſtry not his humanity. And in another place of the ſame Epiſtle, Una perſona Deus & homo; & utrumque eſt unus Chriſtus. Vbique per id quod Deus, in cœlo autem per id quod homo. Likewiſe upon the fourteenth Pſalm, Donec ſeculum finiatur ſurſum eſt Dominus: ſed etiam hic nobiſcum eſt veritas Domini. Corpus enim in quo reſurrexit in uno loco eſſe oportet; veritas autem ejus ubique diffuſa eſt. i. While the world ſhall laſt, the Lord is above, and alſo the verity of the Lord is with us. For the body wherein he roſe again muſt be in one place; but the verity of him is every where diſperſed. In like manner writeth Damaſus an old Biſhop of Rome in his Credo, Devictis mortis imperiis, cum ea carne in qua natus & paſſus eſt & reſurrexit, aſcendit in cœlum, manente eadem natura carnis in qua natus & paſſus eſt. S. Ambroſe writing upon the tenth Chapter of S. Luke recordeth the ſame, Ergo non ſupra terram, nec in terra, nec ſecundum terram quærere debemus Dominum, ſi volumus invenire. Non enim ſupra terram quæſivit qui ſtantem ad Dei dextram vidit. Maria quærebat in terra tangere Chriſtum & non potuit; Stephanus tetigit quia quærebat in cœlo. (i.) Wherefore neither above the earth, nor upon the earth, nor according to the earth we ought to ſeek the Lord, if we will find him; For he did not ſeek him above the earth, which did ſee him ſitting at the right hand of God. And Mary ſought upon the earth to touch Chriſt and could not, Stephen touched him becauſe he ſought him in Heaven. S. Hierom in an Epiſtle to Marcella proveth that the body of Chriſt muſt needs be contained in ſome place, for he ſaith, Veri Dei eſt ubique eſſe; veri hominis alicubi eſſe. i. The property of God is to be every where, the property of man is to be in one place. The ſame Hierom in another place calleth it a fooliſh thing to ſeek for him in a narrow place, or in a corner, which is the light of all the world; Stultum eſt eum parvo in loco vel abſcondito quærere, qui totius mundi eſt lumen. i. Fooliſhneſs it is, in a ſmall place or in a hid corner to ſeek him which is the light of the whole world. Origen ſaith likewiſe, Audiendi non ſunt qui Chriſtum demonſtrant in ædibus. i. They are not to be heard, which ſhew Chriſt in houſes. The ſame alſo recordeth Beda, writing upon theſe words of Chriſt; Now a little while ſhall you ſee me. He ſpeaketh in Chriſts perſon. Therefore (ſaith he) ſhall you ſee me but a little while after my reſurrection, becauſe I will not ſtill abide in the earth bodily, but in the manhood which I have taken will aſcend up to heaven. What needeth more words? All the old Fathers witneſs the ſame. You may by theſe ſoon judge the reſt. Now to return to the matter; ſeeing that the word of God in many and ſundry places, the Credo, and the abridgement of the Faith, ſeeing all the old Fathers do conſtantly agree in one, that the body of Chriſt is aſcended into heaven, and there remaineth at the right hand of the Father, and cannot be in more than in one place, I do conclude that the Sacrament is not the body of Chriſt; firſt, becauſe it is not in Heaven, neither ſitteth at the Fathers right hand; moreover, becauſe it is in an hundred thouſand Boxes, whereas Chriſts body filleth but one place. Furthermore, if the bread were turned into the body of Chriſt, then would it neceſſarily follow that ſinners and unpenitent perſons receive the body of Chriſt.

The Sacrament is not the real body of Chriſt, and why.

Cuſtom. Marry and ſo they do. For Paul ſaith plainly, that they receive the body of Chriſt to their own confuſion.

Verity. No not ſo. Theſe are not Pauls words, but he ſaith, Whoſo eateth of this Bread, and drinketh of this Cup unworthily, eateth and drinketh his own condemnation, not judging the body of the Lord. Here he calleth it in plain words bread. And although the Sacrament be very bread, yet doth the injury redound to the body of Chriſt. As if a man break the Kings Mace, or tread the Broad Seal under his foot, although he have broken and defaced nothing but Silver and Wax; yet is the injury the Kings, and the doer ſhall be taken as a Traitor. S. Ambroſe declareth the meaning of S. Paul by theſe words, Reus eſt corporis Domini, qui pœnas dabit mortis Chriſti, quoniam irritam fecit mortem Domini. The cauſe of the ordinance thereof was the remembrance of the death of Chriſt, which whoſo forgetteth, receiveth the Sacrament to their condemnation. That ſame witneſſeth S. Auguſtin; for the Sacrament, ſaith he, is an outward token of love and charity. For like as many grains of Corn are become one, peace of bread, even ſo they that receive it ought to be one. Then ſaith he, Myſterium pacis ac unitatis nobis Chriſtus in menſa ſua conſecravit. Qui accepit myſterium unitatis & non ſervat unitatem, non myſterium accipit pro ſe, ſed teſtimonium contra ſe. He that readeth the Goſpel wherein is declared the Paſſion and Death of Chriſt, and liveth contrary to the Goſpel, ſhall doubtleſs be the more guilty of the death of Chriſt, becauſe he heareth and readeth the word of God, and regardeth it not. In a certain countrey

The place of S. Pauls of receiving unworthily expounded.

the manner is, that when the Goſpel is read, the King ſhall ſtand up with a naked Sword in his hand, declaring thereby that he beareth his Sword in defence of the Goſpel. But if he himſelf oppreſſeth the Goſpel, he beareth the Sword againſt himſelf; for the Goſpel ſhall turn to his judgment and condemnation. So will Chriſt ſo much more extremly puniſh a man, which knowing himſelf to be wicked and without repentance, and therefore none of the flock of Chriſt, yet notwithſtanding will impudently creep into the company of Chriſtian men, and receive the Sacraments with them, as though he were one of the number. And this meant St. Paul by the unworhty receiving of a Sacrament of Chriſts body. . Wherefore a man may unworthily take the Sacrament, and be guilty of the death of Chriſt, although he receive not Chriſts body into his mouth, and chew it with his teeth. But what if I prove that every maſſing Prieſt is guily of the body and blood of Chriſt?

Cuſtom. I dare ſay you cannot prove it.

Verity. But if I do prove it, will you believe me?

Cuſtom. I may well enough, for it is impoſſible to do it.

Confeſſion. For Prieſts commonly are confeſſed before they go to Maſs, and how can they then take the Sacrament unworthily?

Verity. Indeed confeſſion, if it be diſcreetly uſed, is a laudable cuſtom, and to the unlearned man and feeble conſcience ſo good as a Sermon: But notwithſtanding becauſe it was never commanded of Chriſt, nor received of the Apoſtles, nor much ſpoken of by the old Doctors, it cannot make much for the due receiving of the Sacrament. But Ambroſius. how like ye theſe words of S. Ambroſe? Is indigne ſumit, qui aliter ſumit quam Chriſtus inſtituit. i. He taketh it unworthily, that taketh it otherwiſe than Chriſt ordained it.

Cuſtom. This liketh me very well. But what gather you of it?

Verity. This will I gather. The maſſing Prieſt taketh the Sacrament otherwiſe than Chriſt either commanded or taught. Ergo, he taketh it unworthily, and ſo conſequently to his condemnation.

Cuſtom. That is not ſo, for he doth altogether as Chriſt commanded him.

The Prieſt taketh the Sacrament not as Chriſt ordained, ergo, the Prieſt taketh it unworthily.

Verity. That ſhall appear. For Chriſt commanded it to be done in his remembrance; the Prieſt doth it in remembrance of dead men. Chriſt took bread, and left it bread; the Prieſt taketh bread and conjureth it away. Chriſt took bread and gave thanks; the Prieſt taketh bread and breatheth upon it. Chriſt took bread and brake it; the Prieſt taketh bread and hangeth it up. Chriſt took bread and dealt it to his Apoſtles; the Prieſt, becauſe he is an Apoſtle himſelf, taketh bread and eateth it every whit alone. Chriſt in a Sacrament gave his own body to be Difference between Chriſts ordinance and the Prieſts receiving. eaten in Faith; the Prieſt for lack of Faith receiveth accidents, and dimenſions. Chriſt gave a Sacrament to ſtrengthen mens Faith; the Prieſt giveth a ſacrifice to redeem mens ſouls. Chriſt gave it to be eaten; the Prieſt giveth it to be worſhipped. And to conclude, Chriſt gave bread; the Prieſt ſaith he giveth a God. Here is difference enough between Chriſt and the Prieſt. Yet moreover Chriſt at his Supper ſpake his words out and in a plain tongue; the Prieſt ſpeaketh nothing but Latin or Greek, which tongues he oft times perceiveth not, and much he whiſpereth leſt any poor man ſhould perhaps perceive him. So it cometh to paſs, that the Prieſt knoweth no more what he himſelf ſaith, than what he doth. Thus you may ſee that the Maſſing Prieſt receiveth the Sacrament of Chriſts body far otherwiſe than ever Chriſt minded, and ſo therefore unworthily and to his condemnation. Now if you think your ſelf ſatisfied, I will return to my former queſtion, and prove more at large, that Chriſts body cannot be eaten of the wicked, which thing muſt neceſſarily enſue if the bread were turned into the body of Chriſt. Chriſt in the ſixth of S. John, ſpeaking of the John 6. eating of his body, ſaith, He that eateth of this bread ſhall live for ever. Whereof I gather thus; But ſinful men take the Sacrament of their condemnation, and live not for ever; Ergo, in the Sacrament they receive not the body of Chriſt. Again, Chriſt ſaith, He that eateth me ſhall live for my ſake. Hereof I conclude thus, but impenitent perſons cannot live for Chriſts ſake. Moreover Chriſts body muſt be received, not with the mouth, as Gregory recordeth, ſaying, That it is eaten with the teeth of the ſoul, not of the body, as I have above more largely declared. But wicked and impenitent perſons lack Faith; wherefore they cannot eat the body of Chriſt. Again, Chriſts body cannot be divided from his ſpirit; but wicked men have not the ſpirit of God; Ergo, they have not Chriſts body. Hereunto agree all the old Writers, affirming conſtantly that the unfaithful be no meet veſſels to receive the body of Chriſt. S. Auguſtine ſaith, Auguſtinus. Qui non manet in Chriſto, & in quo non manet Chriſtus, proculdubio non manducat carnem Chriſti, nec bibit ejus ſanguinem, quamvis tantæ rei myſterium ad judicium ſuum manducet, ac bibat. And in the perſon of Chriſt he ſaith likewiſe, Qui non manet in me, & in quo ego non maneo, ne ſe dicat aut exiſtimat manducare corpus meum, aut ſanguinem meum bibere. Ambroſe avoweth the Ambroſius. ſame by theſe words, Qui diſcordat a Chriſto non manducat carnem ejus, nec bibit ſanguinem, etſi tantæ rei Sacramentum accipiat. In like manner writeth Proſper, Proſper. Qui diſcordat a Chriſto, nec carnem Chriſti edit, nec ſanguinem bibit, etſi tantæ rei Sacramentum ad judicium Aug. Sin. ſuæ præſumptionis quotidie accipiat. And therefore S. Auguſtin ſaith, Mali Sacramentum habent, rem autem Sacramenti non habent. Thus by the Word of God, by reaſon, and by the old Fathers it is plain, that ſinful men eat not the body of Chriſt, receive they the Sacrament never ſo oft. Which thing could not be, if in the Sacrament there remained nothing but the body of Chriſt.

The Sacrament called breaking of bread. The Sacrament in holy Scripture is named Fractio panis, the breaking of bread; which, to ſay the truth, were but a cold breaking, if there remained no bread to break, but certain phantaſies of white and round. Yet whereas they with words, croſſings, bleſſings, breathings, leapings, and much ado, can ſcarcely make one God, they have ſuch vertue in their fingers, that at one croſs they be able to make twenty Gods; for if they break the Sacrament, every Portion, yea, every mite muſt needs be a God. After the Apoſtles time there aroſe up Hereticks, which ſaid that Chriſt walking here amongſt men bodily upon the Earth, had no very body, but a thing like a body, and ſo therewith dimmed mens ſight. Againſt whom the old Fathers uſed theſe arguments; Chriſt encreaſed in growing, faſted, hungred, eat, wept, ſweat, was weary, and in concluſion died, and had all other properties of a very body; wherefore he had a body, I will uſe the ſame kind of reaſoning; It feedeth, it taſteth like bread, it looketh like bread, the little ſilly mouſe taketh it for bread, and to be ſhort, it hath all the properties and tokens of bread, Ergo, it is bread. The old Fathers when there remained any part of the Sacrament more than was ſpent at the Communion, they uſed to burn it, and of it there came aſhes. But there is nothing in the Sacrament that can turn to aſhes but only bread (for I think they burned not Chriſts body to aſhes;) Ergo, in the Sacrament there remaineth bread. Henry the Emperor, the ſixth of that name, was poyſoned in the Hoſt, and Victor the Biſhop of Rome in the Chalice. But poyſon cannot hang in Gods body and blood; wherefore there remaineth Bread and Wine. What needeth many words in a matter ſo evident? If you demand either Gods word, or the Doctors and the ancient Writers, or your reaſon, or your eyes, or noſe, or tongue, or fingers, or the Cat, or the Ape, or the Mouſe, all theſe agree in one, and anſwer together, There is bread. Wherefore if you reject ſo many and ſo conſtant witneſſes, and ſo well agreeing in their tale, ſpecially being ſuch as will lie for no mans pleaſure, I will appeal from you, and take you as no indifferent Judge. If all theſe witneſſes ſuffice you not, I will call the Sacrament it ſelf to record: it crieth unto you, and plainly doth advertiſe you, what you ſhould think of it: I am, it ſaith, grated with the teeth; I am conveyed into the belly; I periſh; I can endure no ſpace; I canker; I ſuffer green mould blew mould, red mould; I breed worms; I am kept in a Box for fear of Rats; if you leave me out all night, I ſhall be devoured before morning, for if the Mouſe get me I am gone; I am bread, I am no God; believe them not. Thus crieth the Sacrament daily, and beareth witneſs it ſelf.

Againſt Tranſubſtantiation. Reaſons proving bread in the Sacrament. The Sacrament giveth witneſs that it is bread.

Cuſtom. The Devil on ſuch like reaſons; and therefore I will never trouble my brains to make you anſwer; but if it be true that you have ſaid, why is the Sacrament ſo well of Chriſt himſelf, as of his Apoſtles, and the old Fathers, called the Body of Chriſt?

Verity. Becauſe it is no ſtrange thing in Scripture ſo to ſpeak, as I have declared before. But will you ſtand to St. Auguſtines arbitrement in the matter?

Cuſtom. To no Man ſooner.

The cauſe why the Scripture calleth the Sacrament the Body of Chriſt. Aug. ad Bonif. Epiſt.23

Verity. St. Auguſtine in an Epiſtle to his friend Bonifacius giveth a good cauſe why the Sacrament, although it be not the Body of Chriſt, is notwithſtanding called the Body of Chriſt, His words be theſe: Si Sacramenta quandam ſimilitudinem earum rerum quarum Sacramenta ſunt non haberent, omnino Sacramenta non eſſent. Ex hac autem ſimilitudine plerumque earum rerum nomina accipiunt. Ergo, ſecundum quendam modum Sacramentum corporis Chriſti corpus Chriſti eſt; Sacramentum ſanguinis Chriſti ſanguis Chriſti eſt. If Sacraments had not a certain ſimilitude of thoſe things whereof they be Sacraments, then were they no Sacraments. Of the which ſimilitude many times they take their name. Wherefore after a certain manner the Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt is the Body of Chriſt, and the Sacrament of the Blood of Chriſt is the Blood of Chriſt, &c. And upon the three and twentieth Pſalm he writeth likewiſe, Chriſtus quodammodo ſe ferebat in manibus ſuis, cum diceret, Hoc eſt corpus meum; Chriſt after a certain manner and faſhion, as it were, did bear himſelf in his own hand, when he ſaid, This is my Body. In manner (he ſaith) and after a faſhion, not in very deed. Again, when faithful Men receive the Sacrament, they think not of the Bread, nor mark the Wine, but they look further, and behold the very Body of Chriſt ſpread upon the Croſs, and his very Blood poured down for their ſakes. So in Baptiſm Men regard not greatly the Water, but account themſelves waſhed with the Blood of Chriſt. So ſaith St. Paul, Whatſoever we are that be Baptized, we are waſhed in the Blood of Chriſt. Wherefore to the faithful receivers you may ſay, That the Water of Baptiſm is the Blood of Chriſt, and the Bread and Wine the Body and Blood of Chriſt: for to them it is no leſs than if the natures were altered and changed. Which thing you may very well learn of Chryſoſtom, whoſe words are theſe: Myſteria omnia interioribus oculis conſideranda ſunt, hoc eſt, ſpiritualiter. Interiores autem oculi, poſtquam panem vident, creaturas tranſvolant, neque de illo pane a piſtore cocto cogitant, ſed de eo qui ſe dixit panem eſſe æternæ vitæ; All myſteries muſt be conſidered with inward Eyes, that is to ſay, Spiritually. But the inward Eyes when they ſee the Bread, they paſs over the Creatures, neither do they think of that Bread which is baked of the Baker, but of him which called himſelf the Bread of Eternal life. For theſe two cauſes the Bread and Wine are called the Body and Blood of Chriſt. Now I think you are ſatisfied concerning the meaning of theſe words: This is my Body.

Auguſt. in Pſal. 33.

Another cauſe why the Scripture calleth the Sacrament the Body of Chriſt.

Rom.6.

Chryſ. in Joh. Hom. 46.

Cuſtom. Yet one thing moveth me very much.

Verity. What is that?

Cuſtom ſtandeth upon authority and common voice.

Cuſtom. The Doctors and old Writers, Men inſpired with the Holy Ghoſt, have evermore been againſt your Doctrine; yea, and in theſe days the wiſeſt Men and beſt learned call you Hereticks, and your learning Hereſie.

The right meaning of the Doctors miſconſtrued of Cuſtom-keepers.

Verity. As touching the old Writers, I remember well they ſpeak reverently of the Sacraments, like as every Man ought to do; but whereas they deliver their mind with their right hand, you Cuſtom receive it with the left. For whereas they ſay, that it is the Body of Chriſt, and that it muſt be verily eaten, meaning that it doth effectually lay before the Eyes Chriſts Body, and that it is to the faithful Man no leſs than if it were Chriſt himſelf, and that Chriſt muſt be eaten in Faith, not torn nor rent with the Teeth: you ſay that howſoever it be taken, it is Chriſts Body, and that there is none other eating but with the mouth.

The Doctors how they call the Sacrament the Body of Chriſt, and why.

The words of the Doctors againſt the Popes Doctrine.

Orig. in Levit. Hom.

And that the Fathers meant no other thing than I have ſaid, it ſhall appear by their words. But as touching the learned and wiſe Men of theſe days, I cannot blame them if they call my Doctrine Hereſie; for they would condemn all ancient Writers of Hereſie, if they were now alive. But I will anſwer you to them anon. In the mean while mark you how well their learning agreeth. They ſay, you muſt follow the Letter, you muſt ſtick to the Letter. But Origines ſaith, Si ſecundum literam ſequaris id quod ſcriptum eſt (niſi manducaveritis carnem filii hominis, non erit vita in vobis) ea littera occidit, If ye follow after the Letter that which is written (unleſs ye ſhall eat the Fleſh of the Son of Man, there ſhall be no life in you) this Letter killeth. Auguſtine in the third Book De Doctrina Chriſtiana, Principio cavendum eſt ne figuratam dictionem ſecundum literam accipias. Ad hoc enim pertinet id quod ait Apoſtolus, littera occidit. Cum enim figurate dictum ſic accipitur tanquam proprie dictum ſit, carnaliter ſapitur; neque ulla animæ mors congruentius appellatur. i. Firſt thou muſt beware that thou take not a figurative ſpeech after the Letter. For thereto pertaineth that the Apoſtle ſaith, The Letter killeth. For when a thing is Spiritually meant, and the ſame is taken literally as properly ſpoken, that is a carnal taking. Neither can any other be called the killing of the Soul rather than that. And in the ſame Book he teacheth a Man to know the plain ſenſe from a Figure, ſaying thus: Si præceptiva loquutio eſt flagitium jubens, aut beneficentiam vetans, figura eſt: Niſi manducaveritis carnem filii hominis, & biberitis ejus ſanguinem, non erit vita in vobis. Flagitium videtur jubere; Ergo, Figura eſt præcipiens paſſioni Domini eſſe communicandum, & ſuaviter in memoria recondendum, quod pro nobis caro ejus crucifixa ſit. i. If the commanding ſpeech be ſuch as commandeth a thing wicked and horrible to be done, or a charitable thing to be undone, then this is a figurative ſpeech; Unleſs ye ſhall eat the Fleſh of the Son of Man, and ſhall drink his Blood, there ſhall be no life in you: Becauſe in this ſpeech he ſeemeth to command a wicked thing, it is therefore a figurative ſpeech, commanding that we ſhould communicate with the Paſſion of our Lord, and ſweetly to retain it in our remembrance. In like manner Chryſoſtom plucketh you from the plain Letter, and the bare words by this ſaying, Caro non prodeſt; hoc eſt, ſecundum ſpiritum verba mea intelligenda ſunt. Quia qui ſecundum carnem audit, nihil lucratur. Quid eſt autem carnaliter intelligere? Simpliciter ut res dicuntur, neque aliud quippiam cogitare. Non enim ita judicanda ſunt quæ videntur, ſed myſteria omnia interioribus oculis videnda ſunt, hoc eſt, ſpiritualiter. i. The Fleſh profiteth not; that is to ſay, my words muſt be taken and expounded after the Spirit. For he that heareth after the Fleſh gaineth nothing. Now what is it to underſtand carnally? To take things ſimply as they be ſpoken, and not to conſider any meaning further therein. For things muſt not be judged as they are ſeen, but all myſteries muſt be ſeen with inward Eyes, that is to ſay, ſpiritually. What is ſo hainous in theſe days, as to call the Sacrament the Token or the Remembrance of Chriſts Body? Yet did the old Writers in manner never call it other. Tertullian in the Fourth Book againſt the Marcioniſts, Chriſtus accepit panem, & corpus ſuum fecit, Hoc eſt corpus meum dicendo, id eſt, figura corporis mei. Chriſt took Bread and made it his Body, ſaying, This is my Body; that is to ſay, a Figure of my Body. Ambroſe upon the Eleventh to the Corinthians, Quia morte Domini liberati ſumus, hujus rei memores in edendo & potando, carnem & ſanguinem quæ pro nobis oblata ſunt ſignificamus; Becauſe we are delivered by the Lords death, in the remembrance of the ſame by eating and drinking we ſignifie the Body and Blood which were offered up for us. Chryſoſtom in the Eighty Third Homily upon the Goſpel of Matthew, Quando dicunt, unde patet Chriſtum immolatum fuiſſe? hæc adferentes eorum ora cenſuimus. Si enim mortuis Chriſtus non eſt, cujus Symbolum ac ſignum hoc ſacrificium eſt? When they object unto us, and ask, How know you that Chriſt was offered up? Then alledging theſe things we ſtop their mouths. For if Chriſt died not, then whoſe ſign or token is this Sacrifice? Auguſtine to Adimantus, Non dubitavit Chriſtus dicere, Hoc eſt corpus meum, cum daret ſignum corporis ſui. Chriſt doubted not to ſay, This is my Body, when he gave but a ſign of his Body. Auguſtine upon the Third Pſalm, Chriſtus adhibuit Judam ad convivium, in quo corporis & ſanguinis ſui figuram Diſcipulis ſuis commendavit & tradidit; Chriſt received Judas to the Supper, in the which he commended and delivered a Figure of his Body and Blood unto his Diſciples. Rabanus, de inſtitutione clericorum; Quia panis corpus confirmat, ideo ille corpus Chriſti congruenter nuncupatur. Vinum autem quia ſanguinem operatur in carne, ideo ad ſanguinem Chriſti refertur. Becauſe the Bread ſtrengtheth ſtrengthneth the Body, therefore it is aptly called Chriſts Body. And likewiſe the Wine, becauſe it increaſeth Blood in the Fleſh, it doth reſemble the Blood of Chriſt. Druthmarus Monachus in Matthæum, Vinum lætificat, & ſanguinem auget, & ideo non inconvenienter per hoc ſanguis Chriſti figuratur. Wine maketh glad the heart, and increaſeth blood; and therefore the blood of Chriſt is not unaptly ſignified thereby. Irenæus witneſſeth plainly, That in the Sacrament remaineth Bread and Wine, by theſe words, Quemadmodum terrenus panis percipiens vocationem Dei, jam non communis panis eſt, ſed Euchariſtia ex duabus rebus conſtans, terrena, & cæleſti; As the earthly Bread receiving the vocation of God, is now no common Bread, but the Euchariſt, conſiſting of two things, the one Earthly and the other Heavenly. Here he recordeth that there remaineth in the Sacrament an Earthly nature, which is either Bread or nothing. Gelaſius writing againſt Neſtorius avoweth the ſame, ſaying, In Euchariſtia non deſinit ſubſtantia panis, & natura vini. Etenim imago & ſimilitudo corporis & ſanguinis Domini in actione myſteriorum celebratur. i. In the Euchariſt the ſubſtance of Bread and nature of the Wine ceaſeth not to be: For the Image and ſimilitude of the Body and Blood of the Lord is celebrated in the action of the myſteries. Chryſoſtom in his twentieth Homily upon the Second Epiſtle to the Corinthians, preferreth a poor Man before the Sacrament, and calleth him the Body of Chriſt rather than the other. Whereof I may gather this reaſon:

Quod enim comedentibus ſuffeciſſet corpus, ut totius mundi fieret alimonia? Sed idcirco meminit Aſcenſionis filii hominis in cœlum, ut eos a corporali cogitatione avelleret.* The words that Chriſt here ſpeaketh, be not Carnal, but Spiritual. For what Body might have ſufficed for all that ſhould eat, to be a nouriſhment of the whole World? But therefore he maketh mention of the Aſcenſion of the Son of Man into Heaven, to the intent to pluck them away from that corporal cogitation. Aug. ad Marcel. In illis carnalibus victimis figuratio fuit carnis Chriſti, quam pro peccatis noſtris erat oblaturus, & ſanguinis quem erat effuſurus; in iſto autem Sacrificio gratiarum actio atque commemoratio eſt carnis Chriſti quam pro nobis obtulit, & ſanguinis, quem pro nobis effudit. In illo ergo ſacrificio, quid nobis ſit donandum figurate ſignificatur; In hoc autem ſacrificio quid nobis donatum ſit, evidenter oſtenditur. In illis ſacrificiis prænunciabatur filius Dei occidendus, in hoc pro impiis annunciatur occiſus. In thoſe carnal Oblations the Fleſh of Chriſt was figured, which he ſhould offer for our ſins, and the Blood which he ſhould beſtow for us; but in this Sacrifice is the giving of thanks and memorial of the Fleſh of Chriſt, which he hath offered for us, and of the Blood which he hath ſhed for us. In that Sacrifice therefore is ſignified figuratively what ſhould be given for us; in this Sacrifice what is given to us is evidently declared. In thoſe Sacrifices the Son of God was before preached to be ſlain; in this Sacrifice he is ſhewed to be ſlain already for the wicked.

Origenes in Matth.

Origines, upon Matthew expounding theſe words, Hoc eſt corpus meum, ſaith, Panis iſte quem Chriſtus corpus ſuum fatetur eſſe, verbum eſt nutritorium animarum, (id eſt) The Bread which Chriſt confeſſeth to be his Body, is a nutritive word of our Souls. Auguſtinus: Nulli aliquatenus dubitandum, unumquemque fidelium corporis & ſanguinis Domini tunc eſſe participem, quando in baptiſmate membrum efficitur Chriſti. Sacramenti quippe illius participatione ac beneficio non privabitur, quando in ſe hoc invenit quod Sacramentum ſignificat. No Man ought in any wiſe to doubt but that every faithful Man is then partaker of the Body and Blood of the Lord, when in Baptiſm he is made a member of Chriſt. For he ſhall not be deprived of the participation and benefit of that Sacrament, when he findeth in himſelf that thing which the Sacrament doth ſignifie. Ambroſius, Tanta eſt vis verbi, ut panis & vinum maneant quæ ſunt, & mutentur in aliud. Such is the force and ſtrength of the Word, that the Bread and Wine remain the ſame, as they were, and yet are changed into another thing. For it is not any longer common Bread, but it is turned into a Sacrament; yet notwithſtanding there remaineth Bread and Wine. Tertullian writing againſt an Heretick named Marcion, which taught that the Creatures of God, as Fleſh, Bread, and Wine, and ſuch like, were naught and uncleanly, Non abjecit Deus creaturam ſuam, ſed ea repræſentavit corpus ſuum; God hath not caſt away his Creature, but by it he hath repreſented his Body. Origines upon Leviticus, ſpeaking of the drinking of Chriſts Blood, ſaith, Non ſanguinem carnis expetimus, ſed ſanguinem verbi, We do not deſire the Blood of the Fleſh, but the Blood of the Word. Ambroſe called the Sacrament, Typum corporis Chriſti, and Baſilius Antitypum, which is as much as to ſay, as a token, a figure, a remembrance, and example of Chriſts Body. Origen upon the Fourteenth Chapter of Matthew, In iſto pane, quod eſt materiale ejicitur in ſeceſſum: id autem quod fit per verbum Dei pro fidei ratione prodeſt. In this Bread that thing which is material paſſeth through Mans body; but that which is made by the Word of God, by the means of Faith doth profit. And leſt perhaps you think that he ſpake thoſe words of our common Table-Bread, he concludeth the matter himſelf with theſe words, Hæc diximus de pane ſymbolico. Theſe things we have ſpoken of the Myſtical Bread. Auguſtinus contra adverſarium Legis & Prophetarum, declareth, That it muſt needs be a figure and a remembrance of the Body of Chriſt, Iſta ſecundum ſanæ fidei regulam figurate intelliguntur. Nam alioqui horribilius videtur eſſe humanam carnem vorare quam perimere, & humanum ſanguinem potare quam fundere; Theſe things are underſtood figuratively, according to the rule of ſound and True Faith. For otherwiſe it ſeemeth to be more horrible to eat Mans Fleſh, than to kill a Man, and more horrible to drink Mans blood, than to ſhed it. And therefore he ſaith upon the 98th Pſalm, Non hoc corpus quod videtis eſtis manducaturi, nec bibituri ſanguinem quem fundent qui me crucifigent. Sacramentum aliquod vobis trado. i. Ye ſhall not eat this Body which you ſee, and drink that Blood which they ſhall ſhed that ſhall Crucifie me; I commend unto you a Sacrament. Tert. Aliud a pane corpus Jeſus habet: nec pro nobis panis traditus, ſed ipſum Chriſti verum corpus traditum eſt in crucem, quod panis figura in cœna exhibitum eſt. i. Jeſus hath another Body than Bread, for Bread was not given for us, but the very True Body of Chriſt was given upon the Croſs, which Body was exhibited in the Supper under the figure of Bread. This recordeth Theodoretus an ancient Writer, and avoweth, That there is no turning or altering of the Bread in the Sacrament. His words are theſe, Symbola viſibilia corporis & ſanguinis ſui appellatione honoravit, non mutans naturam, ſed naturæ addens gratiam. i. He hath honoured and dignified the viſible ſigns with the name of his Body and of his Blood, not changing the nature, but adding Grace to nature. And in another place, where he maketh a true Chriſtian Man to reaſon with an Heretick, he giveth to the Heretick this part, to hold with the turning of Bread and Wine into the natural Body and Blood of Chriſt. The Hereticks words are theſe, Sacramenta Dominici corporis & & ſanguinis alia ſunt ante ſacram invocationem; poſt invocationem vero mutantur, & alia fiunt; The Sacraments of the Lords Body and Blood before Invocation, are one thing; but after, they are changed and made another. This maketh Theod. to be on the Hereticks part. Then he bringeth forth the true Chriſtian Man, which reproveth the Heretick for ſo ſaying, Incidiſti in laqueos quos ipſe ſtruxeras: Neque enim ſancta illa ſymbola poſt conſecrationem diſcedunt a natura ſua: Manent enim in priori & ſubſtantia & figura, etenim oculis videri & digitis palpari ut ante poſſunt; Thou art faln into the ſnares which thou thy ſelf haſt laid. For thoſe ſelf-ſame holy ſigns after the Conſecration do not go from their nature, for they abide ſtill both in their former ſubſtance and figure, and may be both with eyes ſeen, and felt with hands as before. To the ſame agreeth well Chryſoſt. ſaying, Poſtquam ſanctificatur panis, non amplius appellatur panis, tametſi maneat natura panis. i.e. After the Bread is Sanctified, it is called Bread no more, although the nature of the Bread ſtill remain. Hereby you may underſtand, how and in what ſort the old Fathers, how the Primitive and beginning Church, how the Apoſtles, and how Chriſt himſelf took theſe words, This is my Body.

Chryſoſtom.

Now to withſtand and ſtoutly to go, not againſt only ancient Writers, or the Congregation of Chriſtian People, which at that time was not overgrown, no, neither ſpotted with covetouſneſs and worldly honour, but the Apoſtles alſo, and God himſelf, no doubt it is great fondneſs. But what ſpeak I of the old Fathers? It is not long ſince the Sacrament grew out of his right under ſtanding. For this word Tranſubſtantiatio, whereby they ſignifie the turning of the Bread into the Body of Chriſt, was never either ſpoken or heard, or thought of among the ancient Fathers, or in the old Church. But about 500 years paſt, Pope Nicholas the Second in a Council holden at Lateranum in Rome, confirmed that opinion of the changing of Bread, and would have made an Article of Faith, and placed it in the Credo. After which time enſued Corpus Chriſti day, Maſſes of Corpus Chriſti, reſervation of the Sacrament, with honour, with Canopies, with cenſing, with kneeling, with worſhipping and adoration, and with ſo much as any Man could deviſe. For they thought they could not do too much to him after that the Biſhop of Rome had allowed him for a God.

Tranſubſtantiation a new invention.

But not fully 200 years before that time, when this Doctrine firſt began to bud, (and yet notwithſtanding had not ſo prevailed, but that a great number of learned and good Men could know the Sacrament to be a Sacrament, and not Chriſt himſelf) Charles the Great, King of France, and Emperor of Germany, demanded of a great learned Man, whoſe name was Bertramus, what he thought of that ſtrange kind of calling down Chriſt from Heaven, and turning a little gobbet of Bread into his natural body. To whom Bertram made anſwer in this wiſe, Dicimus quod multa differentia ſeparantur corporis in quo paſſus eſt Chriſtus & ſanguis quem in cruce pendens fudit; & hoc corpus quod in myſterio paſſionis Chriſti quotidie a fidelibus celebratur. Etenim hoc corpus pignus & ſpecies eſt, illud autem ipſa veritas. Apparet ergo quod tam multa differentia ſeparentur, quantum eſt inter pignus & eam rem pro qua pignus traditur; & quantum inter imaginem, & rem eam cujus imago eſt, & quantum inter ſpeciem & veritatem; This we ſay, That there is a great difference and ſeparation betwixt the body in the which Chriſt ſuffered, and the blood which he ſhed upon the Croſs, and this body which every day is celebrated in the Myſtery of the Paſſion of Chriſt. For this body is a pledge and ſimilitude, but the other is the very truth it ſelf. Ergo, it appeareth that theſe are ſeparated aſunder by no leſs difference than is between a pledge and the thing whereof the pledge is given; or than is betwixt an Image of a thing and the thing it ſelf whereof the Image is; or than is between the form of a thing, and the verity it ſelf. This wrote Bertramus, Druthmarus, and many other, and yet were never in all their time once reproved of Hereſie. This wrote Johannes Scotus alſo, in whoſe life time Men had not Eyes to eſpy his Hereſies; but about two hundred years after his death he was judged and condemned for an Heretick, and his Books burned, in a Council holden at Vercellæ in Lombardy, in the year of our Lord God 1015. Since which time, even until this day, although Idolatry had great increaſe, yet there never wanted ſome good Men which boldly would profeſs and ſet forth the truth, although they were well aſſured that their worldly reward ſhould be Spight, Malice, Impriſoning, Sword, Fire, and all kinds of torments. Thus ſo ſhortly, and in ſo few words as I could, I have declared unto you what Chriſt meant by theſe words, This is my Body; what the Apoſtles taught therein, and in what ſort they delivered them to their ſucceſſors; in what ſenſe and meaning the holy Fathers and old Writers, and the univerſal and Catholick Church hath evermore taken them.

The end and death of King Edward the Sixth.

THUS having diſcourſed things done and paſt under the reign of King Edward, ſuch as ſeemed not unfruitful to be known, we will now draw to the end and death of this bleſſed King, our young Joſias. Who about a year and a half after the death of the Duke of Somerſet his Uncle, in the year of our Lord 1553, entring into the ſeventeenth year of his Age, and the ſeventh year of his Reign, in the month of June was taken from us, for our ſins no doubt; whom if it had ſo pleaſed the good will of the Lord to have ſpared with longer life, not unlike it was, by all conjectures probably to be eſteemed by thoſe his toward and bleſſed beginnings, but proceeding ſo as he began, he would have reformed ſuch a Common Wealth here in the Realm of England, as by good cauſe it might have been ſaid of him that was ſaid in the old time of the noble Emperor Auguſtus, in reforming and advancing the Empire of Rome, Quam quum ille lateritiam (ut aiebat) accepit, marmoream reliquit; Which Empire he received (he ſaid) of Brick, but he left it of fine Marble. But the condition of this Realm, and the cuſtomable behaviour of Engliſh People (whoſe property is commonly to abuſe the Light of the Goſpel when it is offered) deſerved no ſuch benefit of ſo bleſſed a Reformation, but rather a contrary plague of deformation, ſuch as happened after his reign, as you ſhall hear, the Lord granting, in the next Queens days that followed.

Ex Sueton.

Thus then this godly and vertuous Imp, in the time and month above-mentioned, was cut from us, whoſe worthy life and vertues have been partly afore-declared. Nevertheleſs, to have ſome Monument of him remaining to teſtifie of the good nature and gentle diſpoſition of that Prince, we will add here, for a remembrance, this little Epiſtle of his own hand-writing to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury his God-father, as followeth:

Prince Edward when he wrote this Epiſtle ſeemed to be very young, not above ſeven years of age, lying then at Amptile.

The report of the Princes School-maſter, in commendation of his towardneſs, to the Archbiſhop.

This Letter ſeemeth to be written by Dr. Cox.

RIght honourable and my ſingular good Lord, after my moſt hearty commendations: the opportunity of this Meſſenger forceth me to write at this time, having little matter but only to ſignifie unto your Grace, that my Lords Grace your God-ſon is merry and in health, and of ſuch towardneſs in learning, godlineſs, gentleneſs, and all honeſt qualities, that both you and I, and all this Realm ought to think him and take him for a ſingular gift ſent of God, an Imp worthy of ſuch a Father; for whom we are bound, ſine intermiſſione, to render to God moſt hearty thanks, with moſt humble requeſt of his long and proſperous continuance. He hath learned almoſt four Books of Cato to conſtrue, to parſe, and to ſay without Book. And of his own courage now in the later Book he will needs have at one time fourteen Verſes, which he conneth pleaſantly and perfectly, beſides things of the Bible, Satellitium Vivis, Æſops Fables, and Latin making, whereof he hath ſent your Grace a little taſte. Dominus Jeſus te diutiſſime ſervet.

Thus much hitherto having declared, touching the worthy vertues and ſingular towardneſs of this godly Imp, King Edward the Sixth, although I have not, neither can inſert all things due to his commendation, but am inforced to let paſs many memorable matters, well worthy to be proſecuted, if they might have come to our hands: yet this one brief Note I thought not to overſlip (ſomething to recreate the weary Reader in ſuch a doleful ſtory) being notified to me by one Mr. Edward Hunderhil, who waiting the ſame time with the reſt of his fellow Penſioners and Men at Arms, as Sir Henry Gates, Mr. Robert Hall, Mr. Henry Harſton, and Mr. Stafforton, heard theſe words between the King and his Council.

The Relation and Teſtimony of which perſon and perſons above-named come to this effect, That King Edward the Sixth, the fourth year of his Reign, being then but thirteen years old and upward, at Greenwich upon St. George's day, when he was come from the Sermon into the Preſence-Chamber, there being his Uncle the Duke of Somerſet, the Duke of Northumberland, with other Lords and Knights of that Order, called, The Order of the Garter, he ſaid to them, My Lords, I pray you, what Saint is St. George, that we here ſo honour him? At which queſtion the other Lords being all aſtonied, the Lord Treaſurer that then was, perceiving this, gave anſwer, and ſaid, If it pleaſe your Majeſty, I did never read in any Hiſtory of St. George, but only in Legenda aurea, where it is thus ſet down, That St. George out with his Sword, and ran the Dragon through with his Spear. The King, when he could not a great while ſpeak for laughing, at length ſaid, I pray you, my Lord, and what did he with his Sword the while? That I cannot tell your Majeſty, ſaid he. And ſo an end of that queſtion of good St. George. Now to return again from whence we have digreſſed, which is to ſignifie ſome part of the order and manner of his godly departing. As the time approached when it pleaſed Almighty God to call this young King from us, which was the ſixth day of July, the year above-ſaid, about three hours before his death, this godly Child, his eyes being cloſed, ſpeaking to himſelf, and thinking none to have heard him, made this Prayer which followeth:

{KING Edw. 6}

The Prayer of King Edward before his death.

The Kings Prayer at his death.

LOrd God deliver me out of this miſerable and wretched life, and take me among thy choſen: howbeit not my will, but thy will be done: Lord I commit my ſpirit to thee, Oh Lord thou knoweſt how happy it were for me to be with thee: yet for thy choſen ſake ſend me life and health, that I may truly ſerve thee. O my Lord God bleſs thy people, and ſave thine inheritance. O Lord God ſave thy choſen people of England. Oh my Lord God, defend this Realm from Papiſtry, and maintain thy true Religion, that I and my people may praiſe thy holy Name, for thy Son Jeſus Chriſts ſake.

The order and time of the Kings departure.

Then turned he his face, and ſeeing who was by him, ſaid unto them, Are ye ſo nigh? I thought ye had been further off. Then Dr. Owen ſaid, We heard you ſpeak to your ſelf, but what you ſaid we know not. He then (after his faſhion ſmilingly) ſaid, I was praying to God: The laſt words of his pangs were theſe, I am faint, Lord have mercy upon me, and take my ſpirit. And thus he yielded up the ghoſt, leaving a woful kingdom behind unto his Siſter. Albeit he in his will had excluded his Siſter Mary from the ſucceſſion of the Crown, becauſe of her corrupt Religion: yet the Plague, which God had deſtinate unto this ſinful Realm, could not ſo be avoided, but that ſhe, being the elder Daughter to King Henry, ſucceeded in poſſeſſion of the Crown. Of whoſe dreadful and bloody regiment it remaineth now conſequently to diſcourſe.

{Anno 1553}

This briefly may ſuffice to underſtand, that for all the writing, ſending, and practiſing with the Lady Mary, by the King and his Council, and alſo by Biſhop Ridley, yet would ſhe not be reclaimed from her own ſingular opinion fixed upon cuſtom, to give any indifferent hearing to the word and voice of verity. The which ſet Will of the ſaid Lady Mary, both this young King and alſo his Father King Henry before him right well perceiving and conſidering, they were both much diſpleaſed againſt her: Inſomuch that not only her Brother did utterly ſequeſter her in his Will, but alſo her own Father, conſidering her inclination, conceived ſuch heart againſt her, that for a great ſpace he did ſeclude her from the title of Princeſs, yea and ſeemed ſo eagerly incenſed againſt her, that he was fully purpoſed to proceed further with her (as it is reported) had not the interceſſion of Thomas Cranmer the Archbiſhop reconciled the King again to favour and pardon his own Daughter. For the better underſtanding whereof, by theſe her own Letters copied out of her own hand-writing, which I have to ſhew, ſomething may be perceived, and more peradventure may be gueſſed. The words out of her own hand-writing be theſe. And firſt her Letter to King Henry her Father here followeth:

The Lady Mary wedded to Cuſtom.

The Lady Mary in diſpleaſure both with her Brother and Father.

A Letter of the Lady Mary to King Henry her Father.

Lady Mary writeth to King Henry her Father.

IN my moſt humble wiſe I beſeech your Grace of your daily bleſſing. Pleaſeth it the ſame to be advertiſed, that this morning my Lord my Chamberlain came and ſhewed me, that he had received a Letter from Sir W. Paulet Controller of your Houſe. The effect whereof was, that I ſhould with all diligence remove unto the Caſtle of Hertford. Whereupon I deſired him to ſee the ſame Letter, which he ſhewed me. Wherein was written that the Lady Mary the Kings Daughter ſhould remove to the place before-ſaid, leaving {KING Edw.6} leaving out in the same the name of Princess. Which when I heard, I could not a little marvel, trusting verily that your Grace was not privy to the same Letter as concerning the leaving out of the name of Princess, forasmuch as I doubt not in your goodness, but your Grace doth take me for your lawful Daughter, born in true Matrimony. Wherefore if I should agree to the contrary, I should in my Conscience run in the displeasure of God, which I hope assuredly your Grace would not that I so should. And in all other things your Grace shall have me always as humble and obedient a Daughter and Handmaid as ever was Child to the Father, which my duty bindeth me to, as knoweth our Lord, who have your Grace in his most holy tuition, with much honour, and long life to his pleasure.

Written at your Manner of Beaulieu, the second day of October,

By your humble Daughter,

Mary, Princess.

Protestation of the Lady Mary to certain Lords sent by the King her Father, with certain requests unto her.

The protestation of Lady Mary.

MY Lords, as touching my removing to Hatfield I will obey his Grace, as my duty is, or to any other place his Grace will appoint me. But I protest before you and all other that be here present, that my Conscience will in no wise suffer me to take any other than my self for the Kings Lawful Daughter, born in true Matrimony, or Princess, and that I will never willingly and wittingly say or do whereby any person might take occasion to think that I agree to the contrary. Not of any ambition or proud mind, as God is my Judge, but that, if I should say or do otherwise, I should in my Conscience slander the Deed of our Mother holy Church, and the Pope, who is the Judge in this matter, and none other, and also dishonour the King my Father, the Queen my Mother, and falsly confess my self a Bastard, which God defend that I should do, seeing the Pope hath not so declared it by his sentence Definitive; for to his Judgment I submit me.

{Ann. 1553} Lady Mary standeth to the Popes Judgment.

As you have heard some part already of the stout courage of the Lady Mary toward her Father, and also by her Letters no less was declared toward King Edward her Brother and other of his Council, as well may appear by the Letters above-specified between the King her Brother and his Council: So now let us infer somewhat likewise of the stout talk and demeanour of the said Lady Mary toward Doctor Ridley Bishop of London, who gently coming to her of meer good will, had this communication with her, and she with him, as here followeth:

Talk betwixt Lady Mary and B. Ridley.

About the Eighth of September, 1552, Dr. Ridley then Bishop of London, lying at his House at Hadham in Hartfordshire, went to visit the Lady Mary then lying at Hunsden, two miles off; and was gently entertained of Sir Thomas Wharton, and other her Officers, till it was almost Eleven of the Clock, about which time the said Lady Mary came forth into her Chamber of Presence, and then the said Bishop there saluted her Grace, and said, That he was come to do this duty to her Grace. Then she thanked him for his pains, and for a quarter of an hour talked with him very pleasantly, and said, That she knew him in the Court when he was Chaplain to her Father, and could well remember a Sermon that he made before King Henry her Father, at the Marriage of my Lady Clinton that now is, to Sir Anthony Brown, &c. and so dismissed him to Dine with her Officers.

After Dinner was done, the Bishop being called for by the said Lady Mary, resorted again to her Grace, between whom this communication was; first the Bishop begin-neth in manner as followeth:

B. Ridley offereth to preach before the Lady Mary.

Bishop. Madam, I came not only to do my duty to see your Grace, but also to offer my self to preach before you on Sunday next, if it will please you to hear me. At this her countenance changed, and, after silence for a space, she answered thus:

Lady Mary refuseth to hear B. Bishop Ridley to preach before her.

Mary. My Lord, as for this last matter I pray you make the answer to it your self.

Bishop. Madam, considering mine Office and Calling, I am bound in duty to make to your Grace this offer, to preach before you.

Mary. Well, I pray you make the answer (as I have said) to this matter your self; for you know the answer well enough. But if there be no remedy but I must make you answer, this shall be your answer; the door of the Parish-Church adjoyning shall be open for you if you come, and ye may preach if you list; but neither I nor any of mine shall hear you.

Bishop. Madam, I trust you will not refuse Gods Word.

Mary. I cannot tell what ye call Gods Word; that is not Gods Word now, that was Gods Word in my Fathers days.

Bishop. Gods Word is all one in all times, but hath been better understood and practised in some Ages than in other.

Mary. You durst not for your ears have avouched that for Gods Word in my Fathers days, that now you do. And as for your new Books, I thank God I never read any of them; I never did, nor ever will do.

It is like she was perswaded by witches and blind prophesies, that K. Edward should not live so long.

And after many bitter Words against the form of Religion then established, and against the Government of the Realm, and the Laws made in the young years of her Brother, which she said she was not bound to obey till her Brother came to perfect Age, and then she affirmed she would obey them; she asked the Bishop whether he were one of the Council: He answered, No. You might well enough, said she, as the Council goeth now adays.

And so she concluded with these words: My Lord, for your gentleness to come and see me, I thank you; but for your offering to preach before me, I thank you never a whit.

B. Ridley repenteth to have drunken there where Gods Word was refused.

Then the said Bishop was brought by Sir Thomas Wharton to the place where they dined, and was desired to drink. And after he had drunk, he pausèd a while looking very sadly, and suddainly brake out into these words: Surely I have done amiss. Why so? quoth Sir Thomas Wharton. For I have drunk (said he) in that place where Gods word offered hath beeen been refused: whereas if I had remembred my duty, I ought to have departed immediately, and to have shaken off the dust of my Shooes for a testimony against this House. These words were by the said Bishop spoken with such a vehemency, that some of the hearers afterward confessed their Hair to stand upright on their Heads. This done, the said Bishop departed, and so returned to his House. Testified by a certain reverend personage yet alive, being then the Bishops Chaplain.

¶ And thus making an end of this Ninth Book, touching the Story and Reign of King Edward, and having also somewhat said before of the nature and disposition of the Lady Mary, whereby the way may be prepared the better to the troubles of the next Book following; we intend, the Grace of God assisting us therein, now further to proceed in describing the acts and proceedings of the said Lady Mary, coming now to be Queen, and advanced, next after this godly King Edward, to the Crown of this Realm of England.

The References of which Table let the Reader thus underſtand,

{ v. volume. p. page. c. column. } { ch. chapter. ver. verſe. }

UNderſtand, ſtudious Reader (what is not conſidered by moſt) that this large Book of MARTYRS, is not a Legend of Fables, nor a Chaos-rude-heap of worthleſs rubbiſh; but Bibliotheca literarum & literatorum, A Library of learning and learned mens Works, making this Book, for the prime and choice Subject thereof, juſtly to be eſteemed (as the learned confeſs) the next of all human penn'd Books to the ſacred Bible; as may appear in regard either of the Form or Matter thereof.

For Form, it is:

- Methodical; keeping time, as ſo great a vaſtneſs of Story would permit, in the Hiſtories of many Kingdoms beſides our own.
- Certain in the proof; from eye-witneſſes intent upon the things in the doing; and ancient Records, legally drawn, ſafely preſerved, and faithfully produced.
- Well qualified for ſtile and expreſſion; keeping in medio dicendi genere, a middle ſtrain, yet varying the phraſe of ſpeech to the matter in hand. When this Book ſpeaks otherwiſe, it ſpeaks the words of another man, either relating or acting the matter of that Story. And then what is wanting in our beſt phraſe, is recompenſed there with certainty, patheticalneſs, and pleaſure of hearing the Dialects of plain and ancient times and men.
- Rich in variety; ever and anon, after a more ſerious narration, fetching the Readers ſpirits freſh again (like the witty Comedian) with a ſudden winding in, not impertinently, of ſome chearful diſcourſe.

For Matter, As a Library it abounds with Treatiſes, each Page moſtly being as a ſeveral Book; yea, one Leaf many times as a Shelf of Authors, for moſt points and perſons: We will give but a taſte in ſome few particulars, in an Alphabetical order.

O.

Old age may here with its dim eyes see plain patterns to lead him in the plain way; and encourage him, seeing he is so nigh his end, rather to be dissolved (if he be called unto it) in flames of fire to be with Christ, then in this last period of his life to deny him, and by and by at his death be denied Christ, Heaven, and any thing else but only Hell and damnation.

- One lively example is, vol. 3. p. 38. col. 1. Compare p. 359. col. 2. p. 375. c. 2.

P.

Politicians may be hence furnished with many observations touching matters of State and Government of Commonweals, not only laid down in the rule, but proved in the practises; For example,

- Thirty two Emperors lives and deaths exemplifie the issue of too much severity and cruelty in Government. vol. 1. 34, 35. Count the Margent.
- Decay of Religion decays a Commonwealth. vol. 1. p. 113. c. 2. overthrows the Governour, as may be seen in Richard the Second. vol. 1. p. 580. c. 2. Compare p. 585. c. 1.
- Greatness of a State without true Empire of Government is a weakness to the same, as is plain in the Turkish Dominions, by the story of them.
- The mischief of several factions in a State, exemplified in Henry the Eight his Government. vol. 2. throughout. A particular instance, see vol. 2. pag. 474.
- Dissension in a Kingdom opens the door to foreign invasion; see in the example of Christians thus letting in the Turk, vol. 1. 827. c. 1.
- The Roman Empire, and The Jewish Nation } ruined by refusing Christ, vol. 1. pag. 34. c. 2. 35. c. 1.
- The many changes of State, and the causes of them may be seen in this story more than in most; as in the coming in of Saxons, Danes, Normans, Scots, Picts; as also in Richard the Second his Reign, Henry the Sixth, &c.

A CHRONOLOGY OF Maſter FOX his Martyrology.

An Advertiſement to the Reader,

THAT here is preſented unto him a compendious Chronological Table of the moſt remarkable things contained in the whole Book of Martyrs, (according as they are ſet down after Maſter Fox his Method and Computation) digeſting them into ſeveral Columes; The Firſt and ſmaller Colume making report of time.

Four next larger of perſons,

Sixth and largeſt of matters, conciſely anatomizing the whole body of the ſtory into the maſter veins, arteries and ſinews.

Seventh, laſt and leaſt, pointing to the place in the large Volumes, where the Contents of all the other Columes are to be found, and filled up with fleſh, bloud and ſpirits of larger Diſcourſes.

To which we have added this brief Chronological Digeſt, that it may ſerve the ſtudious Reader, either as a perſpective, whereby to view what ground he is to travel, and where the ſeveral turnings are, before he begins to read; or as a Regiſter or Note-book, whereby to recollect his thoughts and obſervations after ſo long a travel in reading ſo voluminous a Work: And at all times to be both as a Map of the limits, a Sceleton of the limbs, and Pourtraiture of the face of ſo rare a Story and a right Martyr; as alſo a Methodical Index to find and fetch in the main bulk of any ſpecial piece of the Story (out of the heap of prolix circumſtances wherein it is covered) when it is to be remembred or peruſed. In all which thus projected, and with extraordinary care and pains effected, if any Reader from his knowledge of other Hiſtories, conceive that many touches of additions or alterations of things, names or times, would have done well; let him remember that Maſter Fox his Book of Martyrs was the Copy ſet before the Pen to write after, both for matter and method. As alſo, that the ſcope of the Pen-man was, to make this Model a Key to the ſame; ſo that if we had any ways ſet this and the great Volume at difference and odds, we had ſet the Son againſt the Father, many references of this to that would have miſreported things, and the whole Project had been ruined. This Child then, though a tender little weak one, comes abroad under the Parents Wing; and is modeſtly bold to ſpeak and go on this way, becauſe in its word it doth (as we ſpeak) ſay after the Father; Sequiturque patrem quamvis non paſſibus equis, and follows the Fathers footſteps, though it cannot ſtride ſo wide. The hope is that that Nail will not ſcore this Paper with diſlike, whoſe Finger never felt the pains of carrying the Pen through ſo troubleſome a buſineſs; and that the exerciſed hand in penning things of this nature will be merciful in cenſuring this Chronographizing of Maſter Fox his Story; whoſe parts, though belonging to the ſame time, are oft ſo far diſperſed, and the ſame things at ſundry times ſo frequently repeated, that it could not but be a great labour to gather them into times Method.

Secondly, Jurisdiction and Power, in — 4. c. 1.

5 particulars,
1. Elections of Bishops and such Offices. For whereas in the Apostles days, the Apostles with prayer and imposition of hands elected Bishops and Ministers: as James was made Bishop of Jerusalem by the Apostles, &c. as may be seen in the 4th Page of this Volume. After in the increase of the Church, the Elections of Bishops and Ministers stood by the Clergy and the People, with the consent of the chief Magistrate of the place, and thus it continued till Constantine the fourth Emperor, and after: But when Alexander the second came, he was chosen without the Emperor, and after him Hildebrand and his followers ordered the matter, that first the Emperor, secondly the Lay-People, lastly, the Clergy, for the most part were excluded.
2. Judiciary Power. For whereas in the Primitive times the Bishops debated all causes of Faith only by Scriptures, and other questions of Ecclesiastical Discipline by the Canons of ancient Councils: Now Scriptures and Councils are set aside, and all things are determined by the Popes new Decretals in his Canon Law. — 5.
3. In Collation of all Ecclesiastical Promotions. For whereas anciently, according to sacred Councils, the holy Fathers, and the common Law, Bishops, Doctors, Patrons, &c. might bestow the Benefices, &c. in their own Precinct, now the Romish Church incroacheth upon, and getteth all into her own hands and power.
4. Binding and loosing. In which what the Scripture gives generally to all the Church, Rome arrogates to her self, and she only will alone have the Keys. Whereas again, the Scriptures give authority to no Church in some things, there Rome will enlarge her self, and fit the wards of her Keys, so as she will unlock and lock those things which never came into Gods mind to allow. As, to loose and discharge Subjects from their Oath of Allegiance to their Prince; and any man from Perjury for Money; and to bind with Excommunication persons for petty matters, as breaking Parks, not ringing Bells, &c.
5. Secular power over Emperors, Kings and Civil Magistracy whatsoever, to excommunicate depose, &c. and put in others; making all subject to him. Whereas it was not so from the beginning, no not of later times; but Gregorius Magnus was subject to Mauricius, and to Phocas though a wicked Emperor. — 7.

3. The Titles and Stile of the Bishops of Rome. Anciently the word Pope was common to all Bishops (as it is common in signification, coming of παππας, that is, Father.) Saint Austin being called Pope of the Council of Africk; Jerome so called of Boniface, and Cyprian of others. And the highest Bishops anciently were not called more than Patriarchs (as were four so called) or Archbishops and Metropolitans; but now the Pope will have the — 9.

					Gods judgment on Pilate that condemned Christ; which Pilate was deposed from his place, banished, and at length he slew himself.
35.					The stoning of Stephen the Proto-martyr, at which Paul was a persecuting agent. This day (saith Dorotheus) suffered also Nicanor one of the seven Deacons, with 2000 Christians more.	35.
					Paul is Converted.
39.	Calus Cesar. Caligula.				Tiberius Cesar having reigned twenty three years dies, after whom succeedeth C. Cesar Caligula: commanding his Image to be set up in the Temple of Hierusalem; which was the beginning of The abomination of desolation to stand in the Holy place. He took the Romans wives violently from them; and having deflowred three of his own sisters, banished them. By this C. Cesar Caligula,
					Herod that mocked Christ, and murthered John the Baptist, was banished, and dies miserably.
					Caiaphas also was deposed by the said Caligula.
43.	Claudius Nero.		Aviragus		Caligula being slain, leaves in his Study two Bills or Notes of them whom he did mean to persecute and kill, which Notes he called the Sword and Dagger; which were used for cruelty by him that followed, viz.

					Andrew the Apostle preaching at Patris in Achaia, was by Egeas the Governour Crucified.

James

Anno Christi	Roman Emper.	Roman Bishops.	Kings of England	Archbishops of Canterbury.		Vol. I. Page
					James the younger, the Son of Alpheus, the brother of the Lord, Bishop of Hierusalem, was thrown down from the battelments of a Church, and afterward stoned, and so martyred to death.
					With James many more were stoned, as may be collected out of Joseph. l. 6. 20, &c.	37.
					Mark the Evangelist martyred at Alexandria, as Reusner affirmeth.
63			Claudius the Emperor sails into Britain, and subdued part of it to the Empire.		The description in general of the Ten Persecutions in the Primitive Church, under the Roman Emperors: Wherein, first, the wonderful many kinds of torments of the Christians are described by Rabanus: Secondly, the admirable patience of the tormented declared by S. August. Thirdly, the infinite number of those patient tormented ones, set forth by S. Hierome and Heliodorus.
67	Domitius Nero.				Under this Emperor was the first of the ten Persecutions, by which (as Eusebius reports) whose Cities were filled with the dead bodies of all ages, sexes, and sorts.
					This Nero was so wicked, that St. Hierome upon Daniel saith, he was thought to be Antichrist. For so prodigious a monster was he, more like a beast, or rather a Devil than a man, that he caused his Mother, his Brother-in-Law, his Sister, his Wife great with child, and his Instructors, Seneca and Lucan, with divers more of his own kin to be put to death. He fired Rome in twelve places, and sung the while the verses of Homer.
69					His end, after he had reigned fourteen years, was by the Senate proclaimed an enemy to all mankind, condemning him to be drawn through the City, and to be whipped to death, for fear whereof he fled and slew himself.	34.
					Under him suffered Peter and Paul for Christ, about the later end of his reign.
73					A question moved whether St. Peter were ever at Rome.
					Another question concerning Paul, whether he wrote the Epistle to the Hebrews, and that to Laodicea.
			Marius.		Paul declares the sum of that Doctrine which he preached.
81		Anacletus alias Cletus.			Vespasian was the quiet Prince that put the distinction between the first and second persecution; in that he did not proclaim Persecution against the Christians. Howbeit he with Titus destroyed the Jews for their rebelling, killing many above 11000, selling into slavery 17000, and leading 2000 in triumph, to be torn with wild beasts, and cruelly to be slain.	39.
91
96.		Clemens.				34.
					Domitian, Brother of Titus, beginning his reign mildly, turned a blasphemous Idolater against God (commanding men to worship him) and a cruel tyrant against Christians; for by him was moved the 2*d* Persecution.
					Simeon, Bishop of Hierusalem was Crucified.
	Domitianus.				John the Evangelist is banished into Patmos. But after the death of Domitian, he was released under Pertinax the Emperor, living to the time of Trajanus, governing the Churches of Asia, and penning his Gospel. He converted a thief. And flies out of a Bath, because wicked Cerinthus was there. St. John could not (as the Papists say) be the Virgin Maries Confessor, seeing according to them, she was without sin.
					Domitianus fearing the coming of Christ, commanded all that could be found of the stock of David in Jewry to be slain. Another cause inciting Persecution, was false accusation of the Christians. But however the inquisition was this, Swear the truth, whether thou art indeed a Christian. If they confessed they were, the Law condemned them for that alone.
		Evaristus.			This Bishop of Rome was a martyr, and flourished as Reusner counts, Anno Christi 102.
		Alexander.			This Bishop of Rome was also martyr, see in the reign of Adrian Emperor. Traditions of holy water, &c. are falsly fathered on him, he flourished as Reusner will, in the year 110, in the later end of Trajans reign.	42. 43.
100	Nerva.				Saphira and Sabina, martyrs.
					Nerva with his quietness put a period of peace for one year between the second and third Persecution.—Trajanus caused the third Persecution.
	Trajanus.				Pliny writes to Trajan to stop the Persecution.
					Trajan seeks out and puts to death the stock of David.
					Certain Sectaries of the Jewish Nation accuse Simeon Son of Mary Cleophas, that he was of the line of David, and a Christian; whereupon he was crucified; but the accusers escaped not being condemned for being (as the Emperor supposed) of the stock of David.
					Phocas B. of Pontus, mar. | Sulpitius, Servilianus, Euphrosius, Theodora, Mart.
					Nereus and Achilleus, Martyrs. | Ignatius Mart. being devoured of wild beasts.

					Zenon, a Nobleman of Rome, 10260 more slain for Christ.
					Achaicus, Heliades, Theodorus Carcerius, prime Martyrs.
					Eustachius, with his Wife and Children, Martyrs.
					Calocerius seeing the patience of Faustinus and Jobita suffering the cruel torments, cried out with these words, Vere magnus Deus Christianorum, i.e. Great is the God of the Christians, whereupon he was presently apprehended, brought to the place of their execution, and was made partaker of their Martyrdom.
					Eleutherius with his Mother Anthia, Martyrs.
					Justus & Pastor, Brethren, Mart. | Symphorissa with her 7 Children, Martyrs.
					Sophia with her three Children, Martyrs.

Anno Christi	Roman Emper.	Roman Bishops.	Kings of England.	Archbishops of Canterbury.		Vol. 1. Page.
					The success was that the Emperor writeth and slacketh the Persecution, charging that none be persecuted barely for Christianity. Hereby then began to come in the respite of peace between the third and fourth Persecution.
					Howbeit this Adrian understanding of the Jews rebelling, sent Julius Severus against them, who overthrew fifty two Castles in Jewry, burnt and demolished 9080 Villages, and slew fifty thousand of the Jews.	46.
					After this Adrian the Emperor repaired Hierusalem, calling it Heliopolis.
124.	Aurelius		Coilus.		Adrian dies by bleeding at the nose, as he had shed Christians blood.
140.	Antonius Pius.				This Emperor Antoninus reigned twenty three years, continuing that peace with the Christians he found begun in Adrians last days; for which he had the name of Pius. Yet by the peoples tumult, without the Emperors consent, some were martyred.
					His saying was, He had rather save one Citizen, than destroy a 1000 of his adversaries.
					He writes in behalf of the Christians, to the Persecutors, notable arguments to stay persecution, as being conquered by the patience of the Christians.
					An Edict of peace for the Christians is proclaimed at Ephesus.
162.	M. Antonius Verus, Who joyned with him in the Government of the Empire M. Aurelius Commodus.				This quiet Emperor in life, of all other Emperors of those times, died the most quiet death.
					This Antoninus was studious of Philosophy, but severe against the Christians, moving the fourth persecution.
					He moveth much persecution. { In France, see pag. 50. / In Asia, where Polycarpus Bishop of Smyrna was Mart.
					In this persecution, Christians were whipped until their veins, arteries and bowels did appear.	46.
					Germanicus, a famous Martyr for patience.
					Quintus a Phrygian, being rashly hardy, suffers for it.
					Polycarp at first by perswasion, did fly persecution, at last offered himself willingly to those that beset the house to seek him, and was martyred.
					Twelve Martyrs at Smyrna. —Of Polycarps Epistle to the Philippians.

					Crescens a Philosopher, procurer of Justins death.
					Praxedis and Potentiana two godly Virgins, bury the bodies of the dead Martyrs, and spend their Patrimonies to relieve the living.	49.
					Ptolomeus and Lucius, Martyrs at Alexandria in Egypt.
					A place in Gratianus suspected.	50.
					Concordus, Martyr; spitteth in the face of the Idol.
					Vincentius his story suspected.
					In France were many Martyrs, at Lions, and Vienna, whose History is set forth under the hands of the brethren of France, in their Letter to the brethren in Asia.	51.
					Vetius Epagathus, a young man, is a couragious Martyr, unto wonderment.
					Ten Christians as weak as he was strong, fainting, to the great sorrow of the stronger.
					The Christians are accused of keeping the Feast of Thyestes, and Incest of Oedipus.
					Blandina, martyr, is so patient in suffering all manner of torments, that she wearies her tormentors.
					Sanctus, Martyr, was so able patiently to bear all manner of torments, that none could make him answer to many questions put to him, but only this in Latin to each of them, I am a Christian. His first torments making him so swollen and scorched, that his members had lost their shape and use; the second contrary to his enemies intent restored his limbs in regard of both.	51.
					Biblides, a woman Martyr, having denied Christ, returns and confesseth Christ in the midst of those torments which were inflicted to make her blaspheme Christ.
					Divers Martyrs strangled.
					Martyrs die in prison.
					Photinus a Deacon, eighty years old, Martyr.
					A description of the comfort of confessing, and the discomfort of denying Christ.
					Maturus and Attalus martyred in a red hot Iron-chair, could not be made by setting them in it, to confess any thing, but what they had willingly before.	52.
					Deniers of Christ return and become Confessors.
					Alexander a Phrygian, beckoning at the Bar to the Christians to stand to the Confession of Christ, is questioned, confesseth Christ, and is martyred.
					Blandina, a woman, and Ponticus a youth of fifteen years old, Martyrs, could not be forced to swear, with all the witty cruelty of the tormentors.	53.

					Justinus a deep Philosopher; a godly man, an Apologizer for the Christians, and a Martyr.
					Grounds of crediting the Prophets. The profit of reading them.	53.
					Epiphanius found in a fault.
					Most worthy Martyrs pronounce themselves unworthy of the name of Martyrs.	55.
					Alcibiades rebuked for over-strict fasting.
					Apollinaris and Melito exhibit Apologies to the Emperor in behalf of the Christians.	55.
					The Books of the Old Testament anciently received for Authentick.
					Christian Soldiers get rain by prayer in a time of their great want of water in the army: for which the Emperor favours them, writing Letters in behalf of all the Christians, to the assuaging of the Persecution.
175.	Lucius Antoninus Commodus.				This Commodus was (though incommodious to the Senators of Rome) commodious to the Church; giving some peace universally throughout the same. Mean while the Gospel spreads, and many Noble families in Rome adjoyn themselves to the Christians.
					Notwithstanding there was some persecuted in his time, for although there was a Law made by the Emperor, that none should falsly accuse the Christians upon pain of death, yet in case any Christian were once accused, the ancient Law was that none that were arraigned for profession of Christ should be released without recantation of his opinion. Hereupon it followed, that Apollonius a Noble Senator of Rome being accused of his servant, the servant by the Law against accusers, was executed, and had his legs broken; and Apollonius himself by the Law of not dismissing accused Christians without recantation, was beheaded; because instead of making a recantation, he made an Apology of Christian belief.
					This Emperor, Antoninus Commodus was very skilful in casting Darts, and took great pride to be called Hercules, and to wear oft times a Lions skin, in both intimating what a Protector he was to the City, and chieftain over the people; Hercules being a Giant, and a Lion the King of Beasts.
					This Emperor on his birth-day, clothed in his Lions skin, and sacrificing to Hercules and Jupiter, commanding also the people to do the like, Vincentius, Peregrinus, Eusebius, Potentianus, learned men, and instructors of the people, dissuaded them: for which cause, and for that they would not sacrifice to Idols at the command of the Emperor, were with sundry devices tormented, and at last with the pressure of leaden weights, were martyred to death.
					Julius with his family are baptized, and after martyred.
		Xistus 1. alias Sixtus 1.			This Xistus or Sixtus Bishop of Rome is counted the sixth Bishop after Peter. The Epistles, and in them the Ordinances fathered upon him, very probably are falsly put upon him. He sat in his Seat about nine or ten years.
129.		Telesphorus.			This Telesphorus sat in the Seat eleven years, and died a Martyr. Many Ordinances touching Gloria in Excelsis, Lent-fast, not permitting of Laymen to accuse the Clergy, are falsly fathered upon him.
140.		Higinus.			This Higinus died a Martyr. The Ordinances of Cream, of one Godfather and Godmother, of Dedications of Churches, &c. are falsly put upon him.
		Pius.			The inflicting penance forty days upon the Priest, for letting fall one crum of the Lords-Supper: and if a drop did fall, that it should be licked up, or else the place washed or pared, &c. all which, put on this Bishop Pius by Platina, sound as unlikely as they are in themselves trivial. He made a Decree of changing Easter-day from the wonted day, viz. the fourteenth day of the Moon in the first Month, to the Sunday after.
159.		Anicetus			This Anicetus sat in the Seat eleven years, and died a Martyr. He determined the same about Easter-day, as Pius his Predecessor had.
		Soter.			This Soter sat in the Seat eight years: He also concludes the same order touching Easter, as Pius and Anicetus had.
178.		Eleutherius.			He sat Bishop of Rome fifteen years. His determination touching Easter is the same with his three Predecessors. See more in *p.*37. in the Hist. of Victor.
			Lucius.		Divers Writers report that this Bishop of Rome sent Damianus and Fugatius at the request of King Lucius, King of England, to him into England, by whom the said King should be converted and baptized. But as they vary in time, some making this sending to be a year or two under 180, and others as much over: so is there a just difference between them, whether these were the first that transported the Christian Faith into England, some of them avouching the coming of Simon Zelotes into England, others the coming of Joseph of Arimathea first founding Christian Religion in this Isle. Whoever was first, Petrus Cluniacensis, Origen and Tertullian do witness that Christianity was much more ancient than Eleutherius, yea and then the conversion of the said King Lucius.
					Besides those mentioned above, were these learned men, confounding the Persecutors by writing, in the time of this present Emperor Commodus.
					Seraphion Bishop of Antioch.
					Egesippus a Writer of the Ecclesiastical story from Christs Passion to his own time. None of his Books remain save only five. De Excidio Hierosol. And those are not mentioned by Hieron.
					Eusebius or Miltiades, who notwithstanding make mention of the man himself.
					Miltiades wrote an Apology for the Christians.

Anno Christi	Roman Emper.	Roman Bishops.	Kings of England	Archbishops of Canterbury.		Vol. 1. Page
					Heraclitus about this time began to write his Annotations and Enarrations upon the New Testament.
					Theophilus an Ecclesiastical writer, Bishop of Cesaria.
					Dionysius Bishop of Corinth, famous for learning, writes divers Epistles to several Churches. He writes to one Penitus a Bishop, Ne grave servandæ castitatis onus, &c. i.e. That he laid no yoke of necessity of keeping Chastity upon his Brethren.
					This Dionysius writes an Epistle of Dionysius Areopagita, declaring (as it is storied in the Acts) his Conversion by Paul, but speaks not a word of his Book De Hierarchia; yet doth he speak more of him touching his being first Bishop of Athens. This Dionysius of Corinth doth shew us that it was the custom in his time, that the Epistles that were sent unto Congregations by learned men, should be read in the Churches in the audience of the Assemblies.
					Clemens Alexandrinus also wrote in the time of this Emperor Commodus, whose Books some are yet extant, declaring the order and number of the Books of the New Testament.	59.
					A man of these times too, was Pantenus, the first publick professor in Schools in Alexandria, occasioning by his example Christian Universities. This Pantenus for his great Learning, was sent for by Demetrius, Bishop of Alexandria, to preach to the Indians, where he finding St. Matthews Gospel in Hebrew, left there by St. Bartholomew, brought it from thence to the Library of Alexandria.
					Whiles the Christians had any respites of peace in this Commodus his time, they jangled about the celebration of Easter. Yet differing in this Ceremony, they brake not off Charity. The difference of their Easter-days.
195.	Pertinax Severus.	This same Severus extended his Empire over Britain at this time.			He reigned but a few months Emperor.
					This Severus raised the fifth Persecution, of the eighteen years of his reign, the first ten were favourable to the Christians, the other eight through false accusations of the malignant, by Proclamation drew blood upon the Christians, see Euseb. Lib. 6. about the year 205.
					The accusers branded them with sedition, murther, &c. with worshipping of an Ass his head, because they believed the story of Sampsons slaughtering the Philistims with a Jaw-bone: and with worshipping the Sun: because before Sun-rising they met and sung Psalms, praying towards the East: But the true quarrel was their not worshipping the Roman Idols.
					The Captains and Officers in this Persecution were Hilerianus, Vigelius, Claudius, Hormianus.
					The places of this Persecution were Africa, Alexandria, Cappadocia, and Carthage.
					The persons persecuted and martyred were,
					Leonides Father of Origen beheaded, with whom his son Origen, being then of seventeen years, would have suffered Martyrdom, but that his Mother by force hindred him.
					Origen encourageth his Father to Martyrdom, saying, Cave tibi ne quid propter nos, &c. that is, Take heed you turn not your purpose of Martyrdom for our sakes. His Father being slain, and his goods confiscate to the Emperor, he maintained himself, and mother, and her children, being in great poverty, by teaching School. He was very learned, conferring the Hebrew with the Translation of the Septuagint; and finding out the common Translations of Aquila, Symmachus and Theodotion; adjoyning to them four other Translations. His Books he penned, were by St. Hieroms account, 7000 Volumes, which he sold for a little above three pence a piece for his relief.
					Plutarch, a Scholar of Origens, martyr.
					Serenus his Brother, a hearer also of Origen, martyr, burned.
					Heraclides, another hearer of Origen, martyr, beheaded.
					Heron, Origens scholar, martyred by beheading.
					Serenus a fifth of Origens scholars, martyred by beheading.	60.
					Rhais and Pontamiena were tormented with pitch poured upon them, and so martyred.
					Marcella, mother of Pontamiena, martyred with fire.
					Basilides, an Officer that saw execution done upon Pontamiena, afterwards denied to give an Oath in a matter whereunto he was called, because he was to swear by the Idols, professing himself also to be turned Christian, by means of Pontamiena, who said as she went to martyrdom that she would pray that God would have mercy on him, after which she had seen a Crown put upon his head, whereupon he was martyred by beheading.
					Alexander by his great strength of body and grace, surviving many great torments inflicted on him for Religion, was by the repute thereof, adjoined Bishop of Jerusalem to Narcissus the former Bishop of that seat being 163 years old, and unwieldy to govern alone.
					Three malicious false witnesses accusing this Narcissus, confirmed it, with imprecations of burning, deaths sickness, and losing both the eyes to themselves if their false accusations were not true: which being false, those several imprecations were truly executed upon them by the Lord, to each his own wish.
					Anidoclus sent by Polycarp into France for his spreading the Gospel there, was beaten with staves and bats, and beheaded, and so martyred.
					Asclepiades a persecuted Confessor, Bishop of Antioch.
					Irenæus, Bishop of Lions, Martyr; commended by Tertullian to be the greatest searcher of all kind of Learning.	He

					He as his name ſignifies, a man of peace, compoſing by his great Learning many differences, and ſuppreſſing many errors wherewith the Church in his time did ſwarm.
					Not long after this Irenæus, flouriſhed Tertullian, an Eccleſiaſtical writer, commended by Vincentius Lirinenſis, to be the Flower of all Latine Writers, and one that by his eloquence of ſtile compelled admiration, having in it as many ſentences as words, and as many victories as ſentences. This Tertullian made a ſingular Apology for the Chriſtians, touching every particular falſe accuſation, ſhewing the impoſſibility and improbability of any truth in them.	60
	Victor.				This Victor is reported (though Platina ſaith the contrary) by Damaſus, and the followers of the common Chronicles, to die a Martyr. But he moved ſome ſtir about the time of Eaſter, which the Apoſtles had left indifferent, who by reaſon of their intentiveneſs of Preaching, gave no heed to times and days; nor did they bind the Church to any Ceremonies ſaving of ſtrangled things, and blood. Which of blood ſeemeth to be given to the Church, to prevent the ſcandal the heathen Gentiles laid upon the Chriſtians eating blood, and ſo to continue only whiles the Perſecutions of the heathen Gentiles continued. Alſo Pius, Anicetus, Soter, and Eleutherius, having changed Eaſter-day, from the fourteenth day of the moon in the firſt month, to the next Sunday after, and being oppoſed by Melito Biſhop of Sardis, Egeſippus and Polycarp, ſent by the brethren of Aſia to Rome to Anicetus, to confer with him about it, and not agreeing in opinion, the learned Men of thoſe Times, with thoſe now named, keeping Charity, left the time of Eaſter, as Adiaphoron, a thing indifferent in the Church till the time of this Victor. Now this Victor was ſo violently ſet upon upholding the Roman determination of his former Predeceſſors, as a neceſſary: that he would Excommunicate all the Biſhops and Churches of Aſia as Hereticks, unleſs they would be of his Opinion, had not Irenæus reſtrained him. Yet was Irenæus, alſo Theophilus, Biſhop of Ciſarea, Narciſſus Biſhop of Jeruſalem, Palmas of Pontus, Banchillus of Corinth, &c. of the judgment of Victor, touching keeping Eaſter upon the Sunday after the fourteenth of the Moon in the firſt month, for theſe two Reaſons: Firſt, becauſe they would differ as much as might be from the Jews; Secondly, becauſe the Reſurrection of the Lord fell on the ſame day. On the contrary opinion were divers Biſhops in Aſia, chiefly Polycrates Biſhop of Epheſus, alledging Scripture, the example of ſome of the Apoſtles, and cuſtom of other Fathers. But Irenæus ſtill took off the edge of ſharp Contentions; and ſo the Controverſie remained free till the time of the Nicene Council. And other Doctors of Chriſtian liberty were free till Victors time, about Anno 200.	62
203		Zephirus.			The two Epiſtles in the firſt Tome of the Councils, fathered upon this Zephirus Biſhop, may juſtly be ſuſpected to be fained. And that thoſe and other ordinances ſpoken of before, were invented by ſome to advance the Papacy, and naming them with the names of thoſe Fathers. The ſame we may think of the patins of Glaſs aſcribed to the ſaid Zephirus. For that time of his ſitting Biſhop, ſome Writers make it 8, ſome 16, ſome 17 years. The moſt agree between 17 and 18.
	Baſſianus.		This ſame Baſſianus extends his Empire over England.		This Emperor Severus invades England, he caſts up a Ditch of 130 miles, from Sea to Sea, beginning at Tine, and reaching to the Scottiſh Sea.	62
214					He removing thence to York, was there by the Northern men and Scots beſieged and ſlain.
					Severus leaving behind him two Sons, Baſſianus and Geta, Baſſianus ſlays Geta, and governs the Empire alone about ſix years, and then was ſlain of his next Succeſſors.
	Macrinus with his ſon Diadumenus.				Theſe two, Mac. and Diad. having Reigned one year, were ſlain of their own people.
219	Varius Heliogabalus.				This Heliogabalus affected pomp in his life exceedingly; burning balm for oyl in his Lamps, filling his Fiſh-ponds with roſe-water, wearing apparel of gold, and moſt coſtly ſilks, ſhoos ſet with precious ſtones, feeding himſelf with variety of diſhes every ſecond day, furniſhed with whatſoever was rareſt and deareſt; He affected too a pompous death, providing (in caſe his wicked life ſhould make his enemies beſiege him) ſwords of gold, ſilken ropes, cups of Jacinths to hold poyſon, pavements of precious ſtones, wherewith to ſtab, hang, poyſon and brain himſelf. He affected Luſt as well as Pride, having 600 chariots of bauds and harlots to attend him in his progreſs. He was ſlain of his Souldiers, being an enemy to all honeſty, and advancer only of baſe ones.	63
224	Aurel. Alex. Severus.				This Severus was adopted by Heliogabalus, being without Iſſue. He was learned, and in his actions conſtantly adviſed by his Senate; he ſo hated bribed Judges, that he would vomit when he ſaw them; and was ready with his two fingers to put out their eyes. He diſmiſſed all idle and needleſs ſervants from his Court. He favored the Chriſtians, ſaying of a place where they did meet for good Duties, which the Cooks and Tiplers would have taken from them, It was fitter for Gods ſervice, than the uſe of Scullians, and ſo reſtored it to the Chriſtians. Obſerve hence, that as yet there were no Chriſtian Churches in Rome.	63
					He put to death Turinus with ſmoke, for taking mony of People, to get for them the Emperors favor, which he, lying, boaſted he had at command; The Cryer proclaiming at his execution, Smoke he ſold, and ſmoke he is puniſhed with.

Anno Chri.	Roman Emper.	Roman Bishops.	Kings of England	Archbishops of Canterbury.		Vol. 1. Pag.
					His mother Mammea hearing of Origens fame, sent for him from Alexandria, to hear him, who came to her and the Emperor her son.
					Though he favored the Christians, yet some were martyred in his time, as Historians affirm, giving this reason; That by him no Proclamation was set forth for the safety of the Christians.
		Calixtus.			The persons persecuted under him they reckon to be,
					Calixtus martyred. Many Ordinances of the Fast of Ember-week, of not accusing Bishops, &c. fasly put upon him.
227		Urbanus.			Urbanus Martyred. His Epistle decretal of Church-goods, Confirmations, &c. may justly be thought to be feigned.	64
					Tiburtius and Valerianus, Converts of Urbanus, and Noble men of Rome, Martyred.
					Cecilia, wife of Valerianus, a great confirmer of him and his brother Tiburtius, and a means of the Baptizing of 400 persons (as the story reports) Martyred.
					Agapetus of fifteen years, who could neither be made to sacrifice to Idols, nor be killed with whips, hot water poured upon him, or wild Beasts, was by Beheading Martyred.
236		Pontianus.			The Executioner of this Agapetus, named Antiochus, in the executing of this Martyr, fell down from his Seat, crying, That his inward Bowels burned within him, and so dyed.
					Many more (as Authors affirm) as well of the Senate and chief of Rome, as others were martyred under this Emperor, and their Heads were hanged over the City gates, to terrifie others from the profession of Christ.
					Albeit, as touching the time of these fore-named Martyrs, I suppose they suffered rather under Maximinus or Decius, than under Alexander.
237	Maximinus.				This Emperor Maximinus, was chosen Emperor rather by the wilfulness of the Souldiers, than the will of the Senate. He caused the sixth Persecution, especially against the Teachers, hoping that when they were smitten, the Sheep would soon be scattered. And therefore it is the more likely that Urbanus, and the rest above-named in the former persecution, suffered rather under this Maximinus, than under that Alexander.
					Origen, under this Emperor, wrote his Book De Martyrio.
240	Gordianus.				Pontianus the Bishop of Rome banished.
					This Gordianus was a learned and quiet Prince, and governed with much peace.	65
					Pontianus the Bishop of Rome dyes. His Epistles decretal, touching the hyperbolical dignifying of the Clergy, probably are feigned.
					At this time were raised in the Church other famous Fathers, as,
					Philetus Bishop of Antioch. Zebenus Bishop of Antioch.
					Ammonius the School-master of Origen, who wrote divers Books in defence of Christian Religion: and continued himself in the Profession thereof.
					Julius Africanus, who was (as Nicephorus writes) a Scholar of Origen, and a great Writer of Histories.
					Natalius, who had suffered as a good Confessor, much persecution, but being hired with preferment of being a Bishop, and by mony, viz. 150 pieces of Silver every month, he turned to be of the Sect of Theodocus. But being much afflicted by the Lord, he repenting, returned to the Christian Congregation, and was received.
		Anterius.			Eusebius saith, That because this Bishop of Rome, Anterius did cause the lives and deaths of Martyrs to be written, that he himself was Martyred by Maximinus the Judge.
					Hippolytus a Bishop, a great Writer, Eusebius and Hierome mentioning his Books, and a Martyr, by being drawn with wild Horses through the Thickets.
					Gordianus Emperor, is slain; Philip Emperor, after him.
246	Philippus the first Christian Emperor.				This Philippus Emperor, took to himself his Son Philip assistant in governing. This Philippus, with his Son and all his Family, being converted by Fabianus and Origen, were Baptized: And howsoever Pomponius Letus writes, he was a dissembling Prince; this is certain, that for Religions sake, he and his Son were slain by Decius one of his Captains.
250	Deciu				This Decius Emperor, moves the seventh Persecution, which was a most terrible one, because, besides Philippus his Christianity, he had committed his Treasure to Fabian the Bishop.
		Fabianus.			This Bishop Fabian was a marryed Man, and chosen Bishop, as Eusebius reports, by the lighting of a Dove upon his head, as he stood among the Assembly met to choose a Bishop of Rome. He was Martyred by Decius.
					The Ordinances of burning the old oyl, and consecrating new once a year; of not Marrying within the fifth Degree, &c. may justly be suspected of feigning.
					To this Fabian wrote Origen de Orthodoxia fidei sua, that is, Of the righteousness of his Faith.
					Origen living to this Decius, suffered under him many bands, torments, rackings, &c. for Religion. After all which, being brought by the Officers to the Altar, whereon lay an Ethiop, and commanded to Sacrifice to the Idol, or else he should have his Body defiled by the Ethiop; he chose rather to Sacrifice, for which he was Excommunicated of the Church; and for his calling upon the Christians to carry those Boughs which he had in his hand, in honor to Christ, which the Heathen used to honor their gods withal, was by the Church of Alexandria removed from their Communion, and so departed thence for shame to Jewry. Where being importuned portuned by the Congregation to make ſome exhortation to the people, after long denial, he ſtood up and read the Verſe of the fifth Pſalm, and ſo ſat down and wept. What became of him at laſt, is not known, but only that, as Suidus ſaith, he dyed and was buried at Tyrus, and ended his life, as Euſebius ſaith, in great miſery and poverty.

					This Origens Uſher in the School at Alexandria, was one Heraclas; who for his excellent parts was Maſter of that School, and afterward Biſhop of Alexandria, next after Demetrius.
					After Heraclas ſucceeded Dionyſius Alexandrinus, Biſhop of Alexandria, as he ſucceeded him before in the School. This Dionyſius writes of Heraclas thus, Hunc ego, &c. that is, This Canon I received from bleſſed Heraclas our Pope. Yet obſerve, that this Heraclas was no Biſhop of Rome.
					Nicephorus ſaith of this Perſecution, that it was as eaſie to number the ſands, as the Martyrs under this Decius. The more famous were theſe, Aſclepiades Biſhop of Antioch, a perſecuted Confeſſor under Severus, dyes a Martyr under Decius.
					Babylas Biſhop of Antioch, for not ſuffering the Emperor, having committed a Murder, to enter into the Chriſtians Temple, was martyred. Being buryed in the Temple of Apollo; he cauſeth the Oracle that was there to ceaſe. Whereupon his Body was taken up again.
					Babylas Biſhop of Nicomedia, Martyr.
					Forty Virgins in the City of Antioch.
					Martyrs in Phrygia.
					Confeſſors at Babylon carryed to Spain to be Martyred.
					Divers Martyred in Cappadocia.
					Divers Martyred in Perſide.
					Many Martyred at Alexandria.
					A Sooth-ſayer was a great ſtirrer up of this Perſecution (being a great friend to Idolatry) by whoſe means the multitude was ſo inraged againſt them that would not ſacrifice to their Idols, that they ſtone Metra a Chriſtian Prieſt, and dragged Quinta a godly Woman through the ſtreets, and killed her. They went into Chriſtians Houſes, and took away their goods of price, and burned the reſt in the Market-place.
					Apollonia a Martyr, had her teeth daſht out. And being threatned with a fire made before her to burn her, unleſs ſhe would commit Idolatry, ſhe voluntarily leaped into the fire.
					Diſſention among the Perſecutors, turned Perſecution for a time from the Chriſtians upon themſelves.
					Revolters being perſwaded to Sacrifice to the Idols, come trembling, as if they themſelves ſhould be Sacrificed.
					A Souldier taking part with the Chriſtians againſt them that rail at them, is Martyred for the ſame.
					Ammonarian was tormented for telling the Judge ſhe would not yield to his wicked commands for any torments he would inflict. Which ſhe accordingly performed; and the Judge was aſhamed to be overcome of a Woman.	68
					Knights and Warriers ſtanding by the Tribunal, where the Martyrs were condemned, made ſigns to the fearful, imboldning them to Confeſſion and Martyrdom. They being eſpied, and about to be queſtioned, preſſed in to the Bench, profeſſed Chriſt, and were Martyred.
					Cheremon a married Biſhop, fled with his Wife in this Perſecution in the Mountain of Arabia, and was never ſeen more.
					Dionyſius charged by Germanus Biſhop, for flying in Perſecution, cleareth himſelf, calling God to witneſs, that he regarded not his life, but the Souldiers that kept him, leaving him through a fear, by the ſhrecking of ſome not far off, he was left alone, and eſcaped.
					Chriſtophorus, of twelve cubits high, as Writers report, was martyred in this Perſecution; whether he be that Chriſtopher of whom the ſpeech goes, he carryed Chriſt, &c. it is uncertain.	69
					Abundance in this Perſecution wandred in Mountains, and were ſtarved, or devoured of Beaſts.
					A Souldier out-facing all threats to draw him to Idolatry, is by the Pretor put into a ſoft bed in a pleaſant Garden of Lillies and Roſes; and a beautiful Harlot ſent in to him with Imbracements, inticing him to Adultery. But he bites off his tongue whiles ſhe was kiſſing him, and ſpit it in her face, and rejected her wicked offers.
					Theodora Virgin, for refuſing to ſacrifice to Idols, was adjudged to the ſtews. A Chriſtian Souldier going thither, as if (as the people hoped) he would have been one of them that would have abuſed her, changed his habit for hers, he ſending her to eſcape, and ſtaying there himſelf to dye in her ſtead; who being condemned, Theodora to releaſe him, declares her ſelf to be the right party. The Pretor cutting off their hands, burns both him and her.
					Nichomachus in his torments renouncing his Chriſtianity, and offering Sacrifice to the Idols, was, when he was releaſed, taken eftſoons with a wicked Spirit, thrown on the ground, that he bit off his tongue, and ſo died. Many more examples there were in this Perſecution of Gods Judgments on revolters.	71
					Upon theſe revolters roſe firſt the Hereſie of Novatus, viz. that revolters for fear of Torments, might not be reconciled nor admitted to the Church, though they repented. This Novatus makes three Biſhops drunk, that they might Ordain him Biſhop of Rome againſt Cornelius the then lawful Biſhop of that See.	71

Upon

Anno Christi	Roman Emper.	Roman Bishops.	Kings of England	Archbishops of Canterbury.		Vol. 1. Page.
255		Cornelius.			Upon these two Bishops of Rome set up together, doth Cyprian so much write of Unity and one Bishop, and not otherwise is he to be understood as any way to speak for a Pope.
					A Synod is held at Rome against this upstart Bishop, Novatus.
					This Cornelius is highly commended of Cyprian for his worthiness, of Hierome for his eloquence, and of others for his Martyrdom. Hence conceive all the trivial Decretals to be fained.
					This most Tyrannical Decius having reigned a very short time, viz. between two or three years, was slain of the Barbarians.
	Gallus and Volusianus his son reign together.				After Decius his death God sent a Pestilence on the Empire of ten years continuance. In it the Christians visited each other, though Infection did kill the Visiters next in short space. But the Gentiles being cruelly uncharitable, neglected their Brethren, being sick, and cast out their dead Bodies to the dogs.	72. 73.
					Upon this Pestilence, Cyprian wrote his Book, De Mortalitate.
					Gallus and Volusianus succeed by Treason next to Decius, and reign but a short time for their persecuting. Gallus setting forth Decrees for Persecution, banishing many Bishops and Pastors from their Flocks, condemning others to the Mettal-mines.
					To this time I refer the banishment of Cyprian, he being then Bishop of Carthage. Who in his absence from his Flock by this Exilement, made supply by his many excellent Letters, which are yet in a great part extant.
256		Lucius.			This Lucius was also banished under these two Co-Emperors. This Lucius is said to Ordain, That two Priests, with three Deacons, should always be with a Bishop to witness his conversation; which Order may be very good and useful. But it seems not to agree to Lucius his time, wherein there was not such Greatness of Bishops to retain and maintain such Retinue; nor such freedom from Persecution, as that they durst be seen openly abroad. Other Ordinances put upon him are suspected of faining.	73.
		Stephanus.			This Bishop is said by many Authors to dye a Martyr. Many Decrees fathered upon him: but they are feigned.
259	Valerianus and his son Galienus.				These two Roman Emperors reigning covertly together, were very courteous to the Christians, by reason whereof, and the greatness of the Pestilence in the Empire, Persecution was extinguished for some two or three years, insomuch that the Emperors Court was full of Christians. But after Valerian having an Egyptian a chief Ruler of the heathen Synagogue, and chief of the Inchanters, being hindered by the Christians Prayers from his feats and charms, complaining and incensing thereupon the Emperor, the said Valerian was moved by him to move the eighth persecution.
					Cyprian adds in his fourth Book, and fourth Epistle, certain causes on the Christians part of this Persecution; viz. The sins and dissentions of the Christians.
					Finally, That wicked Accusers caused this Persecution, by accusing the Christians of being the causes of the evils of Famine, Pestilence, &c. on the Empire.	75.
					Against all these Cyprian writes an eloquent Apology, entituled, Contra Demetrianum, as Tertullian had done before, Contra Scapulam.
					In the time of this Persecution was Cyprian Martyred, whose name was alias Statius, whose Country was Carthage in Africa. Who was made first a Priest, then the Bishop of Carthage. He was very careful of the afflicted Brethren, a great reader of Tertullian, and a man that had many godly Visions, as of future Persecutions, &c. At last, refusing to offer to Idols, this Persecution took off his Head, and crowned him with Martyrdom. For the excellent Sentences penned by him, his Books tell the World of them sufficiently. He had his blemishes, as other Fathers were not free (though the Papists fault is to make too much of every thing.) Origin had something that the Church now holds not. Polycarp. observed Easter after the Jews custom. Ignatius makes fasting on the Sabbath as bad as killing Christ. Irenæus held that man was not made perfect in the beginning, and seems to defend Free-will. Tertullian is noted for a Chiliast, and a Montanian. Justin seems to incline to Chiliasm, to the opinion of Angels falling by concupiscence of Women, and to the Doctrine of Free-will. And this Cyprian held contrary to the Church, Re-baptizing of Infants Baptized by Hereticks; whereupon fell great contention between him and Stephanus Bishop of Rome.	76. 77. 78.
					Besides this Cyprian, there was a second, who of an Idolater, and a practiser of Magick, was converted to a Christian, made a Priest and Bishop of Antioch, of which he was a native Citizen, and after was Martyred under Diocletian. Lastly, a third Cyprian, long after both these, there was in the time of the Emperor Julius Apostata.
					This Bishop of Rome is in this Persecution Martyred with six Christians, for being Christians.
		Xistus the second, alias, Sixtus the second.			Laurence, in this Persecution was Martyred, between whom and Xistus the Bishop, was love and words, as between the deareſt Father and Son, especially when he saw Xistus going to Martyrdom. This Laurence was a vertuous Levite, a Minister of the Sacraments, and a Disturber of the Churches riches. Whereupon the covetous Emperor demanding where he had bestowed the same, after three days respite gotten of the Emperor for answer, he brings the poor, saying, These are the precious Treachery of the Church. The Emperor conceiving himself mocked in this Answer,	79.

					swer, commands Lawrence to be tormented to death, by pinching him with fiery Tonges, girding him with burning Plates, laying him on the iron Grate or Grid-iron red hot, rosting, broiling, tossing and turning him. In the suffering of all which, this is all that Lawrence said,
					This side is now rosted enough, turn up, O Tyrant great. And see whether rosted or raw thou think'st the better meat.
					By this suffering of Lawrence, thus patiently suffering death in so great torments, a Roman Soldier was converted, desiring to be baptised; thereupon he was martyred.
					Dyonisius Bishop of Alexandria, with certain brethren, was banished in this Persecution to Cephro, for not worshipping the Heathen Gods, and proving that there was one only true God whom they ought to worship.	80
					In this Persecution were Martyred, Men, old and young, Women, Wives and Maids, and young simple innocents.
					Eusebius the Deacon, notwithstanding his many persecutions, lived, ministring to the living fettered Confessors, and burying the dead Martyrs, and after was made Bishop of Laodicea, and after died in peace, about the year 268.
					In Cesarea Palestine suffered Martyrdom, Priscus, Malchus, and Alexander, who became Martyrs by seeing the Christian courage of others Martyred.
					In the City of Carthage at this time were martyred 300.
					In Simela of Italy Pontius was Martyred by being first hanged on the Rack, then cast to the wild Beasts, then these not hurting him, was cast too into the fire, of which, as Vincentius saith, being not hurt, he was last of all beheaded and cast into the floud: His tormentors were so vexed after with spirits, that they bit off their tongues and died.	80
					Bergonensis is here to be reproved, for writing in his 8th Book in the story of this Emperor Valerianus, that Philippus was Bishop of Alexandria, and beheaded under the same Valerian, which is clean contrary to approved Authors, and the course of time.
					At this time was one Philippus made President of Alexandria, who had a Daughter named Eugenia, of rare beauty, who to avoid Marriage with a Pagan and Heathen Persecutor, fled from her Father, going in Mans Apparel, calling her self Eugenius, and for her parts was made Head of a Society of Christians, where a lustful Matron being enamoured with her beauty, supposing her to be a man, laboured to draw her to uncleanness with her; but Eugenia not consenting, this Matron accuseth Eugenia to have laboured to deflower her; whereupon the matter was brought before Philippus the President, who according to allegations, being about to condemn her to death, Eugenia, seeing no other evidences would serve, discovered her self to Philippus, to be an innocent, a Woman, and his Daughter, and so was restored and received of Philippus as an innocent and a Daughter, who not long after converted her Father to Christianity, who after died also a Martyr, and after his death Eugenia returning to Rome was also martyred.
					In the 6th year of Valerianus and Galienus were Victor and Victorinus, having been imprisoned three years, martyred.	82
262					Fructuosus Bishop of Tarracona in Spain, with his two Deacons, Argurius, and Eulogius were martyred at this time in the fire, for calling Idols dumb gods of stocks, and professing his worship, and opinion of the true God. It is reported by some that a Soldier saw the Heavens opened over them as they were in the fire, receiving them, a Soldier and the persecuting Presidents Daughter beholding the same.
					This Emperor Valerian having thus persecuted the Church, two of the seven years that he had reigned, he was taken in War by the King of Persia, and made his block to take Horse to his dying day.
					Claudius his persecuting President was so vexed with the Devil, that he bit off his tongue and died.
					Galienus the son of Valerian, for his part in persecuting, had many Earthquakes, and 30 Rebellions moved in his Empire. Whereupon he mitigated Persecution, yet some were somewhat troubled. His Father reigned seven years together with him; and he reigned nine alone, somewhat more quietly.	82
266		Dionysius.			The Ordinances put on that Dionysius are feigned. Some say he was Bishop 9 years, others 6 years and 2 Months.
	Claudius				This Claudius was also a quiet Emperor. He reigned about two years.
272	Quintilianus.				This Emperor was also quiet. He continued but seventeen days.
	Aurelianus.				This Aurelianus begins mildly, but anon after moves the ninth Persecution.	83
					In his mild time there was a Council of Christians at Antioch, he seeming not to be against it or them.
					In the beginning of his Tyranny, he makes his entrance into bloud with the death of his Sisters Son.
					As he was about to seal an Edict for Persecution, he was so terrified with Thunder and Lightning, that it stopped his Tyranny. About the fifth or sixth year of his Reign he was slain.
	Pub. An.				This Emperor Tacitus reigned but six Months.
278	Tacitus.				This Florian reigned but sixty days.
	Florianus.

Anno Christi	Roman Emper.	Roman Bishops.	Kings of England	Archbishops of Canterbury.		Vol 1. Page
280	Mar. Au.	Felix			In the first year of this Probus was Felix Bishop, who died a Martyr.
281	Probus.	Eutichianus.			This Emperor Probus was a quiet Prince, and an enemy to idle soldiers; keeping his soldiers to diligent labour, whereupon his soldiers slew him, having reigned about six years.
284	Carus with his two sons Carinus and Numerianus.				This Carus warring against the Persians was slain with lightning. Numerianus immoderately lamenting for his Father, by much weeping made his eyes sore, whereby he being constrained to keep within doors, was slain of Aper his Father-in-law, which Aper would answer, when any asked for Numerian, that he kept private because of his sore eyes. Thus was he justly slain by Aper, who had slain godly Cyrillus for refusing to admit him an Idolater into the Christians Temple.	84
285	Aper usurps the Empire.	Caius who was martyred in the 10th Persecution.			These two Car. and Num. being slain in the East parts; Carinus the other Son reigned alone in Italy, with much wickedness. At last the Army set up Diocletian to be Emperor, and the Tribune slays Carinus, whose Wife Carinus had defiled. Thus these three Car. Num. and Carin. reigned not above three years.
289					Thus the Church had much peace all this while, till the 19th year of Diocletian: For
					The Church being in peace with the Heathens, dissents within her self, and lying still, gathers corruption; anon therefore to quiet and purge her in her self, Gods just wisdom sends them more Persecution, the tenth time.
290			Carausius alias Cerausius.		This Diocletian being nominated (as we said) to be Emperor, and being told by Druas his Concubine, he must slay a Bore before he could be Emperor, he runs with his sword upon Aper, for that, as he said, he had unjustly slain Numerian, and so slays him, and comes fully to the Crown.
	Diocletian he chooseth Maximianus				As Diocletian for the troublousness of the Empire had joyned to him Maximian; so these two chose to them
296	fellow Emperor with him.		Alectus.		Galerius and Constantius } Cesars under them.
304		Marcellinus who was cited up, made to appear, and condemned by the Council of Sinuess, Martyr. Marcellus Martyr. Eusebius Martyr. Miltiades Martyr.	Asclepiodatus. Coilus.		About the nineteenth year of this Diocletian, doth he begin the tenth Persecution, which lasted ten years together, exceeding the rest in length and sharpness. His first act in this Tragedy (after the abovesaid peaceable preface) was to pull down the Christian Churches to the ground, to burn the Scriptures, and displace all Magistrates that would not abjure Christianity.	85
					The second Act was to assay by all possible torments, to make Bishops and Elders to sacrifice to Idols.
					In the third act he comes to the common Christians; but first begins in his Camp, where many of his soldiers valiantly and voluntarily died to be soldiers of Christ, under the colours of Martyrdom. An infinite number of others were martyred. Nay, the very places and torments where and wherewith they were martyred, arise to a mighty multitude.	86
					At Nicomedia, a Christian, a Nobleman born, seeing the Edict of the Emperor set up for Persecution, takes it down, and tears it, the two Emperors being in the City, for which he was miserably tormented.
					Diocletian tyrannizeth in the East, and Maximinus in the West.
					Serena, the Wife of Diocletian the Emperor, is martyred for Christianity.	86
					20000 Martyrs burned together in one Church.
					Martyrs in Phrygia are burnt with the whole City.
					Divers in this Persecution were martyred in France, in Spain, Britany, so that in these Countries some Rivers were coloured with the bloud of Christians.	87
					Eusebius an eye-witness of torment-Martyrdom executed on divers in Thebaid, and of tormentors wearied with exercising cruelty on the invincible patience of Christians, singing Psalms in torment to the last gasp.
					Marcellinus revolts, anon he repents, and dyes a Martyr.	88
					An hundred Martyrs slain at once in one day, of men, women and children.
					17000 Martyrs in one month slain.
					300 Martyred at one time in Alexandria.
					Mauritius the Captain, with 6666 of his soldiers martyred.
					Victor with 360 martyred.
					Christians increase in persecution.	88
305					Diocletian and Maximinian, tyred with persecuting, give up their Empire, and lead a private life, having reigned about one and twenty years, or near upon.
	Maximinus and Constantius.		This Constantius extends his Empire over England.		These two, Maximinus and Constantius before Cesars, now become Emperors; Maximinus in the East, and Constantius in the West.
					Maximinus chooseth his Sons Maximinus and Severus Cesars under him.
					Constantius chooseth Constantinus his Son Cesar under him.
309	Maxentius set up by the soldiers.				Against this Maxentius thus set up by the soldiers, Maximinus sent his Son Severus, which Severus being slain; he chose Licinus Cesar in his room.
					These thus set up, some to be Emperors, viz. Maximinus, Constantius, Maxentius, and the rest as Cesars, continued the decennal Persecution, after Diocletian and his Partner had given over. Saving that Constantius, and especially his Son Constantinus were kind to the Christians.

Con-

311		Silvester the First.			Constantius seeming to be willing to most advance those that at a certain appointed solemnity, would most readily offer Sacrifice, and thereby according to his desire, discovering who were Heathenish Idolaters, and who Christians, he commending the Christian refusers and deriders of that idolatry, chose them for his Court, banished the others from him, as unfit for his service, that were Traitors to God.	90
					Contrariwise, Maximinus was very wicked in idolatry and cruelty; where God struck him with a swelling and Fistula in the belly and secret parts; which putrifying, brake out with swarms of Lice, with such a stink, that his Physician could not endure the same; wherefore he was slain of this Maximinus. But by anguish of his Disease, he slacked Persecution, as being conscious, and accordingly making confession that his persecuting had brought this upon him; and so acknowledging his offences to God.
					The Infidels themselves extol the only true God of the Christians.	91
					Anon, by the wicked device of Theotechnus an Inchanter, bringing the Christians out of credit with the Emperor, and of Præfectus Castrorum, who got certain Women to say in writing, that once they were Christians, and what lascivious acts they knew the Christians did upon the Sundays; the Emperor was incensed to set up Decrees of fresh persecution, in brass, whereby many Bishops and others were martyred.	92
					Upon this followed great Famine and Pestilence on the Heathen; to whom the Christians then shewed great relief, when the Heathens forsook each other.	93
					By this some peace came again to the Church; Maximinus revoking his brazen Decrees, and punishing his Enchanters that incensed him against the Christians.
					Maximianus pretending to ask aid of Constantinus, to depose wicked Maxentius his Son, set up by the Soldiers to be Emperor (as we said) but intending indeed to slay Constantinus (for Maximianus would have fain resumed the Empire) was slain by Constantine's Officers. Hanged as some say.
					Maxentius this whiles goes on his wicked tyrannical reign, at Rome, murthering Husbands to be naught with their Wives: so that one Gentlewoman, her Husband being slain, slew her self to avoid his ravishing of her.	93
			This Constantius is created Emperor also over Britain.		Constantinus, intreated of the Romans, came against Maxentius for his wickedness, warring upon him; and upon a Bridge made of Boats over Tibur (which Maxentius made to intrap and drown Constantine) was Maxentius intrapped and drowned.	94
	Constantine the Great, and Licinius, of Cesars are made Emperors				Constantine sets forth Decrees of favour to the Christians.
					Licinius feigningly joyns with Constantine in that act; for at the first there was great familiarity between them, Licinius marrying Constantine's Sister. But all Licinius his love was feigned, who, as he was an enemy to learning, calling it poyson; and an enemy to honesty, loving all base vices; so he was an enemy to Constantine secretly (plotting against his person) and to the Christians, because he said that they prayed for Constantine, and not for him. And so he banished some Christians from his Court, and as covertly as he could, for Constantine persecuted divers Bishops and other Christians, very sorely, for about six years.	96

					Constantius the good Emperor, the Father of Constantine died a natural death, and was buried at York.
		Julius.			Diocletian died (as some write) by his own poison. Others say with sorrow of Constantine's prospering.
331					About the time of this Persecution was St. Alban, who was the first that I find that suffered Martyrdom in this Kingdom.	98
					Romanus, a rare Martyr, suffered at this time, who said, that so many wounds as he had, so many mouths he had to praise God.
					A very young Child is a Confessor of Christs God-head, and is martyred, the Mother rejoycing in the same.	99

					Great Persecution there was in Persia, where were slain sixteen thousand Martyrs.
					Constantinus writes to the King of Persia in behalf of the Christians.
					Also he sets forth Edicts in his own Kingdom, of all peace and liberty (the Persecutors being now vanquished) and sets up Schools, prescribes Prayers, establisheth Religion, &c. in his Empire; conferring many priviledges upon the Clergy.

In the time of this Vortiger, the Picts and Scots so spoiled this Land, that Vortiger 121 was feign to have aid of the Saxons; which Saxons, at last growing strong, began to subdue the Land to themselves. Whereupon the Britains complained to Vortigern against the repairing of so many Saxons. But he not hearkning to them, was after seven years reign deposed by them, and Vortimer his Son is chosen King in his room, as followeth in the Table.

This Vortimer in some good measure suppresseth the Saxons. At length he was poisoned of his stepmother, having reigned six years.

Then the said Vortigern, before deposed, having again obtained this Kingdom, Hengistus enters it with abundance of Saxons. And when he saw the Britains too strong for him, he concluded peace with them; and under that covert, works Treason, slaying the Barons at Salisbury Plain; and thereby took the King Prisoner: And so in this Kingdom of England began the Kingdoms of the Saxons, until they came to seven Kingdoms, all Saxonish. Yet so, as though the Britains were thus deceived of their Land by the Saxons, the Britains were not utterly driven out, but that a certain Kingdom remained amongst them in some part of the Land; namely, about Cornwal and the parts of Cambria, which is divided into two parts, viz. South-Wales, called Demetia; and North-Wales, called Venedocea. Yea, many time the Britains did win upon the Saxons, till the time of Carecius; at which time the Britains were utterly vanquished out of Britain to Wales by Gormundus, whom they themselves sent for out of Ireland for their help.

Of the Kings of Kent, the first Kingdom of the seven, this Hengistus was slain.—Ethelbert, the first Saxon that received the faith, and subdued the other Kings, all save Northumberland. —King Ercombert first commanded Lent to be fasted in his Dominions. —Egebert killed his Uncles two Sons. —To Eadricus his time all Canterbury Archbishops were Italians. — In the Reign of this Baldred, his Kingdom was translated to Egbert King of West Saxons, who subdued him, Anno 832. and gave the Kingdom to his younger Son Athelstan; who dying, it was given to the elder Son of Egbert, named Ethelwolf. This Kingdom lasted 342 years.

Of the Kings of South-Saxons; Cissa gave being and name to Cicester where he reigned. —Nancanleus a Britain, the chief Marshal of King Uter, whom Porth the Saxon slew. — This Porth came in at the Haven called Porth-mouth from his name. —The little mention in Authors of Ethelwelfus, makes me think him to be that Adelwold, who is also called Ethelwald, which is afterwards named. —The little mention of Authors of Condebert and Ethelred, makes me think them to be those Kings of Kent, Ercombert and Egebert reigning at the same time. —Adelwold was

Of the Kings of West-Saxons (their Kingdom containing Somersetshire, Barkeshire, Dorsetshire, Devonshire, and Cornwal) Kinigilsus was the first Christened King of this Kingdom of West-sax: He was after a Monk. —Cedwalla went to Rome, and there was Christened and died. —Iva went to Rome, and was made Monk. —Sigebert slew a good Counsellor for giving him good advice. He was deposed of his people, and slain of that Counsellors Swine-herd. ——Egbert subdued the other Kingdoms to him, began the Monarchy, and turned the name Britain into Anglia. This longest continuing Kingdom lasted till W. Conqueror's coming. This Kingdom lasted 554 years.

Of the Kings of Northumberland. Ida had six Children by his Wife, and six by his Concubine. —After Adda some Chronicles put in Bernicia, King Glappa, Theonulfus, Frihulfus, Theodoricus. — Ethelfrid slew the Monks of Bangor, being twenty two hundred, because they prayed for the good success of the Britains. —Edwin, the first Christened converted King of this Kingdom. —Osric and Eausrid are not reckoned in the Race of Kings, because they revolted from Christianity, and were slain. —Oswald with a small number conquered Penda his great Army through Prayer. He sent for Aedanus into Scotland to preach, which as he did in Scottish, the King expounded into English. He gave much alms —Oswius fighting against Penda, vowed to make his Daughter a Nun, giving with her twelve Lordships to build twelve Monasteries. —Oswius slays his partner Oswinus, and chooseth another. —Egfred married Etheldrida, who after twelve years could not be allured to ly with him, getting licence of him to be made a Nun, and after an Abbess. She made but one Meal a day, and never wore linen. —Alfrid (as Beda saith) was exactly seen in the Scriptures. —Osred began his Reign at eight years old. Celufe, after he had reigned eight years, was made a Monk. To him Beda wrote his History. —Mollo was made away with by Alfredus his subtil Train: Which Alfredus also after ten years was expulsed of his own people. Ethelbert was also expulsed. —The two last Kings were slain. This Kingdom lasted 409 years.

gius would not permit this Gregory to effect these allusions, but after, being Bishop next to Pelagius, he sent over Austin, with other Preachers about the number of forty. Austin sends to the said Gregory, to be resolved of divers doubts about the behaviour of Bishops, Marriage of Priests &c. which Gregory answers, granting Wives to the Priests that could not contain. Vol. 1. Page. 131

Austin, of a Monk, by Gregory his Pall made Archbishop of Canterbury: After he had baptized a great part of Kent, he made two Archbishops by the command of the said Gregory, viz. the Archbishop of London, and the Archbishop of York.

This Austin chargeth the said Bishops to assist in preaching to the English men, and that Reformation should be made in the Scottish and British Churches, in divers things; particularly, to change their time of Easter, to the custom of Rome: But the Scots and Britains utterly refused to change their custom.

Austin was so proud, that he would not bow to seven Bishops, and one Archbishop, coming to a Council at his command; whereupon the said Bishops and Archbishop was so perverse, that they denied to assist him to convert the Idolatrous Saxons. A great fault on both sides. 132

Austin baptized (as Authors say) 10000 in one day, viz. the Feast of Christs Nativity. Observe, Fonts were not then in use; nor were there many Trinkets used about Baptism, as now at Rome; else Austin could not have baptised so many in one day.

Austin sate some fifteen years Archbishop. He ordained Lawrence Archbishop.

See also Page 173 of the great Volume.

Aout this time departed Gregory Bishop of Rome, of whom it is said, he was the basest of all his Predecessors, and the best of all his successors.

About this time died David, Archbishop of Cairleon.

About this time was Joh. Patriarch of Alexandria: who of a hard sparing man became bountiful in Hospitality to the poor. He would twice a Week sit all the day at his Door, to take up matters, and make unity where was any variance. He lamented much one day because none came that day to him, as having done no good. But his Deacon perswaded him rather to joy, that he had brought the City into that good order, that there needed no reconcilement. 133

He was a malicious detractor of Gregory and his works. He continued scarce two years.

See Page 173 of the great Volume.

He did more hurt in his one year being Bishop, than Gregory could do good in many. He obtained of Phocas the wicked Emperor, that he and his successors in that See should have an universal head-ship over all the Churches in Christendom.

This Boniface the Fifth sent Letters and Presents to K. Edwin of Northumberland, a Pagan, to win him to the faith. 134

Justus ordained Paulinus Archbishop of York. Of him see also Page 173 of the great Volume. 134

K. Edwin being wounded by Treason with a Sword, was thereupon moved to cause that his Daughter should be baptized, and twelve more of his Family, in token that he also would be christened, as he promised to Christ, if he should give him Victory in Battel over the King of the Westsaxons. But when he had the Victory, he neglected his promise, excusing himself, that he might not clearly deny his old Law which his Forefathers had kept so long, and suddenly be christened without authority and advice of his Council. But by preaching of Paulinus, the first Archbishop of York, he left his Mahometry. At last by Peculinus his earnest prayers to God, and pressing the King with his promise, he received the faith, and was baptized with many of his Subjects with him. After this the said Paulinus baptized daily many multitudes. And great peace was throughout the Kingdom, so that a Woman laden with Gold might have gone quietly.

Of Honorius Archbishop, see Page 173 of the great Volume.

Six years after Edwin's Baptism (who brought in the faith in the North parts) was he slain in Battel by Cedwalla the British King and by wicked Penda King of the Mercians, in the Field called Hatfield. 135

Edwin being dead, and Cedwalla with his Britains and wicked Penda with his idolatrous Mercians, spoiling the Country, Paulinus, with the Queen Edelburg, was fain to fly by water into Kent, where Paulinus was Bishop of Rochester nineteen years: No Bishop being in Northumberland for thirty years after. But Paulinus had left James, a godly Deacon, who preached and baptized many, till peace and the former condition of that Country returned.

By means of Edwin, Erpwaldus King of the East-angles, was reduced to Christs Faith.

After Edwin and his Son, ſlain both in Battel, Oſricus and Enfridus reigned there, the one in Deira, the other in Bernicia. Theſe two being firſt Chriſtened in Scotland, after being Kings returned to their Idolatry, and ſo the year following were both ſlain by Cedwalla and Penda.

After whom ſucceeded Oſwaldus, ruling both Provinces, Deira and Bernicia; whom when Cedwalla and Penda thought to ſlay alſo, he being ſmaller in number, cried to God in prayer, to help him, for the ſalvation of his people, againſt thoſe two enemies, and ſo in the field called Denesbury, he conquered Cedwalla and Penda.

This Oſwald diſdained not to expound and preach the Goſpel to his people.

By this Oſwald's means, Kinigilſus, King of Weſtſaxons was converted, through the preaching of Berinus, who was ſent by Pope Honorius into England to preach; which Berinus was made Biſhop of Dorcheſter, by whom Kinigilſus was baptiſed. 135

Kinigilſus made the ſame day, the ſame Oſwaldus to be both his Godfather and his Son-in-law.

Oſwald, having reigned nine years is ſlain by Penda.

Penda is ſlain by Oſwie the Brother of Oſwald, King after him in the Kingdom of Northumberland. He married his Daughter to Weda, Son of Penda, and made him King of South-Mercia, upon condition he ſhould become a Chriſtian, which when Penda his Father was dead, he performed.

Wolferus his Brother ſucceeded, who was chriſtened, and is counted the firſt chriſtened K. of Mercia.

Aidanus a Scottiſh Biſhop, having a ſtately and princely Horſe given him with Trappers, by K. Oſwine of Deira, to the end that he might not ſo much travel on foot: meeting a poor man asking alms of him as he rode, and having nothing elſe to give him, gave him his Horſe trapped as he was. The K. rebuking him for parting with that choice Horſe, when other meaner might have ſerved the Begger; the Biſhop replied, Doſt thou, O King, ſet more by an Horſe the foal of an Horſe, than by the Son of Mary, yea, the Son of God? At which words the King fell at his feet, promiſing never after to gainſay any charity he ſhould ſhew.

Benedict or Benet, ſirnamed B. (who brought up Bede from ſeven years old, all his life in learning) a Nobleman, and in great favour with King Oſwie, left all honour and preferment to ſerve Chriſt; and furniſhed the Kingdom with good Books fetched from Rome. He alſo brought in Glaſing into England.

Cutbertus, Biſhop, is ſaid to live about this time, with divers other godly Biſhops. But the ſaid Cutbert is not by Writers ſaid to be Archbiſhop of Canterbury till after Anno 735. See after that year.

A Synod about this time is held of divers Biſhops, wherein many held againſt the Britains and Scottiſh Biſhops for the obſerving of Eaſter. For Colman, Archbiſhop of York, and the Britains, according to Aidanus Finianus, and the other Biſhops their Predeceſſors had held, and as the Scottiſh Biſhops then did hold, did obſerve contrary to the uſe among the Romans and Saxons, the time of Eaſter from the fourteenth day of the firſt month, till the eight and twentieth of the ſame Month; whether it were Sabbath or no. The other ſide, as Wilfrid the Prieſt, who ſpake for the reſt, as Agilbert, &c. held that according to the cuſtom of Rome, Italy, France, Aſia, Africk, Egypt and Greece, Eaſter ſhould not be kept on the fourteenth day, unleſs it were Sabbath; but to be reſpited to the next Sabbath between the fourteenth and the one and twentieth day. The former ſide alledged for their Tenet, Saint John the Evangeliſts example. This latter alledged St. Peter's. The King concludeth thus. For ſo much as St. Peter is the Door-keeper of Heaven, I will not gainſay him, but obey his orders, leſt when I come to the Gates of Heaven, he ſhut them againſt me. To this reaſon the multitude yielded. But Colman in diſpleaſure left the Realm, and went into Scotland. 136 137

Wolferus converting the Southſaxons that they had received Baptiſm, preſently they had Rain, which they had wanted three years, cauſing a great Famine, inſomuch that the people would go forty together upon the Rocks, and take hands, and throw themſelves down into the Sea.

Wilfrid taught the Southſaxons the art of fiſhing with Nets.

About this time the deteſtable Sect of Mahumet, began to take ſtrength and place. Of Mahumet came the Kingdom of Agarens, whom he after named Saracens; to whom he gave ſundry laws patched of many Sects. He taught them to pray with their faces to the South. As we keep Sunday, ſo they keep Friday; which they call the day of Venus. He permitted them to have as many Wives as they were able to maintain; and to have as many Concubines as they liſted; to abſtain from Wine, except on ſome ſolemn days of the year; to have and to worſhip one God Omnipotent; and to eſteem Moſes and the Prophets great, but Chriſt as greater; as being 138

That Monks ſhould not ſtray from their own Monaſtery to another: Nor a Clergy-man from his own Biſhop to anothers Dioceſs. That Synods Provincial ſhould be kept in the Realm at leaſt once a year; with divers other Ordinances of like nature.

In the next year after that Synod, was held the ſixth General Council at Conſtance: At which was Theodore under Pope Agatho preſent, where it was permitted that Greek Prieſts ſhould have wives, and forbidden to the Latin.

In the ſixth year of Iva, beginning to reign about this time, moſt valiantly warring againſt the Kentiſh Saxons, was one Cuthlake a Confeſſor, who firſt was a Monk, and after an Anchorite. 139

Oſredus ſucceeds his Father Alfride in Northumberland.

Philippicus is mentioned after pag. 143.

In the 16th year of Iva, Ethelred King of Mercia having reigned 30 years, was made a Monk, and after Abbot of Bardney.

P. Conſt. is mentioned pag. 143.

This year being about the 18th of King Ive his reign, died that learned Biſhop Adelmus, firſt Abbot of Malmesbury, after Biſhop of Shirbourne; which See was after united to Winton.

John of Beverly, Biſhop of York, dieth.

In the time of Ive, who reigned 37 years, began firſt the right obſervation of Eaſter-day by the Picts and Britains: in which obſervation three things are neceſſary:

1. The full Moon of the firſt Month, (1) of March.
2. The Dominical Letter.
3. The Equinoctial day, which was wont to be counted, in the Eaſt Church, and eſpecially among the Egyptians, to be about the 17th of March.

So that the Full Moon, either on the Equinoctial day, or after the Equinoctial day, being obſerved, the next Dominical-day following that Full Moon, is to be taken for Eaſter-day. But then two things muſt be noted,

1. That the fulneſs of the Moon muſt be perfectly full: So that it be the beginning of the third week of the Moon, which is the fourteenth or fifteenth day of the Moon.
2. That the ſaid perfect fulneſs of the Moon, beginning the third week, muſt happen either in the very evening of the Equinoctial day, or after the Equinoctial day: For elſe, if it happen either on the Equinoctial day before the evening, or before the Equinoctial, it belongeth to the laſt month of the laſt year, and not to the firſt month of the firſt year, and ſo ſerveth not to be obſerved.

This rite in keeping Eaſter being received in the Latin Church, began now among the Picts and Britains, through the buſie travel of Theodorus Cuthlacus, but namely of Elbert the holy Monk, as they term him, and of Colfrid, Abbot of Sirwin.

This Colfrid wrote alſo to Narcanus, or Naitonus the King of the Picts, concerning the ſhaving of Prieſts Crowns, as neceſſary to the Vow of a Monk, or degree of a Prieſt, for reſtraint. And thus began this Ceremony, without any proof of Scripture.

Pope Gregory the ſecond is mentioned pag. 143.

King Ive yet reigning, being the 37th year of his reign, is importunately perſwaded by his Queen Ethelburga to turn Monk at Rome; to which, when he did not at firſt yield, the King departing to ſome other place, the Queen cauſed all the Kings glorious Palace to be ſmeared and filled with Hogs, and dung, and filth, and in their lodging Chamber was put a Sow with young Pigs. Then the Queen brings the King to that Palace, ſaying, I pray you my Lord, behold this houſe, where are now all the rich hangings, and clothes of gold, &c. that were left here the other day? be not all theſe gone? In like manner ſhall we vaniſh away, and our bodies, now delicately fed, ſhall turn to the filth of the earth; wherefore remember my words, and purchaſe that Palace 140 that is eternal. Thus ſhe did win the King to go to Rome in the habit of a poor man, and become a Monk; and ſhe her ſelf became the Abbeſs of Barking Nunnery, ſeven miles from London. Vol. 1. Page

This Ive was the firſt I read of, of all the Saxon Kings, the which did ſet forth any Laws to his people.

Next to Oſricus followed Celulfus, who was a very learned man, and his time nouriſhed many learned men; among whom was Beda, who dedicated his ſtory, intituled, Anglorum Hiſtoria, not only to be ratified, but alſo to be amended, as ſome Writers affirm.

This Beda (becauſe we have now mentioned him) was (as he witneſſeth in his Hiſtory) a Prieſt of the Monaſtery of Peter and Paul at Wire, and born in the Territories of the ſame Monaſtery. He was from ſeven years bred up by Benet, and became a Deacon at nineteen years, and at thirty a Prieſt: From which time to the nine and fiftieth year, he interpreted the Works of Ancient Fathers, and wrote Treatiſes to the number of thirty ſeven Volumes, which he digeſted into ſeventy eight Books.

For this Beda wrote Pope Sergius the firſt, requiring Celfrid Abbot of Wire-Abbey, to ſend up the ſaid Beda to Rome, for the fame of his learning: The Church of Rome (as appears by that Sergius his Letter) making uſe of Beda for diſcuſſing of many controverſies in learning; all the Latin Church giving him the maſtery in judgment and knowledg of the Latin Fathers. In all his explanations he omitting curioſity of skill, mainly endeavoured to inform his Reader in the love of God, and of his neighbour. Thus Beda continued to the age of ſixty two years. He tranſlated the Goſpel of St. John into Engliſh. He made a comfortable and godly end.

Of Conſtantine the ſixth. See the firſt great Vol. pag. 686.

Pope Zachary is mentioned following in this page.

See alſo pag. 137. of the great Volume, how he forbad all Funeral Exequies, and lamentations to be made for him.

Egbert King of Northumberland erected a Noble Library in York.

This Cuthbert collected this year a great Synod of Biſhops and Prelates, in the month of September, at Cloneſho: there decreeing that Biſhops ſhould be more diligent in admoniſhing the people, live in peace, viſit yearly the Pariſhes of their Dioceſs: That Prieſts ſhould not be ordained till their lives were examined, being ordained, ſhould not meddle with ſecular affairs: with divers other Ordinances touching Monaſteries, Baptiſm, the Holy Supper, Prayer, &c.

Of Leo the Fourth, Emperor of Greece, beſides this page, ſee p. 147.

A Copy of theſe Ordinances Cuthbert ſends to Boniface Biſhop of Mentz, an Engliſh man, which Boniface died a Martyr, as Popiſh ſtories term him. 142

This Boniface, Biſhop of Mentz, writes to Ethelbald King of Mercia in Latin rebuking him, that whiles he contemned lawful Matrimony, he did defile the ſacred Nuns.

This Boniface being admitted Archbiſhop of Magunce by Pope Gregory, the ſecond, brought divers Countries of the Germans under the Pope, and ſet up abundance of Popiſh Prelates and Ceremonies, as worſhipping of Reliques, &c.

☞ In the time of this Archbiſhop, Pope Gregory the ſecond, Pope Gregory the third, Pope Zachary, and before theſe, Conſtantine, the firſt, wrought great maſteries againſt the Greek Emperors, Philippicus, and Leo, and others; for the maintaining of Images to be ſet up in Churches: of whom Philippicus loſt both his Empire and both eyes; and Leo loſt the Popes bleſſing, being Excommunicated by Gregory the third. This Gregory the third was he that penned the four Books of Dialogues in Greek, falſely bearing the name of Gregory the firſt: Which Books after Zachary his ſucceſſor tranſlated into Latin. Of Leo the fourth, ſee in Ann. 775.

Alſo by the authority of the ſaid Archbiſhop Boniface, which he had received from Pope Zachary, Childericus King of France, was depoſed from the right of his Crown, and Pipinus the betrayer of his Maſter, was confirmed.

From this Boniface proceeded that deteſtable Doctrine regiſtred in the Popes Decrees, Diſt. 40. That though the Pope were ſo wicked in himſelf, and towards others, that he led innumerable ſouls to Hell, yet no man ought to rebuke him, having power to judg all men.

Kenulphus ſucceeds ſlain Sigebert, defending his Lordſhip ſtrongly againſt his enemies, till he reſorting to a Paramour he kept at Merton, was there beſet and ſlain.

Offa King of Mercia winning victories of the Kentiſhmen, took ſuch diſpleaſure againſt Canterbury, that he moved the Primacy, the Archbiſhops See, and Lands of Lambrith (by the agreement of Pope Adrian) to Lichfield.

Stephanus Predeceſſor, viz. Pope Zachary, gave the Kingdom of France to Pipinus, depoſing Childerike; and now Pipin gratifies the See of Rome, in giving this Stephanus his time, to that See, the Exarchat or Princedom of Ravenna, the Kingdom of the Lombards, many other great poſſeſſions of Italy, with all the Cities thereto adjoyning, 144

To this Pipinus was sent into France the invention of Organs out of Grecia, by Constantine, Emperor of Constantinople.

This Pope Paul thundred out Excommunications against Constantine Emperor of Constantinople, for pulling down Images in Churches: but the said Emperor slighting the Pope, held on in his practice, destroying Idolatry to the end of his life.

Of this Archbishop, see pag. 173. of the great Volume.

This Pope Constantine was a Lay-man: for the which he was shortly deposed, his eyes thrust out, and he thrust into a Monastery.

This Pope made a Decree that no Lay-man should be Pope. Also he condemned the seventh Council of Constantinople, as heretical, for condemning worshipping of Images.

This Pope wrote a Book of the worshipping and utility of Images, calling them Lay-mens Kalenders, holding a Synod against them that speak against them.

Of Lamb. Archbishop, see pag. 173. of the great Volume, how that Metropolitan See in his time was translated to Lichfield.

Pope Adrian clothed the body of St. Peter in silver, and covered the Altar of St. Paul with a pall of gold.

King Celuphus as his Father turned Monk, dies this year; wherein many Cities, as London, Wint. York, Doncaster, were burned with sudden fire, pag. 85.

Till this time the Liturgy of St. Ambrose was much used in the Italian Churches. But now this Adrian confirms the Mass of St. Gregory above the Mass of St. Ambrose, by a pretended revelation and miracle, that when Ambrose his Mass-book, and Gregories Mass-book were put upon an Altar in a Church, the doors sealed up, the morrow the leaves of St. Gregories Book were scattered abroad in the Church, and the other Book lay open upon the Altar: which Adrian expounded, that Gregories Mass should be dispersed thoroughout the Church, and not that of St. Ambrose.

Carolus following his Father Pipins devotion, did confirm his Fathers Donations to the See of Rome, adding also thereunto the City and Dominion of Venice, Histria, &c. The Pope to requite his kindness, makes him to be intituled, Most Christian King. This Charles makes the Pope Prince of Italy and Rome; and makes Charles Patricium Romanum, and moreover ordained him only to be taken Emperor of Rome. 145

In this year 780, it rained blood at York; which is thought of some Expositors, to betoken the coming of the Danes into the land, who entred about seven years after, in the ninth year of Brightricus King of Westsaxons.

Edelburga poysoneth King Brightricus her Husband, and after playing the Harlot with a Monk, ended her life in great penury and misery. 146

Irene Empress of Greece, takes up at Constantinople the body of Constantine Emperor of Constantinople, her Husbands Father, and having burnt it, casteth the ashes into the sea, for that he disanulled Images.

Egbert of the blood royal, is banished by Brightricus now raigning over the Westsaxons in England; because the said Brightricus feared Egberts coming to his Crown.

The Archbishop Ethelard, by his Epistles to Pope Leo, obtained the Metropolitan See again to Canterbury, see pag. 173. of the great Volume.

King Offa dies. After him succeeds Egfert, then Kenulphus, after him his son, who in his tender age was wickedly murthered by his sister Quinreda.

Thus far of the troublesome seven Kingdoms of the Saxons; of whom observe these general observations.

1. That they brought in the first Cross and Altar into this Kingdom, Anno 635.
2. They set up Schools at Cambridge, Anno 630.
3. They set up about { Eleven Monasteries, besides four built by King Edgar. / Four Nunneries. / Thirteen more noted Abbeys, besides many of less note.
4. That Queens and Kings daughters, amongst them in all to the number at least of eighteen, have turned Nuns.
5. That at least nine of those Saxon Kings became Monks.

In this time came in the Danes first into the North parts of England, and were driven out again.

Egbert,

Anno Christi	Emp. of France.	Roman Bishops.	Kings of England.	Archbishops of Canterbury.		Anno Christi
			The 7 Kingdoms of the Saxons are united into a Monarchy.	Ulfredus.	Egbert, of the blood Royal, being chased into France by Brightricus, as we said, for safety of his Crown from so near a blood; and Brightricus being now dead, he speeds from France into Westsax, obtaining by his wise behaviour the said Kingdom. Bernulphus King of Mercia, and other Kings deriding him with scoffs and rimes, provokes him to bid Bernulph battel, wherein he conquered him, and possessed his Kingdom. Then made he war upon the Kentish Saxons, and conquered them. He also subdued Northumberland. Thus he brought these three Kingdoms to be tributary to him, and joyned them to his Kingdom. Also this Egbert wan from the Britains the Town of Chester. Thus these victories being gotten, he calls a Council at Wincheſter, and is Crowned King over this land, which before was called Britain: but he sent out command and Commissions, that from that day forward the Saxons should be called Angles, and the land Anglia.

824					A General Synod is held at Aquisgrane, by the command of Ludovicus the Emperor, King of France. There Pope Gregory the Fourth decrees that Priests should have maintenance of Lands belonging to their several Churches, and not go about begging. All glorious apparel, rings, &c. forbidden Priests.

832				Feologeldus, alias, Theologild. In the same year, viz. 832 was, Celnothus.	About this year the Heathenish people of the Danes (who a little before in Northumberland had murthered the Ministers, and ruined the Churches) came the second time with a great host into England. Egbert gave them battel, but had the worst.
833
834					The Danes are incouraged by their success against Egbert to enter again this year into England; and in long time and many years after could not be utterly beaten out.
					Thus this Kingdom hath been hitherto plagued with five sundry Nations: Namely, 1. By the Romans. 2. By the Scots. 3. By the Picts. 4. By the Saxons. 5. By the Danes.
837	Lotharius.
840			ETHELWOLFUS.		Ethelwulfus the Son of Egbert, and in former time a Deacon, and after a Bishop of Wincheſter (as some will) is King after his Father, by dispensation of the Pope, but still in mind devout to his Order, giving the tenth of his goods and lands in Westsaxons to the Clergy.
844					He gave also Peter-pence to Rome, (i.e.) a peny of every fire house thorough his Kingdoms, with many more Donations to Rome.	154
					He married Judith the Daughter of Carolus Calvus, the French King: whom he restored to the title of Queen. For before it was a Decree of the Westsaxons, for Queen Ethelburga's poysoning of her Husband King Brightricus, that no Kings Wife should have the title of Queen.
843		Sergius the second.			In the later end of the reign of this Ethelwulfus the Danes brake into England, doing great spoil on the land and lives, and blood of men.
846		Leo the fourth.			This Pope, whose name was Os Porci, for the shame thereof, was the first that brought in the altering of Popes names.	153
					This Pope Leo was Tutor or Guardian to Alured, committed to him by Ethelwulf the Father of Alured.
					This Pope ordained that no Bishop should be condemned under seventy two Witnesses. An example was practised in condemnation of Stephen Gardiner.
854		Joan, called John the eighth.			This Pope Joans proper name was Gilberta. She was a Dutch woman of Magunce; who going out of the Abbey of Fulda, with an English Monk in mans apparel to Athens, and becoming learned, by her wit came to sit Pope two years and six months. At last in an open procession fell into travel with her child, and so died. Ever since the Cardinals come not by that part of the street where this shame was.
		Benedict 3.
856					This Benedict ordained Dirge for the dead.
857			Ethelbald.		Ethelbald the first Son succeeds Ethelwulfe his Father in the Kingdom of Westsaxons. He is infamous for lying with, and marrying of his step-mother.	156
			Ethelbrit, alias, Ethelbertus.		Ethelbrit the second Son succeeds his Father Ethelwulfe in the Kingdom of Kent.
					After these two, the third son of Ethelwulfe, viz. Ethelred, succeeded; who was mightily troubled with the Danes.
858		Nicholas the 1. or Magnus.			This Pope Nicholas enlarged the Popes Decrees, equalling them to the writings of the Apostles. He decreed that Service should be in Latin: He began the forbidding Priests to marry: against which Hulderick Bishop of Ausburgh wrote a learned Epistle to the said Pope, proving the lawfulness of Priests marriage.
867		Adrian, alias Hadrian the second. See p. 180. of the great Vol.
870			Ethelred.		After Ethelbald and Ethelbrit succeeded Etheldred their Brother, the third son of their Father Ethelwulfe.
871				Etheredus, alias, Athelredus.	In the later days of King Ethelred, the Danes invaded this land, spoiling and murthering.

879					Alured was eminent above his Predecessors, for Valor, Vertue and Learning. He was the first English King. He was much vexed with the Danes, who did win from him all the North part of England, from the River Thames. For amongst the Britains, long before, in King Arthurs time, in the Town of Chester, was taught Grammar, Philosophy, and other Arts and Sciences. After, in Egberts time (as Writers affirm) Philosophy began to flourish in England. About which time, as some think, Grancheſter University by Cambridge began to be founded by Beda. Sigebert also Founded Schools in England, as Alcbuinus will. And yet before these, some think that Greeklade, a Greek University; and Latinlade, a Latine University in this Land, was Founded.

942				Elfius.	King Edmund is slain by Pulcher Church. See the first great Vol. p. 196. col. 1.
			EDWIN.		Edwin the eldest son of King Edmund, succeeds in the Throne after King Edmund.	169
946					This King Edwin kept a strange Woman, the Wife of a man whom he had slain (as some say) to which Woman he on the first day of his Coronation, breaking from his Lords, and going into the Chamber; Dunstan Abbot of Glastenbury, follows him, brings him back by the hand, accuses him to Otho Archbishop; Otho separates him from the Woman, and suspends him out of the Church. For this Dunstan is made fly over the Sea, and the Monks, as well in other Monasteries as Dunstans of Glastenbury, are thrust out, and Secular Priests put in their room.
955		John 13.			This was Pope John the Twelfth (as others reckon.) He was an Adulterer, a Whore-master, an Incestuous person, an Extortioner, a Gainster. From his wicked merriment in these Evils, came the Proverb, As merry as Pope John. He cuts out the Tongues, puts out the Eyes, cuts off the Noses and Fingers of his Cardinals. He himself at last is deposed, but after restored. Of him see the first great Vol. p. 205.
					Edwin is hated for his misdemeanors of his Subjects, chiefly them of Northumberland and Mercia, by whom he is removed from his Kingly Honor, and Edgar received in his stead. So that the River Thames divided both their Kingdoms. Edwin having reigned four years alone, dies without Heir, and so Edgar his Brother succeeds.
959			EDGAR.		He began his Reign this year, being fifteen years old; but was not Crowned till fourteen years after. He calls home exiled Dunstan, makes him Bishop of Worceſter, then of London.
				Dunstan.	Otho or Odo Archbishop dying, King Edgar makes Dunstan Arch-Bishop.
		Leo the 8.			This Pope Leo, (of whom see the first great Volume, p. 205.) was substituted Pope in the room of the former deposed Pope John. But the said John being restored, this Leo was deposed. Of this Pope Leo, see pag. 205. of the first great Volume col. 2.
963					Dunstan gets the King to make Oswaldus, Nephew of Otho (as it is said) Bishop of Worceſter.
					Not long after, the said King Edgar, at Dunstans intreaty, made Ethelwoldus first Monk of Glastenbury, then Abbot of Abendon, to be Bishop of Wincheſter. Of him is related a Vision, appearing to him, of a Tree, whose Branches covered the four Quarters of the Kingdom, and were covered with Monks Cowls, and with one master Cowl on the top, &c.
					Whether this Dream be feigned or no, it was made good in effect, Dunstan, Oswald, and Ethelwold, making Monks to swarm in this Edgars time in England.	170
964		Benedict 5.			The Romans setting up this Benedict after Pope John, and not setting in and restoring again Pope Leo the Eighth, deposed contrary to the Emperor Otto his mind; the said Emperor besieged Rome, and puts in again Leo the Eighth, who gratifies the Emperor, with giving to him and his Successors in a Synod, the power of Electing a Pope.
965		John 14.			Alias John the Thirteenth: of him see the first great Volume, p. 205.
969					Oswald (made Arch-bishop of York) by policy makes many Priests turn Monks, or to leave their place.
					Monks anciently were but strict Lay-men; insomuch as they were forbidden to meddle with Ecclesiasticals.	171

					Baſilius magnus, and Nazianzenus, were Monks.
					The ground of mens Founding Monaſteries of later times, was, that Monks might pray for them when they were dead; or elſe by way of ſatisfaction for ſome murder committed by the Founders.	172
					King Edgar was a good Juſtitiary, in execution of Laws juſtly.
					This King made this Land one perfect Monarchy.	173
					This King having ſubdued men, drives out too the Wolves out of this Land.
					He was exceeding Watchful, and well provided for the Defence of the Seas.
					To prevent Drunkenneſs in his Subjects, he cauſed to be made Cups with pins to be ſet in them; adding a Law, that he that drank at a draught beyond his mark, was to pay a penny: half to the Accuſer, the reſt to the Ruler of the Town.
					Eight Kings called Subreguli, did Homage to this Edgar, whom in pomp he made to row him in a Boat, himſelf holding the Helm.
					He was given to Women, and a great Monk-maker, and a deflowrer of a Nun. For which Dunſtan refuſed to take him by the hand, when the King offered it; and injoyns the King Penance for ſeven years, of wearing no Crown for that time, of Faſting twice in the Week, of Liberality to the Poor, and building a Nunnery.	174
971					Doting Dunſtan was drowned in Superſtition, if not a Sorcerer too. He is ſaid to catch the Devil by the Noſe with a pair of Tongs red hot.	174

Then Boniface returns, and ſo are two Popes at the ſame time. See the ſaid p. 206.
		This Boniface the 7 and this John the 15. are both Popes at once...			Much ſtir at this time about placing and diſplacing Monks, cauſed ſtir about the Crown, Monks aiming at ſuch a King as would be a Monk favorer: at laſt, this Edward by Dunſtans means was choſen.	175
976 Others count 8 years more.			EDWARD the martyr.		This Edward was not, in truth, a Martyr, as the common opinion goes; but was truly a Baſtard.
		John the 15.			Of this John the Fifteenth, alias (as others will) John the Fourteenth, and Boniface, had their ends, ſee the firſt great Volume, pag. 206. col. 1. John having his eyes put out, and he himſelf famiſhed in Priſon, Boniface dyes, and after is dragged through the City, the people triumphing in it.
977					An Image of the Crucifix of Rood, by Dunſtans device, is made to anſwer to a Council met and praying to this Image, ſuch an anſwer as might carry the concluſion as Dunſtan would; in theſe words, Abſit hoc ut fiat, &c. (i.) Far be that, far be that: you have well judged, you would not do well to change.	177
					Dunſtan was a great enemy to Prieſts wives.
					King Edward his Step-mother, offering him as he ſate on Horſe-back a cup of Beer, whiles he was drinking, cauſed her Servant to ſtab him; whereupon he rides away towards his Company, falls down dead, and ſo was found; but not known who he was, nor how he dyed, his Horſe having dragged him through much dirt, his Foot hanging in the Stirrup, as he fell dead off his Horſe-back. Two Nunneries are Founded upon his Blood, that that murthereſs Queen had ſhed.	177
		Benedict. 7.			This Benedict (whom Reuſn. and Helv. put before the former Pope John, yea though he be taken for John the Fourteenth) was made Pope by conſent of Otho Emperor, the ſecond of the name.	178
					In the time of this Benedict, Gilbertus a Necromancer is made Archbiſhop of Rains, by Hugh Cappet the French King.
979			EGELRED or ELRED.		Edward being murdered, the Crown comes to this Elred his younger brother. This Elred reigned long, viz. thirty eight years, but very unhappily. As he was Chriſtned, being a Child, by Dunſtan, ſomwhat falling croſs, Dunſtan ſwears by the Holy Virgin, that this will be an untoward Prince.

Anno Christi	Emp. of Germ.	Popes of Rome.	Kings of England. Kings of Britain in Wales.	Archbishops of Canterbury.		Vol. I. Page.
					Against this Gregory, maliced because he was a German, was set up this John the eighteenth, alias John the seventeenth, by Crescentius Consul of Rome. Whereupon Otho the third Emperor, to whom Gregory the fifth flyes, comes with an Army, apprehends John, puts out his eyes, and after puts him to death: and apprehends Crescentius, cuts off his nose and ears, and after so led through the City, having his Members cut off he hanged upon a Gibbet.
		Gregory 5. and John 18. both Popes together.			Gregory is restored, reigns Pope four years.
					This year London is besieged of the Danes.
					The Danes spoiling the Land, caused the English levy of Danegilt, amounting from 10000 per annum, to 40000 per annum, paid to the Danes to buy peace of them.
					Now came in the Lurdane, i. the Lord Dane, who was Lord of the English mans House, Goods, and Wife too.
997	The Empire established in Germany by ordaining seven Electors by the Pope.				Pope Gregory the fifth, being restored to the Popedom, calls a Council at Rome, by the advice of Otho the third, Emperor; and there to confirm the Empire in Germany his own Country, Decrees those seven should be Electors of the Emperor, which are to this day: viz.
					The Bishops of Mentz, Triers, Colen do Elect the Emp'ror; are his Chancellors too: Bohemia's King elects, and bears his cup: And Saxons Duke elects, his Sword holds up. Archsewer is Elector Palatine, And Marques Brandenburg his Chamberlain. These Verses in Latine, see the first great Vol. p. 206.
1000		Silvester 2. made Pope by Magick.			The years of Christ amounting to a thousand, Religion began much more to decay than in former times: Pope Sylvester the second being a Sorcerer, and a most hainous wicked Instrument. See the first great Vol. p. 215.
					This year the Saxons that had driven the Britans from their Land, make way by Elreds joyning in Marriage with the Normans (taking to Wife Emma the Daughter of Rich. the first of that name, the third Duke of Normandy) for a new plague to come upon themselves. For Alred, in confidence of his affinity, gave secret and strict charge to all Towns in England, upon St. Brice his day, at a certain hour, the Danes should be all slain; which caused much trouble.	180
1003		John 19.			Alias John the eighteenth. He brings in the Feast of All-Souls. See the first great Vol. p. 216.
1004					For upon tydings of this at Denmark, King Swanus of Denmark comes into the Land, beats down Exeter, and so came on, spoiling the Country. At length they are beaten out by Duke Uskatel.	180
		Joh 2			Herein Mr. Fox differs from others, who put no John between All-Souls John, and Pope Sergius the fourth.
1004					The Danes land again in this Kingdom, at Sandwich. The King at last was fain to pay them a Tribute of 30000 pounds.
1006				Elphegus, or Elphege.	Many times after, in this Kings time, did the Danes invade and spoil. They stone to death, at Greenwich, Elphegus Archbishop of Canterbury, because he would not pay to them such Taxes as they would impose.
1012		Benedict 8.			The King is driven out of the Land to Normandy by the tyranny of the Danes, they, mean while, laying intolerable Taxes on the people of this Land, whereupon they fell to Prayer and to Fasting; so that shortly Swanus the Prince of the Danes dyed suddenly, yelling and crying. In fear whereof, Canutus his son Reigned here, with shew of much favor to the people. Of Livingus Archbishop, see the first great Vol. p. 215.
1013				Livingus, or Lifwing.	Egelred returns, hearing of Swanus his death, and coming upon Canutus the son, being unprovided, caused him to fly into Denmark.
					But afterward Canutus came again, and took West-saxon.
1016			Edmund Ironside a Saxon, and Canutus a Dane, Kings together in England.		After Egelreds death, much Faction being moved whom to choose for King, Londoners being for Edmund Ironside, Egelreds eldest Son: Others, and chiefly the Clergy, being for Swanus Son, viz. Canutus; having sworn to Swanus his Father. Edmund and Canutus fight many Battels for the Kingdom; and at last a Duel between themselves: Last of all, they agreed to divide the Land between them, and so lived in love till Edmund was stabbed in the Fundament, by the Traiterous Son of Duke Edricus, as he was at the draught house. Then Duke Edricus himself, liking his Sons Fact, it should seem, carryed Edmunds two Sons to Canutus, with these words, Ave Rex solus, (i.) God save thee King alone. Canutus sends them to his Brother Swanus King of Sweedland, to be murdered: but he abhorring that Bloodiness, sent them to Salomon King of Hungary, where the one dyed a natural death: The other, named Edward, was married to Agatha, Daughter of his Brother Henry the fourth, Emperor.	181 dare trust the Traytor that put to death Edmund Ironside his own natural Prince. Vol. 1. Page

This Archbishop Eadsin is not named by Master Fox, as we can find; though he names him before and after him. See the first great Vol. pag. 215.

Canutus governed this land twenty years, in all which time the Danes began by little and little to be Christian men. 182

Canutus dies. Harold Harefoot (so called for his swiftness) his son, reigns in England in his stead.

This Henry the fourth, Emperor, was Excommunicated by four Popes. See the first great Vol. p.245.

Hardeknutus his Brother, King of Denmark, was after him King of England. 182

Of Henricus the third, Emperor, see the first great Vol. p. 216.

About this time, wicked Earl Godwin played his feats.

King Hardeknute, the last of the Danish Kings of England, having reigned here two years, dies without issue.

The Danes from their first landing (in Brightricus time) having vexed this Land 255 years; and having reigned as King twenty eight years; now the last of them being dead without issue, the Crown comes to Edward, the younger son of Egelred, a meer Englishman; returning from his banishment in Normandy, caused by the Danish Kings. He was sent for by the Englishmen, and Crowned this year. His disposition was much averse from war.

Pope Benedict the ninth, as we said, coming to be Pope by Magick, and opposing Henricus the third, Emperor, and putting in his room Petrus King of Hungary. After fearing Henry the fourth prevailing against him, sold his seat to Gregory the sixth for 1500 pounds. Of this Gregory see the first great Vol. p.216.

Contention moved between this King Edward and Earl Godwin, happened about this time; in which Earl Godwin and his five sons were outlawed.

Of these three Popes, see the first great Vol. p.216. where Henricus Niger Emperor, displaceth these three, and puts in Clement the second: and thereupon inacting, That no Bishop of Rome should be chosen without the consent of the Emperor. And the Romans sware their assent to this act.

William Duke of Normandy comes to see the King, and is welcomed; he promising him (as some write) that if he died without issue, he the said William Duke of Normandy should have this Kingdom.

The Romans forgetting their Oath to the Emperor, in nine months poyson this Pope. See the first great Vol. p.216.

Earl Godwin, that had murthered the Kings brother Alfred, wishing in excuse to the King, that the bread he was eating might not be swallowed safely, if he were not guiltless of his death, was presently choaked, and so died.

Of Damasus and Leo, see the first great Vol. p.216.

Of him see the first great Vol. pag.215. Harold (who after was King) was a means of his banishment, in the time of this King Edward.

Of Archbishop Robert, see the first great Vol. p.220.

Of this Archbishop Stigandus, see the first great Vol. p.215.

Of this Pope, see the first great Vol. p.217.

King Edward sends to Henry the fourth Emperor, praying him to send to the King of Hungary, that his Cousin Edward, son of Edmund Ironside, might come into England, for as much as he intended to make him King after him. This request was fulfilled, and he came into England, with his wife and children. 184

This Henry Emperor, began his reign, being a child. Of him see the first great Vol. p.211. and p.217.

The year following his Cousin Edward dies.

Of Pope Benedict the tenth, and Nicholas the second, see the first great Vol. p.217.

Then the King thought to make that Edwards son Edgar Adeling his heir; but fearing (by the pride of Harold the son of Godwin, and the mutability of English hearts) he should not effect it, sent Ambassadors to William Duke of Normandy his Kinsman, assigning him to be lawful heir next to succeed him to the Crown.

Not long after (Godwin being dead) his son Harold grows so wickedly proud, that he ruled all as King, by reason that the King somewhat favoured him. At length he sailing towards Flanders, and being driven by tempest into Normandy, there William Duke of Normandy makes him to swear he would marry his daughter, and that after King Edwards death, he should keep the land of England to his behoof, according to the will and mind of King Edward, and so to live next to him in honour and dignity in the Realm. At his return to England he tells King Edward what he had sworn to Duke William of Normandy, with which the King was well pleased.

Pope Nicholas the second having called a Council at Sutrium, and by the help of Hildebrands device having made Benedict the tenth to unpope himself; now he calls a Council at Rome, which is called the Lateran Council; in which he undermineth the Emperor of his jurisdiction, and confe reth the Election of the Pope upon a few Cardinals.

1060						In this Council Berengarius is made to recant his tenet against real Presence; and Transubstantiation is brought in.
						King Edward dies.
1062						This year Aldredus Bishop of Worcester being to be made Archbishop of York, comes with Earl Tostius of Northumberland to Pope Nicholas to Rome for his Pall, instead of which (for some pretence) was deprived of all his dignity; and as he was returning home, was spoiled of that he carried with him. At last Tostius with rough words to the Pope, makes the Pope give the Bishop his Pall, for all his losses.

		Alexander 2.				Pope Alexander is knockt about the pate by Hildebrand, for seeking the favour of the Emperor, touching his being Pope. The first great Volum, p. 218.
						Harold the second son of Earl Godwin, and last King of Saxons, (notwithstanding many Nobles went with Edgar Adeling, next heir after Edmund Ironside) forgat also his promise to Duke William of Normandy, who contemning Edgars youth, takes upon him to be King.	186
			Harold.
1066						Harold Harefager, son of Canutus King of Norway and Denmark, comes after Edwards death to claim the Crown, with an army. He beats Harold King of England in the first battel; English Harold beats him in the second: and Danish Harold is also slain by the hand of Englands Harold. Tostius also the brother of Harold King of England joyning with the Danes in this battel against his brother, is slain.
						One thousand sixty six a wondrous year; To tell our fall, a Comet doth appear.
						Duke William of Normandy sends an Ambassage to King Harold, admonishing him of his Covenant agreed between them. But because Duke William's daughter was dead, King Harold thought himself disingaged from that agreement. He alledged also that those promises were compelled, and without consent of his Lords, which ought not to be.
						Hereupon, and for two other reasons, namely, to be avenged for the blood of his Nephew Alfrid, King Edwards brother, and of the Normans, of all whose deaths Harold was reputed the principal cause, and to revenge the exilement of Robert Archbishop of Canterbury, whereof Harold was cause, Duke William invades this Kingdom, and conquers Harold in battel, wherein Harold was slain; and so Duke William (who was Cousin German to K. Edward by the Fathers side) gained the Kingdom and Crown. In this Conquest,
						On William's side were slain 6013.
						On Harolds side 66654.
1067			William the Conqueror.			William the Conqueror is Crowned K. of England by Alredus Archbishop of York, Stigandus Archbishop of Canterbury being absent, either for fear or hate of William.	192
						Great Taxes are laid by William upon the land, changing the Laws of K. Edward, although at his coming he had sworn to keep them. (Of which see more p. 214. of the great Vol.)
						Great famine is in Northumberland.	193
						The Scots are subdued to William the Conqueror.

						In this Conquest observe { Gods justices severity. Lack of successions casuality. Foreign Marriages incommodity.
1070						This year William the Conqueror calls a Council. Two Cardinals and he himself are present; who by pretences depose many Bishops: (Among which was Archbishop Stigandus) to the intent to prefer Normans and aliens, as Thomas a Norman to be Archbishop of York, and Lanfrancus a Lombard and Italian born, to be Archbishop of Canterbury.	193
					Lanfrancus.
1074		Hildebrand surnamed Gregory 7.				This Hildebrand caused the Prelates and Popes stoutness against Emperors, long before he was Pope, and now he practiseth it much more, being Pope; casting off the Emperors from Elections of Popes (as the Tragical History of all his evils may be seen in this page of the great Volume) insomuch that Cardinal Benno writes against him of his wickedness.	196
						Osmund the second Bishop of Sarum (Hirmannus a Norman, that began the new Church and Minster, being the first) now finishing the Minster, first began the Ordinary; which was called Secundum usum Sarum.

			Kings of Britain in Wales. Rix, last King of Wales, is slain this year 1093, by W. Rufus.		Henry the fourth, Emperor, attends upon this Pope, with his wife and children barefoot, at his Palace-gate, three days and three nights, before he could be admitted in; then too he is made to swear unreasonable subjection to the Pope in all things: and when all is done, the Pope gives away his Crown to Rodulph Duke of Swevia, with these words,
					The Rock to Peter gave the Diadem, And Peter gives it unto Rodulphs Realm.
1083		Clemens 3.			Hildebrand is accused of grievous crimes in a Council called at Brixia, by Henry the fourth, Emperor, who had been so wronged by Hildebrand. About this time, or not much after Hildebrand the Pope, dies K. William the Conqueror.	204
		Victor 3.			Of Popes see the first great Volume, pag. 239.
					Great Pestilence is in England.
					Rats swim over to a Bishops Tower, that was cruel in time of famine to the poor, and devour him.
		Urban 2.			William Rufus is Crowned by Archbishop Lanfrancus, his elder Brother. Duke Robert in Almaine comes to fight for the Crown; whereupon William Rufus mildly quieted him, by taking the Crown from him at 3000 Marks per Annum, and agreeing that the longest liver of them two should take the Crown.	207.
1091			Will. Rufus is entire Monarch.		The King did not much favour the Pope, because as Matthew Parisiensis writes, They follow not the steps of Peter, but hunt for reward; and had not the power of him, whose holiness they did not imitate.
1092					Lanfrancus Archbishop of Canterbury dies (Polydore much commends him, I see not for what.) After whom the Archbishoprick is void four years.
1093					Extream tempests in England burn a Church, break the head of a Crucifix, throw down the Lady, at Wincomb, and blow down six hundred houses, as also the roof of Bow-Church at London.
					Pope Urban calls a Council at Rome; in it he Excommunicates Lay-persons, that conferred spiritual livings.	208
					Pope Urban calls a Council at Claremount, where he by an Oration moves 30000 to go to Hierusalem, to suppress the tyrannizing Heathens that were over the Christians.
1095				Anselm.	This being about the sixth year of King Rufus, Malcom King of Scots invades England, and is slain (himself having been a great murtherer) with his son Edward, and Margaret his wife.
1096					This same year also, he, after he had kept Canterbury Archbishoprick four years, gave it to this Anselm, who for the Kings kindness, much crossed him in many things for a long time, all Bishops holding with the King against Anselm. Many of those that went to Hierusalem, in the way are by ambushment slain by the Bulgars, near to the Town Civitis. Yet at last when all the armies met, they went on, won some Towns, as Antioch, and slew many Saracens.
1098					Corbona, Master of the Persians Chivalry, is slain by the Christians that went in the said Voyage to Hierusalem; with whom were also slain 100000 Infidels. Shortly after the Christians take Hierusalem. Robert Duke of Normandy was chosen King thereof, but he refused it, because he heard of the death of William Rufus in England; wherefore he never prospered after.	209
					Earl Ludovicus rebells against Henry the fourth, Emperor; against whom and which, Waltramus Bishop of Merburgh writes an Epistle, exhorting him to obedience.	214
					The Earl writes an answer.	ibid.
					This year 1090, (as Gisburn reports) a spring boils out blood three weeks together. See the first great Volume, pag. 256.
1099		Paschalis 2.			Of this Pope Paschalis see the first great Vol. p. 242.
					He sets up again Henry the fourth Emperor, having Excommunicated him, as did Hildebrand his son Henry, making him Emperor, called Henry the fifth; as it follows in Anno 1105. See pag. 254, 255. of the first great Volume.
100			Henry the 1. Sirnamed Beauclerk.		This King Henry the first was William the Conquerors third son, who now succeeds his brother Rufus. He had his name of Beauclerk, for his knowledg in the seven Liberal Arts.	216
					Duke Robert the eldest brother of K. Henry, and first son of William the Conqueror, comes to challenge the Crown of this Henry, as he did of William Rufus. And this Henry promiseth him the three thousand Marks per Annum, as Rufus had before; and so Duke Robert returned to Normandy satisfied. After Duke Robert and K. Henry fall out, and Duke Robert was taken in war a prisoner, brought to England, and kept in prison while he lived. And Normandy was subdued to King Henry the first.
					This King Invested Bishops without the Pope.
1101					About this year 1101, the Bishop of Fluence began to preach of Antichrist to be there born and manifested. Pope Paschalis hereupon calls a Council, silenceth the Bishop, and condemns his Book. See the first great Volume, p. 254.

	Henry 5.				Great variance between Anselme and the King.
1103					Of this Henry the fifth, Emperor, see before in Pope Paschalis the second, and his time and story; and in the next year here following.	217
1105					Henry and Christian two famous Archbishops of Mentz, right vertuous men, were about this time cruelly and tyrannically handled by the Bishop of Rome.	221
					This same year Anselm getting leave of the King to call a Council, in it by his Decrees cuts off the authority of any Lay-persons investing spiritual persons, the freedom of Bishops to bear office in secular mens businesses, and the power of Priests to marry. See the first Volume, p. 251.
1106					The Emperor Henry the fourth being conquered in battel of his rebellious son Henry the fifth, set against him by Pope Paschalis the second, is so poor, that he intreated the Bishop of Spire (to whom he had been kind) to have a Prebend there; having some skill to serve in the Ladies Quire: but the Bishop swearing by the Lady a flat denial; the Emperor forlorn of Son, Kingdom, Bishop, and all, goes to Leodium and there dies (having reigned fifty years) whose body buried, Paschalis takes up again, and causeth it to be kept unburied five years.	222
1107					Henry the fifth coming to be Crowned at Rome, could not obtain it, till he ratified it, that no Emperor should have to do in the Election of the Roman Bishop. Afore he yielded to it; and about other things, there was such opposition between this Henry the fifth and the Pope, that unless he had defended himself with his own hands, he had been slain.
1109					Anselm Archbishop died. The See is void five years. The Bishoprick of Ely first founded. Henry the Bishop.
1110					Trent river dried up about Notingham, from morning till three in the afternoon, that men might go over dry-shod. Gisburn.
1113					Thames this year, from the Tower to the Bridg, from midnight to next evening, scarce knee deep: innumerable people and children wading over; the Tyde falling short of its custom ten miles.
1114					This year Worcester is burnt.
1115					This Pope Gelasius was set up by the Cardinals, without the Emperor.
1118					Thurstinus chosen Archbishop of York; will not make his procession of obedience to the See of Canterbury, where he was consecrated, for which the King deprives him. Hence rose great ado between the Archbishop Thurstinus and the King.
			Rodulphus.		This Pope Gregory is set up by the Emperor.
		Gelasius 2. and Gregory 8. both Popes together.			Pope Gelasius is driven into France.
		Gregory 8. and Calixtus 2. (Gelasius being gone) are both Popes together.			This Pope Calixtus is set up by a few Cardinals. He first excommunicates the Emperor Henry the fifth, then drives P. Gregory out of Rome.
1119					The Emperor is again forced to ratifie his consent, of passing away his right of chooling the Bishop of Rome; and moreover to ratifie this Pope Calix. to be Pope, though the Emperor, P. Gregory was yet alive.
					Pope Calixtus in the business about Thurstin Interdicts the Church of Canterbury and York, and all the Parishes within the same; unless Thurstin without exacting subjection to Canterbury be admitted to the See of York; and that the King (saith the Pope in his Epistle to England) should be excommunicated, except he consented to the same.	224
1122
1125	Lotharius Saxo.	Honorius 2.			Thurstin is received to his See, and reconciled to the King.
					The King calls a Council at London, where he gets the Clergy to give him the punishment of married Priests; which granted, for money the King lets them have their wives.
1128					The Order of the Knights of the Rhodes, called the Johannites, and of the Templars, rose up at this time.
1130		Innocent 2. and Anacletus 2. both Popes together.			The Priory of Norton founded.
					The King is troubled with three Visions, the first of multitudes of Husbandmen flying on him with their Mattocks; requiring the debt he owed unto them. The second of Soldiers, falling upon him. The third of Bishops, threatning him with their Episcopal staves. To prevent the coming to pass of these, he vowed three things: first, repentance, secondly, alms, and thirdly amendment of life.
1131					The King is in a great tempest at Sea in this year 1131. He releaseth to the Commons Danegilt: he gave to the Churchmen much, and looked to execution of justice, as after his deliverance from the tempest, to fulfill his three Vows.
			Stephen.		King Henry dies, being in Normandy.
1135					Notwithstanding the Oath of Stephen and of the Nobility to Maud formerly, before her Father, they set not up her, or young Henry the son:	226
1136					but this Stephen, sisters son to King Henry, takes upon him the Crown, and him the Nobility Crown on St. Stephens day.
					The King takes the Bishop of Sarum, and the Bishop of Lincoln, and puts ropes about their necks, and led them to Castles held against him, threatning to put to death the Bishops, unless the rebels would yield.
	Conradus 3.
1138				Theobald.	This Conradus Emperor, is the only man, among many Emperors, that did not receive his Crown from the Pope.	228
1140					Maud the Empress comes with a great army into England, being aided by the Earls of Glocester and Chester, and wars on King Stephen, and takes him prisoner. Then the Kentishmen and Londoners war against Maud.

But the Earl of Gloceſter and Cheſter were ſo ſtrong, that they in Fight had almoſt taken King Stephen.

Euſtace, King Stephens Son, wars againſt Normandy, but in vain.

Henry Duke of Normandy makes War in behalf of his Mother Maud, with great puiſſance in England, winning the Tower of London, and many other places.

Euſtace, King Stephens Son, dies.

Peace is made between King Stephen and Henry of Normandy; upon this condition, that Stephen ſhould enjoy the Kingdom his life-time; and mean while Henry ſhould be proclaimed in the chief Towns of the Kingdom, Heir apparent to the Crown.

The Jews Crucifie a Child in Norwich.

This year alſo comes in, the curſing with Bell, Book and Candle.

Theſe two Popes, Lucius and Eugenius, much withſtood the Romans this time, in their laboring to recover the old manner of chooſing their Conſuls and Senators.

In the time of King Stephens Reign (its not ſet down diſtinctly in what years) flouriſhed as ſome Authors affirm.

- Gratianus, compiler of the Popes Decrees. } Brethren.
- Petrus Lombardus, maſter of the Sentences. } Brethren.
- Petrus Comeſtor, writer of the Scholaſt ſtory.
- Hugo de Sancto Victore.
- Bernardus Clarevallenſis.
- Hildegare the Nun, a Propheteſs.
- Johannes de temporibus, who (as moſt of our old Authors affirm) lived 361 years: He lived the laſt of his days in this Kings time.

In this Kings time, by Theobald Archbiſhop it was Decreed, that Biſhops ſhould teach their Flock more diligently, that reading of the Scriptures ſhould be more frequented in Abbies, that Prieſts ſhould learn and teach the Lords Prayer and the Creed in Engliſh.

Being the ſixteenth year of King Stephen, Theobald Archbiſhop of Canterbury and Legate to the Pope, began in the Council at London, the new found appellations from Councils to the Pope, invented by Henry Biſhop of Wincheſter.

This Pope Adrian was an Engliſhman, his Sir-name was Breakſpear, he belonged once to St. Albons, he kept much ado alſo to put down the Roman Conſuls, Senators, &c. 228

This King Henry was the Son of Geffery Plantagenet, and of Maud the Empreſs, and Daughter of King Henry the firſt.

This King Henry, the firſt year of his reign, ſubdued Ireland; and not long after made Thomas Becket Lord Chancellor of England. He ſubdued William King of Scotland: He ſubduing Wales, cut down many woods to make the way plain. He alſo had in his Rule the Iſles Orcades, alſo Poictou and Guien, Normandy, Gaſcoine, Angeou and Chinon. Alſo Alverne and the City of Tholouſe he won. Laſtly, by the Title of his Wife Elenor, Daughter to the Earl of Poictou, he obtained the Mounts Pyram in Spain. None of his Progenitors had ſo many Countries.

Two Suns ſeen in the Firmament in England.

Three Suns ſeen three hours in Italy.

Three Moons appear, whereof the middle had a red Croſs overthwart the face: which betokened (as ſome conceive) the great Schiſm between the Cardinals, for the election of the Biſhops of Rome: or elſe rather the buſineſs between Fredericus Barbaroſſa, Emperor, and the Pope, Adrian, of which more will follow by and by.

After the appearance of thoſe great Lights in the Firmament and Air, appeared in the Church Gerbardus and Dulcinus, Preachers againſt the Antichriſt of Rome, as he that was prefigured by the Whore of Babylon in in the Apocalypſ. Theſe two (as Robert Guisburnes ſtory affirms) brought thirty with them into England; who by the King and Prelates were all burnt in the Fore-head, and ſo driven out of the Kingdom, and after (as Illyricus writeth) were ſlain by the Pope.

The buſineſs between Pope Adrian the fourth, was: firſt, that the Emperor held the Popes ſtirrup on the left ſide; who excuſed himſelf to the offended Pope, by telling him, That he had not been uſed to hold ſtirrups. The next day the Emperor makes amends by holding it on the right ſide. Secondly, that the Emperor having marched into Italy, ſubduing ſome Rebels, he was informed by the Pope, that according to the former cuſtom of Carolus Magnus ſubduing the Lombards, Otho the Berengarians, and Lotharius the Normans, who left for the See of Rome ſome token of benevolence, for the obtaining their Victories, he ſhould likewiſe upon this Victory of his, leave a benevolence; and in particular, it muſt be Apulia; which at his own coſt and pains he muſt win from Duke William, that it might be reſtored again to the Church of Rome. This buſineſs was ſo reſolved upon by the Pope, that until the Emperor promiſed the ſame, he could not receive his Crown from the Pope. For the Popes in thoſe days had the Em-perors at this a-bey, that for to be Crowned they were fain to yield to any thing.

					But the Pope himself in stirring in the execution of this Plot, was so besieged by William the Duke, that before intreated peace of the Pope, which would not yield it upon any terms, that they were forced to intreat the Duke for peace; which was granted, with profitable conditions to the Duke.
					The Emperor this while sitting quietly at home, and considering how the Pope had wrested his power in Election of Popes, investing of Prelates, &c. how he had pilled and polled all Nations by the Legates, and sown discord in his Empire: Hereupon he requires Homage and Oath of Allegiance of all his Bishops; and forbids the Popes Legates to enter into the Empire, without his sending for, and all Appeals to Rome. Finally, In his Letters he prefixed his name before the Emperor.
					Hereupon the Pope writes a rebuking Letter to the Emperor. The Emperor writes back, in defence of his doings, an Apologetical Epistle. The Pope replies with a Bull of Excommunication. The Emperor makes answer to that with accusatory Letters against the vileness, pride, &c. of the See of Rome. Then the Pope writes to the German Bishops to work against the Emperor. The Bishops they write their excusing of the Emperor.	229
					This Pope towards the end of his life (who dyed amidst those broils, being choaked with a Fly as he was walking abroad) was wont to say, That there was no more miserable kind of Life in the Earth, than to be a Pope.	250
1159		Alexander the third, and Victor the fourth, both Popes together.			This Pope, being set up by the Popes Faction. This Victor was set up by the Emperor and nine Cardinals. } The two Popes made great Schism and Tumult.
					The Emperor to quiet them, sent for them to appear before him. Alexander scorns the motion; Victor doth appear: him therefore the Emperor aids to the City, and settles him to be Pope. Alexander then flying to France, to Secil and Venice, works by mony and cunning; gets the City of Rome on his side to set up such Consuls as were for his turn. Also of the French, and Venetians, and Apulians, he got force of Ships and Arms on his side: against which the Emperor sends his Son Otho with Ships and Men well appointed, against the Venetians and the Pope; charging him to do nothing till he should come to him. But he not tarrying for his Father, was beaten and taken: for the delivery of whom, the Emperor was fain to submit himself to the Pope; who putting his Foot upon the Emperors Neck, spake these Words; Thou shalt walk upon the Adders and Basilisks, and shalt tread down the Lyon and Dragon. Mean while the Emperor speaking to the Pope from under his Foot, Not to thee, but to Peter: The Pope answers, Both to me and to Peter. Thus the Emperor having subjected himself, promising to take Alexander for the true Pope, and to restore all he had taken away from Rome, departed.
					Pope Alexander the third, sitting Pope one and twenty years, calling divers Councils at Turo, ratified the wicked acts of Hildebrand.	231
1160					This year many chief Men of Lyons walking together, one whereof falling down dead, to the amazement of them all, one Waldus a rich man, was above all the rest, by Gods Spirit working together with the example, stricken with a sound inward repentance, a new life following thereupon, with great study of the Word of God, wherewith he much instructed his Family, others also resorting to him to be taught; and so he became the original of the Waldenses.
1161				Tho. Becket	This Becket lived in the time of this Pope Alexander. He did not (as some affirm) dye a Martyr, but a stubborn man against his King; who had preferred him from an Arch-deacon, to be Lord Chancellor of England, and after to be Arch-bishop of Canterbury.
					The Pope, viz. Alexander the third, holds with Becket in his obstinacy against the King and his Laws.	234
					The Bishops generally counselling Becket to submission to the King, are sharply rated by him.	235 236
					This year a child was Crucified by the Jews.	247
1167					This year a Collection of two pence in every pound, was gathered thorowout all England and France, for the succor of the East Christians against the Turks.	263
1169					This year, being about the fifteenth year of King Henry the second, so feared, lest the Arch-bishop would proceed to Excommunication of his own Person, that he appealed to the Pope, intreating him to send down two Legates to England, to take up the matter between him and his Arch-bishop.
1170					This year the Doctrine of the Waldenses coming of that Waldus an able and learned man in the Scriptures and true Godliness, as hath been seen seen in old Parchments, and Records of things of his penning) sprang up more and more in the time of this wicked Pope Alexander, who with his Faction much set against these Christians, whose tenents are ordinarily to be seen to be very Orthodox and sound.

					This year William King of Scots, with David his Brother, do Homage to England.
					This year Babylon was destroyed (and never built again) by Almaricus King of Jerusalem.
					Becket this year bare another grudge against the King, because King Henry the second, by Authority of the Parliament, Crowning his Son King, by the hands of the Arch-bishop of York, and other Bishops, not sending for him. Also he makes the Pope to suspend the Bishops.	253
					This same year also Ludovike the French King, came with a great Army against the King to Normandy, for not Crowning Margaret his Daughter, with her Husband.
1171					Becket is slain by four Souldiers. Many Authors alleadged that condemned Becket's carriage towards the King.	253
					Abundance of strange lies are reported touching Beckets miracles.	255
					Of him was made this blasphemous Anthem:	256
					For the blood of Thomas, which he for thee did spend, Grant us Christ to climb Where Thomas did ascend.
					The Pope is angry, and more incensed by Ludovike the French King, for the death of Becket.
					The Pope injoyns the four Knights that killed Becket such hard penance of going to Jerusalem barefoot in linen Breeches, with much Fasting and Prayer, that in few years after they are said to dye.
				Richard.	The King subdued Ireland, and four of the five Kings thereof: the King of Tonacta in that Land, denying to be subdued; keeping in Woods and Marishes.
1172					The Legates from the Pope, being come into Normandy, touching the death of Becket, the King repairs to them, swears he neither assented to, nor assisted in Beckets death; but only spake rigorously against his Knights which did not avenge him of Becket. For which the Legates injoyn the King great penance, of fighting against the Turk, and obliging himself to the Pope.
					All England almost diseased with a Cough.
					William King of Scots, is Imprisoned in England, being taken in War. See the first great Vol. p. 302.
1174					This year Canterbury City is almost all burnt.	256
1175					A Convocation of Bishops is held this year about the subjection of Bishopricks to the Arch-bishop of York, and of York to Canterbury.
					This year King Henry the second divides the Kingdom into six parts, appoints for every part three Justices of Assise.
1176					The ancient Custom of exempting Priests from the temporal Sword, in case of Murther, inflicting on them only Excommunication: this year, in this King Henries time, began to be altered, by the procurement of Richard Arch-bishop of Canterbury.
					Ireland this year is subdued to the King of England.
1177					Hovenden in this year brings in Letters of Pope Alexander to Roger Arch-bishop of York, and the Bishop of Duresm.
					Contention between the Arch-bishop of York and Canterbury revives.
1178					The Popes Commissioners persecute sorely some in Tholouse, holding against Transubstantiation.
1179					Pope Alexander, in some of those many Councils held at Laterane, whereof was one this year, and in France, &c. Decreed, That no Arch-bishop should receive the Pall, unless he would first swear. The form of giving the Pall and taking the Oath, see the first great Volume, p. 298.
					Under the Reign of this Henry the second, the Dominions and Crown of England extended farther than ever before in England:	258
					Viz. He is King over: Scotland. Ireland. England. Normandy. Aquitan. Gant, &c. To the Mountain of Pirenei, which be the uttermost parts of the great Ocean in the British Sea.
1180
1181					Pisanus Burgundo, a very Learned man in Greek and Latine, presents to Pope Alexanders Council, Chrysostoms Homily on the Gospel of John, translated out of Greek into Latine.
					He is Protector of France; Philip the French King yielding himself and his Realm wholly to his Governance.

He

					He was offered to be King of Jerusalem, but he refused it, fearing the rebellion of his sons in his absence.
					Princes from most parts of Christendom came to this King, for his wisdom to be advised, and have questions determined.	258
					He maintained great Wars much of his thirty five years he reigned; yet never put he any Tax upon the Laity, or First-fruits or Appropriations upon the Clergy; and yet dyed worth 900000 pounds, besides Jewels, precious stones, and houshold Furniture.
					This many-ways-happy King, was unhappy in his Sons, who stood in armor against him, taking part with the French King against him; causing him with extreme grief to fall sick, and in four days to dye.
					The King being dead, bled afresh at the coming near one of his Sons; whereby the Beholders concluded, that he was the Author of his Fathers death.
					His Sons (their Kingly Father being dead) unsuccessful in their Designs, as what else could be expected of such Sons? lose all their Fathers Dominions beyond Sea.
1184				Baldwinus.	Great contention was between this Baldwinus and the Monks of Canterbury. See the first great Vol. p. 309.	267
1185		Urban 3.			Pope Urban writes to Arch-bishop Baldwin, sharply rebuking him, and upholding the Monks. In few days after he dyes.
1187					This year King Henry pays to Rome 40000 marks of Silver, and five thousand of Gold, for the death of Becket.
1188		Gregory 2.			Arch-bishop Baldwin begins the building of the new House at Lambeth, with the Church.
					Pope Gregory dyes with sorrow for the loss of the Holy Cross.
		Clement 3.			This Pope Clement forbids Arch-bishop Baldwin to proceed. And also sharply writes (as did Pope Urban) to rebuke him as an oppressor of the Monks of Canterbury.
1189					This Pope Clement sends another more sharp Letter to this Arch-bishop, by his Legate Rodulphus, to the same effect.
					This year Pope Clement writes a third Letter to Arch-bishop Baldwin.
			Richard the first, surnamed Cœur de Lion.		This King forbidding any Jews to approach his Palace at his Coronation, the Jews notwithstanding pressing on, were by the Gate-keepers smitten, and at last many, on boldship of the Kings command of keeping them out of the Palace, slew many of them; on which was raised a report, that all the Jews must be destroyed; insomuch, that the Londoners fired divers houses of the Jews, and the Inhabitants in them.
					The King strongly took part with the Arch-bishop against the Monks.
					The King sorrowing for his rebellion against his Father, for satisfaction agrees with King Philip of France to go to the Holy Land, to recover Christ his Patrimony, as they called it. In which Voyage, as he had much contention with the unthankful hearted French King, so he had divers Victories against the enemy; as against Isakius King of Cyprus, and against Achon and others. See following, Anno 1192, &c.
1190	Henricus 6. son of Fredericus Bar. 5.				The manner of the Popes Crowning this Emperor, see in the next year.
					In this year was a great Northern brawl, on Twelfth-Even, between the Arch-bishop elect of the Church of York, and his Company on the one side, and Henry Dean of that Church, and his Chanter and Singing-men on the other side; because the Dean and his Quiresters presumed to begin their Service before the Bishop came: whom they conceived to stay too long in attiring himself, or some such occasion. The Arch-bishop bids them stay their over-forward Service, now half done at the Bishops coming in: The Dean and Chanter bids them proceed on At last, the Arch-bishop silenced the Service, and makes them begin again the first part, which he had not yet heard: The others, seeing the Bishops Authority to make the Service begin again, put out the Lights; whereby these Popish Devotions, which cannot be done without Candle-light, were for the present extinguished.
1191		Celest. 3.			King Richard sends over his Gallies to Naples, there to meet his Mother Elenor, and Berengaria the Daughter of Sanctius King of Navar, whom he purposed to Marry, who shortly after meet together.	275
					Henry Emperor is Crowned (upon condition of restoring many things to St. Peter, pretended by the Pope to have been taken away) the Pope holding the Crown between his Feet, and so the Emperor stoops with his Head to take it on: the Pope eftsoons with his Foot striking it off (intimating his Power to Depose him as well as to Crown him) the Cardinals taking up the Crown thus kicked off, and putting it on again.	276
					In this absence of the King of England, by reason of his Voyage to the Holy-land, the King had appointed the Government of the Realm to Hugo Bishop of Durham, and William Bishop of Ely. To Hugo of Durham was committed Windsor Castle: to William of Ely the Tower of London. To these two Bishops were adjoyned four chief Justices: Hugh Bardolf, William Marshall, Geffery Peterson, and William Bruer, to have the hearing and oversight over all Causes. But above all these, the Bishop of Ely (being Chancellor, and by his Mony got to be the Popes Legate) took upon him mightily, taking away Windsor Castle from the other Bishop. It is incredible to think how intemperately this Bishop and Chancellor misused themselves after the Kings departure into	278 into Syria, in exceſs of pride, and in cruel exactions and oppreſſions of the Kings Subjects.

					A great contention aroſe between John Earl of Morton, the Kings Brother, with other ſtates of the Realm, and the ſaid William Biſhop of Ely, through his pride uſurping all the government of the Kingdom to himſelf. In ſhort, he was at variance with many of the great perſons of the Kingdom, till by Earl Johns means and others, he was for his ill behaviour fain to diſguiſe himſelf in Womans apparel, make to the Sea ſide, and to ſail out of the Kingdom, complaining to Pope Celeſtine, and ſending Letters to the King, complaining to him likewiſe.
1192					The King gets Victories againſt the Saladine, got Sclavonia from the Sataceens.
1193				Hubertus.	The French King not agreeing with King Richard, returns home, invades Normandy, perſwades John the Kings Brother to take upon him the Crown of England in the Kings abſence; whereby he made League with the French King, and did him Homage.
					King Richard hearing this, makes peace with the Turk for three years, and returns homeward; who, as he was coming, by Tempeſt was driven to Hiſtria, to a Town called Synaca, and taken by Lympold Duke of that Country, and by him ſold to the Emperor for ſixty thouſand Marks; which Emperor writes his triumph therein to the ſaid French King.
					The King is thus a Captive a year and three months.
					This while the French King wars upon Normandy, and makes Earl John, King Richards Brother to invade England. But by the Barons he was made fly into France. At laſt for 100000 pounds to the Emperor, the King was releaſed; that mony being made up of Chalices, Croſſes and other Church-plate.
1195					This year the Pope granted that Prieſts might adminiſter with Latin and tin Chalices (the Silver and Gold being gone to redeem the King) and ſo it continued long after.	281
1196					Lympoldus Duke of Auſtrige fell in diſpleaſure with the Biſhop of Rome, and died excommunicate.
1197					Philip King of France breaks his Truce made with Richard King of England, ſo that King Richard was fain to ſail over into Normandy to withſtand him.
					Fulco, alias Gualter, Archbiſhop of Rome, rebukes the King for his three Daughters. The King in a rage calling him mad man, and ſaying, I have no Daughter. Fulco replies, telling him that his three Daughters were Pride Covetouſneſs and Luxury; and that unleſs the King did marry them away they would undo him and his Kingdom. To which the King calling the Nobles, reciting Fulco his Parable, and confeſſing his fatherhood of ſuch Children, makes this anſwer, Here before you all I give my Daughter Pride to Wife unto the proud Templars; my Daughter Avarice to the covetous order of the Ciſtercian Monks: and my Daughter Luxury to the riotous Prelates.	281
1198		Innocent the third.			King Richard the firſt, viewing a Caſtle, is hit with an Arrow in the Arm, with the feſtring of the iron whereof he dies.
1199	Otto the fourth.				This King John was the Brother of King Richard, and Earl of Morton; being crowned and ſworn with a ſtrict charge of the Archbiſhop to keep the Laws, he ſails over into Normandy, and makes truce with the French King for a time.
			John.		King John being divorced from his Wife, Daughter of the Earl of Gloceſter, being in the third degree of kindred; by the counſel of the French King, he marries Iſabel, Daughter of the Earl of Anguilla; and then Arthur of Britain did Homage to King John for Britain and other places.	282
1200					About this time aroſe divers contentions between King John and the Archbiſhop for ſundry things.
1202					Philip the French King in a communication between him and King John, requires King John to part with all his Lands in Normandy, and Pictavia, which he had beyond the Sea, unto Arthur his Nephew, the Son of King John's elder Brother, and that preſently, or elſe he would war againſt him. King John denying it, the French King warring, and Arthur aſſiſting, King John takes Arthur Priſoner, and ſcarce leaves any of the French to carry back tidings.
1203					This year King John for lack of reſcue loſt all his Holds, (as Writers affirm) and Poſſeſſions in Normandy, through the force of the French King.
1205					Hubert Archbiſhop of Canterbury deceaſeth. The younger ſort of Monks at midnight chooſe their ſuperiour Reignold, and without the Kings licence, privately placeth him in the Metropolitical Seat, ſinging Te Deum, and after poſt him away to the Pope.
1206					The next year the contention between the Suffragans and Monks of Canterbury about the ſaid Election, is brought before the Pope, who paſſed ſentence on the Monks ſide, charging the Suffragans and Biſhops of Canterbury henceforth to meddle no more with that Election, but to let the Monks alone.
1207					The Monks of Canterbury now having the ſaid Elect of an Archbiſhop in their own hands, fall at odds between themſelves, the younger againſt the elder; the younger ſtanding for Reignold, the elder chooſe another.	283

					They bringing their cause, their Elections and Allegations before Pope Innocent the third; he condemning both their Elections, commanded them to choose Stephen Langhton, then Cardinal of Saint Chrysogen, for their Archbishop; which done, though with secret muttering of many the Monks, they sing Te Deum.
					The King was content to let this Election thus to pass, so as he might have his Sovereignty entire. But this Archbishop Langhton was so proud and stubborn against the King, that the King sent abroad into all parts of the Kingdom Letters Certificatory of the same. Whereupon the Pope mightily sets himself against King John, interdicting and curfing King John, and all that should eat, drink, talk, &c. with him; insomuch that at last the King was fain to pass over his Crown to the Pope.	285
1212	Frederick 2.				The French King makes an attempt in hope to get the Crown of England, but the English take 300 of the French Kings Ships, and so defeated his project.
1215					Pope Innocent the third calls a Synod at Rome, called the Council of Lateran, upon this occasion. Princes now beginning to resist the Pope, whereby many Princes were excommunicated, as Otho the Emperor, John King of England, Peter King of Aragon, Raimund the Earl of Tholouse, Aquitania, Sataloni, &c. The Pope now to prevent any future increase of opposition, inacts in this Synod, that the Pope henceforth should have the correction of all Christian Princes.	287
					In this Council also was first invented Transubstatiation, and forbidding Priests Marriage was confirmed.
					To this Council were those great men in England summoned to appear, who would not consent to the expulsion and tyrannical deposing of their King. But the other side and faction of the Nobility opposed their King lustily, desiring Philip the French King to send his eldest Son Ludovick with a great power, and they would choose him for their King, and so he came and was chosen; howbeit against the Popes consent, who charged the French King rather to help King John against his rebellious Subjects, for that (saith the Pope) King John is my feudary Tenant. But this hindred not.	288
1216		Honorius 3.			Simon Langhton is chosen Archbishop of York. But that choice was anon dissolved, information being given to the Pope, that he was Brother to that Stephen Langhton that had made that tumult in England.
					This year K. John was poysoned by one Simon a Monk, who being absolved of his Abbot afore-hand for doing this fact, he finds a Toad in the Garden, pricks him with a Pen-knife, until he had made him vomit up all his poyson, which he having conveyed into a Cup of Wine, began to the King with a smiling countenance, speaking these words, If it shall please your Princely Majesty, here is such a Cup of Wine, as you never drank a better, I trust this Wassel shall make all England glad. The King having drunk, and anon being ill, inquired for Simon the Monk, to whom some answering that he was departed this life (for his Guts gushed out of his Belly) the King replys, Then God have mercy on my soul; and so he died, much repenting of his former life.	290
					In this Kings time was the Bridge of London, being of Wood, built of Stone and the power of choosing a Mayor in London was first granted.
			Henry 3.		Henry the third being King John's eldest Son, began his Reign in the ninth year of his age. Against him, some that hated the Father, stood for Lewis the K. of France his Son. But W. Earl Marshal orating to the Nobles, that the French Kings Son was the shame of their servitude, and that hatred of the Child for the Father, was unjust persecution of the innocent Child; Hereupon they all gave consent to choose this young Henry for their King; who is crowned at Gloceſter, because the French held Westminster.	290
1217					Upon the choice of the Son of King John to be King, Lewis the French Kings Son makes War upon England; Earl Marshal and others gives him Battel, and win the Field of him. Then Lewis takes London for his safety, shutting the Gates till great aid from France was sent him in 100 ships, but they were encountred with upon the Sea, most of them taken, and Eustace the chief of them, and his Head was smitten off; so that the French Kings Son Lewis agreed for 1000 pound of Silver he would depart out of the Kingdom never to return he nor his.
1218					A Parliament is held in England (now Lewis and his French are gone out of the Land) in which King Henry the third confirmeth all the priviledges that had been granted by John his Father.	292
1219					The Kingdom on the other side grant to the King two shillings of every Plow-Land.
					Thomas Becket is shrined.
					This year Order was proclaimed, that all Aliens should depart out of the Realm, except Merchandizers, going in and out under the Popes safe conduct. It was conceived that the device was to make divers great Men strangers, that held Castles and Holds of the King against his will, to go out of the Kingdom.
1220					About this time the young King was crowned again at Westminster.
					This year the Pope of Rome stirs up Ludovike the French King to lay Siege against the City of Tholouse to extinguish the Albingenses. Vol. 1. Page 302.

1221					The Lord keeps the Albingenses that the French King and his Host could not touch them; but strikes them with a sore Pestilence and Famine, forcing them to retire home again to France, Vol. 1. p.
					This year the King went to Oxford, where he had something to do with William Earl de Albemarlia.	303
					The Gray or Minorite Friers enter first into England.
					The House of the Carthusian Monks is founded.
1222					In England are such violent Tempests, that many Trees, Towers, Churches, are thrown down, and some persons slain in an House.
1223					Philip the French King dies, his Son Ludovike succeeding h m.
1224					The Order of Friers Minorites is confirmed by Pope Honorius the third.
1226		Gregory the 9th.			Pope Honorius the third, a great adversary to Frederick Emperor, dies, after whom succeeds Gregory the ninth, more grievous than his Predecessor.
					Franciscus Patron of the Frier Minorites dies.
					Ela foundeth the House of the Nuns at Lacock.
					W. Bishop of London gave over his Bishoprick.
					The Pope works Reimundus the good Earl of Tholouse great trouble.	304
1227					This year the King of England makes the Londoners to pay the sum of 1000 Marks to him, because they had given or lent the like sum to Lewis the French King his adversary, at his departure out of England. With these and other Taxes, provision is made to recover Normandy.	307
1228					The King grants to the City of London to be Toll-free.
					Great contention ariseth between the Prior and Covent of Durham, and this K. Henry the third, because they would not choose him to their Bishop whom the King did desire.
1229				Richardus magnus.	The choice of this Archbishop, cost the Realm the tenths of all moveables, see Vol. 1.
					The new Church of Coventry is finished by Alexander the Bishop of that City.	309
					The French provide again to War against the foresaid Reimundus Earl of Tholouse, and to expulse him out of his possessions. The Earl gives them a great overthrow, and discomfits the French three times that summer.
1230					As the Bishop and his Deacon, and many people were in Saint Paul's Church in London at Mass, there arose such a dark Tempest with Thunder, &c. that the people ran out, fell down amazed, conceiving that Doomesday was come; the Bishop and Deacon mean while take fast hold of the Altar.
1231					The Archbishop now confirmed in his See, complains against Hubert Lord Chief Justice, as one that withheld some Lands due to Canterbury.
					The Archbishop goes to the Pope, and complains against the King for committing so much trust of the affairs of the Kingdom to Hubert.
					Richard dies in his return from complaining to the Pope, in whose room the Monks choose Ralph Nevel, alias Radulphus de nova Villa, who was the Kings Chancellor, the King well liking the choice; he is commended in stories to be a very good man. But being depraved and traduced to the Pope by Simon Langhton Archbishop of York, the Pope frustrates the choice.	310
					Then the Monks choose John their Prior to be Archbishop, who going to the Pope (and therefore not insufficient by age to govern, who could take such a Voyage) to receive his Pall, and being examined three days, was rejected for being too old by the Pope, perhaps older than was he.
1232					A great Consistory, of Abbots, Priors, and of the Nobility, is held at S. Albans between the Countess of Essex and her Husband.	311
					Roman and Italian Parsons in England are robbed.
					The Bishops labour to bring Hubert out of the Kings favour, and prevail, to the incensing of the King against him, and making him to question Hubert for many things unreasonably, to imprison him, and bereave him of all his treasure.	312
1233					Hubert is conveyed out of Prison into a Church; but without respect to that as a Sanctuary, he being found by the Keepers is dragged to Prison again, to the great offence of the Bishop, for so disrespecting the sacredness of that place.	314
					John Blund is chosen Archbishop. But he is the third of those that are unchosen by the Pope one after another, before any election would take with the Pope.
1234				Edmund of Abendon.	This Archbishop Edmund was chosen by the Popes command.
					Archbishop Edmund with his Bishops in Council at Westminster (the King now being at variance with the Nobles) declared to the King plainly that the Council he followed was not good, but dangerous to him and the state (meaning the counsel of Peter Winchester, and Peter of Rival, &c.) shewing it in their turning the Kings heart from his own natural Subjects, and in eleven particulars more.
					The King takes pity of Justice Hubert's Wife.
					Richard Earl Marshal is fraudulently circumvented and slain in Ireland. The King laments it.
					Many of the Catini and the Albingenses are slain by the Popes command.	317
					Peace is concluded between the King and the Nobles.
					Justice Hubert is restored again to the Kings favour.
					The King calling a Council, calls the Bishop of Winchester, Peter Rival, Stephen Segrave, &c. to account for abusing his Seal, &c.

Great

Anno Christi	Emp. of Germany	Popes of Rome.	Kings of England	Archbishops of Canterb.		Vol. 1. Page
1237					Great variance ariseth between the Romans and Pope Gregory the ninth, because the Pope contended contrary to the custom (as the Romans pleaded) that he might excommunicate a Citizen of Rome, and interdict the City.
					Schism ariseth between the Greek and the Roman Church, because that an elected Grecian Archbishop, could not be confirmed when he was come to Rome, unless he would give a great sum of mony, which Simony the Archbishop and the Grecians with one consent did abominate, and separated from Rome.	318
					This separation of the Greek Church from Pope Gregory the ninth, and the Church of Rome, causeth that Germanus Archbishop and Patriarch of Constantinople, wrote to Pope Gregory the ninth, to reform matters, and study means of Unity in the seamless Coat of Christ.
1238					The Pope imposeth so many exactions upon England, beginning at this 1237 year, and so forward (as he had many years before to the said year) as make up large Tables.	321 322
1240					Otho the Popes Legat hath authority to stay longer and gather more mony in England.
1241					Not long after in this year, Pope Gregory sends a new Precept to Legat Otho, that all beneficed men in England and France should pay to the Pope the fifth part of their revenues. Who notwithstanding their four material excuses, were fain to pay it.
					Preachers are stirred up by the Lord to preach that the Pope was an Heretick, and condemned for their pains; viz. Arnoldus, Johannes Semeca the gloss Writer of the Popes Decrees, an opposer of the Pope, Gulielmus De sancto amore, giving many signs of false Teachers. Gallus and Grosthead.	325
					Petrus Supino gets 1500 Marks out of Ireland for the Pope; and Petrus Rupeus in England gets of the Abbots and Priors, shewing to them the Popes Bills and Bulls, a mighty quantity of Silver and Gold.
					The Pope demands of the House of Peterborough, that they should grant him some Benefice lying in their donation, whose fruits were worth an 100 pound, so that they should be as Farmers, and the Pope to receive the profits. But the King forbad them any such grant.
1243		Innocent the 4th.			From Pope Innocent the fourth comes M. Martinus, a new Merchant of the Pope, with power to suspend all Prelats in England from giving Benefices, till the Popes Kinsmen were preferred.
1245					The King writes a Letter to Pope Innocent to forbear his intolerable oppressions of the Kingdom of England.	326
					Martinus being an instrument of the Popes oppression of England, is warned by the Nobility (and he had little less comfort of the King) to be gone out of England, upon pain of being cut in pieces; who taking his leave of the King, the King (as Matthew Paris saith) bids him farewel in the Devils name.
1246					The Nobles and Commons of England write a supplication to Pope Innocent the fourth in the General Council at Lions, against his injurious Taxes imposed upon England,	327
1247					Pope Innocent in a meeting at Cluniake perswades the French King (who was addressing himself for his Voyage to Jerusalem) to war against Regulum istum, that is, the feeble King of England (for his not condescending to the Pope in all things) either to drive him out of his Dominions,
1248					or to make him accommodate the Pope in every thing,	329
					The Clergy and Commonalty of England write another Letter to Pope Innocent the fourth against his exactions in England:
					The Abbot of Abingdon commanded to give a Benefice by the Pope to one, and by the King to another, rather obeys the King than the Pope. For which he is cited to appear before the Pope, and condemned in fifty Marks.	331
					The French K. bent and bound for the Holy-land, is perswaded by his friends and Mother to lay down the obligatory Cross for his journy, as having (say they) taken it up in the weakness of his senses in his sickness. The K. hereupon tearing off his Badge and resigning it to the Bishop (all the perswaders joyning therein) by and by takes it up again, saying, If formerly in my weakness of body and senses I took up the Cross to go to the Holy-Land to fight against the Heathens, now I take it up again in the full strength of both.
					The Pope being at odds with the Emperor Frederick the second, will not at any hand be reconciled, though the King of France strongly interceded, and the Emperor himself clears himself of all imputation, offers full satisfaction for all pretended wrongs, will go out of his Empire (if the Pope could not indure him there) to the Holy Land, never to return into Europe again, so as his Son Henry Nephew to King Henry of England might succeed him, with offer of other most reasonable conditions. These oppositions of the Pope against Christian Emperors and Kings, gave the Turks
1250					great advantage of prevailing.	332
					The French K. in his Voyage to Jerusalem takes in Damiata.
					This year the Sarazens to day are beaten of the French before Damiata; on the morrow the French are beaten by the Saracens ten times more. See more Vol. 1. p. 334. c. 1.
					The Templaries fighting for the holy Temple against the Sarazens near to Antioch are vanquished, and their Standard-bearer slain.

					Men that can dispend fifteen pound land per annum, must make the King a soldier, Vol.1.p.369.c.2.
1254				Boniface.	This year Pope Innocent would needs have the bones of Robert Grosthead Bishop of Lincoln, contrary to the minds of the Cardinals, to be taken up and cast out of the Church, for his open plain rebuking the Pope in his life time, to the putting of him into a great terrour of Conscience, so that the Pope seemed to see a Bishop in a Vision to say unto him, Arise wretch, and come to judgment.	368
					The Kings great expences in his Voyage to Vascon makes him put many Taxes upon his Subjects, chiefly on the Church-men, who being wont to receive Tithes from, are now made to give Tithes to the Laicy. Vol.1. p.369.c.2.
1255		Alexander the 4th.			Pope Innocent dies.	368
					Great dissention ariseth between Boniface Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Canons of Lincoln about the right of giving Prebendships.
					The Jews crucifie a Child nine years old with great torment.
1257					The King of England exacts of the Jews 8000 Marks in pain of hanging.
					Walter Gray Archbishop of York with superstitious excessive fasting, killed himself.
					A Jew falling into a Privy at Tewksbury upon Saturday being the Jews Sabbath would not for reverence thereof be lifted out; and on the morrow being the Christians Sabbath Richard Earl of Gloceſter would not suffer him to be taken out, and so he died in the Durig.
1259					The King entring into France, required the restitution of such Lands in Normandy and Anjou, as of old right were due unto him, and wrongfully withheld from him, and made the French King to agree to him. Vol. 1. p.369.c.2.
1260					A great contention is at Oxford between the Scholars.
					To this year continueth the History of Matthew Paris, leaving at the story of the death of Fulco Bishop of London.	369
					The King gives Licence to plant an University at Northampton, and writes to the Magistrates of that Town courteously to intreat the Scholars when they came.	371
1261		urban the 4th.			The King gets from the Pope a release of his Oath wherein he had sworn to some Statutes at Oxford.	372
					The King renues his release from his Oath, by this Pope Urban.
1262					The Barons combine to maintain the Statutes of Oxford. An agreement is made between the King and the Nobles.
1263					The King besiegeth and invades the Barons at Northampton.	373
					The Scholars there also are stubborn against the King, shooting with slings, long-bows and cross-bows, doing much hurt, but at length are beaten, slain, and made to fly.
1264					A Battel fought at Lewis between King Henry 3. the Barons win the field, and do take Richard King of Almoni, K. Henry's Brother, and his Son, who assisted the Kings Prisoners.	375
1265		Clement. the 4th.			This Pope was at first a married man and had children. Then he was the French Kings Chancellor. After his Wives death he was made Bishop called Podiensis. After that Archbishop of Narbon. After Cardinal, and last of all Pope.	377
					Thomas Aquinas flourisheth about this time, and Bonaventure.
					A form of peace is drawn between the King and his Barons, wherein the King promiseth much reformation of things in Church and Commonwealth.	379
					K. Henry the third writes to Oxford Sheriff against an Assembly or Meeting of men, who termed themselves Harlots. It is probable that this was some pretensed Order of Religion; and that from it came the reproachful name of Harlot.
1266					Dissention ariseth between Earl Simon and the Earl of Gloceſter, they fight a Battel, and Simon and many of his side are slain.	380
					The King being in the custody of the Barons is now restored to his Regality.	381
					Kenelworth decree confirmed, that they that had lost their Lands by Attainder, (although not yet attainted) should fine therefore at the Kings pleasure, and take them of the King again.
1267					The King besiegeth the Castle of Kenelworth, whither repairs Octobonus the Popes Legat, and by his perswasions Henry Hasting; that had valiantly kept it against the King, yields it to the King, pardon being granted to him, of Life, Lands, Goods, &c.
					The Barons fortifie the Isle of Ely, and after that London against the King.
					Peace concluded between the King and the Nobles.
					Prince Edward the Kings Son, and many Princes of other Kingdoms take upon them the Cross to make an expedition to Jerusalem.	382
1270					Boniface Archbishop being dead, the Monks of Canterbury agree upon the Prior of their House Adam Chelenden.
					The King and his Son Edward intreated the Monks to choose Robert Burnel, Prior Chelenden elect, and not admitted by the K. goes up to Rome, there continues 2 years, and at last resigns up his Election to Pope Gregory, who gave it to R. Kilwarby.

1272				Rob. Kilwarby.	The great Concordance came forth about this time by an English Frier, called John Dernington.
					Whereas the other Princes that went to the Holy Land, especially the French, did take mony of the Infidels, instead of giving them blows, Prince Edward refused this mony, (who was for his integrity safe, when many of the others with their monys were drowned with Tempest) and also prospered his designs.
1273					Pope Gregory the Tenth calls a Council at Lions about the controversie between the Greek Church and the Latin Church.	385
1274			Edward the 1st.		K. Henry the third dies having reigned 56 years.
					Edward the eldest Son of Henry the first being in Vasconia, when his Father died, returns home, and is crowned this year. At which crowning, he putting off his Crown, said, he would not put it on again till he had gathered together all the Lands that belonged unto it.	386
					This K. had much ado with Wales, but at length cuts down their Woods, subdued the Country and their King Lewline, and made his Son Prince of Wales.
					The said Lewline rebelling (as we said) asked counsel of the Conjurers what should be the event; to whom it was answered, that he should go forward boldly, for he should ride through Cheap with a Crown on his head, which was thus fulfilled He being slain his head was carried through Cheap with a Crown of Silver to London Bridge.
1278				J. Peckam.	This Archbishop Peckam, resisted the King in the right of certain liberties pertaining to the Crown, touching Patronages, &c. See Vol. 1. p. 399. c. 1. He ordained that one Minister should have but one Benefice. Vol. 1. p. 399. c. 1.
1279					Jews for mony-clipping are executed.
1284		Nicholas the 4th.			The great Conduit in Cheap began to be built.
1288					After this Pope Nicholas, the See of Rome was void two years and three months, through the dissention of the Cardinals, before another Pope was chosen. Vol. 1. p. 389. c. 2.
1291					The King of England being proved by many ancient Records, to be chief Sovereign of Scotland, took full possession of the same; appointing the Crown to John Baliol under him.	386

How he was thought to be the eighth Nero, and how with a Reed he speaks through a Wall in the night to Pope Nicholas (because he was a man laborious to reform the Church) as if it had been a voice from Heaven to give over his Bishoprick; and so at last gat him out, the same year he was Pope.
1299					The K. of England and the Scots have a great fight; but K. Edward hath the Victory.
					The Scots rebelling again, again are suppressed by the King, and made to swear to the Kings Allegeance.
1301					This Pope Boniface the 8*th* challengeth of King Edward the Kingdom of Scotland.
					The King wisheth the Pope to send his grounds of challenging the Kingdom of Scotland; calls a Parliament, writes to the Pope abundance of passages and presidents from Anno 900 to 1230. that the Kingdom of Scots was the Kings of England.	387
1303					Pope Boniface the 8*th* being offended with Philip the French King, excites King Edward of England to war against him; but King Edward well knowing the Pope, put him off with delays, and the French King fearing K. Edward, restored unto him Vascone, which he wrongfully had detained.	389
					The Scots rebel again against K. Edward the first, under W. Waleis.
					Great difference ariseth between Philip K. of France, and Pope Boniface the 8*th*. The Pope thundring out his curse of Excommunication against the K. because the King commanded his Legat and a Bishop (whom the Legat got released, being imprisoned for a Conspiracy againg the K.) to depart out of his Realm. The King on the other side calls a Parliament, and makes a declaration against the Popes intolerable wickedness, and an appellation from the Pope to a General Council.	389 390
1304					This year Captain Schaira with Soldiers, besiege, apprehend and rifle the Pope, and set him on a Colt with his face towards the Tail, causing the unbroken Colt to course up and down with him, till the Pope was out of breath.	396
		Benedict the 11th.			This Pope, what by fear, and what by sorrow, dies, and Pope Benedict the 11*th* succeeds.	397
1305					To this Pope Clement, K. Edward wrote divers Letters against R. Winch. Archbishop, with whom he was much pestered.
1306		Clement the 5th.			This Pope Clement having provided strongly to keep the Emperor of Germany under his feet, that no Emperor could be crowned without his leave: next he intermeddles with the Empire of Constantinople, excommunicating Andronicus Paleologus Emperor of Constantinople, as an Heretick, because he would not suffer the Greek Church to appeal to Rome.

1307					A Parliament is held by the K. at Carlile, wherein many great complaints are made against the Popes exactions.
					A Parliament is held in France, wherein Popish and Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction is throughly discussed, and Regal Supremacy justly advanced against the vain reasons of the Papists.	401
					K. Edward the first marching towards Scotland, falls sick of a flix; swears the Nobles to make his Son Edward K. after him; chargeth his Son not to call home wicked Gaveston, whom he had banished; to go in War to the Holy Land, carrying his heart with him, which had vowed to go that Voyage himself, but Scottish Wars hindred him, and so he dies.	415 416
			Edward the 2d.		This Edward in this 1307, enters into the Throne, being of a graceful body, but not so gracious in his soul.
1308					This year and not afore, is K. Edward crowned.
					The King is much led aside by the evil counsel of one Gaveston, and the two Spensers.
1310					A Parliament is called, wherein are exhibited divers Articles touching things his Father had given him in charge, namely, to remove from him and his Court all Aliens and perverse Counsellors, and to let matters of State be debated by the Council of the Kingdom, and touching sundry other matters. The King perceiving that this did hit at his Gaveston, did when there was no remedy, yield to let Gaveston be banished into Ireland, and so the Parliament ended, the other Articles not sped.	417
1311					The first Ottoman having conquered the other three Families of the Turks, Anno 1300. now goes on conquering the Christians. Vol. 1. p. 837. c. 1.
					R. Wincheseley Archbishop of Canterbury, whom Edward the first had banished, is now released, and returns from Rome home.
					The Archbishop of Canterbury excommunicates the Bishop of Coventry for holding with Peter Gaveston, which Gaveston, though banished upon forfeiture of life, goods, &c. Presumes upon the Kings favour, returns again.	418
1312					Peter Gaveston is apprehended by Guido, alias Guy Earl of Warwick, and beheaded by the Nobles.
					The King hath a young Son born, the joy whereof made him begin to forget his sorrow for Gaveston; but that Frenchmen make-bates, cause contention between the K. and Nobles to arise again.	419
1313					The Scots take occasion by this discord, to rebel against the King, under one Robert Bruis, whom King Edward the first had chased out of Scotland, was now returned thither, getting himself to be made King, who when the King of England and his Lords and Armies encountred him and his Host, did discomfort them, and slew many of the English Lords.	419
					Pope Clement dies, after whom the Papacy continues void two years.
1314	Ludovicus the 5th. Bavarius.				This Emperor Ludovicus a worthy man was crowned without the Popes consent, and was much vexed by this wicked Pope John, Vol. 1. p. 424.
1316					The King raiseth an Army, and besiegeth Barwick in Scotland: The mean while the Scots by another way invaded the Merchants of Yorkshire, robbing the Country, and slaying much people, and of an Army gathered by the Archbishop of York, of divers Abbots, Priors, Clerks and Husbandmen to resist them, they slay many, and that of the Clergy, called therefore the White Battel; insomuch that the King was fain to retire from Barwick, and rescue Yorkshire.
1317	Nicholas the 5th. Anti-Pope.	John 22.			At this time the two Spencers, Hugh the Father, and Hugh the Son, were so impious, and yet so potent in the Kingdom, that no Lord durst controul them, so that they were much hated of the Nobles.	420
1321					A Prohibition is set forth against Peter-pence.
					The Spencers banished by Act of Parliament for their wickedness, are restored and advanced by the King. The Nobles to redress this evil, assemble their power; but, being scattered by the Kings forces before they could come together, were pursued and taken, and two and twenty of the chief Earls and Lords were hanged, drawn and quartered, saving that the Earl of Lancaster was beheaded. This cruelty to his natural Subjects wrought his utter ruine at last.	421
1322					Now the King begins with the Spencers to triumph in his Victory of putting the Nobles to death.
1323					The King advanceth Hugh Spencer to be an Earl, and ill reported, and reputed Sir John Baldoch to be Chancellor of England: Also the King raiseth an Army against the Scots; but the good leaders being put to dearh, and unskilful ones leading this Army one hundred thousand of this Army perisheth by Famine.
2324		Benedict 12.			Of Benedict 12. see Vol. 1. p. 424.
					The King cited by the French to do homage to him for the Dukedom of Aquitain, which the King held of France; about this was great contention between the two Kings. Prince Edward with the Queen is sent over to quiet matters; who would not return again till they had fitted matters for the ruine of the King and his wicked favourites.	422
1325					The French King by reason of the great ado the King of England made by Proclamations, for the Queen and her Son to return, and by threatning of the French K. himself. The French K. removed the Queen and her Son from him, who are both joyfully received in the Court and Country of the Earl of Henaude; where a Marriage was concluded between Edward her Son, being of the age of 14, and Philip the said Earls Daughter.

Anno Christi	Emp. of Germany	Popes of Rome.	Kings of England	Archbishops of Canterbury.		Vol. 1. Page
1326					By this Marriage-Match was knit a combination of War, whereby the Queen and the young Prince should invade England; who being furnished out of Henawde, and with some Lords that came out of England at the hearing of the Marriage, with 2757 Soldiers. With these she and her Son lands; very many of the greatest of the Nobility (the Archbishop also, as they say, sending relief of mony and provision) resort to the Queen, so that daily her power increased; and on the other side, scarce any would be hired to fight on the Kings side.
					Then the K. flys to Bristow, appointing Spencer the Father to keep Bristow Castle. The Queen follows, takes the Castle, apprehends the said Spencer, whom being torn, at last they hanged him at the said City in chains of Iron. The K. flys to Wales; the Queen follows, proclaiming that if the King would come in and appear, he should receive his Kingdom again if he would be conformable to his liege people. Who not appearing, Prince Edward is proclaimed High-keeper of the Realm. The Queen, sends Lords to pursue after the King; the King is taken and put in Kenelworth Castle. Divers Lords and great Persons are apprehended, of whom Spencer the Son is drawn and hanged on a Gallows fifty foot high; and beheading him, and quartering him, they send his Limbs into several Quarters of the Kingdom. Sir John Arundel also was beheaded.	423
					A Parliament is called at London, from which a Message is sent to the King, that if he would resign his Crown, his Son should have it after him, if not, another should take it to whom the lot would give it. The King being not able otherwise to choose, yields up his Crown, is kept in Prison, deposed by the Parliament, the Son set up as King, the old King living in Prison, at last is slain (as Authors affirm) with a hot Spit thrust up into his body by Roger Mortimer's means, for which he was drawn and quartered afterward.
					This King built Oriel College, and St. Mary Hall in Oxford.
					This year 1326 great fury and outrage arose between the Townsmen and the Abby of Bury, the Town rifling the Monastery and imprisoning the Monks, and some slaughter was between them.	426

					Orchanes the 2d Ottoman. Vol. 1. p. 837. c. 2.
					The King with the Queen is at York with an Army of 60000 men, ready to encounter with the Scots. The Scots steal away, so that no Battel is fought.
					K. Edward the 3d, is now married to the Earl of Henawlts Daughter abovesaid.
					A release by the means of Roger Mortimer and the old Queen, is granted by the King, under age, to the Scots of all their homage and fealty to the Crown of England, which they were tied unto by Seal and Indenture, called the Ragman-Role. The Black-Cross also won from Scotland by valour of the former King Edward is given back to the Scots, with other things very prejudicial to England.	428
					The Nobles desiring to redress these matters in a legal way, are falsly accused of Conspiracy against the King, and the Earl of Kent, being guiltless, is put to death, being the Kings Uncle, and never brought to answer for himself.

Thus have we with all the method and pithineſs we could uſe in theſe preſent labours, Chronologically annuated all remarkables in theſe three Volumes; ſeating and placing them according to their age, each particular in his own year. If any man ſhould wiſh to have had here a larger univerſe of particulars, though of leſs conſequence; and a preciſer punctualneſs of times, even to months and days; ſuch a man ſhall be able fully to ſatisfie himſelf with theſe conſiderations:

Firſt, That keeping cloſe to the nature of the moſt and beſt Chronologies, with a ſtudied conciſeneſs, we intended to compoſe of things material, not trivial, Annals not Kalendars, and Ephemerides; that is, to date years, not months and days.

Secondly, That ſeeing largeneſs is to be bound faſt to the abbreviature, the ſecond and third Volume, and ſo they go together abroad into the World: Its but turning over leaves, and when that hath been too tediouſly prolix in its ample narrations, this will tell the ſame after that, without wearying eyes or ears. And when this with its Laconical ſhortneſs, leaves the Reader hungry, to have ſeen and heard ſomewhat more, that will be ready to fill that appetite.

Thirdly, That although the firſt Volume makes diſpatch in its relations, and ſo fills up its vaſtneſs with variety of ſtories, till it brings us beyond the 1500 year: yet the ſecond and third Volumes conſiſt of few ſtories, ſwollen to that hugeneſs by the maſſineſs and voluminouſneſs of each ſtory; ſo that they both begin and end within the compaſs of about 50 and odd years, as this our Chronicle it ſelf ſhews in the Time, Page and Columes; ſo that of themſelves, unleſs we would turn Chronologizing into Epitomizing, would wind up themſelves into a narrow compaſs. Beſides the firſt and ſecond Volume in above forty years are woven together; as may be ſeen in the Quotations of the large Colume of matter of both theſe Volumes.

Fourthly, That of all the Martyrs which indeed are the main bulk of the ſecond and third Volume, Mr. Fox hath penn'd and placed at the beginning a moſt punctual and methodical Kalendary Chronicle of years, months and days of their troubles and ſufferings: yet to make our project a compleatneſs and perfection, we took into our other paſſages of eſtate, all ſpeciál and dated ſtories of Martyrs; though in thus doing in regard of Mr. Fox his Kalendar, we Actum agimus, & poſt Homerum Teximus Iliades, do that which needed not.

THAT in case there fall out any Mistake in the Penner, or Printer, or in the Reader, that he looks not aright under each Head (for we are all but Men): Then,

I. To look the thing under as many several Heads, or Alphabetical Words, as in all Probability the thing may be expressed in or by.

II. To have Recourse to the Chronology, where he may readily find each Emperor, Pope, King, a Bishop, and the chief Occurrences in their Times, with the page in the last Column, to find it in the Large Volume.

III. To have regard to the time when things were done since Christ: which remembred, the Chronology will in that Year touch the thing.

IV. To mind how much each Volume contains: and being confident in what Volume the thing is, the Contents of that Volume at the top, or in the Title of each Page will discover the thing.
